
A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 PAGES) SENT GRATIS AND POST FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.

The List contains Popular Works in Travel, Sport, History, Biography, Science, and Fiction. Also New and Surplus Copies of French, German, Italian, and Spanish Books.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED,

30—34, NEW OXFORD ST.; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. LONDON; AND AT BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

1/- (BY POST, 1/2½.) 1/-

QUEER STORIES

—FROM—

"TRUTH."

"TRUTH" PUBLISHING OFFICE

10, BOLT COURT, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

J. GRIFFIN & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY.

BRASSEY'S NAVAL ANNUAL, 1898 (Twelfth year of Publication), Royal 8vo, price 12s. 6d.

J. GRIFFIN & CO., 2, The Hard, Portsmouth.

ON THE STŒCHIOLOGICAL CURE OF

CONSUMPTION,

ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, INFLUENZA, AND ALL THROAT AND LUNG COMPLAINTS.
By JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.
One Shilling, Post Free.

T. BURLEIGH, LATE DAVID STOTT, 370, OXFORD STREET.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. An Illustrated Treatise based on the special practice and observation of the last 15 years. Price 3s. 6d.; post free, 3s. 8d.
London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

COLLEGES, SCHOOLS, &c.

AT MARGATE COLLEGE, MARGATE.
For FIRST-CLASS COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.
Most successful College. Beautiful grounds. Close to the sea. Moderate fees.
Every requisite for first-class school.
London Offices, Imperial-buildings, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS, Limited.
HOLLESLEY BAY, SUFFOLK.
On the fine seaside Estate of the College (1,800 acres), in a splendid climate; students have unique opportunities of receiving a training, practical and theoretical, which will fit them for a career abroad or at home.
Full information from the Director at above Address, or from the LONDON SECRETARY, 11, PALL MALL, S.W.
Next term commences May 16th.

MINOR FARMING.
Favourable Opening for a young Gentleman, not afraid of work, and who wishes to gain experience in Dairying, Poultry Keeping, &c., with moderate outlay, to do so in a Western County.
Address, RURAL, care of Romeike & Curtice, 359, Strand, London, W.C.

GREAT CUMBERLAND-PLACE, W., View of Parks, handsomely furnished, TO BE LET for season, nine bedrooms, four reception-rooms, stabling, five stalls, double coach-house. Rent, 30 guineas per week.—The BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY, 83, Ebury-street.

CHESTER-SQUARE.—Exceptionally well-furnished, eight bedrooms, of which four are double, three reception-rooms. For season, £250.—The BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY, 83 Ebury-street.

ALBERT GATE (William-street).—This beautifully situated HOUSE TO BE LET for season. 25 guineas per week. Seven bedrooms, three reception-rooms, bath-rooms. Electric light.—The BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY, 83, Ebury-street.

OVINGTON-SQUARE, for season, six bedrooms, three reception-rooms. Very well furnished. 10 guineas per week. Open to offer.—The BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY, 83, Ebury-street.

SLOANE-TERRACE. Five bedrooms, three reception-rooms, TO BE LET, furnished, at once, for season. Very nicely furnished. 5½ guineas per week.—The BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY, 83, Ebury-street.

PONT-STREET (upper part).—TO BE LET, furnished, for the season, three bedrooms, two reception rooms.—Apply to the BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY, 83, Ebury-street.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

BELGRAVIA.

NO. 15, LENNOX-GARDENS, S.W.
A very special Long Leasehold TOWN RESIDENCE of modern construction, overlooking the ornamental grounds of Lennox-gardens. It contains nine bed and dressing-rooms, box-room, bath-room, five reception-rooms, and good domestic offices. Term about 75 years unexpired. Moderate ground rent. With possession.

By Direction of the Executors of W. Sharp, Esq., deceased.

NO. 29, ALBERT-GATE (overlooking Hyde Park), S.W.
The short LEASE of a very attractive TOWN RESIDENCE (with modern improvements), situate in this much sought after position, with private garden at rear (extending to the Park), and front garden with covered way. It contains on the upper floors 11 bed and dressing-rooms, bath-room, &c.; on ground floor magnificent drawing-room (opening to garden), dining-room, entrance hall, &c.; and domestic offices in basement. Possession on completion. Moderate rent.

NO. 3, RUTLAND-GARDENS-MEWS, S.W.
A quite exceptional SET of modern STABLING, just out of Knightsbridge, within enclosed yard, and having a private entrance in Rutland-gardens. The premises are well built, fitted with all modern conveniences, in excellent repair, and comprise four stalls, two loose boxes, coach-house, with accommodation for four or five carriages, harness-room, kitchen, sitting-room, three bed-rooms, loft, &c. Term about 34 years unexpired. Ground rent, 5s. With possession.

TO BE SOLD, by AUCTION,
At the MART, Tokenhouse-yard, near the Bank of England, E.C.,
On THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1898, at TWO o'clock punctually
(unless previously disposed of by private contract).
Particulars, with orders to view, of Messrs. TROLLOPE, Estate Agents, 7, Hobart-place, Eaton-square; West Halkin-street, Belgrave-square; and 5, Victoria-street, Westminster.

TATTERSALL'S THURSDAYS' SALES at ALBERT GATE.
Messrs. TATTERSALL beg to give notice that their THURSDAYS' SALES have commenced, and will be continued during the season.
SALES ON MONDAYS AND THURSDAYS.

ALDRIDGE'S
30 EXTRA HIGH-CLASS AMERICAN CARRIAGE HORSES.
To arrive in London 4th May, per s.s. "Winifreda" (Wilsons and Furness-Leyland Line, Limited), that have been specially selected and shipped in the pink of condition by Mr. MICHAEL McDONNELL, of Philadelphia.
On WEDNESDAY, 11th May, 1898, at about 2 o'clock, Messrs. W. & S. FREEMAN will SELL the above by PUBLIC AUCTION, without reserve, at Aldridge's, St. Martin's-lane, London. They comprise Bays, Browns, and Chestnuts, from 15.3 to 16.1, five to seven years old; are thick built, with lots of quality and plenty of bone and substance; have good necks, tails set high up on English-looking quarters, and high action. All broke to single and double harness, warranted quiet and sound in wind and eyes. There are several well-matched pairs amongst them well worth attention. On view Monday, 9th May, until Sale

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS sent gratis, with full particulars. schools also recommended.—Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 (Gerrard).

MAPLE & CO

Brass Bedsteads

Brass Bedsteads

THE LARGEST STOCK IN THE WORLD

Thousands of Brass Bedsteads at from

38s 6d to £50

Purchased before recent advances

Buyers effect a great Saving

Brass Bedsteads

Brass Bedsteads

MAPLE & CO

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD LONDON

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BATH.—LANSDOWN GROVE HOTEL.—Desirable residence, in beautifully wooded grounds, 400 feet above sea level, facing south, and protected from north and east. Air dry and bracing. Assembly and Pump Rooms within easy distance. Omnibus free to and from Hot Mineral Baths. Billiards, Tennis Lawn

BONCHURCH HOTEL, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, one mile from Ventnor Station.
A comfortable, quiet, and most beautifully-situated Hotel. Pretty garden. Good sea view.
H. RIBBANDS, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—South aspect. 150 rooms, electric light throughout, passenger lift, first-class cuisine, winter garden and lounge, covered tennis court. Turkish, sea-water, and medicated Baths. The Hotel is within two minutes' walk of the Golf Links.—For tariff, address W. KNEESE, Manager.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HIGHCLIFFE HOTEL. Unrivalled position, West Cliff, full south. Splendid sea view. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Supplies from Alderney Dairy Farm. Telephone 27.—J. KILNER, Proprietor.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.—Centre of sea front. Electric Light throughout. Lift to all floors. Bicycle room. Inclusive terms if desired from 10s. 6d. to 15s. per day.—For particulars apply to A. D. HOOK, Manager.

CARBIS BAY HOTEL, Cornwall. The very spot to obtain rest and quietude. Overlooking the finest bay in England. Mild yet bracing climate. Within easy distance of London by G. W. R. Splendid Golf Links. "A more beautiful spot for residence could hardly be imagined."—Truth.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Lees. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor.
Sanitation Certified.

FOLKESTONE.—The LEAS HOTEL.—Situated in private grounds. Adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Refurnished throughout. Passenger lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff. Good golf links and tennis court.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

JERSEY.—GRAND HOTEL.—The only first-class modern Hotel facing the sea, and full south, the largest, the best appointed, and the up-to-date Hotel in the Channel Islands. Liberal Management.
D. DE LEIDI, Manager.

MALVERN—The IMPERIAL HOTEL occupies the best position, and receives visitors en pension. The golf-links (18 holes) are one of the best in England. Capital stabling for hunters. Droitwich Brine, Turkish and large Swimming Bath in separate buildings.—For tariff, apply to the Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

SANDGATE.—ROYAL KENT HOTEL, a favourite resort of Ruskin. An ideal summer and winter residence, delightfully situated in its own grounds, facing the sea. Redecorated and refurnished. New Coffee-room, Smoking-room, and Conservatory have recently been added. Fifteen minutes from Folkestone. Omnibus meets all trains Sandgate Station.—J. E. TANARE, Prop.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
F. FISCHER Manager.

BUXTON

DERBYSHIRE.

Highest Town in England.
On the Mountain Limestone.
1,000 feet above sea level.

Centre of the picturesque Peak District. Pure Air. Charming Scenery.

HOT MINERAL-WATER BATHS FOR GOUT, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, &c.

NATURAL TEMPERATURE 82° FAHRENHEIT.

Finest Public Gardens at any Health Resort in Europe, with Pavilion, Theatre, Concert-Hall, Tennis, Bowls, etc. Golf Links (18 holes).

For ILLUSTRATED GUIDE, with Tariffs of the leading Hotels, Hydropathics, Boarding and Lodging Houses, send postage-stamp to THE CLERK, COUNCIL OFFICES, TOWN HALL, BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.

AVONDALE HOTEL & RESTAURANT

(Corner of Dover-street and Piccadilly).
MAGNIFICENT SUITES of ROOMS, including Ladies' Reception-room.
POLIAKIN'S renowned STRING BAND (three years at the Savoy) plays nightly during Dinner and Supper.
LUNCHEON, 4s.; DINNER, 10s 6d.; SUPPER, 4s.
A SPECIAL ROYAL ACADEMY LUNCHEON at 2s. 6d. served daily.
The Wines have been most carefully selected by connoisseurs.
Manager: Mons. GARIN. } late of the Savoy Hotel.
Chef de Cuisine: Mons. DUTRU. }

AND

HATCHETT'S RESTAURANT.

UNDER AVONDALE HOTEL.

Under entirely new management. First-class Cuisine and Unrivalled Cellar of Wines. Moderate Prices. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, Table d'Hôte, Grill-room, and à la Carte. Arrangements are being made for a String Band to play nightly during Dinner and Supper.
Manager: Mons. EUGENE.

A FINE HOTEL] DOVER [IN DOVER BAY

Accommodates 400 guests. Is superbly appointed, with all the comforts of a well-arranged mansion, at moderate cost. Perfect cuisine. The Dover Golf Links for use of Hotel Burlington visitors. The finest coast hotel in England. Brochure and Tariff free.

Facing the Pleasure Pier and in centre of Dover Bay.

HOTEL BURLINGTON

ILFRACOMBE.
ILFRACOMBE HOTEL.

Famous for its high-class Cuisine and general comfort.
The PRINCIPAL and ONLY HOTEL on the SEASHORE.
An ideal position. 250 rooms. Grounds five acres. Tennis, Croquet. Splendid Swimming Bath. Elegant Lounge Hall. Moderate tariff. Terms "en pension."
H. R. GROVER, Manager.

FOLKESTONE.
WEST CLIFF HOTEL.

(180 Apartments)

Now opened for the reception of Visitors.
Important Structural Alterations and Additions have been made since October last.
The Hotel is under the personal superintendence of the Proprietor, to whom all communications should be addressed.
Electric Light and Passenger Lift.

RAMSGATE.
THE GRANVILLE.

HASTINGS. Due South, Facing Sea.
QUEEN'S HOTEL,

LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED.
Sunny, and most sheltered position in Hastings and St. Leonards.
ELECTRIC LIGHT. PASSENGER ELEVATOR.
Moderate Tariff. Hotel Flys attend the trains.
WILLIAM GLADE, Manager.

MARGATE.—WHITE HART HOTEL.
Sixty Bedrooms, many commanding magnificent sea views. Famous for its perfect English cooking and choice cellar. Most invigorating sea air in England. Under supervision of Proprietor—G. MARSHALL.

FURNESS ABBEY HOTEL

SPACIOUS COFFEE, DRAWING, AND SMOKE ROOMS.
WELL-APPOINTED BILLIARD ROOM.

IN THE CENTRE OF LAKELAND.

SPIERS & POND, Ltd.

AMUSEMENTS.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Sole Lessee, Mr. Frederick Harrison.
Managers, Mr. Frederick Harrison and Mr. Cyril Maude.
EVERY EVENING, at 8.30, THE LITTLE MINISTER, by J. M. Barrie.
Miss WINIFRED EMERY and Mr. CYRIL MAUDE.
MATINEES EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.30.
200th PERFORMANCE SATURDAY EVENING NEXT.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.
ARTHUR FRIEDHEIM'S
PIANOFORTE RECITALS
(Under the Direction of Mr. Schulz-Curtius)
THIRD and LAST RECITAL, MAY 11, at 3.
Steinway Pianoforte. Tickets 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s., at Tree's, St. James's Hall; Chappell & Co.'s; Newman's, Queen's Hall; usual Agents; and Mr. A. Schulz-Curtius's, 16, Shaftesbury-avenue, W.

QUEEN'S HALL.
SUNDAY AFTERNOON CONCERTS.
EVERY SUNDAY, at 3.30.
Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood.
The Queen's Hall Grand Orchestra.
Admission free. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 1s., and 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—ROYAL PHOTOGRAPHIC SOCIETY'S INTERNATIONAL PHOTOGRAPHIC EXHIBITION open daily, 10 to 10. No extra charge. Colour Photography demonstrated by Lippmann's, Joly's, and Ives' processes. Lantern Slides and Cinematographe daily.

34TH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of CABINET PICTURES, by Artists of the British and Foreign Schools, is NOW OPEN at THOMAS McLEAN'S GALLERY, 7, Haymarket (next the Theatre). Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

"ECCE HOMO!" Munkacsy's Sacred Masterpiece. This famous Work, containing over 70 figures, is NOW ON VIEW for the first time in London at the DOWDESWELL GALLERIES, 160, New Bond-street. Admission One Shilling. 315 000 people inspected the Picture during its exhibition at Budapest, often at the rate of 7,000 daily.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

Summer Season, 1898. Commencing MONDAY, MAY 9th.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—Collections of Products from all parts of the Empire (open free to the public from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.).

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE. — Music arrangements. The Concert-Orchestra from the Theatre "La Scala," Milan, consisting of 68 performers, under the direction of Signor Leandro Campanari. Specially engaged for afternoon and evening concerts throughout the season. Afternoon concerts from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. Evening concerts, 8.45 p.m. to 10.45 p.m. Admission, from 1 p.m. to 11 p.m., One Shilling. Wednesdays (Fellows' Day) by ticket only, to be obtained from Fellows.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—East Garden Pavilion. Luncheons and light Refreshments. Dinners (at 5s. and 7s. 6d., or à la carte) from 6.30 p.m. Orders addressed to Superintendent, Catering Syndicate, Imperial Institute. Telephone No. 623 Kensington.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—Communication by Train and Omnibus to South Kensington throughout the day. Covered way communication with the South Kensington Subway.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—Exhibition of Apparatus for the Generation of Acetylene Gas, and of the use of Acetylene for illuminating purposes. On and after June 1st next.

INTERNATIONAL UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.

EARL'S COURT, S.W., 1898,
WILL BE OPENED SATURDAY, MAY 7th, at 1 p.m.,
By the Right Hon. The LORD MAYOR, M.P.
IMRE KIRALFY, Director-General.
Season Tickets, 10s. 6d.,
Which entitle the owners to be present at the Opening Ceremony, can be obtained at the Exhibition and Libraries.
Admission on Opening Day, before 3 p.m., 2s. 6d. Afterwards and Daily, 1s.
Open 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.
GRAND OPENING CEREMONY,
In which the United Bands and over 300 Performers will take part.
COURTS OF NATIONS.
BAND of the 1st GRENADIER GUARDS.
BAND of the HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.
The LONDON EXHIBITIONS ORCHESTRAL BAND.
THE EMPRESS THEATRE.
GRAND PATRIOTIC NAVAL SPECTACLE
TWICE DAILY.
Peace and War. Naval Manœuvres. The Fleet at Night.
Attack on the Enemy's Forts.
Twice Daily, at 3.30 and 8.30. On the Opening Day, at 5.30 and 8.30.
Thousands of Reserved Seats at 6d. and 1s.
THE FLORAL LOUNGE.
The Most Delightful Entertainment Hall in the World.
The Chamounix Minstrels and other Novel Attractions Daily, Free.
The Hungarian Minstrels. American Lilliputian Troupe.
Grand Hungarian Feszty Panorama. Royal Javanese Troupe.
Hagenbeck's Zoological Kindergarten. Moorish Camp. Bella Napoli Troupe.
Electric Theatre. Captive Balloon.
THE GREAT WHEEL, 300 ft. HIGH.
South Sea Islanders, "Astarte." Belvedere Tower. Electrophone. Switchback.
Admission on Opening Day, before 3 p.m., 2s. 6d., or by Season Ticket, 10s. 6d.
Afterwards, Daily, 1s.

LONDON PAVILION.—Dan Leno, Marguerite Cornille, Brothers Griffiths, Harriet Vernon, Harry Randall, Bessie Wentworth, Harry Freeman, Billie Barlow, G. W. Hunter, Leslie's Dogs, Musical Avolos, and many others. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s.—Manager, Mr. FRANK GLENISTER.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station.—Gordon's Last Stand at Khartoum. Portrait Model of Emile Zola, &c.—Admission 1s. Children under Twelve, 6d. Extra rooms, 6d.

THEATRE TICKETS.—Boxes, Stalls, Dress Circle and Upper Circle in good positions for "The Conquerors" (St. James's), "Too Much Johnson" (Garrick), "The Belle of New York" (Shaftesbury), as also every Theatre in London can be had at any office of the DISTRICT MESSENGER AND THEATRE TICKET COMPANY. Branches City and West-end. Letters and telegrams to 193, Piccadilly, next to Prince's Hall.

AMUSEMENTS.

LYCEUM.—THE MEDICINE MAN, by H. D. Traill and Robert Hichens, TO-NIGHT and Every Evening, at 8.
Dr. Tregenna.....HENRY IRVING.
Sylvia Wynford.....Miss ELLEN TERRY.
Box-office (Mr. J. Hurst) open 10 to 5, and 7.30 to 10. Seats also booked by letter or telegram. LYCEUM.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, Mr. HERBERT BEERBOHM TREE.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8,
JULIUS CÆSAR.
MATINEES EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.
Box-office open 10 to 10. Seats booked from 2s. HER MAJESTY'S.

ADELPHI. A. & S. GATTI,
Sole Proprietors and Managers.
Business Manager, Mr. FRED. G. LATHAM.
EVERY EVENING at 8 o'clock.
A Drama in Four Acts, by David Belasco, entitled:
THE HEART OF MARYLAND,
Interpreted by Mr. Charles Frohman's entire New York Company.
Box Office open from 10 till 10.

SAVOY THEATRE.—Every Evening at 8.30, and Every Saturday Afternoon at 2.30, will be reproduced THE GONDOLIERS, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan. At 7.45, OLD SARAH. Box-office 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.—R. D'OYLY CARTE, Manager.

ST. JAMES'S.—Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER,
Sole Lessee and Manager.
TO-NIGHT, and EVERY EVENING, at 8.15,
THE CONQUERORS,
A Drama, in Four Acts, by Paul M. Potter.
MATINEE SATURDAY NEXT, at 2.
Box-office open 10 to 10. ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

COMEDY THEATRE, Panton-street, Haymarket.
Sole Manager, Mr. CHARLES HAWTREY.
TO-NIGHT, and EVERY EVENING, at 8.30,
LORD AND LADY ALGY,
an Original Light Comedy, in Three Acts, by R. C. Carton.
Mr. Charles Hawtrey and Company.
Preceded, at 8 o'clock, by a Duologue, entitled CONSTANCY, by Cyril Hallward. Doors open 7.45.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 3. Box-office open 10 to 10.

GARRICK.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. T. BRICKWELL.
EVERY EVENING, at 9,
TOO MUCH JOHNSON.
Doors open at 7.45. Carriages at 11.

COURT THEATRE, Sloane Square.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.—EVERY EVENING, at 8.30, TRELAWNY OF THE "WELLS," by A. W. Pinero. Doors 8. Commence 8.30. Box-office now open, 10 to 10. Telephone No. 3,031. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY.—EVERY EVENING, and SATURDAY MATINEE. Mr. George Edwardes's Company in THE GEISHA. The book by Owen Hall. Lyrics by Harry Greenbank. Music by Sydney Jones.

VAUDEVILLE.
Sole Lessees and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
EVERY EVENING, at 8.20.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.30,
THE FRENCH MAID,
With New Songs, Dances, and Dresses.
The very successful Musical Comedy by Basil Hood and Walter Slaughter.
Box-office open 10 to 10.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Directors, WILLIAMSON and MUSGROVE, Limited.
EVERY EVENING, at 8, Casino Theatre Company, of New York, in
THE BELLE OF NEW YORK.
"The subject of all the town talk."
Box-office now open at the Theatre from 10 till 10.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.

CRITERION THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.—EVERY EVENING at 8.15, THE LIARS. Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company. By Henry Arthur Jones. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.

LYRIC THEATRE—Mrs. LONGSHORE-POTTS, Doctor of Medicine, of the Women's Medical College of Philadelphia, U.S.A., will LECTURE on "HEALTH and DISEASE." To women only. MONDAY, MAY 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th, at THREE o'clock. Doors open 2.30. Admission free. Collections taken. For invitations apply at the box office. Last Lecture Friday afternoon, May 13th, at 3. Subject, "Maternity." Prices 2s., 1s. 6d., and 6d. All lectures illustrated by limelight views, including many of art and scenery. One hundred views each lecture. Different lectures and views daily. The exigencies of the limelight views necessitate the use of a theatre.

EMPIRE THEATRE. — EVERY EVENING, New Ballet, THE PRESS, and Sporting Sketch, THE RACE. Grand VARIETIES. Doors open at 7.45.

PALACE, Shaftesbury-avenue. — The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Full Licence. Prices from 6d. Doors open 8.—Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—The Greatest Combination of Talent in London.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINEE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

BATH. The Queen of Spas.

FAMOUS HOT MINERAL WATERS.

Most complete Bathing Establishment in Europe

NEW CONCERT HALL AND PUMP ROOM.

LATEST SCIENTIFIC APPLIANCES, including the Nauheim (Thermalsoolbad).

BATH is only two hours from London.

GOOD HOTELS. CHARMING SCENERY. BAND DAILY.

HOLIDAYS ABROAD.

DIEPPE.

AN IDEAL SEASIDE RESORT FOR ENGLISH VISITORS.

ONLY FIVE HOURS FROM LONDON.

Two English Churches. Superb cycling roads. Excellent Golf Links (Sunday play). Best Casino in Europe (June to October). Dancing, &c.
Information free from L. BRAU, 140, Grand Rue, Dieppe, France.

ROYAL MAIL ROUTE,

VIA

HARWICH AND THE HOOK OF HOLLAND.

DAILY (SUNDAYS INCLUDED) SERVICE TO THE CONTINENT.

Send post-card to the Continental Manager, G.E.R., Liverpool-street Station, E.C., for descriptive illustrated Time Book (free).

SIX GUINEAS.—GENEVA TOUR, nine days, extensions to Chamounix (Mont Blanc), Zermatt (Matterhorn), St. Gothard, Oberland, &c. Lecturers, Sir Robert Ball, Mr. Edward Whymper, Dr. Lunn. Departures weekly from May 10.—Details from Secretary, 5, Endsleigh-gardens, Euston, N.W.; 32, Piccadilly, W.; 47, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.; 3, Charing-cross, S.W.

JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, HONOLULU, FIJI, NEW ZEALAND, and ROUND THE WORLD.

CANADIAN PACIFIC ROUTE.

For berths or descriptive pamphlets, apply CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, or 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square, S.W.

NORWAY AND BALTIC CRUISES.

The S.Y. VICTORIA sails 11th JUNE for 16 days to Norwegian Fiords.
To be followed by other cruises on July 2nd and 30th, and August 18th.
The only modern pleasure cruiser with large airy cabins.
For particulars, apply Manager, 4, Regent-street; GRINDLAY & CO., 55, Parliament-street; or any of THOS. COOK & SONS' Offices.

ORIENT COMPANY'S PLEASURE CRUISE

by their

Steamship "LUSITANIA," 3,912 tons register.

From London 15th June, Leith 17th June.
To the finest FIORDS in NORWAY
and the NORTH CAPE (for Midnight Sun),
arriving back in London 11th July.
Other Cruises to follow.

High-class Cuisine, String Band, Electric Light, &c.

Managers { F. GREEN & CO. / ANDERSON, ANDERSON, & CO. } Head Offices: Fenchurch-avenue.

For passage apply to the latter firm at 5, Fenchurch-avenue, London, E.C.; or to the West End Branch Office, 16, Cockspur-street, S.W.

12 GUINEA NORWAY CRUISES from NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE—FORTNIGHTLY.

"MIDNIGHT SUN," 3,178 Tons, 3,500 H.P.

Finest YACHTING STEAMER afloat. NO UPPER BERTHS.
Sailings:—May 28; June 11, 25; July 9, 23; and August 6, 20.
Special Cruises, September 3rd and 17th.
Fares from 12 Guineas, including first-class table.

For itinerary, &c., apply to the PASSENGER AGENT, ALBION S.S. Co., Ltd., Mercantile Chambers, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The "Imperial" Chamber Service

8/6 COLOURED FLOWERS and GOLD EDGE ON IVORY.

Single Toilet Set (5 pieces), 8/6

Double Toilet Set (10 pieces), 17/-

Printed Patterns, 5/-, 6/6, 7/6 the single set of 5 pieces.

(If for the Country, 9d. extra for package.)

ALFRED B. PEARCE
39, Ludgate-hill, London.
(Established 1760.)

For Longhand, Shorthand, Pen-and-Ink Drawing, Music-Writing, indeed, whenever a Pen is necessary, use only a "SWAN."

Adds immeasurably to Celerity and Comfort in writing. Of all Pens most famous.

Made in 3 sizes at 10s. 6d. 16s. 6d. 25s. UP TO £18 18s. POST FREE.

MABIE, TODD & BARD,

DEPT. C. I.

93, Cheapside, London, E.C.

95a, REGENT ST., W., and 3, EXCHANGE ST., MANCHESTER.

SALE OF

SILVER PENCILS.

Having purchased a huge Stock of 6s. 6d. and 8s. Solid Silver Hall Marked Pencils at an all-round price of 1s. 9½d. each, we are clearing them as follows:—

1,020 to be Sold at 9d. each.
750 to be Sold at 1s. 3d. each.
1,892 to be Sold at 2s. 11d. each.

WATCHMAKERS' ALLIANCE LTD.,

227, Regent-st., & 184, Oxford-st., London.

WATER ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM DISEASE GERMS, BY USING THE

BERKEFELD FILTER.

Full Illustrated Price List and Testimonials free on application.

FILTER H. AS SKETCH, 42s.

SMALLER SIZE, 25s.

Extract from the Special Report to the British Medical Journal on "The Relative Efficiency of Water Filters," by Drs. Sims Woodhead and Cartwright Wood, Jan. 22nd, 1898. "Experiments were carried out with the Filter H, an exceedingly good model which seems to subserve the functions of a Filter better than any we have yet seen described. . . . The output is so large that there is no reason why such Filters should not supply sufficient water for all household requirements. These Berkefeld Filters afford complete protection against the communication of waterborne disease."—Offices and Showrooms:—

THE BERKEFELD FILTER CO., Ltd., 121, Oxford-street, London, W.
City Depot: W. SCHACHT & CO., 26, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING: Illd. guide (259 pgs.), 3d., "How to open respectably £20 to £2,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., Euston-rd., Ldn. Hairdressers fitted.—H. MYERS.

VINOLIA TOILET REQUISITES.

4d PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP
(For Family Use).

For Delicate, Sensitive, Irritable Skins.

The CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST reports:
"An ideal soap, delightfully perfumed."

1/- per box of 3 Tablets.

6d FLORAL VINOLIA SOAP
(For Private Use).

Keeps the Skin as soft as Velvet.

The MEDICAL NEWS reports:
"Beautifully emollient and softening to the skin."

1/6 per box of 3 Tablets.

10d TOILET VINOLIA SOAP
(OTTO)

Scented with Choice Otto of Rose Perfume.

Beautifies the Complexion.

The GENTLEWOMAN reports:
"Strongly recommended to keep the skin smooth and free from roughness."

2/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

6d BLONDEAU PERFUMES
Concentrated, Delicate, Pure.

*Vinolia Bouquet, *Marequil, *Jequilla, *Losaria, Wood Violet, White Heliotrope, Ess. Bouquet, Frangipanni, Jockey Club, Maréchal Niel, Millefleur, White Rose, Jasmin, Musk Rose, Honeysuckle, New Mown Hay, Lily of the Valley, Violet, | Rondeletia, Hyacinth, Ylang Ylang Stephanotis Opoponax, Patchouli, Musk, Ambergris, Amaryllis, White Lilac, Narcissus, Chypre, Violette de Parme, Mignonette, Clematis, Wallflower, *Rhine Violets, | Peau d'Espagne.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/-, and 5/- per bottle.

*These perfumes are not supplied in the 6d. quality.

1/- VINOLIA HAIR WASH

DRY. Freshens and cleanses the Hair, and preserves it free from any oily moist appearance.

MOIST. Imparts a natural gloss to the Hair

1/- per Bottle.

Each in 3 odours: Portugal, Rose, and Violet.

1/1½ VINOLIA CREAM

For Itching, Face Spots, Sunburn, &c.

The LANCET reports:
"An emollient cream for the skin in eczema, rash, eruptions, &c."

1/1½, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

1/- VINOLIA POWDER

For Redness, Roughness, Toilet Nursery, &c.

The LADY'S PICTORIAL reports:
"Superseding the old-fashioned toilet powders which are apt to cause acne spots on the face by blocking up the pores of the skin."

In White, Pink, and Cream Tints.
1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.
6d

(STICKS AND FLAT CAKES.)
Causes no Blotches.
STICKS: Premier 6d., Toilet 1/-, 1/6, 2/6, Vestal 2/-.
FLAT CAKES: Premier 1/-, Toilet 2/-, Vestal 2/6.

6d LYPSYL.

A Coralline Emollient for Dry, Rough, Cracked, or Pallid Lips.

In Rose-Red and White Tints, 6d. and 1/- a Tube

6d VINOLIA LAVENDER WATER.

Natural and Very Lasting.

Contains the finest Essential Oils, Concentrated, therefore the Most Economical.

6d., 1/-, 2/-. and 3/6.

2/- VINOLIA TOILET WATER.

This is prepared with delicate, refreshing perfumes, and is a most exquisite and delightful preparation to use either clear or in water for the Toilet or in the bath.

2s. per Bottle.

6d VINOLIA DENTIFRICE

Aromatic, Tonic, Refreshing, Preservative.

Keeps the Teeth Ivory White.

Premier in Round Box and Glass Bottle, 6d.

English—2/6.

American—1/6.

6d VINOLIA TOOTH SOAP.

An exquisite preparation for the Teeth. Delightfully perfumed and free from any injurious ingredients.

In Round Metal Box, 6d.

6d VINOLIA TOOTH PASTE.

Delicately Perfumed.

Whitens and Cleanses the Teeth, without in any way injuriously affecting the dental structures.

In Collapsable Tube, 6d.

6d BLONDEAU INEXHAUSTIBLE LAVENDER SMELLING SALTS.

These Smelling Salts are of exceptional Strength and most Refreshing. They are agreeably scented, the pleasant odour of Lavender being very pronounced.

6d. per Bottle.

6d VINOLIA EAU DE COLOGNE.

Fragrant. Refreshing.
As fine as can possibly be made.

The "Court Circular" reports:
"Vinolia Eau de Cologne we consider is absolutely unequalled for strength, purity, and delicacy of aroma."

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/3, and 5/6.

3d per 2-oz. Packet. VINOLIA VIOLET POWDER.

Sanitary. Antiseptic. Soothing.

Specially prepared for Toilet and Nursery use.

In 2-oz. and ¼-lb. Packets, 3d. & 6d.
In ¼-lb. Tins, 6d.
In ½-lb. Tins, 9d.

VINOLIA COMPANY, Ltd., MALDEN CRESCENT, LONDON, N.W.

"The Old Favourite."

MAX GREGER'S

CARLOWITZ

SAFEST,
SOUNDEST
Dinner Wine.

PURE
HUNGARIAN
BURGUNDY.

From 15/- per doz.

Of all Wine Merchants and Grocers.

See that every cork bears the brand 'Max Greger.' Without it the wine is not genuine.

USE ONLY

BLAISDELL PENCILS

SELF-POINTING.
ALL COLOURS. ALL GRADES.
NO WASTE. BEST LEADS.

Black Lead 1d. & 2d. Coloured Crayons 2d. & 3d.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Sample Box of 5 Pencils 1s., Free by Post in the U.K.

BLAISDELL PENCILS, Ltd., 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

"Lanoline" Toilet Preparations

"Lanoline" Toilet Soap For Health and Beauty of the Skin. 6d. per tablet. 3 in a box 1s. 6d.

Toilet "Lanoline" For Delicate and Sensitive Skins. 6d. and 1s.

Dentring Brand. from all Chemists.

Wholesale Depôt:—67 HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON.

THE UNITED STATES DENTAL Co.
LIMITED.

All the latest improvements in American Dentistry. Gold Stoppings. Crown and Bridge Work at most Moderate Charges.

Attendance daily 10 till 5.

172, NEW BOND STREET, W.

THE PATENT "RIGID-CURVE" STROP.
FOR THE HOLLOW GROUND RAZOR.

An indispensable addition to the dressing-bag of military men, clergymen, barristers, actors, men of business, and all whose professions render close, rapid, and repeated shaving a necessity. This Strop is quite different to all others, men to whom easy shaving is a boon are astonished at the solid comfort to be got out of shaving with a razor sharpened on the "Rigid-Curve," a Strop which invariably produces a keener edge than has hitherto been possible by any known means.

Price 3s. 6d., carriage paid. Money returned any time within a month if not approved.

A. HOWARTH, 53, Penn-road, Wolverhampton.

MADAME M. ROWLEY'S

TOILET MASK.

(or FACE GLOVE)

Is a natural beautifier for bleaching and preserving the skin, and removing complexional imperfections.

It is soft and flexible in form, and can be easily applied and worn without discomfort or inconvenience.

It is recommended by eminent physicians and scientists as a substitute for injurious cosmetics.

COMPLEXION BLEMISHES

may be hidden imperfectly by cosmetics and powders, but can only be removed permanently by the Toilet Mask. By its use every kind of spots, impurities, roughness, &c., vanish from the skin, leaving it soft, clear, brilliant, and beautiful. It is harmless, costs little, and saves pounds uselessly expended for cosmetics, powders, lotions, &c. It prevents and removes wrinkles, and is both a complexion preserver and beautifier.

To be WORN THREE TIMES in the WEEK.

Illustrated Treatise for two stamps. Address, and kindly mention this paper,

Mrs. M. ROWLEY, THE TOILET MASK CO.,
Berwick House, 139, Oxford Street, London, W.

A REMARKABLE PIPE! Why? Because

The "MASTA" Pipe

Absolutely carries out what is claimed for it—viz., Simplicity of Construction, Perfect Freedom from Nicotine, No Choking, Cool, Dry, Sweet, Clean, & Healthful Smoking.

Prices from 1/6, 2/6, 3/6. Your Tobacconist will supply it. If any delay, write The "Masta" Patent Pipe Co., 153, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

What Smokers say:—GEORGE CLT. GODFRAY, Merchant, 35, Esplanade, Jersey, Oct. 15th, 1897, writes—"After giving the 'Masta' Pipe a fair trial, I am satisfied the principle is a good one, and causes the pipe to smoke very cool and sweet."

CORN EXTERMINATOR. NEVER FAILS.

Ingenious instrument. Anyone can use. Highest surgical testimonials. Post free, 13 stamps. Bunion and Chilblain Ointment absolutely cures Tender Feet, Soft Corns, Enlarged Joints, &c., 15 stamps.

Mr. GARDNER, Chiropodist, Specialité Nails. 85, Regent Street, W.

The Purest and the Nicest.

Hovis Bread

Perfectly Self Digestive.

Hovis Bread is baked and delivered daily by all good class Bakers in the British Isles; Hovis Biscuits are sold by most Grocers and Bakers; or 6d. and 1s. Samples of Bread and Biscuits will be sent on receipt of stamps by THE HOVIS-BREAD FLOUR Co., LTD., Millers, Macclesfield.

Lewis and Allenby

REGENT STREET and CONDUIT STREET,

Invite the honour of a visit to inspect an unrivalled collection of exclusive Novelties and Original Conceptions for the present season now on view in their Costume, Mantle, Millinery, Outfitting, Sunshade, Glove, and Lace Departments.

Silk Department.

A special display of English and Foreign Silks, Taffeta, Glacé Silks in Stripes, Checks, Bayadère, and fancy designs from 3s. per yard. Foulards and Satin Oriental in the newest colourings and exclusive designs from 2s. 9d. per yard. Rich Silks for Court Gowns and Evening wear, made specially for Lewis & Allenby, from 7s. 9d. per yard.

Dress Department.

All the newest fabrics and colourings from 1s. 11d. per yard.

Patterns and Estimates Post Free on Application.

LEWIS & ALLENBY, Ltd.
REGENT STREET and CONDUIT STREET, W.

FARADAY & SON's

Electric Light Fittings

New Designs

(in Classic and Renaissance) for Season '98

2 & 3 BERNERS ST. LONDON W

CARTER 6A NEW CAVENDISH ST. PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON.

ONLY ADDRESS OF ORIGINAL CARTER

LITERARY MACHINE.

For holding book, lamp, meals, &c., in any position over an easy chair, bed, or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. Prices from 17/6

INVALID FURNITURE.

ADJUSTABLE COUCHES and BEDS from £1. 10/-

Bed Lift £3. 10/- Reclining Boards, 25/- Walking Machines Portable W.C.'s. Electric Bells, Urinals, &c. Air & Water Beds.

Bed Rests 7/6 Leg Rests 10/- Crutches 10/6 Bed Baths 12/6 Commodes, £1. 5/-

Carrying Chairs from £1. Breakfast in Bed Tables from 30/-

Self-Propelling Chairs from £2

BATH CHAIRS FROM £1. 5/-

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES POST FREE.

JOHN CARTER. 6a, NEW CAVENDISH ST. Portland-pl. London, W.

GOOD FRIENDS IN FOUL WEATHER.

GAMAGE'S WATERPROOF CYCLING PONCHOS from 3/3

Black proof or Electric Gossamer.

As Illustrated, from 4/11 to 13/6.

Ladies' from 5/6.

Write for post free Catalogue.

A. W. GAMAGE, Ld., Holborn, E.C.

Buy the 4711 Eau de Cologne

IT IS THE BEST, GENUINE, STRONGEST, MOST LASTING, MOST REFRESHING AND INVIGORATING.

Insist upon the "4711" Brand.

REFUSE ALL SUBSTITUTES.

Of most Dealers in First-class Perfumes. Case of 6 Bottles, carriage paid, for 12/6; or Sample Bottle, 2/3 post free.

THE 4711 DEPOT, 62, NEW BOND ST., LONDON, W.

SANITARY & DECORATIVE

RYLAND'S

"THE OLD ORIGINAL"

IMITATES ELIZABETHAN OAK.

FLOOR VARNISH

AT ALL PRINCIPAL STORES.

HAVE YOU TRIED . .

CEPHALIA

For HAY FEVER, NEURALGIC PAINS, & COLDS in the HEAD, &c.?

If not, send 13½d. for a Box to

REECE & CO., Medical Hall, Piccadilly, London.

EFFECT SIMPLY MIRACULOUS.

"COOPER" CYCLES.

From £5 10. Competition Defied.

Latest design Frame, large Weldless Steel Tubes, Ball Bearings, Tangent Wheels, Brake, and Mud-guards, Cushion Tyres, £5 10; Pneumatic, £7 10; Ladies', with Dress and Gear Guards, from £6. Twelve months' warranty. Lists free. AGENTS WANTED

Wm. Cooper, 753, Old Kent Rd., London, S.E.

SERVANTS! SERVANTS!! SERVANTS!!!

FOR THOROUGHLY RELIABLE SERVANTS,

With personal characters for London or country, also foreign servants. Apply to the BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY.

SOLE OFFICES,
83, EBURY-STREET.

Also job servants with references taken up before recommendation can be had on the shortest notice.

A Cup of Chocolat Suchard

accurately prepared, contains all the delicious, soothing, and restorative properties known to exist in Cocoa. Cup for cup, "Chocolat Suchard" is noted for its superiority of flavour and aroma over all other like preparations.

Chocolat Suchard

owes these characteristics not only to the choice materials it is made of, but equally so, perhaps, to the clean and careful methods by which it is uniformly prepared. The recognition of these sterling qualities has led to a largely increased consumption of Chocolat Suchard all over the world.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

All Chocolates, Cocoas and Bonbons bearing the name of Suchard are of the highest quality only.
70 YEARS' REPUTATION.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO ARCHITECTS.

AN IMPORTANT INVENTION.

The HOMACOUSTIC APPARATUS (Cutmore's System).

A REVOLUTION IN SPEAKING TUBES.

Patented throughout the World. The Telephone superseded for Short Distances. The Homacoustic System is being universally adopted, and is a Leading Feature in all New Buildings.

THOUSANDS ARE IN USE.

The following are a few of the large establishments where the Homacoustic Speaking Tubes are in use:—

W. & A. GILBEY, Pantheon, Oxford-street.
JAMES WILLING, Junr., 125, Strand.
GAZE & SONS, Tourists' Bureau, Strand.
B. A. MOORE, "Cheshire Cheese," Fleet-st.
"TRUTH" Offices, Westminster.
SPIERS & POND, Limited, Head Offices.
ROBERTS & LEETE, 19 to 25, Bermondsey-street, S.E.
R. WAYGOOD & CO., Falmouth-road, S.E.
E. P. SAUNDERS & SON, 81 to 83, Cannon-street.
ALLIANCE ASSURANCE CO., Bartholomew-lane, E.C.
LONDON ASSURANCE, Royal Exchange.
OETZMANN & CO., 67 to 79, Hampstead-road, N.W.
LLOYD'S BANK, Limited, 189 Fleet-street.
— LITHGOE, Esq., 39a, Wimpole-street Oxford-street.
CAPITAL AND COUNTIES BANK, Threadneedle-street, E.C.
STRAITS INSURANCE, Change-alley, Cornhill.
KELLY & CO., London Directory. Holborn.
LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM AND SOUTH WALES BANK, Gracechurch-street, E.C.

TESTIMONIALS.

Atlas Assurance Company, Fire and Life,
92, Cheapside, London, E.C.

Dear Sir,—I have pleasure in stating that I have had one of your Homacoustic Speaking Tube Commutators and Instruments in my room, communicating with seven departments in this office, and that I find the same to work admirably. It is a vast improvement on the old method of a separate mouthpiece for each tube, and it is an invention which I think needs only to be known to command very wide adoption.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,

SAML. J. PIPKIN
Secretary.

The Central London Throat and Ear Hospital,
Gray's Inn-road, W.C.,
December 14, 1891.

I have much pleasure in testifying to the excellence of the principle of the Homacoustic Speaking Tube Instruments, as well as to the perfect workmanship of the tubes fitted at this Hospital.

Quite independently of sanitary reasons it is decidedly more agreeable to have a Speaking Tube by which all blowing and breathing into the face are avoided. There is no difficulty whatever in its employment.

LENNOX-BROWNE, F.R.C.S.E.,
Senior Surgeon to the Hospital.

Beware of Fraudulent Imitations. Infringers will be prosecuted. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Price List Free by Post.

THE HOMACOUSTIC COMPANY, Head Offices and Showroom, 6, Bruton-street, New Bond-street, W.

POSITIVELY PRODUCES
HAIR.

STOPS
T FALLING
UT.

KEEPS
T
TS
IATURAL
OLOUR.

REVENTS
T
IOING
REY.

EST
OR EARDS
ND
OUSTACHES.

"TATCHO"

THE "GEORGE R. SIMS" HAIR RESTORER.]

GROWS BEAUTIFUL
BOUNTIFUL
HAIR.

MAKES WOMEN'S TRESSES
SOFT
AND SILKEN.

A DELIGHTFUL
HAIR
WASH
AND TONIC.

BEST
FOR
THE TOILET
TABLE.

"TATCHO" is sold by all Chemists and Hairdressers throughout the World in Bottles, 2s. 9d. and 5s., or can be had post-free direct from the office, 11, Farringdon-avenue, E.C., on receipt of Postal Order for 3s. or 5s. 4d. Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "George R. Sims" Hair Restorer Company, and crossed Union Bank.

"GEORGE R. SIMS" HAIR RESTORER COMPANY, Ltd., 11, Farringdon-avenue, City, E.C.

A RECORD IN SAUCE.

OVER 8,000,000 BOTTLES SOLD IN ONE YEAR.

YORKSHIRE RELISH

THE MOST DELICIOUS SAUCE IN THE WORLD.
Makes the Plainest Viands Palatable, and the Daintiest Dishes more Delicious.
Enriches Soups, Stews, Chops, Steaks, Fish, etc.
Sold in Bottles, 6d., 1s., and 2s. each.
Sole Proprietors: GOODALL, BACKHOUSE, & CO., LEEDS.

IE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

ts the Hair from falling off.
es Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL LOUR.
delicately perfumed it leaves no unpleasant
our.
a dye, and therefore does not stain the
in or even white linen.
be in every house where a HAIR RENEWER eeded.
ur Chemist or Hairdresser for

E MEXICAN HAIR
RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per large Bottle.
Prepared only by the
)-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Ltd.,
FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

IS THE BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE IN THE WORLD.

Prevents the Decay of Teeth.
Renders the Teeth Pearly White.
Is perfectly Harmless and Delicious to the Taste.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World
2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER
Put up in Glass Jars, price 1s.

The List will CLOSE on WEDNESDAY, 4th MAY prox., at 12 o'clock noon.

THE

North Mount Lyell Copper Co. Ltd.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893.

CAPITAL - - - - - £500,000,

IN 500,000 SHARES OF £1 EACH, OF WHICH 465,000 SHARES HAVE BEEN ISSUED AND ARE FULLY PAID, AND THE REMAINING 35,000 SHARES ARE RESERVED FOR FUTURE ISSUE.

Issue of £200,000 Five per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures at par, redeemable by the Company at £105 on 30th June, 1908, or at any previous date during their currency, on six months' notice, at £110 per £100.

The Debentures will be secured by a Trust Deed, creating in favour of the Trustees a first charge upon the entire undertaking and property of the Company, including the Company's Railway from the Mount Lyell Mines to Macquarie Harbour. The Trust Deed will provide for the creation of a sinking fund of £20,000 out of the profits of the Company in each year for redemption of the issue by drawings or by purchase in the market commencing on 1st July, 1900, also that the sum of £20,000 shall be deposited with the Trustees to meet the first two years' interest. Debenture holders will have the option, to be exercised before 1st July, 1900, of exchanging their Debentures for fully-paid Shares of the Company at the rate of 17½ Shares for each £100 of Debentures, or as nearly as may be, any fractional difference being adjusted in cash. The 35,000 Shares now unissued are reserved for this purpose.

TRUSTEES FOR THE DEBENTURE HOLDERS.

General Sir Hugh Gough, V.C., G.C.B., I.S.C.
Williams Jacks, Esq., D.L., J.P.

DIRECTORS.

William Jacks, Glasgow, and 23, Leadenhall-street, E.C., Deputy Chairman.
Leonard R. Higgins, 9, Drapers'-gardens, E.C.
John S. MacArthur, Glasgow, and 56, New Broad-street, E.C.
D. J. Mackay, 133, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

AUSTRALIAN BOARD.

J. P. Lonergan, Chairman. | George Moore.
Hector MacDonald. | C. E. Packer.

ENGINEER IN CHIEF AND GENERAL MANAGER.—Alfred Clayton, M.Inst.C
BANKERS.—The British Linen Company Bank, 41, Lombard-street, E.C.; H Office, Edinburgh, and Branches in Scotland.
BROKERS.—Messrs. Derenburg & Co., 9, Drapers'-gardens, E.C.
SOLICITORS.—Messrs. Renshaw, Kekewich, & Smith, 2, Suffolk-lane, E.C.
SECRETARY AND OFFICES.—Thomas Urquhart, 153-155, Leadenhall-street, E

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

THE NORTH MOUNT LYELL COPPER COMPANY, LIMITED, offer the above 5 per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures, payable at the Company's Bankers as follows:—£5 per Cent. on Application; £20 per Cent. on Allotment; £25 per Cent. on 1st July, 1898; £25 per Cent. on 1st October, 1898; £25 per Cent. on 1st January, 1899.

The whole amount may be paid up on Allotment, or with any instalment, under discount at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

The Debentures will be issued in amounts of £100, £50, and £10, payable to bearer, with coupons attached for the half-yearly payment of interest, which shall be due and payable in London on each 1st May and 1st November. The first payment of interest, calculated from the dates of payment of the respective instalments, will be made on 1st November, 1898. Provision will be made for registration of Bonds by holders who so desire.

The North Mount Lyell Copper Company, Limited, was established on the 20th September, 1897, for the purpose of acquiring and working on an extended scale the remarkable copper mine owned by the North Mount Lyell Mining Company, in the Colony of Tasmania, and for the construction of a mining tramway from the mine to Macquarie Harbour, and the building of a wharf there, for the erection of smelters on the line of tramway, and for the other purposes specified in the Company's Memorandum of Association.

Since the incorporation of the Company, and in response to an application then pending, the Parliament of Tasmania passed an Act empowering the North Mount Lyell Mining Company, to construct and work a public railway instead of the mining tramway for which that Company, along with other companies, already held easements, and thus the North Mount Lyell Copper Company is now a railway and public carrying company as well as a mine-owning Company.

The cash capital of the Company at the time of incorporation only provided funds for the construction of its share of the mining tramway and a limited smelting plant. As, however, the public railway must be constructed and equipped on a scale sufficient for public requirements, and the service closely connected by swift steamer with Australia as a necessary adjunct to the railway, and the discovery of the new ore body having rendered much larger smelting works necessary, it is now incumbent on the Company to provide sufficient capital for these purposes.

The Company's property now consists of—

(1) Three contiguous blocks of ten acres each, held under mining leases from the Crown, which carry the right not only to the copper, but also to the gold and silver which are an important part of the mineral wealth of the Mine;

(2) Eighteen acres or thereabouts, being the site of the smelting and reduction works;

(3) Water rights, forest rights, and sundry other reservations and easements;

(4) A concession from the Parliament of Tasmania to construct a railway from the Company's Mines to Macquarie Harbour, a distance of about thirty miles.

EXTENT AND VALUE OF THE ORE BODIES.—The ore bodies owned by the Company are now proved to be of vast extent and richness. They consist of what is known as the Eastern Ore Body, the Western Ore Body, and the New Development, more properly described as the Main Ore Body. These several ore bodies are expected as the result of further exploration and at depth to develop into one vast continuous deposit.

The Eastern Ore Body so far has been explored to a length of 123 feet, an average width of 45 feet, and to a depth of 225 feet, giving approximately 138,375 tons of ore of an average assay value of £11 19s. per ton or £1,591,313. The Western Ore Body has now been explored for a length of 100 feet, an average width of 30 feet, a depth of 165 feet, and has an average assay value of £9 14s. per ton, in all £533,500. The Main Ore Body outcrop has a length of 205 feet, average width of 95 feet, and has been struck by No 3 Tunnel at a depth of 120 feet. The indications are that the mass widens in depth, but assuming the boundaries to be only the same at 120 feet as at the surface, the value of this ore—copper glance and erubescite—set down at £15 per ton, is £3,894,990.

The total value of the ore, according to above estimate, is	£6,019,803
Allow 20 per cent. for unforeseen contingencies (£1,203,960), and deduct cost of production, taking smelting at 15s. per ton, transport and mining, freight of copper, refining and other charges, 15s., in all 30s. per ton of ore, or on 453,041 tons (£679,561) ...	1,883,522
Leaving estimated profit	£4,136,281

In view of the facts that these ore bodies have increased in magnitude and value as depth has been attained, and that no account is taken of the large quantities of low grade, though nevertheless good paying ore passed through, the above estimate of the ore actually in sight, and which will be available for treatment when the works are complete, must be regarded as extremely safe. It will be noted that reference is only made to ore bodies exposed, but it is confidently expected that as developments progress an infinitely larger ore body will be proved. The above figures are based on the recent average price of copper, say £50 per ton.

RAILWAY.—The North Mount Lyell and Macquarie Harbour Railway Act requires the Railway to be completed within four years from 15th December, 1897, the date of the passing of the Act, and also provides that the Government can, with the consent of Parliament, purchase the railway and rolling stock after the completion of 21 years from the date of the Act upon the terms and compensation therein set out. Although this right of purchase will not arise within the currency of the present Debentures, the Trust Deed will be so framed as to include any monies payable in respect of such purchase compensation as part of the Debenture Holder's security.

At the time the present Company was formed, the ore deposits of the Mount Lyell mineral field, including those of this Company were not so well assured either as to magnitude or value as has since been proved. Other mining properties of considerable promise have also recently been discovered on the route of the Company's railway. A greatly increased demand for railway and smelting facilities is therefore now created, and the Directors consider it necessary to construct a railway and provide all other facilities capable of coping with the altered conditions as to traffic and smelting requirements. The route of the Company's Railway being on the eastern side of the range of mountains through which the lode formation runs may be expected to command the traffic of the Tasman Lyell, and the Mount Lyell Comstock Company situated to the north of this Company's property, and of the Mount Lyell Consols, Mount Lyell Extended, Mount Lyell Mining and Railway, and Sc Mount Lyell Mining Companies to the south.

The mining and smelting operations to be carried on in this district and subsidiary industries necessarily following thereon will demand the labour of a large population whose ordinary necessaries of life must of themselves constitute a large railway traffic. In addition to this the local passenger traffic is likely to be a good source of revenue. There is already an Abt or rack railway belonging to the Mount Lyell Mining and Railway Company, Limited, which passes down the Queen River valley, from that Company's smelters to Teepakana, about eight miles from the sea. This railway is already overworked, and cannot carry more traffic than is necessary for the requirements of its own line. The North Mount Lyell Railway cannot, therefore, be regarded as a competitor but will serve the field on its own route—the King River valley—which is quite distinct and apart from that of the Mount Lyell Mining and Railway Company's line.

The Directors have considered it advisable to submit the estimates of cost of the new works and of probable traffic, to Messrs. P. W. and C. S. Meik, M.M.I.C.E., of London and Edinburgh, and on the information laid before them these gentlemen estimate the probable total cost to provide and equip the railway, steamer, smelting plant, and wharf accommodation at Port Macquarie at the sum of £220,000. It will be obvious that the railway when completed will constitute a highly important asset of the Company, and would of itself be adequate security for the present issue of Debentures. Messrs. Meik estimate the net revenue of the Railway alone at £25,000 per annum. Their report may be seen at the offices of the Company.

The construction of the Railway is already in progress, and as far as constructed, has been paid for, so that the cash capital already expended and in hand, with the proceeds of this issue of debentures, amply provides for the completion of the Works.

The quotation of the Company's Shares may be considered to justify the expectation that the Company might have sold "en bloc" the 35,000 Shares in reserve at a price that might command the bulk of the further capital required. In view, however, of the enormous increase in extent and value of the Company's ore bodies, and the greatly enhanced importance of the Company's railway, the Directors feel that by selling the reserved Shares at the present time they would not so truly conserve the interests of the Shareholders as by negotiating the present temporary Debenture issue, and redeeming it after the mine and railway are in full and efficient working, when it may be reasonably expected that the market price of the Company's Shares will more closely approximate the value of the Company's assets. With the object, however, of ensuring that the Shareholders shall have the first opportunity of securing the benefits accruing to participants in this Debenture issue, prospectuses will only be sent to Shareholders. Applications from Shareholders, lodged at the London Office of the British Linen Company Bank, not later than noon, on Wednesday, the 4th May prox., will be preferentially considered, but no application will be entertained for a less sum than £100.

Applications on the form enclosed with this Prospectus and accompanied by the stipulated deposit on the amount of Stock applied for, will be received by the Bankers of the Company.

Full Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained from the Bankers and Brokers, and at the offices of the Company.

London, April 29th, 1898.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.

THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD

SUN FIRE OFFICE FOUNDED 1710

SUM INSURED IN 1896 - £388 952,800.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £30,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up, £300,000. Total funds, over £1,500,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

BIRKBECK BANK (Estab. 1851), Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, London. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, on the minimum monthly balances when not below £100.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK with particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

H. HALFORD and COMPANY,

70 and 71, Palmerston Buildings, Old Broad Street, London.

ESTABLISHED 1869.

Business in Stocks and Shares at close prices.

Dealings reported by wire if required.

Prompt Settlements.

Thousands of Testimonials from Clients.

Americans and Canadians a Speciality. Also Westralians and Kaffirs.

Lists of Closing Prices gratis.

Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

NO CONNECTION WITH ANY OTHER FIRM.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No Member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.
Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.
A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

ALFRED CARTER, LIMITED

47, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

New and Extensive SHOWROOMS 31 and 32, SHOE LANE, E.C. (Midway between Holborn-circus and Ludgate-circus). (ONLY ADDRESSES)

INVALIDS' MECHANICAL FURNITURE, BATH CHAIRS, &c.
Maker and Inventor of VIADUCT AMBULANCE LITTER, used all over the World.

BRIGHTON BATH CHAIR

SPINAL AND BATH CHAIR COMBINED.

WICKER BATH CHAIR.

BATH CHAIR.

SELF-PROPELLING AND CARRYING CHAIR COMBINED

PERAMBULATORS. (New Designs for 1897.)

ALFRED CARTER, Ltd., 47, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON.
Illustrated Catalogue Post Free. No connection with any other Firm.

FOR COMPLAINTS of the STOMACH, LIVER, etc., DRINK

VICHY CELESTINS Spring

Caution: See that each bottle has a neck label with VICHY-ÉTAT & the name of the Sole Importers: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd, 26, Upper Thames Street, LONDON, E.C.

FOR UPWARDS OF FIFTY YEARS THE

PREMIER NURSERY LAMP.

FOR UPWARDS OF FORTY YEARS THE

PREMIER NIGHT LIGHT.

Single Wicks burn 9 hours each, in boxes containing 8 Lights.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Clarke's "Pyramid" & "Fairy" Light Co., Ltd., Cricklewood, London, N.W.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN,

and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established over a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, LYNCH & CO., J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale Houses.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

CLARKE'S

WORLD-FAMED

BLOOD MIXTURE

Warranted to cleanse the blood from all Impurities from whatever cause arising. For Scrofula, Scurvy, Eczema, Bad Legs, Skin and Blood Diseases, Pimples and Sores of all kinds, its effects are marvellous. It is the only real specific for Gout and Rheumatic Pains, for it removes the cause from the Blood and bones. Thousands of Wonderful Cures have been effected by it. In bottles, 2s. 9d. and 11s. each, of Chemists everywhere.

BEWARE OF WORTHLESS IMITATIONS.

Cadbury's cocoa

"The Standard of Highest Purity."—The Lancet.

"The favourite Cocoa of the day. For Nourishment there is nothing superior to be found."—MEDICAL MAGAZINE.

A MASTER KEY

of this SIZE

Can be made to open any number of Locks. Many Ladies and Gentlemen have the whole of their locks so arranged that a MASTER KEY, so small as to be worn in a finger-ring or locket, will open every lock they possess—from their Dressing Bags, Trunks, Jewel Cases, Despatch Boxes, &c., to the Front Door, Wine Cellar, Park Gates, &c. Just think of the Convenience! The locks are made in suites, each suite with its own key, so that the ladies' maid or valet can open the luggage, the butler the wine cellar, and so on, but the suite keys are of no use for any but their own series.

BRAMAH JEWEL SAFES,

BURGLAR AND FIRE RESISTING, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR BED AND DRESSING ROOMS.

Specialities in fitted Suite Cases and Dressing Bags, Jewel Cases, Despatch and Deed Boxes, Bramah Street Door Latches, with small keys, Bramah Padlocks for Bicycles, with Leather-covered Chains, &c. &c.

New Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

For Prices and Particulars apply to

NEEDS & CO. Late

Bramah & Co.

Sole Manufacturers of the real Bramah Locks.

100, NEW BOND STREET,

LONDON, W.

A Master Key Signet Ring (Open).

PURE—WHOLESOME—DELICIOUS.

BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER

Is the unfailing resource of every Lady of the House and successful Housekeeper, affording a constant variation in the daily menu.

NO EGGS! NO RISK! NO TROUBLE!

SINGER

MODÈLE DE LUXE

(Registered Trade Mark)

CYCLES

IMPORTANT NOVELTIES FOR 1898.

1898 Lists Free.

SINGER CYCLE CO. LTD. COVENTRY
LONDON: 17, HOLBORN VIADUCT.

'SCOTLAND'S BEST.'

Pattisons' WHISKY

THE PINK OF PERFECTION.

A Wholesome and Agreeable Stimulant of Unrivalled Quality and Flavour.

The King of Scotch Whiskies.

Sold Everywhere.

SOLE PROPRIETORS:

PATTISONS, LIMITED,

HIGHLAND DISTILLERS,

LEITH, BALLINDALLOCH, AND LONDON.

HEAD OFFICE:

Constitution Street, Leith.

OUR PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,001.—ANAGRAM ON "THE FRANCO-RUSSIAN ALLIANCE IN THE FAR EAST."

DRY MONOPOLE (real name and address will be found published below) £1 1 0
R. F. (real name and address will be published in due course) £1 1 0

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,002.

I have not yet been able to collate the contents of the numerous lists of Public Buildings received; but hope to be in a position to announce the result of this competition next week.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,006.

A question has been asked by Mr. G. R. Sims in the Referee, which it may interest the readers of TRUTH to try and answer. Is it possible, he inquired, to designate in one word the offence which is usually described as "riding-in-a-railway-carriage-of-a-superior-class-to-that-for-which-the-fare-has-been-paid." The usual prize of Two Guineas is offered to the competitor who proves most successful

IN SUGGESTING SUCH A WORD AS WILL SERVE FOR THE ABOVE PURPOSE.

It is very doubtful whether there is any word now existing in the language which will be available. Probably, therefore, competitors will have themselves to invent the words they suggest. Each competitor may send in as many suggestions as he pleases. All answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, May 16, at the latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of ROUGHTY, winner of Prize No. 986, is Philip A. McCarthy, Esq., Ballyre, Killeagh, co. Cork.

 The real name, with the address, of SCOTUS VIATOR, winner of Prize No. 989, is J. S. Shepard, Esq., 31, Billing-road, Northampton.

 The real name, with the address, of DOMBEY, winner of Prize No. 996, is George Cuttle, Esq., 4, Gordon-road, Wanstead.

 The real name, with the address, of CARRADABIA, winner of a fourth part of Prize No. 999, is Miss Irene G. Poyser, Burniston, Sydenham.

 The real name, with the address, of LYSWYS, winner of a fourth part of Prize No. 999, is E. Arblaster, Esq., Glovers-road, Small Heath, Birmingham.

 The real name, with the address, of LEILA, winner of a fourth part of Prize No. 999, is Mrs. Donaldson, Eastmere, Tottington, Thetford.

 The real name, with the address, of DINAH, winner of a fourth part of Prize No. 999, is Captain Lennox, R.A., Aldershot.

 The real name, with the address, of BEAUMONT, winner of Prize No. 1,000 is John G. Welch, Esq., Hillsborough, Kidderminster.

 The real name, with the address, of DRY MONOPOLE, winner of half of Prize 1,001, is H. P. Hubbard, Esq., Crowhurst, Campden-road, South Croydon.

SCOTUS VIATOR.—Many thanks for your suggestion.

W. NEVERMORE.—I will substitute your amended answer for that first sent by you. For your suggestion I am very much obliged.

NIN NIN.—It has given me much pleasure to comply with your very reasonable wish.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,003.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

STANZAS CONTAINING RHYMES TO THE WORDS "JONATHAN" AND "MEXICO."

The landsman was no sooner wrecked on Cape Colonna than
His former pangs were all forgotten; he was deck-sick, oh!
This moral may commend itself to Brother Jonathan,
If Spain from Cuba driven yields its rule to Mexico. Canute.

"Spain's cruel," by those she has tried to annex; Echo
Answers, "Spain's cruel, remember poor Mexico."
Now she cannot regain her prestige with more honour than
By resisting the claims of importunate Jonathan. Nodding Violet.

Too late to remember when thou'rt of wrecks sick, O
Spain, that 'twere better t'invoke the Madonna than Follow the example of Impudent Mexico,
Trying conclusions with bold Brother Jonathan. Koddeldok.

Better for Spain to remember her honour than Truckle obsequiously to Friend Jonathan.
Let Spain attack; very soon of his wrecks sick, oh,
Won't he wish himself banished to Mexico! Koddeldok.

In Isle of Thanet you may con a "than"
With "th" hard like end of Jonathan:
But graphers with the prefix "lexico"
Provide no perfect rhyme to Mexico. Eboracum.

To seek the sprightliest of her sex I go
Not to the U. S. A., but Mexico;
I'd rather woo a Spanish donna than
A relative of cousin Jonathan. Eboracum.

When things and persons are compared, all hinges, sure, upon a than;
For instance, there's no bigger Boss—in his esteem—than "Jonathan,"
Who flaunts his dollars, from New York, throughout the States, to Mexico, Drinks "cocktails," and supports the trade of each "French Champagne (sec) Cie." (Co.).*
La Plata.

* Explanatory English of the French "Cie."

Amongst our learned, there are some who write as graphers (Lexico),
And some who tell us all about such distant lands as Mexico,
And some when to compare with "more," and how it hangs upon a than,
And how our spelling differs much from that of cousin Jonathan. La Plata.

My name's Ap Rhys Ap Jenkyns, an' I comes from Merioneth, an'
I'm coin' to the colden lant, the lant of Cousin Jonathan;
An', please us, when I've peen through California an' Mexico,
To Tawson City, Klondyke, an' the Yukon River nex' I eo. Burgage.

A Spaniard who sought a divorce in far Mexico,
Cried, as he seized his wife's paramour, "Ecce Co'!"*
The culprit was Yankee; and therefore the Don hath an Obvious grievance against Cousin Jonathan. Harpsichord.

* Behold the co-respondent!

Calm down your wrath; keep your hair on, old Jonathan,
Under your vest let there not be a speck sick. O,
Better that Spain should be still prima donna than Angry notes ruffle the Gulf Stream of Mexico. Rabelais.

A Welshman, christened Jonathan,
Once joined a Middlesexy "Co.,"
Which worked from Merioneth an Electric wire to Mexico. Rabelais.

The Spaniard now with deadly hatred conneth 'un
That's known as Uncle Sam or Brother Jonathan;
Let's hope war's dogs, that yelping co., that yexy co.,
Will soon be silenced in the Gulf of Mexico. Cestrian.

It was calm, and he breathed deeper love for the donna than
The proverbial affection of David and Jonathan;
Till "Caramba!" she cried, as she lay on the deck sick, "O
Madre di Dios! why did we leave Mexico?" Whig.

Your girls are fair, friend Jonathan,
Their praise the rougher sex echo,
And say they're far more bonny than
The dusky belles of Mexico. Apemantus.

I'd rather be, good Jonathan,
(You'll find my words in lexico),
A help in Arizona than
A heavy swell in Mexico. Newton.

A little, lithping girl upon a Than Fwanthithco farm, out in a very pecksy co.,
Came to be cured by Dr Jonathan,
And now pronounces quite distinctly "Mexico." Newton.

You're not a bad hand at a lexico—
Graphical word-slinging combat, friend Jonathan,
But you're entered, remember, upon a than-
Atological bout with a stronger than Mexico. Sterne.

Can you be thinking of "grab," brother Jonathan;
Under the spell of the World's Great "Annexy" Co.;
Bringing more terror to sweet Spanish Donna than Apaché hordes to her sisters of Mexico! Tom Nissed.

Last year a Spanish Don, who was escorting a great Donna then,
About whose loveliness men raved, toured in the land of Jonathan;
And really it was the strangest thing to hear the softer sex echo
The male opinion of her charms, whose fame spread clean to Mexico. Ooloo.

When the husband heard the verdict he'd a fit of apoplexy. Co-
Respondent and the lady went to "live it down" in Mexico.
'Twas an error, for there's no more a stickler for your honour than
The prudish so-called moralist that's known as Brother Jonathan. Cabbage.

Bellona rampant in the States, for war wi' all her sex i' co;
And all about the Cuban Isle that blocks the Gulf of Mexico.
Yet few or none have more to gain from constant peace with honour than,
The gay "mixed pickles" who reside beneath the sway of Jonathan. Scrivener.

Seeking a thief who had collared some cheques I co—
Acted with Jules, a detective from Mexico;
In figure and face he was more like a donna than Anything; he didn't like Brother Jonathan. W. W.

The war-clouds roll on every side—grim grows the face of Jonathan;
No doubt he feels his country will the praises of his sex echo;
But don't you think he'd rather meet a handsome, gentle Dona than
A warlike Don, who'd yield his life to save an inch of Mexico? Felixicus.

Let boom of guns from Spanish decks echo
Along the coast from Maine to Mexico;
Yet time will prove the haughty Don hath an Unequal match with Brother Jonathan. Scissors.

There was a loud explosion, sharp as on a thunnery day, and woe it brought to brother Jonathan,
For 'twas his ship, the Maine, blown up—her decks echo
The shock that shivered her in Gulf of Mexico. Esperanza.

This Cuban affair is a hard nut for Jonathan,
Harder than Venezuela or Mexico;
How can he banish Don Blanco or Don Athanasius?.. Is it by means of an Annexy Co.? Excelsior.

He gave to me a lovelier Madonna than
Was ever painted by our clever Jonathan:
Therewith a weed of well-known brand of Mexico,
Alas, the day, it made me such a wreck, sick, O! N. Igma.

JONATHAN (IM)POSING AS DON QUIXOTE.

Thought wily, acute, warlike Brother Jonathan:
"I guess I'll get Cuba—himeby Mexico"—
The uncertain issue calculate—Con, ah then,
What wealth that wild whirlpool war's costly checks suck O! J. McGrigor Allan.

In vain I sit, and search throughout the "Lexico,"
To try and find a rhyming word with Jonathan;
And as for finding one to rhyme with Mexico,
I'd just as soon expect to find Johnson-athan. Ubique.

More extreme than the love of a David and Jonathan;
Than a Spaniard's for pretty gitana or donna, than
The American Eagle's for Cuba or Mexico,
Will that bird's record be, if from screamings to pecks he go. Robert Martin.

"VARIUM ET MUTABILE."

Uncertain counsels sway our brother Jonathan
Neath April sky nec humido nec sicco;
When Congress disagreed there shone a thin
Ray of bright hope o'er Gulf of Mexico.
B.H.P.

A Scotchman who voyaged to Mexico
Cried, while lying one day on the deck, sick, "O
Gie me some whuskey if aiblens a man hath an Ounce." It was furnished him by brother Jonathan. Singeon.

You will find that the most democratic republic of Jonathan
Is no less jealous of all that affects its national honour than
The neighbouring proud oligarchic republic of Mexico,
Whose Cabinet well might adopt the appropriate title of "Rex y Co." Singeon.

Better welcome once more Spain's sweet prima donna than Humble her country and race Brother Jonathan!
Let fresh vivas and homage to her and her sex echo,
Not the roar of great guns from Havana to Mexico.
Lyom Poore.

 It is understood that Madame Patti contemplated making her very last appearance in the United States.

He sailed away upon a thun
D'ry day on board the Mexico,
But never went on deck, sick, O,
So sea-sick was poor Jonathan!
Pulchrior.

There's a metal when coined which is fated to vex eco-
Nomists, who wrangle like clergy upon Athan-
Asius; for while it's in favour in Mexico,
In the States it perplexes our dear Brother Jonathan. Creran.

Contentedly I'd live twelve months in Mexico,
And even rack my brains; to write a sonnet then,
Could I first hear the Spanish war-ships' decks echo
With the bold battle-cry of "Brother Jonathan."
Ooloo.

When I embark for Margate on a Than-
Et steamer, on her sunny decks I co-
Sy sit, with fragrant weed of Mexico,
Or cigarette from land of Jonathan.
Beaumont.

The harassed Dons of threatened raid and sack-sick owe
A heavy debt of hate to Brother Jonathan,
Will it be now as once before with Mexico?
Wait must we till the question new light dawneth on. Baritone.

This Cuban "snarl" McKinley sadly conneth in
Its various phases, even as erstwhile Mexico
Did furnish food for thought to Brother Jonathan
What wonder it should make the White House hack-sick O!
Baritone.

Hands off! the warning voice of Jonathan
Sends up to heaven against the don a thun-
-Der cry from Canada to Mexico;
Shouts every man, and the fair sex echo.
Daleth.

A blustering fellow is Jonathan,
Says he: "Would those Spanish dons vex I co';"
Then feathers and war-paint he donneth on,
Claims Cuba and casts eyes on Mexico.
Almaviva.

If you must go, here's success to you, Jonathan.
I shall prefer to be busy with lexico-
-Graphical toil, or to flirt with a donna, than Fight with the Don and his warships off Mexico.
Mos.

You'll bet a sov.! you're on Nathan;
I'll baffle you and Jonathan;
To beat you both and vex Ike, oh,
I'd gladly sail to Mexico. Rose Leaf.

Whither away, O brother Jonathan?
Is it fair Cuba, to annex, ye go,
To stir the stew the Spanish don hath on?
Or are ye bound for golden Mexico?
Fishy.

Playing bully at Cuba pharisaical Jonathan,
Will acquire not a little more glory or honour than
He did when he played the same brutal game up in Mexico:
Let his ships open fire, then with groans may their decks echo. Impisi.

A famous Yank-e lexico-
-Grapher exclaimed in Mexico:
"Find me a fairer donna than The Antilles' Queen for Jonathan!"
Pyramid.

A cute old chap is Jonathan!
He bests 'em all down Mexico;
He even tried it on Nathan,
That one-er to perplex a co. Pyramid.

A youngster would lisp out "astonathan!"
Should I show him the peas grown in Mexico;
I mean those grown by gardener Jonathan;
To send you some home, in for pecks I go.
Toria.

I am a partner, and my name is Jonathan,
On business oft I go to Mexico;
When there they shout to me, "On, Nathan!"
And isn't that enough to vex a co?
Mushroom.

Just my friends to vex I go
Once a year to Mexico;
When my incog.'s Mona, than
Which know you fitter, Jonathan?
Mona.

Says Spain to Uncle Jonathan:
"You made no fuss in Mexico,
When I m engaged upon a than--Kless task you rant and vex! I go."
Gadfly.

Hullo! I say, here is a vexy go,
I've got to find a rhyme for Mexico;
I'll ask my girl: she is a cuter donna than
Many a lynx-eyed lass of Brother Jonathan.
Loddiswell.

From Canada to Mexico
The Jingoes' yells did vex echo;
McKinley wav'd his bonnet then.
And cried, "Have at 'em, Jonathan."
Sahib.

Wars, battles, murders, horrors, wrecks, I co'
Ha' thought them petty states by Mexico.
Peace, peace, my lads! though honest John a'than-
—Kful 'd be to help his brother Jonathan.
Bathyllus.

In maddened rage, with outstretched necks, ico-
-Noclastic hands, like hordes of Mexico;
They break each cherished type — Luke, John, Nathan-—Iel fall; then Moses, David, Jonathan.
Bathyllus.

Fer Cuba's folk I sympcrthise—wi' luv the luv of Jonathan,
An' Cuba's tyrint bold must quit, spech'ly when I warn'th un;
But should 'e not respec' the note, which shouts frem Maine ter Mexico,
Wall, then I mus' advance a pace, an' show him whar I 'spec's 'e go. J. B. Pope.

"No colonies," quoth Jonathan,
"Want I in Gulf of Mexico;
Though Cuba, p'rhaps, the don hath an Idea to annex I go."
R. F.

Spain hath no lovelier "donna" than
The child of Brother Jonathan!
In vain from Middlesex I go
To find her peer in Mexico.
A. J. W.

Take warning, ere too late, brave cousin Jonathan,
Lest, Jingo-driven, Cuba to annex ye go;
For there are signs the Spanish don hath an Alliance formed with far-off Mexico.
Scorpio.

Jonathan goes to Mexico!
But fairer what forth gone hath than
From all men those they vex sick go?
Or Mexico from Jonathan! S'pup.
The noble Spanish don hath an Opponent strong in Jonathan;
I would help his cause, and vex his foe,
Should he beg aid from Mexico. Janet.

The Yankees dictate unto Spain, and want it at their beck, sick. Oh!
How they all flaunt the Stars and Stripes from New York State to Mexico!
"Than me there is no bigger Boss," says humble cousin Jonathan,
Whose grammar's bad, as in such phrase, an "I" should follow on a "than." La Plata.

Much more deadly the shafts of fond eyes, Brother Jonathan,
Be they lustrous with health or the dread bella-donna, than
Are the missiles of foemen in Cuba or Mexico,
Unless armed at all points 'gainst the failings of sex ye go. Robert Martin.

ON ACCEPTING, "WITHOUT PREJUDICE," PAPAL INTERVENTION IN THE HISPANO-AMERICAN DISPUTE.

To accept the Pope's aid, would not more, Brother Jonathan,
Tend to show your belief in the Papal Madonna, than
It would seem to imply that forthwith to annex ye go (Being regions Papistical) Cuba or Mexico.
Robert Martin.

"Honor is poor, I know, said Jonathan;
"But I would rather marry Honor than
Be rich. If she says 'no,' 'twill vex me so,
I'll run away and live in Mexico."
Risk.

A sprightly young coster nam d Jonathan
Fell out one day with his dear donah, Fan;
He straightway shipped off for far Mexico,
And, winking, cried, "'Tis her to vex I go!"
Myrah.

Answers have also been received from Singelet, Cambridge, Hiriart, Zwartkop, Scotus Viator, Gwilt Gwalia, Beta, Wee John, Kasihan, Felixicus, Jemima, Tea Eye, Gadfly, Belle Majorky, Pseudonym, Culpepper, Gryphon, Sol, Hanworth, Don Quixote, Mat, O. P. Q., N. Igma, One Hand, A. P., Roseland, Ibycus, Candide, Hope, Omar Khayyam, T. I., Bel Demonio, A. P. L., Bridge, Adam Elmas, Ooloo, Cock Robin, Arron, Allspice, Creran, Sceptic, Warrington, Wayuflete, Floretta, Quatrebras, Guillaumette, Hejakes, G. F., Number Nine, Echo, Highwayman, Fleda, Sinona, Sissie, Mignon, E. M., Glenrosa, Nin Nin, Musafir, The Ram Rabbit, Lincoln, Cock Robin, Bangor, Ediora, Idiotes, Pyramid, and Aunt Isa.

A THIN PAPER EDITION OF

TRUTH

is published weekly,

and can be obtained on order of all newsagents.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

To all countries in the Postal Union:—

THREE MONTHS	£0 7 8
SIX MONTHS	0 15 4
TWELVE MONTHS	1 10 8

And to any Address in the United Kingdom—THREE MONTHS, 7s.; SIX MONTHS, 14s.; TWELVE MONTHS, 28s.

THE

Chancery Lane Safe Deposit

AND OFFICES COMPANY, LTD.

CHAIRMAN: Sir WILLIAM H. MARLING, Bart., Stanley Park, Stroud.
VICE-CHAIRMAN: ROBERT C. PONSONBY, Esq., 1, Clement's-inn, Strand, W.C.

SAFES and STRONG ROOMS for the Deposit of Deeds, Bonds, Plate, and Valuables of every description from £1 1s

Rooms for Consultations, Writing Rooms, and Telephone Rooms, &c., Free of Charge.

Rooms for Arbitrations, Meetings of Shareholders, Creditors, and Companies' Meetings from 10s. 6d.

Registration of Keys with Accident Insurance Policy for £100, on payment of 1s.

Offices, Flats, and Chambers to Let, close to Law Courts, Patent and Public Record Offices. Moderate Rents.

DEPOSIT BANK.

MONEY RECEIVED ON DEPOSIT in Large or Small Sums, Repayable at Eight Days' Notice. Compound Interest allowed at £2 10s. per Cent. per annum.

Further particulars can be obtained from E. Vincent Evans, Manager and Secretary of the Company, 63-4, Chancery-lane, London.

FRANZ JOSEF

APERIENT WATER

Highly appreciated all over the World for Twenty Years past.

Is the Only Palatable Natural Aperient Water. SOLD EVERYWHERE. HEAD OFFICE: BUDAPEST.

Genuine Old Welch Dressers

(Inlaid and Carved Oak), from £6. 10s.

ILLUSTRATED PRICED CATALOGUES POST FREE.
ALL GOODS CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY STATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

HEWETSONS,

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD, London, W.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

Is absolutely the finest made.

More fragrant, more lasting, and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ONLY ATKINSON'S:
ONCE USED, ALWAYS USED.

Single Bottle 2/3 post free,
Case of 6 Bottles 11s. Carriage Paid.
OF ALL DEALERS.

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London,
INVENTORS OF THE CELEBRATED
"WHITE ROSE" PERFUME.
"A Charming Scent."—H.R.H. The Duchess of York.

JUNO CYCLES ARE THE VERY BEST
Any JUNO Twelve Monthly Payments.
JUNO Lady's or Gent's Safety, £12 12s., 21/- monthly; £14 14s., 24/6 monthly. JUNOS from £10, 16/8 monthly. Write for New Season's List of JUNO Cycles & Accessories, sent post free. Junos shipped to all parts of the world. Large discount.
METROPOLITAN MACHINISTS CO., LTD.
75, 76, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.; & at Piccadilly Circus, London W.

LIQUEURS OF THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE.

These delicious Liqueurs, which have come so much into public favour on account of their wonderful properties of aiding Digestion and preventing Dyspepsia, can now be had of all the principal Wine and Spirit Merchants, and all good Hotels and Restaurants throughout the Kingdom.
Sole Consignee: W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

Enormous Demand

There can be no surer sign of popularity than the enormous demand all over the country for

LIPTONS DELICIOUS TEAS

They are appreciated everywhere for their delicate flavour and exquisite aroma, and undoubtedly have attained the pinnacle of fame.

LIPTONS CONTROL THE TEA MARKET.

£50,513 : 11 : 5

REPRESENTS DUTY ON OVER 1,300 TONS OF TEA, and is the WORLD'S RECORD DUTY CHEQUE for Tea paid to Her Majesty's Customs, London, by Lipton, for his week's clearance. IT SPEAKS FOR ITSELF, and represents considerably more than half the entire quantity of Tea used per week in the whole of Great Britain.

LIPTONS TEAS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD

ROYAL APPOINTMENT
LIPTON,
Tea Merchant by Special Appointment To Her Majesty The Queen.

BUY FROM THE GROWERS
The Finest Tea the World can produce.
PER 1/7 LB.
NO HIGHER PRICE.

RICH, PURE, AND FRAGRANT.
PER 1/- AND 1/4 LB.

LIPTON LTD., TEA, COFFEE, AND COCOA PLANTERS, CEYLON, THE LARGEST TEA, COFFEE, AND PROVISION DEALERS IN THE WORLD.

Chief Offices: CITY ROAD, LONDON. Branches and Agencies throughout the World.
Ceylon Offices and Tea and Coffee Shipping Warehouses: PRINCE STREET, and MADDEMA MILLS, CINNAMON GARDENS, COLOMBO. Indian Offices and Shipping Warehouses: HARE STREET, CALCUTTA.

See the ILLUSTRATED ESTIMATES in Hampton & Sons' Catalogue for the best values for furnishing throughout for £250, £500, £750, £1,000, £1,500, and £2,000 respectively.

HAMPTON & SONS. LTD

NEW CATALOGUES SENT FREE.

ORIGINAL SCHEMES FOR THE DECORATING AND FURNISHING OF ENTIRE HOUSES OR SINGLE ROOMS IN ANY OF THE TRADITIONAL STYLES OR IN THE BEST MODERN MANNER, DESIGNED BY ARTISTS AND EXECUTED BY MASTER CRAFTSMEN AT COMPETITIVE ESTIMATE ~ PRICES

SUGGESTIVE SCHEMES AND ESTIMATES FREE.

Decorations. Furniture.

For the best means of Furnishing throughout in most tasteful manner at any degree of cost, see Hampton & Sons' extensive and unrivalled Stocks of Decorations, Furniture Carpets, Fabrics, &c.

Suggestive Schemes and competitive estimates free.

Illustrated Catalogue sent free.

Carpets. Fabrics.

Fine Arts.

CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY RAILWAY STATION IN THE UNITED KINGDOM ON PURCHASES OVER 20/-

PALL MALL EAST. S.W.

WORKS BELVEDERE ROAD. S.E.

Hampton & Sons' Postal Department is equipped with ample facilities for supplying by return post PRICED PATTERNS of their NEW PRODUCTIONS for the 1898 Spring Season in Furnishing Fabrics of every description, and promptly executing with utmost care all orders received by post. Patterns Free.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & WYMAN, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

TRUTH

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1115. Vol. XLIII. Thursday, May 12, 1898. Price Sixpence.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Building," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen will hold an Investiture at Windsor Castle before the departure of the Court for Balmoral. This will be only a small function, as there is to be another Investiture at Windsor early in July.

Her Majesty is to arrive at Balmoral on the afternoon of Saturday, the 21st, and she will return to Windsor Castle on the morning of Tuesday, June 21. The summer residence of the Court at Windsor will last for between three and four weeks, after which the Queen is going to Osborne until the end of August.

An evening journal announced on Thursday that during the Queen's stay in town this week dinner-parties will be given each night by her Majesty in the State rooms of Buckingham Palace. The Queen never uses the State rooms for her small dinner-parties. The same journal states that "the Queen, as usual, will only appear after the actual dinner is over, and will receive the principal guests in the Withdrawing-room." It is wonderful that any sane person can be found to print such crazy nonsense. The Queen always dines with her guests, and a person must have indeed a queer notion of Court customs who supposes that only the "principal" people who have dined at the Palace would be received by her Majesty afterwards, if she was not able to appear at table. For whom is such insane gibberish provided?

Another contemporary, grievously given to romancing, states that the Queen was much occupied at Cimiez with "the Schaumburg-Lippe dispute," with which affair, as a matter of fact, her Majesty has no more concern than with the domestic affairs of the Emperor of China. It happens, moreover, that the Lippe-Detmold dispute (to which my contemporary evidently means to refer) has been finally settled for nearly a year past, for, after the decision of the Dresden tribunal, the Emperor William wisely acquiesced in its decision, but with a very bad grace. The Queen certainly does not hold "views on this subject diametrically opposed to those of the German Emperor," for, if his Majesty's plans had been carried out, his sister would have become the reigning Princess of Lippe-Detmold, with immense and very valuable estates, and the Queen is naturally anxious for her granddaughter to obtain such desirable promotion. However, this house of cards has now been finally shattered. As to the nonsense about the German Crown Prince being "hopelessly illegitimate" this is a fairy tale, or, rather, a maniac chattering in his sleep.

The Prince of Wales goes next Tuesday to Garswood Park, near Warrington, on a visit to Lord and Lady Gerard, and on Wednesday H.R.H. will proceed by special train to Southport, where he is to inspect the Royal Lancashire Hussars. The Prince will return to Marlborough House on the evening of Friday, the 20th, after having inspected the Bucks Yeomanry in Stone Park, near Buckingham.

H.R.H. is to pay a visit next September to Hungary (where he has not been for twelve years), and he will be the guest of the Archduke Frederick, at his splendid domain of Bellye, when there is to be a grand hunt, and the Emperor Francis Joseph, the King of Saxony, and the Duke of Cumberland will be included in the party.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who are now at Aldershot, will entertain a large party at Bagshot Park during Ascot race week, when the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha will probably be among their guests.

The Duke of Teck is going to Germany for the summer, and he will stay for some time at Stuttgart, where the King of Wurtemberg has placed one of the Royal villas in the suburbs at his disposal.

Several papers have stated that the Queen is going to place a monument to the Duchess of Teck in the nave of St. George's Chapel, "beneath which the remains of the late Princess repose." As a matter of fact, the Duchess is not buried under the nave or the choir of St. George's, or beneath any part of that chapel. Her coffin has been placed in the Royal vault of George III., which is underneath the Wolsey (now called the Albert Memorial) Chapel.

Dublin is fast emptying, according to its usual custom in May, when Irish society betakes itself to the greater capital across the water, or to the country and seaside resorts. The Viceregal establishment will not be broken up at the Viceregal Lodge until after the Queen's birthday, which will be kept in Ireland, in the customary way, on May 24. A review will be held and a State banquet given by Lord Cadogan at the Viceregal Lodge, the guests being the leading officials and heads of departments in Ireland. Lady Cadogan has not yet left the Viceregal Lodge and will probably not go to England until the end of the month. The Phœnix Park is at its best in the month of May, and especially when the "May" is in bloom, the hawthorns of the "Phœnix" being as renowned in their way as the chestnuts of Bushey.

The privilege of making Knights belongs to the office of the Irish Viceroy. He can, like a Prince, make a "belted Knight," his powers of ennobling, however, going no further. Needless to say that the making of an honest man is no more a Viceregal than a Royal privilege; nor, indeed, would Dublin Castle have much use for any such special creation. Lord Cadogan seems to have a well-developed taste for giving the accolade, and no Lord-Lieutenant of late years has added so many names to the order. Last week another addition was made to the roll, when Sir R. Stokes was knighted by Lord Cadogan at the Viceregal Lodge.

The present Government in Ireland have a curious way of alternating between making sudden "surprise" appointments and taking an undue length of time to fill vacant places. Mr. Justice Meredith was appointed to succeed Sir Edmund Bewley before the public, or even Sir E. Bewley's colleagues, knew that he had resigned. The opposite course has been pursued with regard to Sir George Morris's place, and also regarding the Lord Lieutenancy of the County of Dublin, vacant since the death of Lord Holmpatrick some months ago. Lord Ardilaun's appointment to fill the latter place would be popular, but Lord Ardilaun has a way of giving honest expression to his views, even when not flattering to officials in high place, which takes from his favour with his party.

Dr. Hamilton Kinglake, who died at Taunton on Saturday, was for many years a tower of strength to the Liberal Party at Taunton and in West Somersetshire. He was a politician of the same school as his distinguished brother, the author of "Eothen." Dr. Kinglake was held in the highest esteem by all classes of his neighbours, and he was one of the most popular men in the county.

Lord Spencer's term of office as President of the Royal Agricultural Society will expire on June 22, being Wednesday in the Birmingham show week, and he is to be succeeded by Lord Coventry. Next year's show is to be held at Maidstone, while in 1900 the "Royal" will meet at York.

It is a rule of the Royal Agricultural Society that if a member of the Council has not attended at least two of the meetings in each of the two years for which he was elected, he becomes ipso facto ineligible for re-election. The Duke of Devonshire has just fallen a victim to this very sensible regulation, and his nephew, Mr. Victor Cavendish, was unanimously chosen to be his successor on the Council. This is an excellent selection, for Mr. Cavendish takes a great interest in agricultural affairs, and he has a large farm at Holker, with a choice herd of shorthorns, and a fine stud of shire horses.

A FORTUNATE FAMINE.

[The vast amount of "extras" issued every hour of the twenty-four by sensational "Yellow" journals throughout the United States has about used up the reserve supply of paper held by the various mills, and a paper famine is said to be imminent.—Dalziel.]

Well, seeing what a lot of lies
These "Yellow" journals daily cram in,
With warmly sympathetic cries
Americans should hail this famine;
Welcome indeed a dearth should be
Which stays the ceaseless incubation
Of canards, monstrous from their birth,
And claps a gag upon sensation!

Welcome indeed should be a dearth
That stops each morning's crop of fables,
"Cabled" from places on the earth
Whence there, at present, are no cables;
That checks the too profuse parade
Of those magniloquent dispatches,
Dated from distant spots, but "made
Upon the premises"—in batches.

So let the threatened famine come,
To end such journalistic capers;
The only folks who need look glum
Are those who run the "Yellow" papers.
And no one need their fate deplore,
Or shed a single tear about them;
For if their prints appeared no more
The States would better be without them!

But we have "Yellow" journals, too,
Upon this side of the Atlantic,
Quite reckless what it is they do
To crowd a page with headlines frantic;
Journals which idlest rumours take,
Prepared, if needs be, to augment some;
And which, if there's no news to "fake,"
Are ready to at once invent some.

If, then, these prints of little worth,
Which with their falsehoods crude depress us,
Could also feel the threatened dearth,
We'll own their fate would not distress us.
In short, we feel inclined to say,
As we their recent files examine:
"America, without delay
Please send us on that Paper Famine!"

For the Truth Hotel List, see page 1208 in the present issue.
For Hospitals and Appeals, see page 1209.
For Amusements, see page 1207.
For Our Puzzles, see page 1221.

It is proposed, in connection with the intended and very necessary enlargements of the South Kensington Museum, to incorporate the science buildings with the art galleries, which seems a most unwise arrangement, as there would inevitably be a very much increased risk of fire. A building which will be in a great measure devoted to experimental purposes certainly ought not to be joined with an art museum.

Artists send their pictures to the Royal Academy exhibitions. Many are rejected, but many are accepted. Of these latter, however, very few are sold. These find their way back to the studios of the artists, or drift into the hands of speculators, who take them on sale or return, open an empty shop in some provincial town, and sell them —if they are sold—for what they will fetch. I would therefore suggest that there should be each year an auction at the Academy, without reserve, of all pictures which have not already been sold, and that every exhibitor should pledge himself neither directly nor indirectly to buy in his picture or pictures. Thus the stock of each year would be cleared off at market value.

For the sake of the uninitiated I must explain what a "knock out" is. Often when a sale by auction takes place, the dealers attending it agree that they will not bid against each other, but that if any outsider bids they will frighten him off by running up the price against him. When the public auction is over, the dealers have a private auction amongst themselves, when each article purchased is again put up for sale. The difference between the price paid at the public and at the private auction is then divided amongst the confederates.

About a fortnight ago a sale by auction took place, in the Isle of Wight, of goods belonging to the widow of one of the Queen's cooks. Amongst these goods were two pictures, one an undoubted Frank Holl, the other probably by him, but possibly by a pupil and touched up by him. At the public sale the two pictures realised £16. At the private sale they realised above £1,500, the difference between the two sums going to the knockers-out. One of the pictures has been since sold to a dealer for above £2 500, who, of course, has purchased it with a view to reselling it at a higher price.

I am asked to mention that the Clergy House that has just been built at the Eton Mission at Hackney Wick will be opened by Princess Christian to-morrow (Thursday). Dr. Warre will preside at the meeting, at four p.m., and the Bishops of London and Stepney will be among the speakers.

Some of the evening papers have been raising as much noise over the appointment of Dr. Barlow, Vicar of Islington, to a prebendal stall in St. Paul's Cathedral as if he had been promoted to a bishopric. A Prebendary of St. Paul's has a seat in the choir on all occasions, and he preaches the morning service in his turn, and receives, I believe, a fee of five guineas for each discourse. He also has a place in the Great Chapter, but this is all moonshine, for all real business is transacted by the Little Chapter, which means the Dean and the four Canons-residentiary. In the old days, a prebendal stall in St. Paul's meant a large income, which sometimes reached £5,000 a year. Bishop Percy, who held the stall of Finsbury along with the See of Carlisle, received some £86,000, in consequence of the leases on the prebendal estate falling in, only a few weeks before his death in 1856.

The Primate has made a very good appointment to the See of Victoria (Hong Kong), as the Rev. Joseph Charles Hoare (a son of the late Canon Hoare) is a man of great experience in mission work, full of zeal, and having, at the same time, much tact and discretion. Mr. Hoare, whose name had been much talked of in connection with this vacancy, is a man of moderate Church views, and his promotion will give general satisfaction, while the clergy in his Chinese diocese may consider themselves fortunate in obtaining a divine who is so admirably fitted for this particular post.

Prebendary Turner vacates the office of Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen on being appointed a Bishop Suffragan, and he will be succeeded by Archdeacon Lawrance, of St. Albans. The next vacancy among the Queen's Chaplains will be filled by Dr. Ryle, President of Queens' College, Cambridge, and Hulsean Professor of Divinity.

The appointment of the Rev. A. S. U. Blunt, son of the Bishop of Hull, to the living of Ham can only be fitly characterised as a gross abuse of ecclesiastical patronage. Mr. Blunt was ordained deacon in 1894—not, as stated in some of the papers, in 1892—so that he has been in full orders only three years. He is doubtless a very estimable and promising young man. Whatever his personal merits may be, however, the selection of a cleric of his standing for this piece of preferment is a manifest injustice to the scores and hundreds of more experienced clergymen who after years of devoted service to the Church are still toiling in ill-paid curacies. The fact that the living is in the gift, not of a private patron, but of King's College, Cambridge, renders such an appointment all the more reprehensible. It is absurd to suppose that among the graduates of the College there was no cleric with a better claim to promotion—though probably there was not another who had the advantage of being the son of a Suffragan Bishop.

The Rector of Hilperton, Wilts, appears to have been horrified by the awful way in which Good Friday was desecrated in his neighbourhood, there having been tea meetings of Baptists, Wesleyans, and Methodists at several places, besides a Band of Hope gathering at one village. If these harmless and sober functions fill the soul of this ecclesiastic with dismay and indignation, it would be interesting to learn how he views the annual dinner and smoking concert of railway men which takes place at Trowbridge on Good Friday, and at which entertainment Mr. Walter Long, Tory Cabinet Minister, and patron of the living of Hilperton, is usually a guest.

A Beautiful Hotel at Bournemouth.—The "Royal Bath." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Only Hotel on East Cliff. Moderate fixed tariff.

Scott Adie, 115, Regent-street, London, for Shooting Gowns, Cawdor Capes, Travelling Ulsters, Jackets, Racing Coats, Carriage Rugs from 10/9, Shawls, and Scotch Tweeds. Catalogue post free.

The statement in TRUTH that there would be some fun shortly in the House of Lords when Lord Grimthorpe tackled the Bishops on the Kensit question appears to have given umbrage to his lordship, who has written to the Times to contradict the aspersion. I hasten to say that I never for a moment credited his lordship with the intention of making fun of anything. It is, however, the fate of some people to create fun unintentionally.

For reasons unexplained, his lordship refers to the paragraph in TRUTH as "a fine piece of penny-a-lining." I don't know on what scale Lord Grimthorpe may be paid for a letter in the Times; but I will answer for it that in an ordinary newspaper office a penny-a-liner would have a very short life if he penned many such sentences as the following:—

> It seems that TRUTH has got so deep into my secret as to be able to promise "some fun" because I am going specially to castigate a Bishop, who will not soon be forgotten as the writer of two wonderful letters of the firework order advising Mr. Kensit not to go to his own parish church, where the Bishop himself admitted that the curate was doing wrong, but was going away, and to look out for and frequent one where the law is obeyed, if he can find one near enough; a thing by no means easy to do in many towns now; an odd-looking way of governing a diocese and keeping his own consecration vows, as Mr. Kensit told him.

This terse and neatly-moulded period is by no means the most wonderful in the epistle; indeed, the concluding sentence is a veritable curiosity of literature. After such an example of his lordship's method of "castigating a Bishop," I admit that I was indeed wide of the mark in predicting that the operation would be either "funny" or "caustic."

The repairs to the spire and tower of Salisbury Cathedral have been completed, and £14,000 has been expended, the whole sum having been subscribed except about £600. There is to be a thanksgiving sermon in the Cathedral on the afternoon of Monday, July 11, when the sermon will be preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Chapter of Sarum is suffering severely from agricultural depression, and the Dean's stipend is consequently reduced from £1,000 a year to £600, while each of the four canons is cut down from £500 to £300. A stall at Salisbury can now be held only by an ecclesiastic possessing adequate private means, and, indeed, this is the case at many other Cathedrals.

A subscriber to the London Orphan Asylum, Watford, recently called my attention to certain features in the expenditure of that Charity. The London Orphan Asylum is an admirable charity, and no one would wish to pass any unfair criticism upon the management; but it certainly appears from the figures furnished that the working and office expenses show an undue tendency to increase. The last report gives an analysis of the expenditure under different heads for the last ten years. This statement shows, on the one hand, that the cost per child for provisions, fuel, and washing, which was £9 17s. in 1888, and has been over £10 in later years, has declined to £8 13s. 9d. in 1897, the number of children remaining virtually the same throughout that period. The expenditure on clothing, although it fluctuates from year to year, shows on the whole no disposition to rise.

On the other hand, the item "working and office expenses" has been gradually growing almost every year throughout that period, with the result that, starting in 1888 at £3 19s., it has reached £5 6s. in 1897. There has also been a very considerable increase under the somewhat mysterious item of "educational and administrative expenses." That educational expenses may have risen under the influence of the general raising of the educational standard during the last ten years one can understand, but it is not clear what "administrative expenses"—other than the working and office expenses, which are given separately—are included under this particular head, nor why these particular administrative expenses should have increased. Anyhow, it is mainly owing to the increase in these two items that the total expense per child per annum in the institution has grown from £29 in 1889 to £32 3s. 8d. in 1897; and I think that under these circumstances the increase is legitimate matter for comment, and one which the subscribers would do well to inquire into. An increased expenditure of £3 per head on about five hundred children means an aggregate increase of £1,500 a year, without any extension of the benefits of the institution.

The Secretary of the Lord's Day Observance Society has been at the trouble to write to forward me the information that the income of £215 mentioned in last week's TRUTH, is only that received direct by the London office, and does not include subscriptions received through the branch associations. He does not tell me, however, what the total income, including these items, amounts to, and if it were ten times £215 my argument would apply equally well. I call it an impudent thing for an organisation of such contemptible dimensions as these figures indicate to attempt—not by persuasion or argument, but by appealing to the State for help—to enforce its own ideas of Sunday observance upon the whole community, regardless of their religious views. The Secretary thinks that I should "have some difficulty in naming any Society which does a larger amount of the work committed to it, in proportion to the means at its disposal." I admit that the Society makes plenty of noise in the world for its £215 a year, or whatever the sum may be. But what work it does more than this I have not the slightest idea. The only result of its operations, so far as I have seen, is to make the name of "Lord's Day Observance" odious and ridiculous.

Much unfavourable comment has been provoked in India by the recent appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel Jerrard as A.A.G. in the Madras command. The Madras Mail—a journal certainly not given to unfair criticism of Government proceedings—gives the following account of Colonel Jerrard's recent career. He was placed on half-pay on the completion of his time in the appointment of Staff Officer at Hong Kong, and he then went to reside at Simla. There, according to the Madras Mail, he devoted much of his spare time to private theatricals, and cultivated the personal friendship of the Adjutant-General and Commander-in-Chief. He was then given a job on the revision of the Indian Army Regulations, Volume II. From that he was pitchforked, first into a vacancy on the Army Staff at Simla, and then into the officiating command of the Umballa district. From this he becomes A.A.G., Madras. Considering that this officer is not borne on the strength of the Indian Army, and has no claim whatever upon the Indian Government, these appointments are probably without precedent even in the history of Simla jobbery.

Now that all the troublesome questions of Army reform and reorganisation that arise out of the Estimates have been got rid of for another twelve months, our military administrators are, happily, left free to devote themselves to questions concerning the practical efficiency of the Army. I hear that a most important question is now under consideration, namely, whether all buttons distinctive of individual corps shall be abolished, and a single button introduced for the whole Army. It is very likely that this momentous question will cause as much dissension in the Service as the feud between the Big-Endians and the Little-Endians, for there are not a few who cling religiously to the existing buttons, and, knowing what soldiers' prejudices are in matters of this kind, I should think there is just as much to be said in favour of retaining distinctive buttons as in favour of abolishing them.

I believe all these fiddle-faddling changes of uniform that have lately caused so much irritation in the Service are due to one particular officer at headquarters, and if he is not speedily superannuated, muzzled, or otherwise suppressed, the chances are that we shall have to face a serious mutiny. I am told that among other recent exploits this officer has introduced an aiguillette for Staff officers which costs £7 10s., and gets shabby after the wearer has been out in it half a dozen times. It is he, too, who has put Artillery colonels to the expense of providing red tunics and a new set of accoutrements; and he has made Artillery officers wear their gold dress-belts for church parades, which means, as the shine is taken out of them by a single shower of rain, that they must keep a second set for Levees and other dress occasions. The same functionary is now abolishing the buttons on the Staff undress frock, and making officers replace them by new buttons, which cost three shillings each instead of sixpence. He must be a very clever man in his own line; but he would clearly be more in his element in the neighbourhood of Savile-row or Conduit-street than at the War Office.

Among the civilian portion of the medical profession, Lord Lansdowne's speech at the Mansion House has created a very favourable impression, and if the Army doctors are not equally satisfied with it they must be very hard to please. After the first announcement of the intention to form the doctors into a Medical Corps, an Army surgeon told me that the only thing that remained to be desired was that the new Corps should be entitled "Royal." This, I confess, struck me as childish, if not snobbish. However, the military medicos are now to be a Royal Medical Corps, so even that wish is gratified.

No doubt the name has a certain practical value. There never was a better example of the consequences of giving a dog a bad name than is afforded by the recent history of the Army Medical Department. A certain school of combatant officers, with Lord Wolseley at their head, have done their best to deny the Army surgeon the status of an officer, and have amused themselves by blackballing medical officers at the Service clubs, and abusing and snubbing them at every opportunity. The leaders of the civil branch of the profession have naturally retorted by preaching that the Army was no place for a doctor possessed of any self-respect. This process could only have the effect of making the Department as bad as its worst detractors alleged. If calling the doctors a Royal Corps, and exalting their rank and dignity, will stop the blackballing on the one hand and the boycotting on the other, everybody will have cause to be thankful. It is quite certain that the Army cannot get on without doctors, and recent events have also made it pretty certain that the better the Army treats its doctors, the better it will be treated itself when the time for medical treatment arrives.

A Volunteer C.O. sends me a sample of circulars addressed to all the subalterns of his regiment at headquarters—not the senior officers, however—by a betting tout, and asks whether the practice is not illegal. I am afraid that the law has not yet gone so far as to protect grown men from any temptations of this kind that may be put in their way, and I suppose that we may consider even the subalterns of a Volunteer battalion to be grown men. I can only advise Commanding Officers who feel anxious on this point to use their own paternal influence with their subalterns in order to keep them out of temptation.

I hear that as a sequel to the case of Lance-Corporal Simpson of the 2nd Grenadier Guards, which has lately been referred to in the Press, Lance-Sergeant Craddock, the sergeant of the guard at the time when Simpson returned to barracks, has now been deprived of the sergeant's stripe and reverted to the rank of corporal for not confining Simpson on his return. It may be remembered that there was a direct conflict of evidence between Craddock and the witnesses for the prosecution. The colour-sergeant who charged Simpson with being drunk went to the sergeant of the guard, and warned him that he would probably find Simpson drunk when he returned to barracks. Craddock took the liberty of using his independent judgment, and decided for himself that Simpson was not drunk, giving evidence to this effect at the court-martial. Of course, if Simpson was drunk, Craddock was guilty of a neglect of duty in not putting him under arrest, and he is rightly punished. But, as there was a direct conflict of evidence in regard to Simpson's condition, and as there were many witnesses besides Craddock who swore at the trial their belief in his sobriety, it seems every bit as unjust to punish Craddock for thinking the man sober as it was to punish Simpson when there was a strong doubt as to the facts—of which doubt he ought to have had the benefit. If the authorities are going to work in this spirit, they ought now to punish every single man who came forward at the court-martial and swore that Simpson was sober.

Challis's Royal Hotel, Rupert-street, Piccadilly-circus.—The new Louis XV. Dining-room now open for Luncheons and Dinners. Table d'Hôte Luncheon, 2/-, from 12.30 to 3 p.m.; Table d'Hôte Dinner, 3/6, from 6.30 to 9 p.m., served at separate tables. Open to non-residents.

In regard to this case, an officer, writing from the Army and Navy Club, remarks "that the fact of a parade-ground being within sight of a public road would not constitute the reading out of the finding of a court-martial a public degradation." It may not make it so in law, but it makes it so in fact, as is sufficiently proved by the account which appeared in the Daily Mail of the scene which took place in Birdcage-walk on this occasion. What I contend in regard to the case is that if a non-commissioned officer is going to be solemnly degraded on parade, it is at least desirable that the outside public should not be witnesses of the ceremony. In regard to the severity of the sentence the same officer remarks that, "if a man claims a court-martial he must take the consequences." He has to take the consequences, I know, but it is against that that I protest. If the law gives the man a certain right, no military authority has any business to punish him for availing himself of that right. Military authorities may not like the law, but, like the rest of us, they must take it as they find it. By the way, in the account of the sentence given in Truth, I find that its severity was actually understated, for, in addition to reduction to the ranks and fourteen days' imprisonment with hard labour, Simpson was sentenced to a fine of ten shillings.

With regard to the Dum-Dum bullet, a sporting friend of mine suggests that the War Office would do well to consult a few deer-stalkers as to the effect of bullets fired from the latest types of rifle, and the best projectile for use with the Lee-Metford. "The stalkers," says my friend, "have been going through changes of weapon pari passu with the armies," and he goes on to describe the various experiments that have been made, some of them with bullets which appear to differ very little, at any rate in principle, from the Dum-Dum. The result seems to bear out my suggestion that the recent experiments of a German medico on dead bodies were entirely fallacious, and my friend entirely ridicules the story about the skin at the point of impact being "torn into long seams." There are doubtless many Scotch sportsmen who would be only too glad to give the War Office an opportunity of experimenting with bullets upon live animals, and I can understand that the idea of a deer-stalking expedition for scientific and patriotic purposes might be highly acceptable at the headquarters of the Army.

There ought to be some official investigation into the practice of allowing Indian natives to run regimental canteens and coffee-shops. Many growls on this subject have from time to time appeared in Truth, the most conspicuous case being that of the 1st Battalion Northamptonshire Regiment. I now hear that a very similar state of things prevails in the 2nd Battalion Inniskilling Fusiliers, from which quarter there are similar complaints as to the consequences to the men in increased prices of all provisions. As an example of the abuses to which this practice leads, the 2nd Inniskillings have a soda-water plant which cost the regiment a handsome sum, and which is now stowed away and left out of use, presumably in order that somebody else may have the benefit of supplying the men with soda-water, at about double the price which they paid for the article when made in their own factory.

I also have a growl from the 2nd South Lancashire at Kamptee respecting the canteen prices, which are certainly extravagant, owing apparently to the fact that the goods are supplied by a native contractor, though I do not know whether he actually runs the concern. I say that this matter requires thorough investigation by the military authorities, because it would seem that the practice is more or less veiled by having a sergeant nominally in charge, while the native is the real manager, so that a General casually inquiring into the matter would not detect any irregularity. It seems no use appealing to the Indian Government to look into abuses of this kind on its own initiative. Its sympathies are probably all on the side of such jobbery. The matter should be taken up by the War Office at home, who have a perfect right to insist that the regulations made in the interest of soldiers in the British Army shall be observed when the regiments are in India.

The new arrangements with regard to the messing allowances for soldiers are, as was to be expected, causing a good many anomalies which the War Office will have to deal with before long. Here is a case in point, just placed before me. A and B are in hospital for a month under precisely the same circumstances, but A is under the old arrangement, B under the new. A receives in pay and deferred pay £1 16s. 2d., which, subject to a hospital stoppage of 7d. per day, leaves his net pay for the period 18s. 1d. B receives pay at the same rate, but no deferred pay and no messing allowance in lieu of it during the time he is in hospital, so that, after deducting the hospital stoppage, his pay for the month is only 12s. 11d Clearly, if the deferred pay is not to be stopped during the time a man is in hospital, the messing allowance which is given in lieu of it ought not to be stopped either.

Hotel Albemarle, Piccadilly, London. Private Suite, Bath, Electric Light, Lift. Vermersch, Proprietor. Paris: Imperial Hotel, Champs Elysées. Boulogne S/M: Imperial Pavilion Hotel.

A complaint respecting the meat ration was recently made by certain soldiers at Deolali Depot, and the Principal Medical Officer, having inspected the meat, wrote officially to the Adjutant of the Depot on the subject. Judging by the evidence, the meat must have been in an advanced stage of decomposition. The only result, however, of the complaint was an answer from the Adjutant to the effect that it had been made in an informal manner, and that the P.M.O. should have called his attention to the matter privately, instead of by an official communication. This irregularity seems to have been, in the Adjutant's eyes, of so much more consequence than the condition of the meat that no further action was taken in regard to the original grievance.

Has not the time arrived when Army pensions ought to be paid more frequently than once a quarter? I recently had a very sensible communication on this point from an old pensioner, who is at present an inmate of one of the metropolitan workhouses. He maintains that, if he had his pension once a month, he could keep out of the workhouse, but under the present conditions to keep out is impossible; and he asserts that there are hundreds of pensioners at present in the workhouses to whom the same remark applies. Although gentlemen in receipt of large incomes may not appreciate the difficulty, there is no doubt that in the case of small incomes, whether in the shape of pay or pension, the shorter the intervals at which the payments are made, the more convenient is it to the recipients, who, it must be remembered, are generally people who cannot get credit. I believe that the Post Office pensioners can draw their allowance weekly if they wish it, and there is no reason why the same rule should not be applied to Army pensioners, except the extra trouble which it would involve to the Department. This extra trouble would be well worth taking, not only for the sake of the men, but for the sake of the Service, for it is common knowledge that the number of old soldiers to be found in the workhouses does much to render military service unpopular with the working classes.

I have always been shy of endorsing Mr. Atkins' protests against route-marching, but the following case seems one where a growl may be forgiven. A company of Royal Engineers at the Curragh had been ordered to parade in mobilisation order for a route march, when it came on to rain heavily. The rain got heavier and heavier, but, after standing in it for twenty minutes, the company were started off on a three and a half hours' march. The rain, which never slackened during the whole time, was phenomenally heavy, every man was wet to the skin by the time he had been ten minutes on the road, and in some places the road was flooded ankle-deep. It is all very well to teach men to march, but for carrying out marching practice under these conditions there can be no reason or excuse.

Some of my friend Tommy Atkins's grievances are small, others big. Here is one of the big ones. I have it on the authority of certain N.C.O.s of an infantry battalion that the blankets served out to troops at manœuvres, musketry camps, and so on, are frequently infested with vermin. The corps from which this statement comes had an experience of this kind during the manœuvres under General Butler last year, and later on in the musketry camp, Landguard. The men got into such a filthy condition during the manœuvres that one company left their red clothing behind them at the camp, and my informants state that it was weeks before some of the men were able to get clean again. This is a filthy and disgusting state of things, and points to gross negligence somewhere. I suppose it is inevitable that the Army should contain a sprinkling of "verminous persons," and as long as this is so all blankets for use on such occasions as the above should be scrupulously washed when they are returned to store. Soldiering under canvas involves quite enough inconveniences without this.

It is greatly to the discredit of the officials in charge of the issue of Jubilee medals that the complete set has never yet been produced. I heard the other day of two men who paid the price of two bronze medals (four shillings each) in June last to the Bank of England branch at Manchester, it having been announced that the medals would be ready for delivery on June 14. Repeated inquiries made since have only elicited the response that the medals are not yet ready. There are, I suppose, people waiting in the same way all over the country. If it were desired to make these loyal subjects look on the medal as a fraud, better means for that purpose could hardly have been adopted.

It is a common remark that the British officials in India tend to become Orientalised under the influence of their surroundings. Here is a conspicuous example of this process of degeneration. A few weeks back, at the busiest season of the year, upwards of ninety pair of Tonga ponies were taken off the Simla-Kalka road for the purpose of drawing the Viceroy's carriages during a pleasure trip in the Kangra Valley. The result was absolutely to stop all the ordinary traffic on the road; and I hear that numbers of delicate ladies and children have been kept waiting at the rail-head for periods ranging from one to three weeks, totally unable to find conveyances. Officers who were compelled to be in Simla on duty by a certain date have actually in some instances been compelled to trudge the distance—some fifty-eight miles—on foot. For the sake of the Viceroy, who is by way of being a Liberal in politics, it may be hoped that this proceeding is due to the officiousness of some subordinate Jack-in-office; but the Viceroy is certainly to blame for not inquiring more closely into the way in which his ponies are provided. What would be thought if all the engines and rolling-stock of the Great Western Railway were suddenly requisitioned in the name of the Queen, and the ordinary traffic between London and Windsor blocked for a fortnight or more?

---

Billiard Table, 10 ft. by 5 ft., in perfect condition, nearly new, with all latest improvements, cues, markers, rests, full-sized ivory balls, for billiards, pyramids, or pool. Gas fittings, linoleum, and every requisite. Suitable for a moderate sized room in a private house. Complete, a bargain. On view.—136, Jerningham-road, New Cross, S.E.

The case of Mr. H. B. Röhss, of Southampton, lately referred to in TRUTH, was brought before Parliament last week in a question by Mr. Harry Marks, and it is satisfactory to know that the Board of Inland Revenue do not approve of the combination in one person of the functions of an advertising usurer and an Assessor of Income Tax. The Board, through the mouth of Mr. Hanbury, placed the sole responsibility for this strange conjunction upon the local Income Tax Commissioners. After what Mr. Hanbury said, it is to be hoped that the local Commissioners will lose no time in purging themselves of this association with Shylockism. If not, the Board of Inland Revenue will certainly have to face some responsibility in the matter, and in any case the Board will do well to inquire how Mr. Röhss ever came to occupy his present position.

Much of the recent discussion in reference to the open space near St. Martin's-le-Grand, known as "the Postmen's Park," seems to have been based upon a misconception of the facts. There has never been any danger of the loss of this most valuable recreation ground, and its maintenance for the public use is assured by the £200 per annum devoted to that purpose by the City Central Parochial Foundation. What has fallen through was a movement to purchase and add to the "Park" a vacant building site of about 300 square yards, and it is unfortunate that this could not be accomplished.

It seems that my paragraph last week on the Hastings Harbour question was unduly favourable to the Company. The £41,000 which I gave the Company credit for having expended upon the harbour works is, I am assured, actually the amount which was expended on "preliminary expenses" before a single day's work was done on the harbour. What amount of money has been sunk (a most appropriate word) on the works up to the present time I do not know; but it seems that out of £204,000 at which the cost was originally estimated, £120,000 was raised according to the published announcements. Out of this £41,914 was expended in preliminary expenses, and as the Company appears to have now reached the end of its tether, I suppose we may conclude that the balance has been dropped into the sea, with the highly gratifying results described in last week's TRUTH. Now what were these preliminary expenses, and into whose pockets did the £41,914 go? The fact that one-fifth of the proposed capital has been squandered in this manner should be sufficient in itself to make the public hesitate about contributing further to the undertaking.

There is much useful information in the volume just published at the instance of the Metropolitan Boards of Guardians under the title of "Our London Poor Law Schools," but as a defence of these institutions it is more courageous than convincing. I see that the authors claim that those engaged in the government of the schools "have consistently displayed an earnest disposition to promote the welfare of the children." Nobody denies the Guardians the merit of good intentions. In Bumbledom, as elsewhere, however, the worst mistakes are often made with the best motives, and this has been the case with the barrack schools. The scandals that have occurred from time to time show that the organisation of these establishments, however beautiful in theory, is liable to ugly breakdowns in practice. It appears impossible to prevent them from becoming seed-plots for ophthalmia and other contagious diseases, and grave abuses have crept into the management of more than one institution, in spite of the strictest precautions of the Guardians. But even if the machinery could be relied upon to work perfectly, it would never turn out satisfactory human products. The children cannot be successfully dealt with as mere automata. The great object in view is to free them from the taint of pauperism and fit them to take their places in the world as useful and intelligent members of society; and this is far more likely to be accomplished by the humblest home training under a system of boarding out, than by the most admirably-devised regulations of the barrack schools. The plan of massing pauper children together in these monster institutions has, in fact, been tried and found wanting, and it is a pity the Poor Law authorities should seek to perpetuate it.

And so we are not to have a tramway across Westminster Bridge and along the Embankment. On æsthetic grounds, one M.P. said, a dirty country lane is more pleasing to an æsthete than a well-paved road. But where human beings congregate, æsthetic lanes are out of place. Why a tram-car should be deemed more ugly than an omnibus, I have never understood. Certainly the former is less dangerous to the foot passenger. In traversing a road he knows exactly where the tram-car will come, whereas an omnibus wobbles about.

In the matter of trams we are behind the age. In most great Continental towns, there are electric trams. The current is carried along a wire rope overhead. Posts are needed, and posts are ugly, it will be said. The same objection might be taken against street lamps. I have seen in many Continental towns posts which are themselves things of beauty. An electric tram is much cheaper than a horse tram. How do I know this? Because in the last few years many persons have made money by buying up horse trams, converting them into electric trams, doubling the capital, and paying the same dividend as before this doubling process took place.

The St. James's Vestry has sent to the Home Secretary a number of suggestions for a Bill to regulate massage establishments. They go a good deal too far. No one is to be allowed to assist in such establishments who has not a certificate of proficiency. But who is to issue such certificates, and what is to be the test of proficiency? Ordinary massage can, I should imagine, be learnt in a few lessons. Swedish or scientific massage demands a thorough knowledge of anatomy. If two of the suggestions be adopted, all the others are needless. These two are that all massage establishments be registered, and that they be inspected from time to time by the Medical Officer of Health.

It may be true in theory that there is no wrong without a legal remedy, but for any good the legal remedy is it might in many cases as well be non-existent. For instance, some years ago a maiden lady died, and left by her will, among other bequests, the sum of £1,000 in trust to pay her personal debts, erect a monument over her grave, and place a stained-glass window in the church of Stoke Damerel, Devonport, in memory of her deceased sister. The executor, a gentleman named Fulke Hartshorne, paid the debts, which only seem to have amounted to about £340, and erected the monument, but though there was an ample margin left to provide a handsome stained-glass window, he has never put it up to this day, and all efforts to compel him to do so have failed. Allowing that he spent £50 on the monument, this gentleman remains in possession of a sum of upwards of £600, to the retention of which he possesses no shadow of right, but which he cannot be made to disgorge.

Now, what is the legal remedy for this undeniable wrong? So far as I can make out, it rests entirely with the Crown, which has some sort of right to the unexpended portion of the bequest, if the trustee fails to apply it in accordance with the terms of the trust. No subject seems to have any locus standi to challenge the trustee's proceedings. The rector of the parish is held not to be an interested party. The residuary legatees under the will, contending that they were entitled to any residue left over after the debts, the monument, and the stained-glass window had been provided, commenced proceedings in Chancery to bring Mr. Hartshorne to account; but they seem to have been in a difficulty, owing to the fact that they had previously given Hartshorne a release on the settlement of accounts as between them and the estate outside the specific legacy of £1,000 — there having been a dispute in consequence of Hartshorne attempting to charge against the residuary account some of the debts which ought to have been paid out of the £1,000. The action of the residuary legatees came before Mr. Justice Stirling. The judge seems to have been unable to help the residuary legatees, and undesirous of helping Mr. Hartshorne, so what he did was to adjourn the proceedings sine die, in order that an attempt might be made to put the Attorney-General in motion. Communications were duly made for that purpose, but the Attorney-General remains motionless. He gives no reason, but he has absolutely declined to intervene in the matter on behalf of the Crown.

This is a matter of some public interest, and I think the public are entitled to know what has led Sir Richard Webster to take up this attitude. Mr. B. F. Hartshorne is a lucky individual. He was formerly an auditor in the service of the Local Government Board. A charge was made against him by his own clerk of having rendered fictitious accounts of his expenditure, thereby obtaining payments to which he was not entitled, and after a lengthy investigation of these charges he was requested to resign his position—a singularly lenient punishment if the charges were held to be established. He was subsequently sued by the same clerk for a sum of £156, salary and expenses, which the clerk alleged that Hartshorne had received from the Local Government Board, and failed to pay over to him. The clerk recovered judgment for the amount of his claim, but I believe he has never yet got his money. Here again, therefore, it appears that Hartshorne has pocketed a substantial sum to which he had no right, without suffering any inconvenience. Finally, the Attorney-General declines to take any action against him in a case where he is in default to the amount of about £600 in the character of a trustee.

What is the meaning of this strange official tenderness for Mr. Hartshorne? This gentleman for a long time occupied a conspicuous position in Chelsea. He used to live in apparent affluence in Elm Park-gardens; and although he has removed thence, he is still in comfortable quarters in another part of Chelsea. I mention that, because it has been suggested that Sir Richard Webster declined to intervene on the ground that the prospect of the Crown recovering the money was, in any case, doubtful. At the best that would be a poor reason for winking at a gross misappropriation of trust funds; but in point of fact there seems—at least to the outward eye—no reason why the money should not be extracted from Mr. Hartshorne. The whole case is mysterious, and the mystery ought to be cleared up.

From a decision given by the Borough Magistrates at Kingston the other day one might almost suppose that the liberty of a dog is more precious in their eyes than the comfort and safety of the burgesses. There was a summons against an owner for not keeping under proper control a dog, which appeared to have become a perfect nuisance and terror to the locality, and to have long since exhausted the canine privilege of the first bite. Four witnesses testified from personal observation and experience to the unusually pugnacious character of the brute, and to the fact that it was not kept under proper control; but, though no attempt was made to refute this evidence, the Bench nevertheless dismissed the summons. The poet's explanation of dogs' delight to bark and bite seems also the only one that can account for some of the vagaries of the magistracy: "God hath made them so."

One of the most notable cases in my Legal Pillory this week comes from Bournemouth, where an unfortunate woman has been committed to gaol for three weeks for sleeping out and having no visible means of subsistence. There does not seem to have been any exceptional reason for this unusually hard sentence; but I suppose the crime of poverty is particularly obnoxious to the well-to-do gentry who administer justice without mercy at Bournemouth. Another example of Draconic severity is supplied by Mr. Wall, a Dublin Stipendiary, who gives a man three months for the theft of three eggs—a sentence which makes one wonder what he would think a fitting punishment for the theft, say, of three hens. It would evidently be something very much heavier than the sentences passed for thefts of fowls at Ilkeston and at Leamington, which, considered in conjunction with this case at Dublin, make a really interesting illustration of the irregularities and uncertainties of justice. Turning to the other side of the following list, it will be observed the rigour with which the law is enforced against the vagrant and the petty thief is counter-balanced by the indulgence which is extended to offenders guilty of savage and cowardly assaults or atrocious cruelty to dumb animals. In cases of the latter class a moderate pecuniary penalty is generally all that the culprit has to fear, and even for that he is often allowed to pay at his leisure:—

Derby County Police-court. Thomas Whewell, convicted of assaulting his step-daughter. He gave her a number of violent blows, one of which drove a hair-pin into her head. She had to go to a doctor to have the pin extracted. Fined 10s. and costs.

Ross Police-court. George Jones, farmer, charged with cruelty by starving a number of sheep. The case was a very bad one, some of the sheep having been absolutely starved to death. Fined £1, and £1 10s. costs, and allowed a fortnight to pay.

Chester Castle Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. H. D. Trelawny, B. C. Roberts, J. Pover, and W. H. Nightingale. Lewis Edwards and George Edwards, charged with assaulting John Bennett. The defendants savagely belaboured Bennett with a hayfork, knocking him down, severely wounding him on the head, and leaving him unconscious and bleeding in a ditch at the roadside. The Bench considered that it was a most unprovoked assault. Fined 20s. each and costs.

Reading Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. C. G. Field and W. Ferguson. Wm. Tucker pleaded guilty to assaulting Albert Baker by striking him across the head with a piece of iron. A doctor said the prosecutor had one wound on his head which was two inches long, another wound three-quarters of an inch long, in which the bone was exposed; and a third wound over the right eye. Fined 40s. and costs.

Derby Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. A. F. Longdon and A. Butterworth. Henry Lacey, charged with sleeping out in the market-place, and having no visible means of subsistence. Seven days.

Alcester Police-court. John Higgins, charged with absconding from the workhouse before completing his task as a casual inmate. He said the place was open, and so he walked out. Fourteen days.

Matlock Petty Sessions. Before Mr. R. Wildgoose and other magistrates. John, Samuel, and George Knowles, summoned for trespassing in pursuit of game. John fined 30s. and costs; the others 20s. each and costs.

Spalding Police-court. Before the Rev. J. Russell Jackson and other Justices. George Cobb, charged with stealing a razor. Fourteen days.

Bournemouth Police-court. Before Captain Elwes, Major-General Galloway, Colonel Garrett, Dr. Hosker, Messrs. T. J. Hankinson, and Corbin Harris. Isabella Kemp, a middle-aged woman, convicted of sleeping out near St. Peter's Church. Twenty-one days.

Ilkeston Petty Sessions. Before Mr. J. Ball and other magistrates. Wm. Andrews, charged with stealing three fowls. Two months.

Willenhall Police-court. James Smith, convicted of assaulting Isaiah Rutter. The assault was of a serious character, defendant using a poker and injuring complainant's eye. Fined 20s. and costs.

Kilmarnock Sheriff Court. Before Sheriff Hall, Wm. Shields, gamekeeper, convicted of assaulting John Russell. The accused gave Russell about twenty blows on the face, arms, and hands with a stick. Russell lost the sight of an eye for several days, his arms were black and blue, and his hand had to be stitched owing to an injury the accused inflicted. Fined £3.

Abingdon County Petty Sessions. Before Mr. A. F. Blandy, Major-General Bailie, Captain W. R. Clutterbuck, and Mr. W. Docker-Drysdale. Aubrey Frain, and Alexander Wynn, convicted of cruelty to a pony by overdriving it. The animal, which was hired for the day, was driven a distance of about thirty miles, and though it was in a very distressed condition, defendants persisted in beating it and urging it on. Ultimately the pony dropped dead on the road. Fined £5 each and costs, time being allowed for payment.

Dublin Northern Division Police-court. Before Mr. Wall, John Byrne charged with stealing three eggs from a stand at a provision-shop. Three months.

Hanley Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Charlesworth, T. Taylor, and J. R. Cooke. Sarah Wagstaffe, a married woman, charged with stealing a piece of pork. The woman, who had been drinking heavily, was caught in the act of taking the meat from a butcher's window. One month.

Blackpool Police-court. Before Messrs. H. Fisher, T. H. Smiler, Dr. L. Whittaker, and Dr. Hardman. George Taylor, charged with sleeping out. Seven days.

Leamington Police-court. Before Alderman Wackrill and other magistates. George Griffin, charged with stealing two hens. One month.

Bedford Borough Police-court. Before Mr. R. B. Stafford and Dr. Coombs. George Kent, an old sailor, charged with maliciously cutting some plants in the grounds at a school. He said he was going away from Bedford and wanted some flowers to lay on his mother's grave. Fourteen days.

Apropos of a paragraph in last week's TRUTH, a correspondent directs my attention to an inquest at Worcester where the jury found that the death of a woman had been hastened by the indescribably filthy state in which she lived. The coroner stated that the sanitary inspector had no power to interfere unless a nuisance was caused, and this, I believe, is correct. In the cases at Cheltenham to which I referred last week children had been kept in such a dirty condition as to cause them unnecessary suffering, and the parents were rightly held amenable to the law for their negligence. But with adults it is a different matter. Ours is a free country, and if a grown-up person chooses to wallow in the mire like a pig, there is nothing to prevent him gratifying his taste, so long as he does not become a nuisance or danger to his neighbours.

Nevertheless, one cannot help sometimes wishing that cleanliness could be made compulsory, for, however careful one may be, one is bound now and then to come in contact with people whose acquaintance would be all the pleasanter if they regarded a bath as a necessity rather than a luxury. Nor is the aversion to soap and water entirely confined to one class of society. I know a real live baronet who is as dirty an old man as Sir Pitt Crawley. It would certainly be all the better for some persons, and make the world pleasanter for others, if washing were obligatory; but to enforce it would probably produce a revolution, and I tremble to think what an effect it would have on Lord Wemyss.

Subscriptions greatly needed by THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—6,929 convictions this year; 7,320 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

For Truth, and all other Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals, send your Subscriptions to WM. DAWSON & SONS, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's-bldgs., London. (Estab. 1809.) Catalogue gratis.

A delightful sample of the wisdom of the Great Unpaid was given in a case at Oxford the other day, when a man was summoned by a cabman for non-payment of a fare. The claimant asserted that the defendant raised his hand to signal to him and then entered a house, where he remained three-quarters of an hour. Drawing up at the door, the claimant waited for this period, but when the defendant came out, he hailed another cab and drove away in it. In these circumstances the first cabman, whose story that he was hailed was vouched for by two fellow Jehus, sued for 1s. 6d., as fare for the time he was kept waiting. On the other hand, the defendant said that he did not require a cab before he went to the house, where he was going to dine, and that he certainly never noticed or hailed the claimant or any other driver. The Bench held that the defendant had hailed the cab, whether intentionally or not they could not say, and they ordered him to pay the 1s. 6d. and 17s. 6d. costs. This is indeed a remarkable decision. It is clear from their own words that the magistrates were not satisfied that the defendant ever meant to hail the cab; yet they compel him to pay for what may admittedly have been a misunderstanding on the part of the driver. After this, Oxford men will have to be extremely careful how they move their hands when a cab is in sight. The simple act of waving a greeting to a friend across the street may possibly cost a cab fare.

In exposures of the evils of usury, vampires like Isaac Gordon naturally attract most notice; but the humbler bloodsuckers are, in their limited sphere, quite as rapacious and mischievous. There was an instance of this at Stoke-on-Trent County Court the other day, when a poor man, earning 18s. a week, applied for an administration order so that he might be released from the clutches of an unconsionable extortioner named W. Jackson, who calls himself the Crewe and District Loan Company. Jackson had lent this man £16; he had received back £20, and he still claimed £43! Judge Jordan made some strong comments on the case, and granted an order which will enable the debtor to discharge his liabilities by the payment of a composition of 2s. in the £ in instalments of 2s. a month. Shylock Jackson will therefore get only a minute portion of his pound of flesh, and have to wait a long time even for that.

The recent experiences of a clerical correspondent of mine throw an interesting light on the wiles of the circularising money-lender. For some years this clergyman, more fortunate than most of his brethren, had been left unmolested by these gentry. A short time back he gave notice to the clerk to the Dean and Chapter of Durham of his intention to apply for a vacant living in the gift of that body. A few days afterwards he was favoured with a circular from Shuckburgh, alias the Clerical and Medical Bank, in which a passage offering loans to clergymen entering on livings had been specially underlined. Since then the clergyman in question has accepted another incumbency in the diocese of York, and the legal document making the presentation was sent in to the office of the Archbishop's secretary on Monday week. Three days later my correspondent got a second offer of financial assistance, this time from Herbert Grunwell, otherwise Jonas Wolfe, of 4, Oxford-place, Leeds. In each instance, the arrival of the usurer's circular immediately after the communication to the ecclesiastical authorities may have been a pure coincidence. The coincidence, however, is so curious that the clerk to the Dean and Chapter at Durham and the secretary to the Archbishop of York would do well to inquire whether it is not possible that somebody in their offices is surreptitiously supplying names to such harpies as Shuckburgh and Grunwell.

During the last few months residents in all parts of London have been favoured with copies of a "Diamond Jubilee Polka," composed by one Arthur King, of 463, Holloway-road, and offered for sale at the price of sixpence. Youths leave copies of this precious work at people's doors, accompanied by a circular, and subsequently call either for the money or the music. A friend of mine in the West End tells me that he has had two Jubilee polkas left at his door since Christmas. Mr. Arthur King's excuse for bothering people in this way, as expressed in the course of his circular, is that he is by profession a medical electrician, but has been disabled by paralysis, and has accordingly had to turn to musical composition as a means of livelihood. His appeal is fortified with a testimonial from Dr. Archibald Keightley, of 62, Queen Anne-street. Mr. Keightley is presumably a good judge of spinal disease, and we may take his word for it that King is really suffering from this complaint. When, however, he goes on to add that King is "making a praiseworthy attempt to support himself" I join issue altogether. So far from being praiseworthy, the practice of leaving goods at people's houses in this manner is a most objectionable one, and becomes the more so when the parties who call resort to abuse and impudence, as I hear that King's representatives have done when from any reason the music is not forthcoming at their demand. It is quite certain that if everybody attacked with paralysis were to get his living in this "praiseworthy" manner, life in London would soon become intolerable for those who are not paralysed.

A new phase of Miss Griffen's Great Australian snowball has just come to hand in the shape of a French version of the chain letter, signed by one "Alexandre Radkevitch," and addressed from 17, Voskresensky, St. Petersburg. One of my readers in St. Petersburg happened to see the letter in the house of some Russian ladies to whom it had been sent, and who were about to copy it and continue the chain. Whether the French edition of the letter was started by Miss Griffen herself, or by some enthusiastic idiot who has picked up the chain, the fact of its being passed from hand to hand by Russians in St. Petersburg shows very clearly the extent to which the appeal has been circulated, as well as the value of the results which must be coming to hand. Stamps that come from such countries as Russia are worth money, and are very different contributions from the used penny postage stamps which Miss Griffen's original appeal asked for.

For the Decorating and Furnishing in best modern manner, or in any of the traditional styles, of a single room or an entire house, Hampton & Sons, Ltd., prepare, free of charge, suggestive schemes and competitive estimates.—Pall Mall East, S.W.

Let me warn my readers, especially those who have housekeeping responsibilities on their hands, against certain advertisements that have lately appeared in the papers, offering Welsh mutton on tempting terms direct from farms in North Wales. Some of these advertisements have appeared in the name of "H. A. Rook, Coed-y-brain Farm, Nannerch, North Wales," and they have found their way into the Times and several other papers. I hear from a gentleman in Yorkshire that his housekeeper sent a remittance to this address, and received the goods ordered, which were satisfactory; but, on forwarding the cash for a further supply, no result followed, and letters of inquiry remained unanswered. The Superintendent of Police at Holywell, on being interrogated, subsequently informed the victim that no such person as H. A. Rook resided at Coed-y-brain, and that the fraud had been worked from Liverpool, numbers of people having been victimised in the same way. The Liverpool operator, however, must have had some confederate at Coed-y-brain to receive and forward letters, and one would think that the police could have no difficulty in laying their hands on the swindler.

In consequence of the announcement of the sad death of Leigh Sampson in last week's TRUTH, one of my readers residing at Brussels has very kindly undertaken a pilgrimage to No. 35, Rue de la Tourelle, to make inquiries after the deceased artist. He rang the bell, but though he heard someone moving about inside, the door was not opened. He then made inquiries at adjoining premises, where he was told that there was a gentleman who called himself Van Buren residing at No. 35, but that he was not a medical man, but an "artiste peintre." So I supposed.

It will be highly interesting to see what line Sampson tries next. He has worked the distressed artist fiction for all it was worth, under half a dozen different aliases. He has smitten himself down with brain fever, and written in the name of his own wife to implore charity. Finally he has killed himself, and written in the name of his medical attendant to beg charity for his widow and orphan. If it were any ordinary swindler, I shou'd have expected this to have about exhausted his resources. But Leigh Sampson is no ordinary swindler.

H. L. SAVORY & Co.'s CIGARETTES.—By Special Warrants of Appointments to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, H.S.H. the Duke of Teck, and the Houses of Lords and Commons. To be obtained of all the leading Houses in the trade.—Sole address, 59, Piccadilly, London, W. Specimen case of samples, containing all sizes, 2s. 6d., with price list.

I have received the following letter, which appears to have reference to the article in last week's TRUTH, entitled "A Judge on Area-Gate Touts":—

Telegraphic Address,
Enelsee, London.

National Liberal Club,
Whitehall-place, S.W.
May 6, 1898.

The Editor of TRUTH.

SIR,—I have just read the paragraph in this week's TRUTH in which you mention the name of E. Pike & Son, Limited, and presume that the firms you named are one and the same. I beg to inform you that E. Pike & Son, Limited, have no more interest in or control over the firms you refer to than the Editor of TRUTH has except as wholesale customers and tenants.—I am, sir, yours obediently,

E. PIKE.

The firms which I mentioned call themselves "J. Barker & Co.," "Clark & Co.," and "Hibbins & Co." The common address of them all is 4, Eton-street, Richmond, Surrey. From that address they all carry on the identical business of gammoning servant-girls into buying goods on the instalment system at exorbitant prices, through the agency of touts, who hang about area-gates and back-doors, and stick at no trickery in order to effect their purpose. A similar business was formerly carried on from the same address in the name of E. Pike & Son. To this day the premises, No. 4, Eton-street, Richmond, bear the name of "E. Pike & Son, Limited," and no other. I have made inquiries on the spot, with the result that no other parties than E. Pike & Son, Limited, can be discovered as occupiers of these or any other premises in the neighbourhood. Mr. E. Pike now comes forward and asserts that the firm of E. Pike & Son, Limited, have no connection with the other firms trading from this address, "except as wholesale customers and tenants." How this statement is to be reconciled with the fact that no other name than Pike & Son appears on the premises, I do not know, and if Mr. Pike wishes to relieve Pike & Son, Limited, from responsibility for the proceedings of Clark, Hibbins, Barker, & Co., he will have to make his explanation a good deal more explicit and intelligible than it is at present.

The last time that Mr. Pike favoured me with a communication, he dated his letter from an imposing address, apparently that of a country mansion in Kent. On that occasion it was Pike & Son, Limited, in their own name, who had incurred obloquy through shady proceedings of their agents. This time, it will be noted, Mr. Pike does not write from his business address, but from the National Liberal Club. Mr. Pike seems to be a very recent recruit of that honourable institution, as his name does not appear in the club list for 1897. In view of his use of the club address for his present purpose, I feel sure that my desire to see Mr. Pike exonerated from all association with Clark, Hibbins, Barker, & Co. will be shared by all our fellow-members of the N.L.C.

From two circulars sent to me I learn that "Klene & Co.," of Great Portland-street, are now looking in Ireland for subscribers to their forthcoming "important biographical work," "Our Contemporaries," and that they have an agent touting around in that country in search of orders. Klene & Co. are careful now to refrain from giving any indication in advance of the price of the work, and very possibly the agent is instructed simply to ask for what he finds he can get. But I would warn Irishmen who may be favoured with his visits that the "important biographical work" is a mere subscription trap, and would be dear at any price.

Besides flooding the country with circulars, the foreign betting touts are now working upon the gambling propensities of the British public through the medium of newspaper advertisements. Hitherto I have been under the impression that the Lottery Acts render these advertisements illegal in England. It is evident that either I am mistaken or else the law is ignored, for the Leamington Advertiser of last week boldly publishes a glowing prospectus respecting a Hamburg lottery from a so-called "banker" in that city. Whether such advertisements be legal or not, however, it is extremely foolish of people here to have anything whatever to do with these affairs unless they have money to throw away. The circularising and advertising intermediaries are nearly always shady characters, and they can generally be depended upon to confiscate any prizes that are drawn through their agency.

At least one of my provincial contemporaries has, I am glad to hear, dealt with the advertisements of the man Hawkins alias Jones, of Brighton, in the manner recently suggested in TRUTH. The editor of the South Eastern Gazette tells me that he has been favoured with an order from Hawkins accompanied by a cheque, the cheque representing the munificent payment of 7s. 6d. for thirteen insertions. He simply put the cheque and the accompanying block on one side until such time as Hawkins should forward the necessary postage for their return. Subsequently Hawkins forwarded a form of receipt to be filled up, and returned, but still no postage for reply, so this communication also was put aside with the others, unanswered. I would recommend all journalists who receive this pestilent rascal's favours to treat them in the same manner.

I have to thank several gentlemen connected with the Co-operative movement for very kind letters which I have received from them with reference to the recent action against TRUTH tried at Manchester. There seems to be a widespread feeling among Co-operators that the thirteen Co-operative plaintiffs in that action showed themselves far too sensitive to criticism; and, reading between the lines, I infer that the official element in the Co-operative movement is not unduly loved by the rank and file.

One of my Co-operative correspondents forwards a copy of the Co-operative News, containing a report of a conference at Exeter, in which the following passage occurs in the course of a discussion on educational work:—

> Mr. Adams (Central Board) thought the question of a paid secretary for this work meant the making of a position for some one, and was not altogether complimentary to those who had been doing the work in the past.

These words, if they mean anything, impute to somebody connected with the Co-operative Union an intention of making an appointment for the benefit of an individual, not for that of the Society—a clear imputation of jobbery. I presume we shall hear that the parties against whom this imputation is levelled have brought an action against Mr. Adams. As he is a member of the Central Board, and must be well behind the scenes in Co-operative business, an imputation of jobbery from him is far more significant than if made in the columns of TRUTH.

Here is a valuable piece of information for all those residents in London who suffer from the newspaper-boy nuisance. A gentleman who believes in the principle that union is strength offers through me the sum of £25 to the war-chest of any league which may be formed to suppress the nuisance. Beyond making this offer public, I do not see my way to give any further assistance; but if any gentleman who feels sufficiently strongly on the subject to take steps towards forming an association will apply to me, I shall be happy to put him in communication with the anonymous benefactor who offers the £25.

From several quarters I have been taken to task for the remark in last week's TRUTH that Sir Edward Bradford would probably be ready to deliver London from the newsboy if assured that there was a sufficient demand for his intervention. "Do you not know," asks one critic after another, "that as the law stands at present the police have no power to interfere with newsboys?" I know it perfectly. As I have mentioned on a former occasion, I am intimately associated with the enemy of the human race who first let boys loose on the streets to sell evening papers; and he successfully fought this point in the police-courts over and over again, and won. I, therefore, know all about the law. What I meant by my reference to Sir Edward Bradford was that that functionary can easily get the law altered if he considers it necessary; and I would add that an opportunity for amending the law is offered at this moment by the Street Noises Bill now before Parliament. The Home Secretary should be pressed to take advantage of this opportunity. If the sporting offer published above leads to the formation of an Anti-Newsboy League, this will be the direction in which the League will have to go to work.

The London and North-Western Railway Company ask me to make public the fact that they have made arrangements to collect and forward to its destination the personal luggage of all travellers proceeding to North Wales, the Lake District, and other Northern tourist resorts on their line. I am very glad to make public the announcement, not only for the benefit of travellers by the North-Western line, but also for the instruction and enlightenment of other railway boards. There is no doubt that it would be an immense convenience to many travellers to be able to obtain their tickets and book their luggage to its destina tion in advance, so that when the time of departure arrives they have nothing to do but go to the station and take their seats in the train; and there is not the slightest reason why such a system should not be universally adopted. It is comforting to think that some of the seed recently sown in these columns for the benefit of railway managers has fallen upon good ground, and is already bringing forth a harvest.

SAVOY HOTEL, Savoy Restaurant, London. Large reception-rooms for fashionable réunions. Orchestra plays daily during dinner and opera supper.

When I published last week the bitter cry of the man-gardener against the woman who is being given to him as a helpmeet, I knew that there would be some spirited replies, and I have not been disappointed. Want of space and time forbid me to deal here with all the letters I have received on this subject, but I feel bound to notice one of them—a detailed rejoinder from Miss Goodrich-Freer, Hon. Secretary of the Women's Branch of the Swanley Horticultural College. Miss Freer states at the outset that no woman, or man either, has ever been sent out from Swanley in the capacity of a head gardener; and while that disposes of the statement which provoked the letter published in last week's TRUTH, it also puts the whole question outside the range of practical politics.

In regard to the other points, I may briefly mention that Miss Freer quotes passages from the Regulations of the College showing that there is no distinction between the work done by men and women students (except that in wet weather the women are to be given indoor work, i.e., under glass); and that the work of all students is "practical" except for two hours' lectures a day. As to my previous correspondents' misgivings about the physique of the women who go through this training, and the suggestion that those who stand it must be "very exceptional representatives of their sex," Miss Freer writes:—

> There are thirty-five of these representatives to be seen at work every day at Swanley, besides others in the Royal Gardens at Kew, Edinburgh, and Dublin, and there is nothing super-normal about them so far as one can discover, nor in the hundred or more who, during the last six years, have passed out of the College into positions, public or private, of various kinds. . . .

Without quoting more, I hope I have given enough to reassure my male horticultural friends. If after this we find the male gardener disappearing before a race of "stout daughters of the plough," from Swanley and elsewhere, I fear we must reconcile ourselves to it as a case of the survival of the fittest.

I think, though, I must publish this letter:—

> SIR,—I see that with your usual manly politeness you sneer at the "lady gardener"—who is probably trying to earn her living to support some drunken brute of a husband—and take up the cudgels for what you call "the sons of Adam." Pray, may I ask, do you think that the lady gardeners are not the daughters of Adam? And if there is any virtue in being a son of anybody, are not Adam's sons equally the sons of Eve? Of course you think that Adam did all the gardening, and that his sons—but not, of course, his daughters; oh, dear no!—are to inherit the business. But I will venture to assert that, if we knew the whole truth, we should find that "the helpmeet" did all the hardest and dirtiest part of the work, and that my Lord Adam only put his hand to a spade when he felt in the humour, contenting himself at other times with giving his orders, and using filthy and profane language when things were not done to his liking.
>
> I don't ask you to put this in your paper. I know you have not the courage to.—PARTHENOPE.

My dear lady (although I have not the slightest idea what it has to do with the case), I would not doubt for a moment that all the daughters of Eve are also the daughters of Adam. To say nothing of the respect which we must all feel for the Mother of Mankind (in spite of the trouble she brought on her family), if the children were not Adam's, whose could they have been? As to the gardening, you may be right or you may not. But one thing is quite certain. Whatever work our mother Eve did in the garden, she undoubtedly stole the fruit. And I may add that she seems to have transmitted this failing to many of her sons who have gone into the gardening line.

There is a popular superstition that the children of the present day take their pleasures much more seriously than their parents did before them, and were never as thoroughly childish as their progenitors were. There would really seem to be some truth in the allegation when the threatened fate of the Lowther Arcade is taken into consideration. The glories of that covered thoroughfare are not, presumably, the sucesses of fifty years ago, when a journey from one end to the other was a blissful progress, involving much loss of time and many youthful wanderings from the tenets of the tenth commandment. The Lowther Arcade has, in fact, already been offered for sale, and though it has not yet found a purchaser, there seems to be every reason to fear that it is destined soon to disappear as Exeter Change did before it, to make room for the more serious occupations of this feverish money-making age. Reflecting upon my annual indebtedness to the attractions of the doll community, I had serious thoughts of putting this journal into mourning upon such a melancholy occasion.

In a letter despatched from the Chilcoot Pass, a correspondent on his way to Klondike makes sundry complaints against the Canadian Government, in reference to the issue of miners' licences and the collection of Customs duties. The burden of his story is that, owing to the absence of supervision over subordinate officials, unfair advantages are obtained by parties in a position to pay backsheesh; and that in spite of an announcement made many weeks previously that miners' outfits not exceeding 1,000 lb. in quantity were admitted free, duties were still being levied on such outfits at the end of March. These grievances have, however, less interest for me than the authorship of the letter. It comes from an old acquaintance of mine and my readers, of the name of Pointing, and he says he sends it to me because "he has no doubt that TRUTH is still the best medium for justice as it was when he left England last October."

THE HOTEL CECIL RESTAURANT.—Orchestra daily during Luncheon, Dinner, and Supper. M. François, Chef de Restaurant, from the Grand Hotel, Monte Carlo.

WHITEHALL COURT, S.W.—To Let, Bachelor and other Suites. Electric Light, Service, Bath-rooms. Meals in public or tenants' own rooms.—Apply, Manager.

This is gratifying, indeed, for Mr. Pointing speaks from the personal experience of a man who has frequently received justice at my hands. His first tastes of it were in the summer of 1894, when he was styling himself "Managing Director" of the "Universal Agency (London), Limited." The concern dignified with this title was, in fact, nothing more than a bogus registry office, by means of which Pointing perpetrated most impudent and heartless frauds upon the necessitous and the unemployed. My exposures of the business and hints to the police had the effect of inducing Pointing to abandon the "Universal Agency"; but soon afterwards he turned up again in connection with a Canadian farm pupil and emigration swindle. This enterprise was also relinquished in consequence of the justice which was administered to it in Truth. But Pointing was seemingly incapable of running straight, and he next came out as a vendor of certain so-called "invisible elevators" and quack productions which he palmed off upon gullible people by various tricks and lies. This time he foolishly disregarded the repeated warnings I gave him, with the result that his devices for the sale of the "invisible elevators" ultimately attracted the attention of the police, and landed him in the dock at the Old Bailey. Thanks to the niceties of the law with regard to false pretences, he escaped a conviction; and I had not since heard of him until the arrival of the above-mentioned letter. It will be seen from this that Pointing has had a good deal of "justice" meted out to him in these columns. I hope he has now resolved to profit by it, and that the enterprise and resourcefulness which he misapplied to the bogus employment and emigration agency and "invisible elevator" lines of business will for the future be turned to better account.

Why an employer of labour should consider it the duty of his customers to provide funds to give his employees a treat, I do not at all understand. From time to time, however, one receives evidence that some employers hold this view and have no diffidence about acting on it. Here is a case in point. It is a printed circular, so it is evidently intended for distribution. One of the recipients sends it to me as a piece of impudence which deserves gibbeting, and I entirely agree with him:—

Aston Printing Works.

Randall Bros, Aston Cross, Birmingham,
Printers and Paper Merchants. May, 1898.

Gentlemen,—Our employees intend to hold their annual picnic early in June next, and if you consider our account with you will warrant a donation on their behalf we shall be glad if you would kindly forward same to—Yours truly,

F. Randall, Hon. Treasurer.

If the natural flow of the water over Teddington Lock is to be reduced to less than one half, as proposed by the Southwark and Vauxhall Water Company, Londoners will soon realise that, just as they cannot eat their cake and have their cake, so they cannot drink their river and have their river. In a tidal river like the Thames, the incoming tide brings up mud and other impurities. The stream, if left to itself, sweeps them away when the tide ebbs. But if one half of the stream be diverted, the remaining half is too weak to perform this scouring process. Unless a firm stand is made against further abstraction of water, the river will become in its course through London as pestiferous as it used to be when polluted by drainage.

I am not myself a frequenter of public-houses, and I rarely taste alcoholic liquors, not because I have taken any pledge to eschew them, but because I do not like their taste. But it has often surprised me that those who consume these liquors allow themselves to be charged so highly for them in these days of large sales and small profits. These profits, as a rule, do not go into the pocket of the working publican, but into that of the real holder of the licence, and the real holder very often has had to pay an enormous sum for it to the original holder.

A case before the London Sheriffs' Court, in which the proprietor of the Nightingale Hotel, St. John's Wood, claimed £9,000 as compensation for compulsory acquirement by a railway company, reveals what profits are obtained from consumers. Port wine bought as low as 3s. per gallon was retailed at £1 1s. per gallon; champagne bought at 32s. per dozen brought in 7s. per bottle; on brandy the profit was 200 per cent., on whisky 100 per cent., on gin and rum 50 per cent., and on beer 33 per cent. A cigar costing 1½d. was sold for 4d. The average taking was £416 per month, and the net profit was £1,200 per annum. The claimant, having thus frankly stated his profits, explained that most of his customers were young ladies, and that their special tipple was champagne. I would seriously urge these lady residents in what the late Jacob Omnium once described as "the shady groves of the best-loved Evangelist," to remember, even if they insist upon imbibing alcohol in some form, that no stomach, male or female, can stand a long course of champagne which a wine merchant is able profitably to sell at 32s. per dozen.

We import about 28 million of quarters of wheat and flour per annum, and on an average we have on hand enough to feed us for about six weeks. I should have no particular objection to our buying and storing 10 million quarters, provided that it were distinctly understood that the amount expended were taken from that which we now spend on armaments. But I do not clearly see how we could buy these 10 million quarters without sending up the price of wheat enormously.

I do not myself believe that—dealing with reasonable probabilities—there is any combination likely to occur by which we should be starved into surrender. Of course, if there were an effective blockade of the British Islands, this would be possible. But to assume this, is to assume that our navy would be driven off the ocean, in which case we should be so thoroughly beaten, that we should have to surrender, irrespective of the question of starvation. Were there no effective blockade, we should always obtain food supplies by neutrals bringing it to our shores, unless we were at war not only with every great naval Power in Europe but also in America. Still, as this illusion that we might be starved in the event of war is often trotted out in order to encourage excessive armaments, it might be well—if it were possible—to have in hand a store of wheat to last us for several months, although, as a matter of fact, however, we depend on foreign countries as much for our meat as for our food supply.

Major Howe & Co., Ltd.—Fashionable Boots and Shoes.—16, Coventry-st., W.; 60, Strand, W.C.; 81, Gracechurch-st.; and 13, Queen Victoria-st., London. "Note Addresses." (Repairs.)

Why has wheat gone up now, in consequence of the war between Spain and the United States? For this there is no economic reason The amount of wheat in the world cannot have altered. The roadway from the producer to the consumer is as open as it was before. I suppose, therefore, that it is due to some sort of combination amongst capitalists, who had bought up wheat and who held it for a rise. Already before the war there was such a "corner" in Chicago, based upon the volume of last year's harvest being less than that of the previous year. Each small purchaser thought that the rise might be greater than it is, and at once bought. In this sense only was the war the reason for the rise.

I should be sorry did breadstuffs not go up in the event of our being at war with some Great Power. The fear of this result should bid us pause before engaging in some foolish war, and, if we go to war, it will tend to make us ready to make peace on fair terms. It is a mistake, as the late John Stuart Mill always said, to make war a rose-water affair. Its evils should be brought home to all, so that all may realise them. If, for instance, it were enacted that, in the event of our being at war, every editor should be placed in the forefront of the battle, this would have a very calming effect on our belligerent editors. If the same law were applied to M.P.'s, they would put a good deal of water in their Jingo speeches. If it were decreed that all Primrose ladies should be sent to the front as vivandières, arrayed in hideous clothes, and with their heads shaved, they would not be so apt to applaud Jingo orations.

There is a good deal of force in what Sir Wilfrid Lawson once said:—

> If you go to war with a stronger foe, you are a fool; if you go to war with a weaker foe, you are a coward; if you quarrel with a foe of equal strength, you would do better to toss up for the bone.

I do not suppose that any European Great Power would oppose the retention of the Philippines by the United States. Why should they? Each objects to the other having the islands. None objects to the United States acquiring them. On the contrary, all would be glad to see one more Power, which is interested in China remaining a free-trade area, becoming possessed of territory in Eastern waters. But that the United States should be so foolish as to retain the islands seems to me almost incredible. It may be that they want a coaling station; possibly a naval station. If so, they might secure one, and then their wisest course would be to restore all else to Spain. Colonies, unless the mother country has an overwhelming navy, are hostages given to fortune. Up to now the United States have eschewed them, and, in view of their prosperity, the system cannot be said to have been a bad one. It is doubtful whether the Philippines could govern themselves, nor do I suppose would it be possible for them to be represented in Congress. Their tenure, therefore, would involve a departure from the whole scheme of Statecraft that prevails in the United States. There is a good deal to be said for the Monroe doctrine, which is, putting it broadly, that the American continent should belong to the Americans without let or hindrance from Europe. But there is still more to be said for the Americans sticking to their continent and holding no possessions outside of it.

My sympathies with those who during the last few years have been engaged in killing Matabele, Bechuanas, and other natives of South Africa are somewhat limited. At the same time when a Government engages men for work of this kind, it ought to keep faith with them. I heard the other day from a man who volunteered for service in last year's Bechuana campaign, that a promise was made that all those who gave up berths in order to serve would have employment found for them on sending in their names to headquarters. Several of the volunteers had given up very good situations. At the conclusion of the campaign they were kept a whole week without money or even rations, but they have never heard anything to this day about the promised billets that were to be found for them. The Bechuanaland business does not fill a very bright page in our history, but that does not justify the Cape Government in such shabby treatment of the men who fought for it.

There has been a good deal of discussion in the form of questions and answers in the House of Commons as to whether the director of a Company should vote in the House of Commons on issues affecting his Company. The rule should, I think, be against such voting. It would be outrageous if the division were so close that the Company were to win by the votes of its own directors, and this might occur. That a great Company should be able to state its case through a director is reasonable. But voting is a different matter. It may place the director-M.P. between his allegiance to the country and that to his shareholders.

Speaking generally, I should say that the fewer directorships that an M.P. has the better, especially in companies in regard to which there may be discussion in the House of Commons. Probably, were there no directors in Parliament, the public interests would not suffer. Still, if a man be in want of income, and is of good business capacity, it can hardly be said that he may not sell his time because he is a Member of Parliament. In this category, however, I do not include gentlemen who, with no special business capacity, get on directorates because the letters M.P. are appended to their names. This is using the position for the sake of guinea-pigging. The entire question, however, seems rather to concern the respective constituencies than the House of Commons, for it is they who elect their representatives, and if they object to guinea-pigging, they have the remedy in their own hands.

The luxury of a bath is incomplete without the addition of SCRUBB'S CLOUDY FLUID AMMONIA, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, but avoid injurious imitations.

Mr. Gladstone established a rule that no member of his Government should be a director. This was a very proper one. Lord Salisbury has not followed his example, and it is to be regretted that he has not.

I am glad that Sir William Harcourt, Mr. Morley, and Mr. Courtney took occasion last week to accentuate the fact, that the Liberal Party—or at least that portion of it which holds to the doctrine of Free Trade—is not in favour of a discriminatory duty being imposed by our Colonies as between the goods imported from the Mother Country and those imported from Foreign Countries. The idea of Free Trade is that there ought to be no duties of any kind upon imports, no matter from whence they proceed, unless it be for revenue purposes, because it is to the advantage of the importing country that all goods should be as cheap as possible to the consumer. Take the case of Canada. The import duty on our goods is to be less than that on the same goods imported from foreign countries. Competition is thus reduced, and the Canadian consumer pays more for the goods that he buys than he otherwise would have done. Canada is, therefore, doing what we, as Free Traders, believe is an economic mistake.

Mr. Chamberlain holds that we ought to encourage the Colonies to make this discrimination in our favour. At the same time, he denies that it in any way involves reciprocity on our part. It is, however, difficult to suppose that we shall for long enjoy a preferential duty on our goods in Canada, if we do not reciprocate by giving a like advantage in our home market to Canadian products.

I suspect that Sir Wilfred Laurier, in announcing this discrimination, was merely making use of us against the United States, and that he hopes, by excluding United States goods, under the guise of a discrimination in favour of our goods, to force the American hand, and to secure the United States market for Canadian produce, in consideration of the Canadian market being open to the States. The Dominion is rather a country allied with us than one for whose fiscal system we are responsible. Therefore we did not, and could not, object to what was to our advantage, though it was to the disadvantage of the Dominion.

The case of Rhodesia is different. We are responsible for its fiscal policy towards other nations. And so long as this is the case, we ought no more to allow these discriminatory duties between British goods and those of foreign nations than to adopt such a system ourselves. Our policy is the open door. On this we have insisted in China. We cannot, therefore, reverse it in Africa, and there establish the closed door. We tell foreign nations that they ought to adopt Free Trade, not from any affection towards us, but because they will find it to their advantage. So far as we can, we should carry out this view ourselves, for example is better than precept.

For some cause or other, Mr. Rhodes seems to hold the Secretary for the Colonies in the hollow of his hand. Mr. Chamberlain's laudations of him, and his excuses for any little "error" that he may have made, are simply astounding, considering that he himself agreed to the finding of the South Africa Committee, which in the clearest language declared Mr. Rhodes guilty of the basest and the most dishonourable conduct. Whether this finding was justified or not, Mr. Chamberlain is one of those responsible for it. If he would confine himself to laudation and excuse, his utterances would do no direct harm, except so far that they compromise us in the opinion of foreign countries. What I object to is, that this subserviency should take the form of giving Mr. Rhodes any money of the British taxpayer in order to bolster up his Company.

Mr. Rhodes' aim is clear enough, and quoad Mr. Rhodes, as Director and Promoter of the Chartered Company, it is a sound one. He and his brother Directors have made large sums by obtaining the shares of the Company for concessions which cost them next to nothing, and selling them at a premium, which was the result of statements that Rhodesia was an El Dorado. Rhodesia does not pay its cost, and therefore the shares do not pay a dividend. There is an off chance of gold being found there under such conditions that a large mining population would be attracted, and that such an amount would be earned from the mines, and from the influx of a mining population, as would leave a margin of profit to the Company, sufficient to pay such dividends on the shares as would justify the premium at which most of the investors in them have bought them. This chance, however, is the only tangible asset of the Company.

Probably Mr. Rhodes himself is not sanguine that gold under these conditions will be found. He therefore seeks to force us into such connection with the Company as will form the basis of a demand on us to recoup the shareholders. From the directorial and promotorial standpoint, this is adroit. But from the tax-payers' standpoint, all participation, direct or indirect, in the finances of the Company ought to be avoided. It must not be heads the Company wins, tails the taxpayer loses. The Company obtained a charter securing to it certain land and mining rights. The quid pro quo was that it should take upon itself all charges involved in the development of the country, and all costs of government. So long as it meets these charges, it retains those land and mining rights. If it fails to meet them, and throws the charges on us, then it loses the right either to mines or land. But the Company claims that we ought to make railroads in order to enable it to develop the country; that somebody else should pay for all the money that it has squandered in rebellions caused by its misdeeds, and in development, and that if it cannot make two ends meet, somebody else should make them meet: but that it should retain the fee simple of the territory!

Surplice Shirts for evening wear, with pique fronts, 9/6, 10/6 each, made to measure.—Sampson & Co., Shirt Tailors, 268, 270, Oxford-street, London, W. Price lists forwarded.

The only plea for this extraordinary proposal is that the Company consists of patriots. "Patriotism," some cynic has observed, "is the last refuge of a scoundrel." Be this as it may, it certainly seems to me that every company promoter should profess it in order to play the game of speculation without risk of loss.

That Mr. Chamberlain—still an ardent Radical, according to his own professions—is in a false position as the member of a Tory Government with Lord Salisbury at its head, may be a reason for his wishing to turn our attention from the domestic reforms which he has so ably advocated in times past, by sinking our money for us in projects for developing colonies that do not pay their way. But, with all respect to him, it is no reason for our furnishing him with the money. He is an ambitious man—and I find no fault with him for being ambitious. He probably would not be averse to becoming the Leader and the autocrat of the Party in which he now serves. This would be impossible, if the country did not have its attention distracted from domestic issues. That Party consists in the main of Tories. Supposing that he were its Leader, and that Disestablishment were to come to the forefront. What would the Tory Party think of their Leader explaining that he himself was in favour of it, but that for some special reason he did not consider that the moment was opportune for giving effect to it? Assuming that he does wish to lead where he now serves, his sole chance of doing so is either in a war or in this absurd scheme of colonial development. Mr. Rhodes for other causes is an Empire-expander, and probably he is more popular with the Tories than Mr. Chamberlain. The latter, therefore, cannot afford to quarrel with him. As a militant Jingo, the necessities of his position oblige him to out-Rhodes Rhodes. Were these Arcadians to fall out, Mr. Rhodes would carry the Tory Jingoes with him.

AFTER THE PRIMROSE LEAGUE MEETING AT THE ALBERT HALL:

LORD SALISBURY AND THE INQUISITIVE YOUNG MAN.

"You are old, my Lord Marquis," the young man cried,
"You're reported sagacious to be,
And yet your last speech at the Royal Albert Hall
You have pitched in this Jingo-ish key.
It is hard when one reads all the things that you said
To understand what you were at.
In fact, you've completely turned round on yourself,
Pray what is the reason of that?"

"Young man," said the Marquis, "you seem to forget,
Or, at least, you omit to recall,
What the audience was that I had to address,
When I spoke at the Royal Albert Hall.
'Twas a meeting, young man, of our great Primrose League—
Quite ready poor me to impeach—
So I suited my words to my company, that
Will suffice to explain my strange speech.

"The Knights and the Dames of the Primrose were there.
'Convened in the Empire's defence,'
So of course, as I well from experience knew,
It was useless to talk commonsense.
Words of prudence, of justice, of wisdom? Oh, no!
They'd at best but induce vain fatigue;
Words of passion and prejudice—that's what you want
When addressing our great Primrose League!"

"I am glad, my Lord Marquis," replied the young man,
"To be told what you're pleased to impart;
I'm exceedingly glad that, whatever you say,
You still are no Jingo at heart.
And I venture to hope that, however your 'friends'
In the Press may your 'prudence' abuse,
You will still be determined to give full effect
To what are your actual views!"

"Your counsel, young man," said the Marquis on this,
"I shall be but too glad to regard,
But you must not forget that the task I essay
Is often uncommonly hard.
And if I at times seem, in spite of my past,
A bit of a Jingo to be,
Let me add this significant piece of advice—
Blame the Primrose League—do not blame me!"

DUYSEN PIANOS are the most superb of all modern Instruments. They stand absolutely unrivalled for beauty of tone, touch, & finish. A consummate success in small grands.—LLOYD'S, 24, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

SCRUTATOR.

A CARNIVAL OF VULTURES.

IN foreign policy I have a higher opinion of Lord Salisbury's acts than of his mode of doing them, and a very much higher opinion of his acts than of his utterances. What consummate trash he did talk last week to the Primrose ladies! He began by telling them that future history will regard Lord Cromer, Sir Herbert Kitchener, Sir Gerald Portal, Sir William Lockhart, and Mr. Rhodes as heroes. With all respect for these gentlemen, I doubt whether, if history occupies itself with them, this will be its estimate of all of them. In regard to his Chinese negotiations, Lord Salisbury very rightly said that we must judge by the results. But why hint that Russia has lied to us? Even supposing that it were the fact, surely this is hardly the way to conduce to an amicable feeling between the two countries. Diplomats and Statesmen never lie; they only change their minds. We pledged ourselves to Europe only temporarily to occupy Egypt. Lord Cromer has just announced, after our occupation of fifteen years, that "for the present our departure would appear to be distant." In diplomatic language, we have changed our minds. Then Lord Salisbury went on to explain to the ladies that there are living countries and dying countries, and that it is in the nature of things that the living should devour the dying. We, therefore, he continued, must be ready to join in this carnival of vultures. The ladies loudly applauded these ghoulish sentiments. Pretty darlings! Thus does the St. James's Gazette point the moral:—

> The old Party issues, Party cries, Party fetishes are dead. Voices may cry in the wilderness about Disestablishment, Local Veto, and Home Rule. No one heeds them. We have only two Parties—the living and the dead.

Need I observe that by the living is meant the Conservatives, and by the dead the Radicals? I agree with the St. James's Gazette. Radicals will cry in the wilderness for reforms so long as they are such idiots as to dance to the Tory tune of arming to the teeth—not for purposes of defence, but to place us in a position to secure the lion's share in the dismemberment of the weak. Rome, said Scipio, is to be defended by carrying the war into Africa. The privileges of the classes at home are to be defended by carrying the war into Africa, Asia, and everywhere else where something can be grabbed. In order effectively to carry out this grab policy we are to build such a number of ships that we can sweep all other navies from the sea, and thus become masters of the ocean-ways to all parts of the earth. The commerce and the colonies of foreign nations are to exist by our good pleasure, and when it comes to taking more territory, we are to have the pick, and only leave to others what we do not want. Napoleon, in his dreams of universal empire, never imagined such an Empire as this. He sought to establish his supremacy in Europe. We would establish ours over the world. The European Powers combined against Napoleon; can we be surprised if the world, outside our Empire, combines against us? What is called the balance of power is such a distribution of force that no one Power can dictate the law to all, and this balance of power is the surest guarantee for peace. Fortunately, Lord Salisbury does not act on these principles, and more than once has he sneered at those of his colleagues who profess them. But I suppose that he knew his audience, and thought that it was needless for him to cast pearls of wisdom before the ladies, most of whom, I read in a Tory organ, were arrayed in "becoming costumes!"

Unfortunately, however, foreign nations do not quite realise the difference between the Statesman and the Orator of the Primrose League. They may be inclined to take his tea-table chatter to Primrose dames and Primrose maidens as a responsible utterance of the Statesman. If they do, will it not be an incitement to arm also? If the nations of the earth—the living nations—are told that we are arming in order to be masters at the battle of Armageddon which Lord Salisbury cheerfully prophesies, will not they be fools if they do not arm too? Should they not, they will not only get nothing, but they will find themselves amongst the dying whom the living are to devour.

When a man's coat is long enough, the only advantage that he can derive from perpetually adding to its length is that the tails draggle in the mud. So it is with a nation. Our coat is quite long enough for our cloth, and it covers our body amply. We have the greatest Empire that the world has ever known. The inhabitants of the British Isles have to pay for defending it, for the area of Empire is not the area of taxation. If it be augmented, the cost of defending must increase. We pay forty-four millions for defence at present, and we find it difficult to keep the number of our Army up to our present requirements. We are like the proverbial greedy boy whose eyes are bigger than his belly. President McKinley, the newspapers tell us, contemplates selling the Philippine Islands to us. He has the sense to see that the United States—a commercial and manufacturing Power, as we are—would rather lose than gain by retaining them. But he has remarked our insatiate earth-hunger, and he fancies that we shall be ready to pay handsomely for this white elephant. The American President is so far right that, were he to offer to make over the animal to us, our Jingo Press would do its best to shriek us into accepting it. In the present crack-brained temper of the nation there is no knowing what folly it would not commit, were it told by its journalistic pastors and masters that the folly is wisdom, and that all who do not agree with them are as contemptible "Little Englanders" as were Sir Robert Peel, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Bright, and pretty well every other British statesman who was not privileged to live under the new gospel that they preach with such pernicious zeal.

That Tories, and that those Liberals who have gone over to the Tory camp bag and baggage, should seek to convert us into a nation of buccaneers abroad, rejoicing to be ruled at home by the aristocracy of birth and wealth, is not surprising. To save the Church and the House of Lords from destruction; to stave off all drastic changes in the land laws; to defend the throne of King Bung, they hold that all is lawful. And, with these views, their conduct is logical. But what sickens me is that Radicals should be hoodwinked by so transparent a plan of campaign aimed against themselves. They are more foolish than the sheep who are led to the slaughter. They run bleating with joy along the road, and if the butcher lags behind, they urge him to quicken his pace, and sharpen his knife.

Strange, indeed, are our ways just now. If the Chancellor of the Exchequer collects in taxes more money than any of his predecessors, we glory in this as proof that we are flourishing. If he spends the greater portion of this money in armaments, we hail him as a patriot. If he devotes a further portion to doles to the classes, we rejoice that the many have to pay these doles to the few. Although men in these Isles grown old in manual labour are left to the tender mercies of the workhouse when they are past work, and children are forced into schools, famished and ill-clad, we decline to better the lot of either. If we spend millions in slaying Africans, we declare that this is done to civilise and to Christianise them. If we vanquish ill-armed savages we celebrate the exploit as though we had done something that throws Leonidas and his Spartans into the shade.

But if other countries seek to follow our example, we explain to them that we are so good and so noble, that Providence has given over the whole world to us, as He gave over the Canaanites to the Israelites, and that what is right in us is wrong in them. If any independent tribes like the Afridis dare to question our right to reduce them to subjection, we burn their villages, destroy their crops, ruin their fruit trees, and treat them as these Israelites did the Hivites and the Hittites. But if any other nation commits like barbarities, we shudder with indignant horror.

All this may be proper and patriotic. But whether it be or not, it must be admitted that it is a new code of ethics and of politics. The Tories have a huge Parliamentary majority. How did they get it? By Liberals aiding them to stir up belligerent greed. How are they to be deprived of this majority? By Radicals reverting to the principles that they professed before this belligerent greed was dubbed patriotism.

According to the majority of the Tory newspapers, the views that were almost universally held a little time ago are now only entertained by a small and scattered remnant, hardly worthy of a contemptuous sneer. So thought the Tories of those who differed from them, when they restored Charles II. to the throne of his "martyred" father. But they lived to learn that the triumph of the boastful, swaggering Cavaliers was but a passing phase, and that the men who they imagined were but a remnant were the nation. So it will be again.

PARTIES AND THEIR LEADERS.

The Standard and the St. James's Gazette announce the return of Lord Rosebery as Leader of the Liberal Party, and, says the former, "the movement in favour of recalling him to the Leadership, which has been going on for some time, is likely soon to take a more definite form." That there are a few Whigs and personal friends of Lord Rosebery eager for him to reassume the Leadership is very possible, and it may be that they are lobbying and intriguing. But were they to give a definite form to their aspirations, they would find themselves in a hopeless minority. I therefore fail to see how this "return from Elba" could take place. "The discontent," observes the St. James's Gazette, "with Sir William Harcourt's leading in the House of Commons has become more and more marked during the Session." This discontent, if it be felt by any, is confined to some of the members of the Front Opposition Bench, and is due to their differing from Sir William on foreign politics. The only complaint of the Radicals is that he allows himself to be too much influenced by a desire not to break entirely with these gentlemen. Radicals would have him assert his leadership over them, and make it clear to them that, if they are not prepared to yield, their room is better than their company. Were Lord Rosebery to become Leader of the Party on account of dissatisfaction with Sir William's leading in the Commons, it is clear that this would be followed by the deposition of Sir William. Who, then, is it proposed should replace him? The entire story is mere moonshine, as the Lobby rumours set about by one Party respecting the other generally are.

The Unionists naturally would like to bring about a split in the enemy's camp. They are further desirous that we should go back to the good old days when Whigs and Tories were the alternate holders of office, and thus the Radicals were kept in proper subordination. They wish it all the more because, could they bring it about, the Tories would be almost always in office, as without the Radicals the Whigs' chance of Downing-street would be small. So long as I can remember, the Whigs intrigued against Mr. Gladstone, for in their hearts they hated the great reforms which he was always pressing to the front. Mr. Gladstone was too popular to be crushed by base intriguers. The same game is going on now. A dead set is made against Sir William Harcourt, because he is not their man. It must not, however, be supposed that, even on the Front Opposition Bench, this intrigue finds favour with the majority.

Where you have a man in a Party whose personal influence is so great that it carries all before him, and whose aim is to give effect, so far as he can, to the aspirations of the Party, as was the case with Mr. Gladstone, he is the natural Leader. But when there is no such man in a Party, then the Leadership becomes a question of minor importance, the door is open to intrigue, and the friends of each Brentford king try to give him the rose. No sooner does one king get it, than the friends of the other endeavour to get it away from him. Sir William's crime at present is that he has the rose. But in order to displace him, there must be something more than mere back-stair intrigues. His opponents must come out into the open and produce a man more in unison with the aspirations of the Party, and more likely to give practical effect to them. I confess that amongst the Brentford kings who would—or perhaps it would be fairer to say, whose over-zealous friends would—put their particular king on the throne, I see no one who more frankly accepts the Party aspirations, or who can make a better fight for them.

When I desire a thing I perhaps take a broader view of what is justifiable in seeking to attain it than some persons. But I do hold to this: If I take an oar in a boat, I keep stroke, and do not try to upset it by designedly catching crabs. If the proverb that there is honour among thieves be true, then I can only say that the ethics of some politicians are not up to those of thieves. Any man has a right to separate himself from his Party, if he does not agree with its policy. But if he be a fair-minded man he will do so openly. To publicly accept allegiance to a man, and privately to endeavour to upset him; to try to score against him by back-stair intrigue, and secretly to inspire journals to attack him, is too much like the kiss of Judas to commend itself to most men. Yet what do we see? On the Liberal side there is an underhand intrigue against the Liberal Leader, and on the Unionist side a like intrigue against the Unionist Leader. And unless I am greatly mistaken the vast majority both of Unionists and Liberals view these intrigues with disgust.

THE CASE OF SERGEANT GIBBS.

In TRUTH of December 2 (page 1417) reference was made to the case of a sergeant in N Battery, Royal Horse Artillery, at Meerut, who had been the victim of some very singular proceedings in the course of an apparent attempt to oust him from the Service on the ground of medical unfitness. The attempt has since reached a successful issue, and I am able to give some fuller particulars of the circumstances through the kindness of a friend, an officer in India, who has come across the man, Sergeant Gibbs, since he left the Service. There seems to be no room whatever for doubt as to any of the facts, and the case is undoubtedly a very bad one, calling urgently for further notice.

On August 4, 1896, in consequence of an accident in a steeplechase at Meerut, Sergeant Gibbs went to hospital with slight concussion of the brain. On August 21 a court of inquiry was held into the accident, and Surgeon-Major Rennie (Medical Officer No. 1), subsequently entered the opinion on Gibbs' medical history sheet that the accident "is not likely to interfere with his duties as a soldier." On November 1 in the same year Gibbs was marked by the P.M.O. (Medical Officer No. 2) "Medicine and duty," and returned to duty accordingly. He remained at duty for six months—i.e. until May, 1897, when he applied for re-engagement on completion of his twelve years' service, and was passed and certified fit by Medical Officer No. 3. He was at this time acting as pay-sergeant of No. 2 Section Battery, near Simla. The re-engagement paper was sent up to the acting C.O., Major Dunlop, at Meerut, who returned it with a note that he would not sanction or recommend the re-engagement till he saw Sergeant Gibbs again, as the man could not speak properly or walk when he left Meerut. The Lieutenant in charge of Sergeant Gibbs' section wrote in reply that the sergeant had quite recovered from his accident, and could both speak and walk. No further steps, however, with regard to his re-engagement were taken by Sergeant Gibbs for some months; but in August last, at the beginning of the Frontier outbreak, he was, in common with other men, examined and passed for active service by another medical officer (Medical Officer No. 4). On August 24, in consequence of a junior sergeant being ordered to act as battery-sergeant-major, Sergeant Gibbs, seeing that there was some prejudice or grudge against him, asked the C.O. to sanction his re-engagement and also his exchange into another battery; and on September 16 Major Dunlop gave Gibbs a re-engagement paper, and told him to be re-examined by the doctor. The examination was made on the same date by another doctor (Medical Officer No. 5), who certified "I have carefully examined this man, and in my opinion he does not suffer from any disability or ailment likely to interfere with the efficient performance of his duties, either at home or abroad." On the paper being returned to the Major for signature, he took the extraordinary course, already detailed in TRUTH, of ordering Gibbs to go before the doctor again. Gibbs accordingly went again before Medical Officer No. 5, who two days before had certified him fit. The doctor does not seem to have examined him again, but inquired of him whether he had ever been paralysed, to which Gibbs replied in the negative. He was then ordered to go before the P.M.O. (Medical Officer No. 2), which he did on September 19. He was then again examined, and the doctor asked him whether he got tired when riding, to which he replied "No." It was after this examination that Gibbs was ordered (I believe by Major Dunlop), as already mentioned in TRUTH, to give up the papers that he held certifying that he was medically fit. Gibbs refused to do so, and in view of the irregular and suspicious character of all the procedings up to this point, few will question that he was justified in refusing. He was then placed under arrest, and remanded for a district court-martial (September 20). On September 25, being informed that the General had sent an order that he was to give up the papers, he handed them over to Major Dunlop, after taking a copy. No court-martial was ever held, but on September 29 Gibbs was taken before the R.A. officer and given a severe reprimand. He was at the same time told that a report about his fitness for re-engagement would be sent in in January. On October 5 he addressed a complaint to the Commander-in-Chief asking for investigation into his treatment, and a few weeks later he was ordered to appear again before Medical Officer No. 2, and subsequently before a board. The result of these proceedings was not communicated to him. On December 28 he was ordered to sign another re-engagement paper—the fourth. On January 26 he was ordered to hand over his sub-division, and given furlough pending discharge, and on February 16 he was formally discharged "in consequence of having been found medically unfit for further service. Character: Very good."

Now, these proceedings, which I should imagine must be without precedent in the history of the British Army, speak for themselves, and it seems a mere waste of time to draw specifically all the inferences which they suggest at every step. The reason officially given for Gibbs' discharge is a false pretence on the face of it, and stultifies the medical officers who gave it. Here we have a man returned to duty by a P.M.O., and within twelve months three times examined and certified by three other doctors as fit either for re-engagement or for active service in the Frontier war. In the face of this the final declaration that he was medically unfit can only be regarded as a fictitious pretext trumped up for the purpose of getting the man out of the Service. The motive and the means are so transparent that one may almost say that there is no disguise about them.

As to the reasons which inspired this obvious hostility on the part of one or other of Gibbs's superior officers, my informant has questioned the man, and elicited the following facts. In the first place, it appears that some time ago, under the auspices of Major, then Captain, Dunlop, the battery coffee-shop got heavily into debt, and on Captain Dunlop going for a time to the Depot, sergeant Gibbs was ordered to look after the concern, with the result that he succeeded in wiping out the debt and showing a handsome balance to credit at the end of nine months. It also appears that he had refused to countenance the prevailing system of payments by sergeants for the privilege of holding office in the canteen, and had refused to pay this form of backsheesh himself, thus presumably incurring the ill-will of some higher authority. If any one wishes to know more about the practice here referred to, he may turn to a paragraph published in TRUTH of April 14, page 902. It is also possible that the C.O. was annoyed at Gibbs's attempt to exchange into another battery, he being a smart soldier and an excellent rough rider. Whether these facts will afford sufficient explanation of the animus shown against him, the reader must judge for himself; but I find that people who know the Service better than I do have no difficulty in accepting this explanation of Gibbs's discharge.

However, be the explanation what it may, there can be no doubt that the man has been treated with the most gross injustice, and that the interests of the Service and the terms of the Army Regulations have been unscrupulously overridden to gratify personal feeling. Sergeant Gibbs is a man just thirty years of age, and by universal admission one of the best riders and smartest soldiers in his battery. He is discharged with a "very good" character, and the most serious blot upon his record appears to be the "severe reprimand" administered to him last September under the circumstances mentioned. In addition to his official character, he possesses a testimonial from the chaplain, stating that "his moral character for honesty, truthfulness, and steadiness is beyond all praise." I may say that Gibbs himself has never communicated with me; My knowledge of the case in the first instance was derived from others who were familiar with the facts, and my latest information comes from an officer who is not even in the Royal Artillery, but who has accidentally had the case brought under his notice, and was so disgusted at the whole story that he sent it to me as a matter which ought to be brought before the House of Commons. I deal with it here, because experience has taught me that the military authorities are more ready to pay attention to facts laid before them in the Press than when they are raised in a more or less hostile manner in Parliament. Speaking as a taxpayer, and at a time when we hear so much about the necessity of strengthening our forces, and the difficulty of getting suitable men, I ask every one who reads these lines whether it is a tolerable thing that smart and efficient soldiers of excellent character should be hounded out of the Service as Sergeant Gibbs has been merely to gratify private grudges. It is the duty of the rulers of the Army, both in India and at home, to protect not merely individual soldiers or N.C.O.s, but also the public Service against abuses of this kind; and they ought to make, after due inquiry, an example in this case which will do something to prevent the recurrence of such incidents in future.

A MORAL FROM EARL'S COURT.

What I like about the Earl's Court Exhibition is that the exhibits are not conspicuous. No doubt they are there, and no doubt they are all that the most exacting connoisseur could desire. But if exhibited, they are not exhibited obtrusively. If you want to see them, I suppose you can. I do not want to see them, and I spent three hours at Earl's Court on Saturday without seeing a single one. Consequently, I regard this as an ideal exhibition.

An exhibition where you see no exhibits may seem to lack raison d'être. It certainly is not so at Earl's Court. The exhibition there has the best possible raison d'être. It is a place of amusement, and amusement is what it provides—in practically inexhaustible quantities, and for every variety of taste. To my taste—and to that apparently of many hundreds of thousands of my fellow-citizens—the most precious of all these amusements is that of sitting with a cigarette in the open air and doing nothing, to the accompaniment of the best of bands, with a waiter somewhere at hand ready to take your order, if you feel disposed to give it, and with an endless procession of your fellow-creatures of all ages, sorts, and conditions passing before you as food for observation and reflection. Till within the last few years the lack of this particular form of amusement has spoiled London for pleasure purposes, and made the most conspicuous distinction between life here and on the Continent. The idea had gradually grown up that in this respect we are differently constituted from our European neighbours; that the life of the Parisian boulevard or the German beer-garden was incompatible with the British climate or the British temperament, or some other occult influence. This was an utter delusion, as a very slight acquaintance with the habits of our ancestors before the Victorian era would have shown. The delusion is now dispelled. The success of the "Fisheries" and subsequent exhibitions at South Kensington first undermined it, and the subsequent growth of the Earl's Court undertaking, and the imitations of it in other quarters, have shown that the London public are just as delighted to sit about and listen to music in a public garden as the inhabitants of any town in the Fatherland. Nor is this taste confined to any one class. One of the pleasantest features of the Earl's Court show is its frankly democratic character. You see the smartest elements of West End society rubbing shoulders with the proletariat, and all parties apparently well satisfied with their company. This alone is an achievement of which the promoters have a right to be proud.

Do not, however, let me do these worthy gentlemen the injustice of suggesting, even unintentionally, that there is no amusement at Earl's Court but to sit and listen to the band. It has not been so hitherto, and it certainly is not so this year. On the contrary, the entertainments and side shows have increased and multiplied. The Naval Display in particular is a novelty of extraordinary cleverness and interest, calculated to make the heart of the Jingo leap for joy, and even to make a Little Englander hum his "Rule Britannia." There are American midgets and Hungarian minstrels, a panorama and a realistic Alpine excursion, baby incubators and electrophones, a captive balloon for those who cannot get high enough in the Great Wheel, and 'rickshaws drawn by live Japs to provide a new sensation for those who prefer locomotion on terra firma. In a word, you have here all the fun of the Greenwich or Bartholomew Fairs of the olden time, before ruffianism captured and destroyed them, and when all classes patronised them as freely as they patronise Earl's Court to-day.

It is something to have revived in London the taste for all these harmless amusements, and to have provided London with the means of gratifying it. But it is something still more astonishing to have done it on this particular site. In the midst of the palatial buildings, the lake and the canals, and the clever scenery surrounding it all, stop and think for a moment what it was before the genius of Imré Kiralfy set to work on it—three plots of derelict land in the midst of a wilderness of railway lines, coal wharves, and goods sheds! When a little taste, ingenuity, enterprise, and capital can thus make the wilderness rejoice and blossom, does it not seem that we are criminally neglectful of the possibilities presented by the parks and gardens that lie open to the public on every hand? When the people show such an appreciation of amusements of a purely harmless and wholesome nature, and when you see that such amusements can be easily made not only self-supporting but profitable, surely no further argument is needed in favour of multiplying such opportunities of recreation wherever practicable. To my mind there is no direction in which more can be done for promoting the happiness and morality of the people. If you want to repress wickedness and vice, and maintain religion and virtue, encourage your people to enjoy the simplest pleasures. Teach them to take tea with their wives in the Parks, to sit there and read their newspapers, listen to the bands, and play with the children, and you will do more than all the preachers and lecturers to keep them out of the public-houses and the police-courts—not to mention worse places. When the cost is so small, isn't the experiment worth trying?

THE MEDICINE MAN.

His name was Tregenna; as a specialist on the brain his prowess was applauded in the East End and in the West. We met him first in Whitechapel, at one of Canon Slade Smith's "Evenings for the people." That popular preacher, whose manner resembles Launcelot Gobbo's at the Lyceum, spoke on the power of the human will. The audience was not attentive. The speaker now would offer an instance of the "works" a good man's will might do: he would mention the honoured name of—Dr. Tregenna! The audience was disagreeably stirred. Plainly, Dr. Tregenna was somebody—and sinister. There was interruption. Why, it was asked, do the Doctor's patients die so soon after leaving his Home at Hampstead? The Canon defended that Retreat. Mrs. Bill Burge expressed a wish that the Doctor would take in hand her husband. The audience was amused: its general opinion seemed that Bill Burge would be one too many for the Doctor. Mr. Burge now raised an awful head from the bench where it reposed. He resented his wife's idea, and indicated his resentment. The door opened, and Dr. Tregenna entered. There was a conflict of eye and will. The wife-beater quailed, and then Burge broke from the Doctor and ran. The people left. The Doctor sat down by the fire. To the Canon's remark on Bill's evasion, he said quietly that his beasts often returned to him—tamen usque recurrent. The Canon busied himself with the lights, and still the Doctor sat before the fire. Then the door was flung open. A man entered and came cringing to the Doctor's chair. It was Burge. The beast had come back from the jungle.

We met Tregenna next at Lord Belhurst's ball. He came late, and in conversation with a colleague revealed a dark passage in his life. He had loved some one called Edith, who had jilted him. She was dead; but if ever he over-took the man who had robbed him, that person, he darkly hinted, should suffer. He knew things about the brain which made him a deadly foe. Again, he desired a certain type of patient. Such a one he would lead gradually to the border-line of madness, and observe the process. Just then the Doctor seemed to have a vision. He saw before him the lost love of his youth. Had Edith returned from the grave? No, explained the colleague, this was a mortal maid, the girl of the house. Does the reader guess what Tregenna now perceived? This was Edith the second, christened Sylvia, the lost love's daughter, and Lord Belhurst was his rival. Presently that rival came forward and confided in the Doctor. His wife had died melancholy mad, and he was uneasy for his daughter. She was well and dancing with her fiancé, a V.C. fresh from exploits. Still her father wanted a good opinion on her case. Would the Doctor see her? The Doctor saw her. Yes; this should be his ideal patient. He drew her aside, he hypnotised her with a look. The V.C. vigorously protested. Lord Belhurst declared that the marriage was off. Sylvia must exchange the altar for Hampstead. The curtain fell on Sylvia in a swoon.

We have followed our Medicine Man from East to West; the postal direction is henceforth N.W. We are at Hampstead. There is Nurse (comic relief) who wants men only for her patients, and those gentlemen. There is Burge, now in the Doctor's hands, and growing horribly more brute-like daily. In him the Doctor is developing homicidal mania. Sylvia, on the other hand, is floating in dreams to insanity. The poison grows. She breaks with her father and her V.C., and only lives for her Doctor. Finally there is a party at Tregenna's and an explosion. The Doctor, his colleague of the first act, the father, and the V.C. meet to argue it out. As they dispute, Lord Belhurst accidentally discloses that, so far from robbing a ship's doctor of his bride, he had never heard of Tregenna's existence. For so keen a man, the Doctor's scent was bad. No sooner does Tregenna hear this than he relents. A few hypnotic passes suffice to bring back Miss Sylvia's reason, and she goes off with her people. As she goes, the Doctor begs her to say farewell to her gaoler—"Your gaoler who loved you." He then sat down at his table and was murdered shortly after by Bill Burge.

It is melodrama, and not good melodrama. The construction is artless. The authors have not told a plain tale. Even from an abstract which aims at simplifying their argument, and is, in fact, much simpler than the stage presentment, you will see that the piece is prolix and obscure. There are irrelevancies of which this abstract takes no account. There are foibles which an expert hand would have avoided.

There are five acts of "The Medicine Man," but that was no reason why on the opening night eleven should have struck before the curtain had risen on the fifth. But time—and the management—may put this right, and make the odds more even. From its very length, we are apt at present to discount the merits of the evening. Miss Maude Valérie White's music is admirable. So is the mounting of the piece. The Doctor's garden, with the blue night pierced with fairy lamps, is beautiful. In the piece itself some of the dialogue is witty. The atmosphere of the Belhurst ball is reproduced. The great lady, full of Lady Bountiful airs about nothing, as she steps from the East End party to her carriage where the big footmen wait, and the nurse already described, make pleasant satire. The clergyman with his inattentive hearers is observed, and if he is made farcical that effect is deliberate. These points explain the "melodramatic comedy" of the playbill. But they do not compensate for so obscure a story. The hypnotism is weak. Here is the method neither of Nancy nor of the Salpêtrière; it is not even a convincing brand of good old penny-novel mesmerism. Charcot brought patients as much under his control as Tregenna's. But these were epileptics, and Charcot had need of time, process, and the revolving mirror. Tregenna hardly needed contact with his victims. On other grounds the Doctor is a puzzle. For a man of superhuman powers he had a fine task in platitude; his theories of cruelty, &c., were not impressive. A man all brain, he devoted himself to revenge on defective evidence, and relinquished his purpose on feeble grounds. The knot is tamely loosed. But what were the "Medicine Man's" motives? Love of the girl, revenge, or love of science? I do not know, and I do not think the Doctor knew. Even the authors throw down their motives and leave you, who have paid, to take your choice.

The acting could hardly have been better. Other parts than a girl's in her teens may now become Miss Terry, yet her Sylvia, sane and happy at the ball, insane and reconciled at Hampstead, was remarkably suggested. In lesser characters, Miss Rose Leclerc and Mr. Fuller Mellish perhaps excelled where all were adequate. The bestial gradations of Bill Burge are an extraordinary feat. Mr. MacIntosh, I cannot think, has ever had his due. Recollect his Solicitor at the Court, his William III., his German adventurer in an Adelphi melodrama of Messrs. Carr and Chambers. It is difficult to name a more essential actor than the inventor of types so diverse. "I have no commands for futurity," but among the younger men it is on Mr. MacIntosh I should bet were I a tipster. Sir Henry Irving's Tregenna was bound to be an eerie masterpiece. No doubt it suffered from the weaknesses of the character, yet the spell is there. I may not believe in the Doctor's mannerism; I quail before the actor's.

At the close of the evening Sir Henry told the audience that the "Medicine Man" would run till the end of the season. Against hope, I hope that it may. But if it doesn't, I trust Sir Henry will not be discouraged. The "Medicine Man" may not be a great physician, but his treatment is on proper lines. Opinions vary about Sir Henry in Shakespearean characters. No one doubts his pre-eminence in melodrama. I have watched and cordially admired his disinterested efforts on behalf of the pictorial side of Shakespeare. But there are other kingdoms to reconquer. Sir Henry has earned the right to condescend on a great popular success. The boxes and stalls have had it all their way. Here is our leading actor—a national possession. The pit—yea, the gods—have a right to be considered in his triumphs.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE CHARCOT-HUGO FRACAS.

HOW touch a subject so delicate, even with the daintiest pair of sugar-tongs? I should not touch it at all but for the blaze of publicity and the fumes of exaggeration and falsehood that have sprung up about it. Endless tales are told, all of which are more true than false. Each one tries to seek into remote causes in a manner suggestive of raking a rubbish-heap. The remote causes were small causes, as I hope to show.

I cannot separate in imagination "Georges et Jeanne," the darling grandchildren of Victor Hugo. Their names are welded together in imperishable verse. The loving adoration in which their grandfather held them was one of the sweetest features of his old age. It was generous as sunshine and of a piece with his last letters to Ste. Beuve—letters no English critic has rightly understood. Who that was admitted to Victor Hugo's inner circle does not remember the granddaughter, when a child, being drawn towards him as a needle to a magnet? Who could fail to admire the contrasting apple-blossom rosiness of Jeanne with the weather-beaten, hoary, and majestic head of Victor Hugo? She stood beside his chair, and he laid her face against his shoulder muttering, perhaps, "My angel; my darling—the joy of my poor old heart." The grandson, less spontaneous and more reflective, also made his way over to the grandfather to share the caresses. An arm was then thrown round each grandchild, and both fell into place by seating themselves on his knees.

Victor Hugo was under the influence of the childish beauty of Georges and Jeanne when he wrote "La Grand'-Mère," a strange drama in one act and seven scenes, brought out for the first time last week at the Odéon. And it was on the occasion of the first representation that the husband of "Jeanne" (Dr. Jean Charcot) boxed "Georges" in the face. Who can blame Georges for striking back with a cane? It would have been better had he wiped away the "claret" from his nose, and said, "One cannot call out a pugilist." Talleyrand had more presence of mind when assaulted by De Maubreuil, M. Lockroy, who was with Dr. Jean Charcot, went between the combatants. Thereupon the one who wanted to be quits called him (the cleverest man in Paris) a dotard.

There has long been slumbering animosity between "Georges" and "Jeanne's" present husband. Georges, after his sister and her first husband, M. Léon Daudet, decided on divorce, remained faithful to his ex-brother-in-law. Not satisfied with being merely his friend, he gave his friendship in the most conspicuous manner. It might have been better to have been less demonstrative. M. Jules Simon felt this deeply. Hence the trouble he took to have the fact stated in the papers that the divorce was given in favour of Victor Hugo's granddaughter.

But it would be a mistake to suppose that M. Léon Daudet was guilty of aught but faults of temper. He is, perhaps, more impressionable than his illustrious father, whose nerves were in early life held down and disciplined by hard lines. Mme. Jeanne Charcot-Hugo is a kind, amiable, unaffected woman. She is also a friendly person, and greatly attached to her old schoolmates. Need I say that being adored in childhood did not strengthen the virtues of patience and forbearance? She is no Griselda—a character rather out of date in this fin de siècle. I should say she is a person to be led, but not driven. If her first husband's nerves led him to claim the mastery at home, her old habits of a darling grandchild prompted her to revolt. The Daudet family are, when they sift their thoughts, Freethinkers; but in feeling they are profoundly Catholic. They are hostile to the Jews. Zola was deeply impressed by the fact that Drumont was one of the pall-bearers at Alphonse Daudet's funeral.

As I have said, there is a cloud of misleading exaggeration round the whole Daudet-Hugo-Charcot affair; I shall therefore, though with fear and trembling, attempt to disperse it. A mere trifle led to much friction and misunderstanding in the Daudet-Hugo ménage. The most intimate friends of Victor Hugo's granddaughter were Jewesses of her own age. Her first husband complained of their familiarity. They made themselves too much at home. They irritated him with their practical jokes, one of which was to lock him out of the room where they and his wife were. English people grow easily familiar. French never do, and hate familiarity. Les petites Juives had the excuse of being schoolfellows of Madame. None the less, they rasped his nerves, and he thought them a serious grievance. This was resented. He then began to imagine that he was the victim of a Jewish intrigue, in view of a divorce. He must have seen in the Libre Parole that his wife's stepfather was a Jew. Drumont detects Jewish blood nearly everywhere. The idea of the conspiracy became a settled one. The wife was too proud to explain it away or to humour any fancy. Divorce became the only issue from a marriage that ought to have been happy and brilliant, but that had proved most unhappy. There was no serious fault on either side.

M. Léon Daudet seems to have felt that his divorced wife would choose a doctor for her second husband. He bitterly attacked the medical profession in "Morticolis." A good deal of the vitriol was said to be aimed at the late Dr. Charcot's pretensions. That light of science prescribed hanging as a remedy for the locomotor ataxia of Alphonse Daudet, with very bad results.

The feud has rather widened than tended to heal. An influence analogous to that of La Libre Parole seems at work on one side. Jewesses are discovered on the other side. Mme. Charcot (the great doctor's widow) is charged with being of Jewish birth. Her daughter, Mme. Waldeck-Rousseau, formerly the wife of the late Deputy and Doctor Lionville, is the image of Sarah Bernhardt, and imitates her gait, dress, and make-up. As the child of the Daudet-Hugo marriage is exclusively under maternal care, such connections are thought a grievance. Society and the literary and artistic world sympathise with M. Léon Daudet. People go a good deal in herds in Paris. To put it otherwise, "Birds of a feather flock together." As Mme. Jeanne Hugo has married a doctor, she is expected to go with the medical flock.

There does not seem to be anything to fight about in the situation I have been stating. But I do think it would be in better taste for M. Georges Hugo not to be so prominently in the camp opposed to his sister. When time has softened M. Léon Daudet's sense of grievance, he will be, I am sure, of the same opinion. M. Georges Hugo himself will regret that he did not, under all circumstances, consult his grandfather as an oracle. On the first nights of "La Grand'-Mère" Victor Hugo's grandchildren, with attendant family parties, occupied contiguous boxes. M. Léon Daudet showed himself in the grandson's. This was enough to draw Society, the artists, and the gens de lettres there in the entr'-actes. There was also the attraction of the known wealth of the Menard Dorian family and the beauty of its ladies. But this could not have led to the aggression on M. Georges Hugo behind the scenes. Dr. Jean Charcot may have nerves, too, and the sight of his brother-in-law embracing Mme. Marie Laurent may have ruffled them. The merest trifle will act on excitable nerves like an electrical spark on an explosive. But having given a fist-blow in the face to M. Hugo, he should give the satisfaction demanded by the seconds. This he refuses to do on the grounds that the near relationship prevents him. Draw what inferences you please from the refusal.

"La Grand'-Mère" is Hugoesque in its beauties and defects. It is lyrical; it has passages the very soul of music. They are fresh as a dewy morning. Among the defects are frequent alliteration. One feels that it is on purpose. What do you think of a heroine—and a German, too — named Emma Gemma? The taste of the poet for the high-sounding and pompous often breaks out. He voices his own ideas through his personages. The plot is at once simple and extravagant. Duke Charles—a philosopher and admirer of Rousseau, and the heir to a Sovereign German house—has withdrawn stealthily from the Court of his mother, the Margravine (Marie Laurent). For ten years he gives no sign. All the searches made for him are fruitless. But he is living as a cottager on one of his father's estates. He has abandoned rank, fortune, family, to marry a peasant girl, Emma Gemma (Mme. Segond Weber). Six children are in existence when the Margravine discovers her son's retreat. She comes with her Chief Justice to throw Duke Charles into prison, and Emma into a convent. But she does not reckon on a fortuitous meeting with three lovely little cherubs with flaxen hair and rosy cheeks. She has been saying what blood she would like to flow in her grandchild's veins. The mother's should be a Wittelsbach, with a Hapsburg grandsire. The children play and sing. They enchant the severe old lady. When she finds they are pledges of love given by Emma Gemma to Duke Charles, her heart melts, and she adopts all the nestlings and accepts the morganatic wife.

We had any number of fashionable masses last week. It does vex me to see how Fashion meddles with that gruesome tragedy of the Charity Bazaar. Its intervention is sacrilegious. Many of the masses were for the souls of those who passed a year ago through the fiery furnace of the Rue Jean Goujon. M. Faure, who delights in the pomps and vanities, had also a mass celebrated at the Elysée. He and his family attended. Piety of a certain sort is now a genre. The President would not have felt dans le mouvement had he not had his mass.

Kinahan's LL Whisky.—"The Cream of Old Irish Whiskies." Kinahan's LL Whisky. Gold Medal Paris Exhibition, 1878. Kinahan's Glenisle Whisky. The Finest Scotch Whisky sold.

The Grand Duchess Wladimir attended the funeral ceremony at the Madeleine along with the most feather-headed of Franco-Belgian Comtesses. H.I.H. is a Protestant. But a number of her friends perished in the Charity Bazaar, and she wished to testify to the durability of her sorrow. But the mass that had the most prestige was in memory of the late Duc d'Aumale. It was celebrated at the Madeleine, his parish church. The Academy attended and, of course, magnates civil, military, naval, and all the Imperial and Royal Princes and Princesses in town.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

FELICIA HEMANS, dear Lady Betty, in "The Rhine Song" sings:—

"I had a hat. It was not all a hat—
Part of the brim was gone.
Yet still I wore it on."

This little verse should be sung by Lord Salisbury now, for even the petticoated politicians of the Primrose League are deserting the Minister who is prepared to surrender everything to the enemies of his country rather than surrender office to the opponents of his Party.

* * * * *

The word "Conservatism" now no longer signifies tenacity to principles—or to prejudices—but tenacity to power. In this latter sense the present Ministry, which is a Tory Administration diluted with semi-detached Liberals and controlled by renegade Radicals, is exceptionally Conservative. This Cabinet is a veritable museum of mediæval mediocrities.

* * * * *

Money was formerly made by saving money, not by spending it; but since the West End has migrated to the City this very old method has been reversed, for most men now imagine that money is to be made by spending money. This is, of course, absolutely erroneous, except in occasional circumstances. The fact is, money-making is an art which has to be learnt as laboriously as any. But West End men will not acknowledge that this is the case. They go to the City with a light heart and a heavy purse, and, sooner or later, they all return to the West End with a heavy heart and a light purse. Most West End men, it should be remembered, bear names which enable them to be identified in every hole and corner on the globe, and if they are concerned in a dishonest transaction there is no spot on the earth where they can begin life again unrecognised. A large number of City men, however, are merely obscure adventurers. They risk little to gain much, and if a disaster occurs to them, they have only to remove to another town or another country without fear of their reputation dogging them. Thus, a West End man who goes into the City is very much like an amateur who attempts, with his hands tied behind his back, to fight a professional pugilist. How can he then possibly expect to make money? Indeed, any West End man has only to recall the fate of his friends who have made the attempt, to perceive that the contention is correct, for almost all of them have been either ruined or seriously impoverished. Besides, when a West End man ventures into the City he seldom comes into contact with the leading and substantial men of the City, for these are as exclusive as are the leading men in the West End. But he comes into contact at once with the financial sharks who are lying in wait to devour him, and with the adventurers who conceive that they may utilise him. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that eventually ninety-nine out of every hundred regret having ventured into the City. Some few do succeed; but many of these are, or become, even more unprincipled than are the adventurers and the sharks. There is no animal in the world so dangerous as an unprincipled gentleman.

* * * * *

The prices realised at the sale of the magnificent Heckscher collection, which took place at the auction-rooms of Messrs. Christie, Manson, & Woods last week, have astonished all but a few experts. Though money is exceptionally scarce, and the prosperous class, which generally purchases works of art, is suffering most from this cause, the average price of each object sold was £200; whilst at the Hamilton Palace sale the average was £180, and at the Magniac sale £70. Mr. Duveen, the well known art dealer of Old Bond-street, created a sensation by securing the Louis XV. enamelled snuff-box at the phenomenal price of £3,350. No snuff-box has ever changed hands at so high a figure, and there is every reason to believe—for it is the finest in the world—that it is destined at some future date to fetch considerably more.

The steady increase in the value of really fine works of art is, however, easily explained. The number of these is limited; the wealth of the world has recently enormously increased, and it may be expected to continue to increase, markets for works of art have been established in America, Africa, and Australia; and the number of those who appreciate such works has been multiplied beyond reckoning. Any man sinking some hundreds or thousands in purchasing veritable masterpieces of art now may, therefore, confidently look forward to doubling and even to trebling the capital so invested, if he can afford to wait.

* * * * *

Sir Philip Currie, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, has been appointed to replace Sir Francis Clare Ford as British Ambassador at Rome. Over a year ago it was predicted in these columns that Sir Philip would succeed Sir Francis at Rome, and the prediction was ridiculed. There are some who suggest that Sir Mortimer Durand, the British Ambassador at Teheran, should be appointed to Constantinople, but it is to be hoped that Lord Salisbury will not venture to make such a promotion. Sir Mortimer Durand has been imported into the Service, and is not, therefore, a trained diplomatist. Besides, it is not at all generally admitted that his career in the Service has been entirely successful. Others insist that Constantinople is reserved for Lord Cromer, which is even more ludicrous; for, in the first place, the Sultan would object to the appointment, as Lord Cromer has been the chief opponent of his projects as to Egypt. Secondly, if Lord Cromer does leave Egypt, it will be to assume the post of Viceroy of India, which is a far more probable appointment. Either Sir Frank Lascelles, Sir Nicholas O'Conor, or Sir Arthur Nicolson should succeed Sir Philip Currie, and they are all trained and successful diplomatists.

* * * * *

The following paragraphs which occurred in the telegraphic message from the Times "Our Correspondent" on Monday appear to have escaped the attention of journalists: "What was wanting in Admiral Dewey's brief and businesslike account of the victory: [the American naval victory at Manila] to satisfy the public interest is supplied by a narrative from the New York Herald correspondent. He alone among journalists shared the dangers and opportunities of the combat by Admiral Dewey's side on the bridge of the flagship." This is indeed amazing. Imagine Nelson fighting at Trafalgar with a newspaper correspondent by his side; Napoleon at Waterloo, with a reporter next to him taking shorthand notes; the Queen on Jubilee Day, accompanied in her State chariot by a journalist; and Mr. Justice Hawkins trying a notorious criminal, with the Lord Mayor on his right hand and "Our Own Correspondent" on the left. Let us abolish the House of Lords, and establish the House of Journalists in its stead. It would be an altogether admirable reform.—Believe me, to be very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE utter and hopeless collapse of the three-year-old form seems to place the £10,000 stakes of the season at the mercy of Velasquez if he goes on all right, and there is not a finer or a more improved horse now in training. He will not run at Ascot, and his first race as a four-year-old is to be the Princess of Wales' Stakes of £10,000, which is decided on June 30 at the Newmarket First July Meeting. There were forty-two acceptances for this race when the final forfeit was declared on January 4, and a subscription of £115 has to be paid on each of these entries. The race will not cost the fund a shilling this year, and there will, indeed, be a considerable surplus for the winner. Last year there was a surplus of £82, which went to Velasquez, but in 1896, when St. Frusquin defeated Persimmon, there was actually a deficiency of £1,994. Velasquez (9 lb. extra) can beat all the four-year-olds easily enough, the best of them being Vesuvian (who cannot be trained again), Chelandry (3 lb. extra), Goletta (9 lb. extra), Berzak (3 lb. extra), St. Cloud II., and Minstrel (6 lb. extra), and surely Lord Rosebery's horse holds all of them quite safe. Dieudonné will have to give Velasquez 3 lb. if he wins the Derby, and if he is beaten at Epsom then he can have no chance here, as he has already incurred a penalty of 6 lb. Brio and Ninus cannot stay the course, and there remain only Collar and Wantage, each at present being entitled to a 5 lb. maiden allowance; but I do not believe that either the one colt or the other could beat Velasquez over this course. Perhaps The Wyvern may be kept for this race, and he also has a maiden allowance, but Mr. Leigh's colt is now more likely to run for the Derby if he is supposed to be worth keeping in training, and if beaten at Epsom he can have but little chance for the Newmarket event, while, if he wins the Derby, then his penalty would settle his chance for the £10,000 race. Margaux, who was at one time expected to turn out a very smart colt, is believed to be very moderate, and St. Evox can have no earthly chance of success.

There are thirty-nine acceptances for the Eclipse Stakes at Sandown Park (run July 15), and Velasquez will have to carry 10 lb. extra, while Chelandry is not entered. The three-year-olds include Batt, Collar, Goletta, St. Evox, Santhea, The Wyvern, Dieudonné, Margaux, and Sangrado. There is no maiden allowance in this race. St. Cloud II. and Berzak are the best of the four-year-olds, of which there are only sixteen altogether. There ought to be a good surplus over the Eclipse Stakes this year. Last season, when Persimmon won, there was a deficiency of £1,701, and in 1896, when St. Frusquin was successful, the fund had to contribute £1,782.

Sixty-eight animals are left in for the National Breeders' Produce Stakes of £5,000 at Sandown Park, which is run on July 16, and it will be a long way the richest two-year-old race of the season. The Prince of Wales has accepted with Sandringham, Lord Alington's pair are withdrawn, and the Duke of Westminster has taken out Orme's Head and Sark, leaving Frontier, by Orme out of Quetta, as the only representative of his stud; but the Kingsclere stable also has a colt by Royal Hampton out of Thistle, dam of Common. Mr. Brassey has left in both Boniface, by St. Simon out of Merry Miser, dam of Orzil and Palmira, by Amphion out of Palisandre. The Duke of Devonshire has left in four out of five, his lot including Claque, by Marden out of Marvel's dam, and a half-brother, by Melanion, to Balsamo. Mr. Baird's two entries (both grandly bred animals) have gone, and so have all Mr. Cooper's, five in number. Desmond has accepted. The purchasers of Captain Greville's yearlings of last season are presumably satisfied with them, as they are all left in for this race. Mr. Larnach has accepted with his filly by St. Simon out of Hampton Rose, winner of the Mostyn Plate at Chester. This filly is nominated here by her breeder, Mr. J. C. Harrison, who sold her at Doncaster last September for 1,300 gs. Sir J. B. Maple's lot of three includes Regent, by Royal Hampton out of Superba, and Nun Royal, by Royal Hampton out of Priestess, dam of Nun Nicer. All Mr. Platt's lot are left in, including Sir R. W. Griffith's 3,000 gs. filly by Kendal out of St. Marguerite, who is expected to turn out a veritable flyer; Mr. Miller's 1,100 gs. filly by Kendal out of Lucy Ashton, and the 1,650 gs. colt by Kendal out of Pixie, that was bought by the late Mr. Bass, and he will be sold to-day at Newmarket. Mr. Rose, who had five entries, has left in Peoria, by Bona Vista out of Distant Shore. Lord Rosebery has accepted with Corposant (who wants time) and Apennine, sister to Velasquez. Mr. Sneyd has a colt by Blue Green out of Grecian Bend. Mr. W. G. Stevens has left in a colt by Grey Friars out of The Sunbeam, that will have the benefit of a 10 lb. breeding allowance. The Prince of Wales's original entry for this race included an own sister to Thais, but the filly unluckily died when a foal.

The result of the One Thousand is eulogised by some addleheads as "a complete triumph of last year's form." As a matter of fact, it was really a most complete upset of last year's form, according to which neither Nun Nicer, Airs and Graces, nor Alt Mark would have finished in the first three. It is all silly nonsense, moreover, about the Oaks being "at the mercy" of Nun Nicer, remembering how often the Newmarket running has been utterly revolutionised at Epsom, and Sir Blundell Maple's victory was nothing so very brilliant after all. The less said the better about the Oaks being a certainty for the One Thousand winner after the upsets of Thais in 1896 and of Chelandry last year. It would not surprise me to see Lowood or Orpah win the Oaks. I certainly have no prejudice against Nun Nicer, having given a plumper for her when all the sporting papers were "going for" Royal Footstep or Ebba.

I hear that there will be two French candidates for the Ascot Cup — M. de Brémond's Elf II., who won the Prix Rainbow at Longchamps the other day, and M. E. Blanc's Masqué II., about whom there was so much trumpeting last year, after he had won the Ascot Stakes for M. Halbroun. Masqué II. ran very badly in France the other day, and if the Cup is to be taken across the Channel it is Elf II. that will be the winner. This horse is a really good stayer, and he has nice speed, so that he ought to have an excellent chance of winning the Alexandra Plate, whatever he may achieve in the race for the Gold Cup. I should fancy that Elf II. will be entered for the Queen's Vase.

Entries close next Tuesday for the Royal Hunt Cup and the Fernhill Stakes at Ascot. The Hunt Cup is the most richly endowed handicap of the year, as there is £1,500 of added money, besides a piece of plate value £500, and all the sweepstakes (£20 each, half ft.), also go to the winner. The Fernhill Stakes is a five furlong race for twos and threes, running at weight-for-age, there being neither penalties nor allowances. The added money to this event is only £300, and the managers of the meeting would be well advised if they made it £1,000. The folly and absurdity of wasting £1,500 on the Alexandra Plate has over and over again been pointed out, and the Ascot Stakes would be quite as successful with £1,000 of added money instead of £2,000 being squandered upon this handicap.

Lord Dunraven's Desmond (by St. Simon out of L'Abbesse de Jouarre), who ran well at Lincoln when capable of much improvement, is in reserve for the Woodcote Stakes at Epsom. It will be remembered that Desmond finished second to Amurath for the Brocklesby Stakes, the third place being filled by Sister Angela. This pair have since run well, and Desmond is sure to be a great public fancy if he comes to the post at Epsom fit and well on the 24th.

I hear that Wantage is a doubtful starter for the Derby, as the Duke of Portland is of the opinion (in which most competent judges will agree) that this horse would not show to advantage over the Epsom course. The best plan would be to reserve Wantage (if beaten this afternoon) either for his Ascot engagements, which are very good ones (Prince of Wales's Stakes, Ascot Derby, and St. James's Palace Stakes), or to keep him for the £10,000 race at the Newmarket First July Meeting. The great object, however, will be to get a race out of him before the ground becomes hard, for his forelegs are direfully groggy.

I hear from Newmarket that Disraeli will not run for the Newmarket Stakes this afternoon, as he is to be reserved for the Derby, and it is intended to start him for the Grand Prix de Paris, for which race Ninus, Perthshire, Dunlop, and Bridegroom II. have also accepted, but I shall be vastly surprised if any English horse is successful at Longchamps on June 5. Disraeli was principally indebted for his victory at Newmarket in the Two Thousand to the undeniable fact that he was the best trained horse on the field. It will be as well not to attach too much importance to the form of this race, and my own decided opinion is that Dieudonné will defeat Disraeli at Epsom. On the two-year-old running the Duke of Devonshire's colt holds Disraeli safe enough, as in the Middle Park Plate they met at even weights, and Dieudonné won in a common canter. If ever there was a colt "made to order" for the Epsom gradients it is Dieudonné, and his action at the present time is perfect, while the story of his being a roarer is all moonshine and rubbish.

Cyllene has come on wonderfully during the last three weeks, and has been greatly improved by some rattling gallops. Mr. Rose's colt has cantered away from The Convict in a trial over the R.M., so I fully expect that he will finish either first or second for the Newmarket Stakes, and Wantage, who has done well since his race for the Two Thousand, ought to prove his most dangerous opponent. Dunlop has been prepared to run for the Payne Stakes to-morrow, and he ought to win that race if he is worth only a quarter of the sum which was paid for him at the sale of Mr. Rucker's horses. I fancy that he will be more distinguished for speed than for stamina, but there is likely to be a very bad field for to-morrow's race, in the certain absence of Dieudonné.

Perthshire is mentioned as a promising outsider for the Derby, but this colt will certainly prove to be deficient in stamina.

Several weeks ago I mentioned The Wyvern as likely to turn out a good Derby outsider. Mr. Leigh's colt is still backward, and he will scarcely be thoroughly fit at Epsom, in which case he must be noted as sure to win a race at Ascot if he runs at that meeting; but, in the event of his missing the Derby, I fancy The Wyvern will be kept for the Princess of Wales's Stakes. It is decidedly odd that Mr. Leigh's colt should have been withdrawn from the £2,000 stake at Sandown Park on June 28, for which race he would have possessed a great chance, with a maiden allowance of 7 lb., and all the best horses in the entry having extra weight to carry.

Prince Soltykoff's three-year-olds are evidently very moderate. Ninus is a non-stayer, and Leisure Hour (of whom great things were expected) was badly beaten last week in a trial with Sati.

Sandringham, as I have already stated, is to make his début at Ascot, either in the Coventry Stakes (which was the first race of Persimmon) or in the New Stakes, and the Prince of Wales has withdrawn the colt from the Woodcote Stakes at Epsom.

I see it is stated that Angus, the stable companion of Disraeli, who was well backed for the Derby during the winter, is again in work. Be this as it may, there is not the slightest prospect of his standing a preparation. He is another Ormathwaite.

There was a great deal of betting on the Chester Cup, and the result of the race was a real crash for backers. Up Guards, who had won some hurdle races, was never mentioned seriously in connection with the race, and his clever victory was a complete surprise. There was a very good field, including several animals which were justifiably regarded as certain to stay the course. After the excellent performance of The Rush (for whom I gave a plumper when he won the same handicap two years ago), it is clear that he ought to have won Merman's Cesarewitch. Laughing Girl will carry off a nice handicap before long, but she could not stay this distance. As to the quibbling objection to Up Guards, it is a very good thing that it has been most properly overruled. If the Jockey Club were more alert in really important matters, and less fond of trumpery technicalities, it would be a great advantage for the turf. What benefit does any one derive from the innumerable and utterly confusing rules about sales and partnerships?

The field for the Royal Plate at Kempton Park was very moderate. I have mentioned Eventail as being a smart filly, and she was recommended by me last week as being certain to win any race at Newmarket that she started for. Her form, however, is nothing remarkable, as she only scrambled home a short head in front of No Trumps, who was beaten the other day. Sibola will probably turn out to be the best of the lot as time goes on.

I predicted that either Berzak or Bridegroom would win the Jubilee Handicap, and Mr. Jersey's steed was beaten by only a head, having started at the generous price of 25 to 1. The race has excited very little interest this year. There was a tremendous run on Dinna Forget at the last, but Berzak went very badly indeed in the betting. Dinna Forget was astonishingly well in on his best form, and I remarked last week that he "will be backed by clever people."

There ought to be some capital racing at Gatwick on Friday and Saturday, as there are large entries for the weight-for-age stakes, and the principal handicap has obtained an excellent acceptance of thirty out of an original entry of fifty-eight. Twenty-five two-year-olds are left in for the Worth Stakes of £1,000, and Saint Vaast may be able to win this race for Lord Durham. Pheon ought to secure the Marlborough Stakes if he starts, and in the absence of Lord Ellesmere's colt, Bonnebosq might be successful. The Prince's Handicap of £1,000 looks well for The Reeve.

Next week there will be racing at Bath, Salisbury, and Harpenden in the south, and at York and Doncaster in the north. The best sport will be seen at the Yorkshire meetings, but there is not likely to be any race of the slightest general interest during the week. Bath and Salisbury have sunk into utter contempt, and Harpenden is only the ghost of the shadow of the meeting which it was twenty-five or thirty years ago.

Lord Hawke has taken a very strong line with regard to the way in which representative teams are to be selected to meet the Australians when they next visit us. He proposes that the players are to get £20 each for their matches, and the M.C.C. is to have the selection of the teams and of the grounds where the games are to be played. The Yorkshire captain plainly intimates that his men will not be available, except when the M.C.C. selects the team. Not a few cricketers will approve the attitude which Lord Hawke has taken up. It will be remembered that just prior to the last test match at the Oval, certain of the selected team demanded the very terms on which Lord Hawke now insists. The cricketers were met with such a howl of indignation by a section of the Press that all but Lohmann and Gunn climbed down. Cricket with these men is a business, and they carry it on in a thoroughly honourable way. They cannot be blind to the profits that the Australians, and in this case also the Oval authorities (the Surrey Club), were making over the game. All they asked was a fair share of profits. Now that Lord Hawke has spoken out I have no doubt the alteration will come about On the other point that has been raised it will be clear that there is no more primâ facie reason why the Lancashire and Surrey Committees should be entrusted with the selection of an International team than Yorkshire or Essex. Yorkshire, so far as grounds are concerned, can offer equal facilities with either of these counties, and yet her rulers have no say either in the selection of team or ground. There is undoubtedly a feeling, due perhaps to the keenness of the struggle for the County Championship, that when counties select a team there is favouritism. On what basis this feeling is formed I do not wish to inquire. The fact that such friction exists renders any reasonable proposition that will cause it to cease desirable. There is clearly only one way in which this can be done. The M.C.C. is not only an independent body, but it is a representative body as well. It will have under its auspices the next team of Australian cricketers, and if the visitors show anything like the form in this country which they have recently displayed against Stoddart's team, they will have to be met with our full cricketing strength. Lord Hawke's suggestion is not only reasonable, but it is likely to be very beneficial to English cricket. It will secure the supremacy of the M.C.C., and quiet all county heart-burnings and jealousies.

At both Universities the Seniors'and Freshmen's matches have been played to such an extent as the weather would permit. At Oxford, the only feature of the Seniors' match was that Montmorency took four wickets for three runs. The Freshmen's match was more interesting, but the bowling on both sides proved rather weak. Follett (Lancing) was useful with bat and ball, and Mitchell (Eton), Joyce (Bedford), and Roberts did well for Champain's side, while Collins (Marlborough), Hollins (Eton), and Crawford (Merchant Taylors) batted in good style for Cunliffe's team. Collins is sure of another trial. At Cambridge the Freshmen showed some promise in bowling. Norman (Oakham), Penn (Eton), and Clarke (Canterbury) bowled consistently and took several wickets. Of the batsmen, Cole has a pretty style, and Robertson (Blackheath) rattled up a lot of runs in fine form, but the must successful were Prest (Marlborough), and Kirgwin (St. Paul's). In the Seniors' match Taylor and Worthington put on good scores, and Norman was useful. The bowling was better than had been expected. Hawkins was the most successful bowler, while Barker and Peers both had decent averages. Everybody was delighted to see W. G. Grace in quite his old form at Lord's. Sewell also put on runs, and he will be useful to Gloucestershire when he has got used again to fielding. Hearne and Trott were far too good for the Sussex batsmen, who look like doing badly without Ranji.

The annual meeting of the M.C.C. has disclosed the fact that the club is going in for extensive building operations. The tennis-court is to be shifted, stands are to be erected, and the ground is to be widened, so it really seems as though in a few years time the average British public will have an opportunity of seeing something of the University match. The M.C.C. must bear in mind that as it is recognised as supreme by the cricketing public, that public expects a little more consideration than has hitherto been shown at the University match.

A cycling league is to be formed, at a small subscription, to protect and further the interest of cyclists. Formed on a business basis and carried on on business lines, such an organisation should be invaluable. The Cyclist Tourist Club ought to carry out these functions. But it is worked on such absurdly rotten lines and through its journal talks such a lot of claptrap nonsense that one wonders people are such fools as to join it. It makes a lot of fuss about the privileges it has secured in foreign countries. But I cannot understand why foreign nations are so unbusiness-like as to grant privileges to such a club. Their own customs might just as well take the benefit of a tax instead of driving the Englishman to join such a silly institution. At present the Englishman pays his import due to the C.T.C. instead of to the country in which he intends to ride.

The meeting of the Catford Cycling Club was rather disappointing. There was the usual crawl, and the mile race between Chinn and Osborne was a perfect farce. The time was 4 min. 5 secs., and until three hundred yards from home the men dawdled along to the accompaniment by the spectators of "we won't go home till morning." This sort of thing kills the sport. Then the pacing was so bad that Cordang at the end of three miles gave up his attempt on the ten miles record. His pacers simply left him. In the ten miles international race there was a fine race with twenty entries. There were twenty riders and Gascoyne won by barely a length from Osborne. In the second heat of the mile handicap there was a lot of crawling, but it produced a pretty finish, as Moore, who was last, coming down with a rush from the top of the bank, caught the others napping and won easily.

There was a good meeting at the Essex Beagles' sports. The chief event was the three miles invitation race. A dozen turned out, and nine of them were championship holders, either on the path or across country. The result was a popular surprise, for Dr. Munro, who is now well over thirty, came right away in the tenth lap and was never caught, winning by fifteen yards after leading for the last half mile. Robinson, the ten miles champion, was second, and Bennett, the four miles champion, third. It was a splendid piece of running on the part of the winner. His judgment was excellent and his performance shows to what age a man who takes care of himself can go on running. The Doctor simply goes in for running to keep himself fit. It must be ten years ago since he ran as second string for Oxford in the three miles. No runner has ever had a greater reception than he received from the crowd. It is to be hoped that he will again win the four miles championship at Stamford Hill. At Merchant Taylors' School, Cornish, who did so well at the public school championship, cut the school quarter record. He did the distance in fifty-four seconds, a fine performance on an asphalte course with five corners, and old Nat Perry timing. Tincler and Bacon, the ex-amateur miler, ran a fine race over a mile course. The former held his own in the final burst, and won easily.

In consequence of the suggestions made by Oxford as to the alterations in the University sports programme with regard to the inclusion of the half mile and the exclusion of the hammer and weight, an interesting correspondence has arisen in the Field. Mr. G. S. Robertson, who won the hammer thrice for Oxford a few years ago, urges its retention. He is not only a classical divinity and legal scholar of no mean order, but he is a humourist as well. He says that, like the House of Lords, these events want not abolishing but reforming. The A.A.A. rules should be followed. The large circle enables the hammer to throw the man instead of the man throwing the hammer. He himself forcibly introduced an iron handle instead of the mop or swab handle. He considers this innovation renders the hammer less dangerous. But the gem of his argument is that the hammer is a perfect panacea for the muscles of the stomach. "In fact, you know nothing about the capabilities of your stomach till you have tried throwing the hammer." Cambridge men may be happy. The hammer is saved. Dyspeptic, livery, middle-aged men will throw away all physic and hurl the hammer in the London parks and squares. The worn-out gourmand, in view of new stomachic sensations, will go in for the sport. And if the stomach does develop, well it will not be good living but the hammer that is to blame. The hammer does not tend to a delicate waist. It is really too bad of Mr. Robertson to have kept the secret of his jovial health and spirit, and the mystery of all these stomachic joys to himself for so long. But seriously a good many athletes would like to see such a standard race as the half-mile introduced into the University programme.

The tennis match between Latham and Pettitt, the American, will no doubt be shortly arranged. The stake will be £1,000. At present the court on which the match is to be played has not been settled. Of course Latham has had to get back into form after devoting his attention to racquets. Judging by his play in a match with Sir E. Grey, who has just got back his title as amateur champion by defeating Mr. Gribble, it looks as though Latham will soon be in his best form. He gave the amateur half thirty and won by three sets to love. Sir E. Grey was at first nervous, but he pulled himself together in the second set, although he was meeting a man who plays the game in his own way to perfection. By the way, a mistake was made in giving the winners of the doubles in covered lawn tennis at Paris. The brothers Vacherots were the successful pair.

Books on all kinds of sports now flow from the press in an incessant stream, which bears unmistakeable testimony to the enormous growth of popular interest in all sporting subjects. It is futile to attempt to keep abreast of this literary current, and I make no pretence at doing so; but among recent publications I have come across a few which may be appropriately brought to the notice of my readers in this column. First of all I would bespeak a hearty welcome for an old and valued friend in a new and handsome garb, "The Chase, the Road, and the Turf" (1) by the inimitable "Nimrod," which forms the latest addition to the admirable series of "The Sportsman's Library." "Nimrod's" vivid and picturesque papers on hunting, coaching, and racing have become classics of sporting literature, and though more than sixty years have passed since he wrote, much that he had to say, at least on the first and the last of the three topics, is as true to-day as it was then. Although it is not, of course, to be compared with "Nimrod's" famous work, the volume of "Hunting Reminiscences" (2), by Mr. Alfred E. Pease, M.P., is very readable, and the illustrations include two characteristically humorous sketches by the late Sir Frank Lockwood. Of "The Salmon" (3) it is only necessary to say that it contains everything that the average angler can desire to know about this king of fishes, and that Mr. Gathorne Hardy and his collaborators worthily sustain the high reputation the "Fur, Feather, and Fin" series has acquired under the editorship of Mr. Alfred Watson. Golfers cannot, of course, be overlooked in any reference to the sporting books of the moment; and in "The Golfing Pilgrim" (4) there is not only useful information for them, but plenty of good stories and entertaining matter for the general reader as well. Finally, I may call attention to a little volume on "Cricket" (5), which has opportunely made its appearance at the opening of the season. Mr. R. H. Lyttelton always writes authoritatively and interestingly on the game, and his remarks upon the questions of amateurism and professionalism are especially worthy of consideration at the present juncture.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—The dominating features in the stock markets are just now the temporary stringency caused by the transfer of the huge sum representing the final payment of the Chinese indemnity to Japan, and the course of the war now in progress between the United States and Spain. The former has been an unfavourable point, and has tended to cause dulness during the last few days on a revival of the fears of dearer money; and as at the same time doubts arose with respect to the position of Admiral Dewey at Manila, there has again been a disposition to refrain from entering into any further commitments.

Stock Exchange Prospects—Politics and Finance.

The position at Manila is, however, cleared up now by the despatches received from Admiral Dewey. His victory appears to have been complete, and although he does not seem to have taken possession of the City of Manila, owing to lack of troops, he has the Bay at his mercy, and can await reinforcements. As considerable anxiety had prevailed, owing to the inordinate delay in the arrival of the despatches, American Rails had in the meantime been subjected to periodical "Bear" raids; but yesterday a strong upward movement occurred in Wall-street, which put quotations higher than they have been since the outbreak of the war, and it is probable that the strength of the Yankee Market will favourably affect the rest of the departments of the Stock Exchange. Yankee Rails just now form the key to the situation. Further American victories would be interpreted as favouring a speedy termination of the war, just as Spanish successes would be viewed as prolonging it. Gold shipments to the United States, moreover, would also be affected by the course of the conflict, so that politics have an important bearing upon the financial position, while both react upon the Stock Exchange. As regards the monetary outlook, this has been further improved by the continued influx of gold into the Bank of England, but during the last few days the fact that a large sum has been transferred to Japan has caused stringency, and a renewal of the predictions of dear money. Barring accidents, I do not look for any such thing, and unless the war takes a totally different turn, I anticipate a gradual easing off of rates. This is the only disturbing factor in the Stock Markets, and should it be removed, we may look for a general rally and more active business. Home Railway stocks so far have kept up pretty well, although the hardening of rates caused fractional declines towards the last. There have not, however, been wanting upward movements such as in Great Centrals, Metropolitans, and Districts. Canadian Rails have moved in sympathy with American Rails, a preference being shown for Canadian Pacifics, which have the best traffics. Spanish have displayed great weakness, but whenever they go below 30 support seems to be forthcoming. Foreigners generally have been depressed, and amongst South Americans a renewed fall has taken place in Brazilians, while most others, including Argentines, have been a steady market. The Kaffir Circus has been strong throughout, the recent advance being fully maintained, and as there is every reason to anticipate further concessions to the mining industry in the Transvaal, the outlook is hopeful. The West Australian department still shows weakness, owing to the collapse in the West Australia Market Trust group, but in view of the satisfactory result of Thursday's meeting, this trouble will probably be adjusted in the near future, when the shares in the numerous sound properties in this section will doubtless improve. The Industrial Market has displayed considerable fluctuations, and it has shown a great deal of rallying power apart from the Cycle section, which has been in a state of semi-collapse. The prospectuses of a number of new industrial undertakings are about to be issued, and from all I can learn they will have to be scanned with exceptional care.

Money and Gilt-edged Investments.

The golden current to the Bank of England is still flowing, and in addition to the sums received during the last few days, I understand that another half a million will go into the Bank from Germany. But a fall in the New York Exchange has caused a renewed inquiry for gold in the open market for shipment to the United States, and much will depend upon the extent of this demand. As the New York Exchange is again hardening, the demand for America may slacken, but in view of the large shipments of grain, and the high price which has to be paid for them by Europe, there is always the contingency of large gold shipments for the same destination. Fortunately, the Bank of England has, by the important influx of gold, been placed into a very strong position, and although the transfer of something like thirteen millions of gold from China to Japan has caused much stringency, I expect rates to ease off again shortly. First of all Japan has to make very considerable payments in this country for ships, war material, &c. It has also taken two millions of the Chinese loan, and, finally, a rate of from 3 to 3½ per cent. is tempting enough to induce that country to loan the money in the market, instead of allowing it to remain idle at the Bank of England. I am not, therefore, inclined to adopt the view of the pessimists who are predicting dear money, and rather hold the contrary opinion, which is also expressed by my youthful contemporary the Sunday Special, which has been particularly correct in its forecasts of the gold movements. The influx of gold to the Bank of England has had the effect of steadying high-class investment stocks, and further improvements are marked in Colonial Government bonds and British Corporation stocks. Personally, I cannot help thinking that these are high enough at present, although when the war is over and money rates decline, investors may be tempted to buy even at the present level. But I do not suppose that Home Railway prior charges

(1) The Sportsman's Library. Edited by Sir Herbert Maxwell, M.P. "The Chase, the Road, and the Turf." By Nimrod. With Illustrations. (London: Edward Arnold. Price 15s.)

(2) "Hunting Reminiscences." By Alfred E. Pease, M.P. (London: W. Thacker & Co.)

(3) "Fur, Feather, and Fin" Series. Edited by Alfred E. T. Watson. "The Salmon." By the Hon. A. E. Gathorne Hardy. With chapters on the Law of Salmon Fishing, by C. D. Pennant; and on Cookery, by A. I. Shand. (London: Longmans & Co. Price 5s.)

(4) "The Golfing Pilgrim on Many Links." By Horace G. Hutchinson (London: Methuen & Co. Price 6s.)

(5) "Cricket." By the Hon. R. H. Lyttelton. (London: Duckworth & Co. Price 1s. 6d.)

will ever attain their former giddy height again. The cheque for the Chinese indemnity, passed on Saturday at the Bank of England, is said to be the largest ever drawn, the exact amount being £11,008,857, some two millions sterling more being settled in account. It is a big amount for Japan to receive, but from all accounts a large portion of it is already earmarked. The Chinese loans have been a steady market, and the new loan has now an official quotation, and stands at 88½, this being still 1½ discount. The Japanese loan is firm at 103½, but Consols have given way to 111 1/16 for the account, after touching 110¾ and 111⅜. The hardening of the Money Market is, of course, the chief reason for this decline, although the issue of the new Greek loan may also have contributed to it. This loan being guaranteed by England, France, and Russia, is, of course, a gilt-edged security, but the price fixed of 100½ for a 2½ per cent. stock is quite high enough, and, while it will probably be absorbed, there is not likely to be a rush for it, the premium so far being quite nominal at ½.

HOME RAILS—THE GREAT CENTRAL COMING TO LONDON.

With moderate fluctuations Home Railway stocks have been by no means active during the week, and on the hardening of rates in the Money Market quotations have eased off fractionally. The prominent exception was furnished by the Great Central and the stocks of the underground lines. The extension to London of the Great Central will be open for goods traffic by July 1, and while it is, of course, impossible to predict how much the new line will bring to the Company, great hopes are entertained in inside circles of a very satisfactory result. Purchases have thereupon been resumed, especially of the 1894 Ordinary up to 40¾, and of the Preferred Ordinary up to 65. A rise in Metropolitan to 131½ is partly due to the anticipation of a considerable accession of traffic from the Great Central; but hopes of large traffics from the Earl's Court Exhibition, which has just been opened, have helped the improvement, and have also been instrumental in putting up Districts to 28⅛. I maintain the view that the latter are an excellent lock-up, in view of the important extensions which are in progress. Present traffics, moreover, show satisfactory increases. For the seventeen weeks of the present year the District has an increase of £4,591, which is proportionally better than the gain of £5,780 of the Metropolitan, which carries double the traffic. Traffics generally for the week ending May 1 for all the lines were £46,313 better than last year, bringing up the total increase for the seventeen weeks to £552,000. The stocks of the Heavy division have been generally steady, and show practically no change for the week, while Brighton "A" are slightly below the best at 176¾, and Dover "A" at 109¾ are well supported. Great Eastern are slightly firmer on satisfactory traffics, but this stock was in large supply at the last settlement, and may be so again this week. In most other stocks, however, renewed scarcity will doubtless be shown again at the settlement, and any favourable developments in the Money Market and in the war outlook would doubtless cause fresh buying. The Scotch stocks at one time improved, but have since dropped back to the prices of a week ago, although business prospects in the North are most encouraging.

THE YANKEE MARKET—ANOTHER ADVANCE ON MANILA DESPATCHES.

The Yankee market is entirely swayed by the course of the war with Spain, and our American cousins have become altogether reassured by the news of the victory at Manila. At one time the great delay in the arrival of Admiral Dewey's despatches gave rise to ugly rumours, which were, however, chiefly propagated in Europe, and did not find any credence in New York. Still they had the effect of stopping any further rise in American Rails, and London operators several times took liberties with the market, and ventured upon sales considerably below Wall-street parity. These stocks were promptly absorbed by New York, and when yesterday news came to hand confirming the United States victory, they were put up hand over fist. Unless some American reverse should be experienced in the Atlantic, the improvement will doubtless make further progress, although as shown by the following comparative table it is already considerable :—

—	Price, Jan. 3, 1898.	Highest in 1898.	Lowest in 1898.	April 29, 1898.	May 9, 1898.
Atchison	13⅛	14 5/16	10⅜	11	12½
Do. Five per Cent. Pref.	31⅝	33¾	23⅝	25⅞	30½
Canadian Pacifics	84⅜	92⅞	74	84⅛	86
Central Pacific	11⅞	15⅞	11	11½	12⅝
Denver	11⅞	14¾	10	11	12⅛
Do. Pref.	47¼	54⅜	41⅛	43¼	48¼
Erie	15	16⅝	11¼	12¼	13¼
Do. First Pref.	39½	44⅞	29½	33⅜	35⅞
Grand Trunk 1st Pref.	57⅛	69⅞	57⅛	66⅛	68⅛
Do. Guaranteed	70	78¾	70	73¾	73¾
Lake Shore	176	198⅞	177¾	190	188
Louisville	58½	62½	45¼	49	55¼
Milwaukee	97½	99¾	85½	90	98
Missouri, Kansas, and Texas	13⅛	14½	9 15/16	10⅜	11⅝
Norfolk Adjust. Pref.	48¾	57	42⅞	46⅜	51½
North. Pacific Pref., New	61⅛	70⅞	59	64	68½
New York Central	110¼	122¾	108½	113	118½
Ontario	16⅜	19 1/16	13⅜	14⅛	15⅝
Reading	11½	12⅛	7 13/16	8½	9¾
Southern Ordinary	9½	10½	7	7⅞	8¾
Do. Pref.	32¼	34½	24 9/16	26¼	29⅝
Union Pacific	26⅝	24	18½	19⅞	24
Wabash Pref.	18½	20 3/16	14¾	16	19¾

Milwaukee have moved most sharply, for the very good reason that this stock is very well held on the other side, having been mopped up by the strong Standard Oil group. There is, moreover, a prospect of the road paying a further dividend of 3 per cent., in addition to the 2½ per cent, already distributed, which would make 5½ per cent. for the year, and even that payment would leave a large surplus. It may also be anticipated pretty confidently that a good dividend will be paid, as all the insiders are "Bulls." Next to the Milwaukee the Louisville and Nashville deserves attention. The freight earnings of that road have gone up very considerably, and those for the second week of April were the largest in the history of the Company. Passenger earnings have hitherto been rather sparse, but the road is one of those which will benefit most by the carriage of troops to the seaboard, and the resumption of dividends should not be far off now, especially as there are indications of the war drawing to a speedy end. Union Pacific Prefs. have been a very strong market on a statement that a first dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum will be paid in July. Should this prove to be the case the common stock ought also to experience an important advance, and both are amongst the best purchases in this department. Atchison Prefs. are also fairly promising, but I do not think that they will receive a dividend just yet; while on the other hand, the Adjustment bonds are certain of their full dividend. The Northern Pacific is doing exceedingly well, as shown by the net earnings of $383,000 in March, following upon similar previous monthly increases. The full 4 per cent. Preference dividend is of course assured, but whether the Common stock will get anything out of the considerable surplus earnings is doubtful. The Norfolk and Western is doing well, and the Prefs. are worth buying. With reference to the Baltimore and Ohio it is stated that the reorganisation is making progress, but a considerable assessment is being talked of. If this, however, should be at the rate of $20 on the Ordinary stock, with an equivalent in Preferred stock, it may eventually work out very satisfactorily, as is now the case with the Union Pacific. From the point of view of a

LONDON AND PARIS EXCHANGE, LTD., 21, Throgmorton-street, London, E.C. This Corporation is prepared to make Advances on Mining Shares, at 6 per cent. per annum, subject to a deposit of 20 per cent. Clients by this system save the heavy contangoes usually charged.

"Bull," there is nothing so contagious as the news of great victories, and if our American cousins should beat the Spanish squadron in the West Indies, Wall-street may be expected to put up stocks sky high. If that should happen, my readers who have, I trust, acquired stock considerably below the present level, will have an excellent opportunity of clearing profits, which should not be neglected, as, after all, a fresh opportunity for making purchases may present itself. The stocks of the Canadian roads have moved in sympathy with the Yankee market, but the highest prices have not so far been maintained. As a matter of choice, I still consider Canadian Pacific the best purchase, as showing the largest traffics, the last weekly return being $106,000 above that of 1897, which in turn showed a considerable increase over the corresponding week of 1896. This proves that the rate war has had no effect upon the takes, and, considering the large amount available for distribution, a considerable increase in the dividend is looked for. In fact, no less than 5 per cent. is expected in future, so that the present quotation of 86, considering the progressiveness of the road, is still moderate. The last weekly traffic increase of £4,629 was a disappointment to the market, and ever since these stocks have moved slowly, the Guaranteed being quoted 73¾, the First Prefs. 68⅛. A reader of TRUTH in Toronto writes to inform me that a Railway Company, bearing the pretentious name of The Cobourg Northumberland and Pacific Railway Company, to which municipal bonuses and a subsidy from the Dominion Government have been granted upon the fulfilment by the Company of certain conditions, are now striving to sell their bonds in England, although no part of their railway has been built, and my correspondent desires to warn the public through TRUTH against buying the said bonds without first ascertaining the probability of the principal and interest thereon ever being paid. Personally, I have not yet heard of any touting letters with regard to this Company having been sent out.

INSURANCE OF WAR RISKS.

I suppose that the underwriters at Lloyds are making a good thing out of the insurance of war risks, although they must now and then be badly caught, and more especially must they have suffered in the case of certain members of the Stock Exchange insuring against the outbreak of war between the United States and Spain, a transaction which was quite fashionable before the outbreak of hostilities, the premiums being, of course, very high. Will it be believed, however, that members of the Stock Exchange are nervous enough to pay substantial premiums to insure against the possibility of war between France and England, or between France and the United States? This is, however, not worse than the cases of the bombardment insurance which are reported from New York. The President of an American insurance office expresses himself as follows on this subject:—

> I am informed that millions upon millions of bombardment insurance have been placed with English companies. The charters of companies organised under the laws of the State of New York prohibit their accepting bombardment insurance. Commissioner of Insurance Payn has served notice upon New York State companies, cautioning them against taking this class of business. I believe this to be a wise move. I do not consider bombardment insurance of any value, as Spain would not in any case destroy New York. She would instead exact tribute, and this the foreign companies do not provide against.

This is, of course, mail news, and I suppose that since the victory at Manila bombardment insurance is at a discount. It seems, however, to be a fact that a good deal of business has been transacted by owners of house property in New York, at rates ranging from 2 to 3 per cent., and that such policies also covered loss against enforced tribute.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS—SPANISH BELOW 30—BREAD RIOTS IN ITALY.

The Paris Bourse is not to be comforted, and no wonder, when it is considered how large the holdings of French investors are in Spanish Government and railway securities. The victory at Manila suggests further disasters in view of the unpreparedness of Spain, as practically admitted by Señor Moret in the Cortes. Lord Salisbury's speech concerning moribund nations, moreover, has given a shock to France, especially as Spain fitted the cap. The question of ways and means is a serious one in Spain, and the time cannot be far distant when she comes to the end of her tether, while any further defeats may at any time precipitate a revolution in Madrid. No wonder, therefore, that Spanish Fours at one time dropped to below 30, being the lowest quotation touched during recent years. This, of course, points to fears of partial or complete default, and that must necessarily depend upon the course of the conflict. The payment of the coupon in pesetas is, however, the best that could be expected in any case. The recovery to 32 is apparently due to the fact that Spain has, after all, succeeded in obtaining a further advance in Paris. Rio Tinto have again suffered from fears of a taxation of copper. Turks have improved on the prospect of the payment of the indemnity, now that the Greek Loan has been launched, but this amount will not last long in view of the rotten state of the finances of the Porte. I suppose that Lord Salisbury comprised in the category of dying nations also Turkey and China. Italians have been flat on the bread riots, and these certainly are disquieting, and show the amount of poverty which exists in Italy. The rise in grain is hitting European countries hard, especially the poor ones, amongst which Italy as well as Spain must be reckoned. On the other hand, the producing countries are reaping a golden harvest. A fresh important rise has taken place in wheat on the abolition of duties in France and Italy, and people are wondering whether Mr. Joseph Leiter, of wheat-corner fame, has got much of his huge accumulations left, the quotation having jumped in Chicago to 1·70. When the rise first came dollar wheat was considered something enormous, and now it is more than a dollar and a half. Besides the United States, Argentina and Uruguay will benefit greatly by the advance in wheat, and India will, too, now reap considerable advantage from her good wheat crop. As regards Argentina, shipments of wheat are now being hurried forward, and a significant circumstance was the fall of about seven points to 156¼, which took place in the Buenos Ayres gold premium during the last few days. Argentine Government bonds were at one time somewhat depressed by renewed rumours of coming trouble with Chili. The Chilian Press appears to have adopted a very uncompromising tone with regard to the frontier question, but it is to be hoped that the martial ardour of the Chilians will be curbed. For the week the Argentine 1886 and Funding Loans show little change at 88½ and 86 respectively. After a further improvement Argentine Railway stocks have eased off. Buenos Ayres Great Southern are lower at 138, while Buenos Ayres and Rosario are steady at 71, Central Argentine at 78. The quotation of Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Income Debenture stock is varying with the traffics. Unfortunately, the last traffic for the week ended May 1 showed again a decrease of $12,900, and the quotation has fallen to 46½. Brazilians have had another fit of nervousness, and the 1889 Loan fell at one time 3½ to 43, Western of Minas dropping 3 to 44½, from which there has since been a smart rebound. It is now being argued that the President and Vice-President Elect of Brazil cannot do much good in London, as they cannot deal with the present position, and could not act for the government at present actually in power. Mexican Sixes have been firm, the Old Loan being quoted 96. Uruguay bonds were at one time very strong, and are now but little lower at 44¾ for the Old Loan, and 55 for the New Loan. A steady tone prevails for Peruvian Corporation stocks. Nitrate Rails have gone ahead to 5¾ on favourable dividend rumours, reacting to 5½.

THE KAFFIR CIRCUS—A CONFIDENT TONE—OOM PAUL GETTING AMIABLE.

At last there seems to be a prospect of a more permanent improvement in the South African Market, and although there are still many who scoff at the possibility of such a change, and consider the present revival merely a flash in the pan, there are undoubtedly this time circumstances which are making for a more lasting recovery. The influence is, of course, chiefly the improved political outlook in the Transvaal. Amongst the straws which show the way the wind blows is the studiously moderate tenour of Oom Paul's speech at the opening of the Volksraad. The fact is that President Kruger has at last come to the conclusion that his best policy is to be amiable. The outspoken articles in the German Press have doubtless made a considerable impression upon him, and his attempts to obtain a loan in Germany and France have failed, as he was everywhere met with the argument that no loan could be granted unless concessions were made to the mining industry, and as the Transvaal must have money, the issue cannot be doubted. I do not go so far as to state, as some of my confrères have done, that a loan is already arranged with this proviso with Messrs. Rothschild and the Deutsche Bank, but I do not think that it is far off. From all I can gather, the first concession of 10s. per case on dynamite is to be improved upon, and the total reduction will amount to from 20s. to 25s. per case. Again, considerable reductions in railway rates are promised, and these can be fixed up as soon as a basis can be found staving off the expropriation of the Netherlands Railway. It is urged by men well acquainted with the position that the purchase of the Netherlands Railway by the Transvaal would not be at all advisable, and that Boer management would be distinctly worse than Hollander management. Provided that suitable concessions are made, the outlook for the mining industry in the Transvaal is distinctly encouraging, and although the increasing output of the mines has not created any impression on the market, this is, after all, a factor to be reckoned with. At present it is believed that President Kruger will make further reference to the concessions on his being sworn in as President next Thursday. The advance in Rand Mines has been fully maintained, and the quotation has risen to 30⅜. East Rands and Consolidated Goldfields have gone further ahead, and Simmer and Jack have been buoyant on the report, extracts of which I gave last week. Randfonteins have also been strong at times, and it looks almost as if Mr. J. B. Robinson were about to support his stocks again. The changes in the leading shares will be gathered from the following comparative table:—

—	Price a Year Ago	Highest Price in 1897.	Price April 22.	Present Price.
	£	£	£	£
Angelo	3¼	5 11/16	4⅝	5 5/16
Bonanza	3 1/16	4 9/16	3 5/16	4 3/16
Buffelsdoorn	1	2	⅜	⅜
Barnato Consols	1¼	2⅝	1⅝	1 15/16
City and Suburban (£4)	3 9/16	6 5/16	5½	5 13/16
Cons. Deep Level	3⅛	6	3½	3⅜
Cons. Goldfields Det.	6½	9 11/16	3 9/16	4 7/16
Crown Deep	9½	14¾	10½	11⅛
Crown Reef	10⅝	12¾	12	12⅝
Durban-Roodepoort	5½	7½	5¾	6⅜
East Rand	2¾	5 9/16	3⅝	4 13/16
Ferreira	16½	24¼	22	24⅜
Geldenhuis Deep	3¼	7 1/16	6⅝	7 1/8
Do. Estate	2½	4⅞	5	5½
Glencairn	1¾	2 15/16	1 13/16	1⅞
Goldfields Deep	5¼	10⅜	7⅜	8⅝
Henry Nourse	5 9/16	9¾	8½	9
Henry Nourse Deep	...	...	...	5
Heriot	7 1/16	8⅞	7⅜	7⅝
Joh. Con. Invest.	1⅝	2⅝	1 7/16	1½
Joh. Pioneer	10⅓	11¼	9⅓	10
Jubilee	6	8¼	7⅝	9⅜
Jumper's	3	6	4⅝	5⅜
Knight's	2 13/16	5 13/16	2¾	3 5/16
Langlaagte Estate	3¾	4¾	3	3⅛
May Consolidated	1 11/16	2⅝	2 9/16	2 7/16
Meyer and Charlton	4⅜	6⅛	4	4
Modderfontein (£4)	1⅞	5 1/16	3⅜	3⅞
Nigel	1 9/16	3 1/16	1 7/16	1⅝
Primrose (New)	3⅛	4⅞	3⅜	3¾
Princess Estate	2⅛	2 13/16	1 11/16	2
Rand Mines	18	34 7/16	25	30⅜
Robinson (£5)	7¼	8¾	7⅜	8
Roodepoort United	3	5⅛	3⅝	3 13/16
Simmer and Jack (£5)	2¾	5	2 11/16	3 7/16
Treasury	1½	3¾	3 1/16	3¼
Village Main Reef	3½	6⅝	5¼	5⅞
Wemmer	6¼	6⅞	8⅞	9½
Wolhuter	3⅞	6 1/16	5⅝	5 13/16

It will be seen that the advance has been considerable, and that the Deep Levels have also generally braced up. Chartered shares have been firm at 2 9/16, on the announcement that the new issue had been over-subscribed. With reference to the Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Corporation, some interest has been aroused by the announcement of the resignation of Sir W. A. Young and Sir Charles Jessel from the Board. This step appears to have been taken owing to a clause in the Articles of Association to which these gentlemen objected, and according to which the Directors can only hold their position subject to the approval of Messrs. Barnato Bros. It is not quite clear why these two gentlemen have only discovered this fact now, but from all I can gather the change will in no way affect the progress of the Company, and when two of the leading Directors, Messrs. John Stroyan and Isaac Lewis, who are now on their way back here, have arrived, some announcement will be made. It must not, however, be understood that Messrs. Barnato Bros. insist upon the retention of this clause, but on the contrary I am informed that they will withdraw the same. From the property of the Ferreira Deep, which is partly owned by the Barnato Consols, news is to hand of a rich strike. The cablegram states that the south reef has been cut in No. 1 shaft at a depth of 1,240 ft. The reef, it is stated, is 4 ft. wide, and though no assays have yet been taken, it promises to give a high yield. The Ferreira Deep is owned by the Rand Mines, Limited, and the Barnato Consols. The foundations for the mill are now nearly complete, and the erection of the battery will then be taken in hand, so that somewhere in the middle of next year crushing should commence. I may mention that Mr. Joel at the Barnato Consols meeting on September 28, 1897, expressed the view that the reef would be struck in April or May at about the depth at which it has really been cut. At this meeting full particulars were also given, from which I gather that the interest which this Company held in the Schweitzer's Township Block, or the Ferreira Deep Level, has been included in the Rand Exploring Syndicate, Limited. The property is a compact block of 142 claims, situate on the immediate dip of the Ferreira, Wemmer, and Worcester Gold Mining Companies. The value of the reefs being worked upon these properties has been demonstrated in the most satisfactory manner by the profits which have been earned by their operations. The position of the reef upon the property may be taken as very definitely settled, as it is understood that in the present workings on the incline on the Ferreira property the reef has been opened up to within 150 feet of the northern boundary of the claims. It may be added that it has been computed that the total width of the reefs is not less than six feet. In the Ferreira mine the average dip is 43 degrees, and on this basis there are at the very least 35,000 tons of ore per claim, and, taking a very conservative figure, the value of the ore per ton is, according to the actual result, 80s., and allowing a very liberal figure for working costs, a profit of from 45s. to 50s. per ton should be realisable. This would give, on a basis of 142 claims, the whole of which may be considered as reef-bearing, a profit of from £78,000 to £88,000 per claim, or a total of from £11,000,000 to £12,000,000. These figures are, no doubt, large, but the profits per claim and per ton of such outcrop mines as the Ferreira are known, and the figures quoted are based upon the returns actually given by the very mine (the Ferreira), of which the Rand Exploring Syndicate's claims are the immediate deep level. New Jagersfontein are quoted 7⅝, New Bultfontein 1 1/16. The May Consolidated has worked into a better financial position, having at the end of March paid off its liability of £32,000 to the National Bank, while retaining a balance of £7,000 in its coffers. The question of dividends will now arise, and I suppose that for the quarter ending June 30 these will commence at the rate of, say, 10 per cent. The Deep Level shares have been in good request on various favourable developments, amongst which the striking of the reef in the Roodepoort Central Deep is one. The first crushing of the Robinson Deep is shortly to be announced, but although there are rumours that it is going to prove exceptionally good, it would be strange if this were to prove the case, as first crushings generally are small. Other Deep Level shares are quoted as follows:—Crown Deep 11⅛, Durban Roodepoort Deep 3⅜, Geldenhuis Deep 7⅛, Goldfields Deep 8 11/16, Knight's Deep 2, Nourse Deep 5, Robinson Deep 9¾, Roodepoort Central Deep 1⅜, Rose Deep 6⅜, Nigel Deep 1½. The Mozambique Company has received the following cable from the Governor of the territory in Beira:—"Great animation Macequece; new reefs discovered. Bridges, roads, and works progressing satisfactorily; also the work of the mining department. Large number of claims being marked out." De Beers have shown a firm front at 27 1/16, the weakness of the Paris Bourse apparently not affecting these shares any longer. A sensation has been caused by the report that the diamond discoveries at Hope Town have proved valueless, no proper mine existing there. It appears that no blue ground has been struck, and the view is generally entertained that no regular output can be expected.

Golden West Australia—Still Nervous, but a Brighter Outlook.

After a severe spasm, such as has occurred in the West Australian department, there remains a good deal of weakness in certain quarters, and until that has been eliminated there must prevail some nervousness, with occasional set-backs. This is precisely what occurred during the past week, although but few of the failures on the Stock Exchange have taken place through this trouble, and several of the firms largely interested in the Market Trust difficulty have been able to arrange their accounts. The result of the Market Trust meeting on Thursday was the appointment of a committee of inspection, and a virtual adoption of Mr. Horatio Bottomley's proposal to reconstruct the Trust with an assessment of 3s. or 4s. per share. This result was distinctly a triumph of Mr. Bottomley's eloquence, and a curious feature was that the numerous members of the Stock Exchange who were present all supported him, while many of those who came to curse remained to bless. Some stock of the various companies of this group has apparently been thrown on the market from some of the defaulting accounts. When this has been absorbed, there should be a recovery, provided that the proposed arrangement be carried out. In the meantime, there is no earthly reason why the various high-class shares in this section should suffer. Not only is the growth in the output of the West Australian goldfields, as stated last week, most encouraging, but the news from the mines themselves is very satisfactory, and the best proof of all is that crushings continue to arrive in large numbers, and of a very satisfactory character. The following is a list for the past week:—

—	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Ounces of Gold	Assay of Tailings per Ton
Lady Shenton	600	1,760¾	—
Great Boulder Main Reef (tailings)	750	£1,700	—
Mount Yagahong	800	780	—
Champion Extended and Home Rule	1,050	821	6 dwt.
Sons of Gwalia	960	1,328	—
North Boulder	342	324	—
Hannan's Oroya	990	498	—
Burbank's Birthday Gift	450	635	—
,, ,, (Concentrates)	50	142	—
Australia United	265	538	—
Menzies Consolidated	434	473	—
Britannia	580	583	1 oz.
Golden Valley of W. A.	230	108	6 dwt.
Premier	550	221	—
Mount Malcolm Prop.	590	368	5 dwt.
Wealth of Nations	650	433	—
Norseman	861	826	—
Cuddingwarra	334	287	16 dwt.
Ivanhoe	909	1,476	16 dwt.
Golden Arrow	64	62	—
Princess Royal (Cue)	220	163	—
Menzies Crusoe (tailings)	900	534	—
Menzies Gold Reefs Prop.	70	75	8 dwt.
Gt. Boulder Proprietary	1,425	3,157	—
Gt. Boulder Perseverance	800	1,044	—

The Great Boulder Proprietary meeting, which was held on Thursday, furnished an opportunity to the Chairman and to Mr. Edgar Taylor to make satisfactory statements concerning the mine. But it was considered strange that so little mention was made of the name of Mr. Zebina Lane, which was formerly in evidence at all the meetings of this Company. Great Boulder Proprietary shares are now quoted 19s. 6d. Lake View Consols, after improving to 8½ xd., have receded to 8⅛ for no particular reason, and I understand that a very large crushing for April is to be announced almost immediately. Still less justified appears to be the reaction in Ivanhoe to 45, as the news from the mine is encouraging, and the crushing—as mentioned in the above list—is very satisfactory. London and Globe, after improving to 1 9/16, have eased off again to 1⅜, notwithstanding the fact that the various undertakings of the Company are looking very promising, and more particularly the British America Corporation, concerning which an important announcement is made. The news from the Lady Shenton is again exceptionally good. Not only, as shown in the above list, has a crushing of 600 tons of ore yielded 1,760 oz. of gold, while a dividend of one shilling per share is declared, payable on the 19th inst., but a cablegram from Mr. Rayfield, the consulting engineer, reports developments in the lower levels as looking splendid. Both in the north drift of level No. 4 and in the winze the vein is fully 4 ft. in width, and good gold can be seen at each breakdown, while the stopes above level No. 4 show the reef to be about 8 ft. wide, heavily mineralised. With regard to the No. 2 parallel reef south, the report states that the vein is also 4 ft. wide, with free milling ore, and this development is most important, as this part of the mine had previously been thought to be barren. In the south rise the vein is quite 3 ft. wide, and a large body of ore has been opened up there. If the winze level No. 4 continues as at present, the manager advises the erection of another ten stamps, in addition to the twenty head now working. It is also good news to hear that the machinery is in good order, and is working well. The shares stand at only 2¼, but they may take a jump at any time, as the mine is equal to any of the very best in the Hannan's field. The shares in the adjoining Florence mine are still to be obtained at a moderate price, although a cablegram has also been received from this property, according to which the manager has commenced sinking a winze 113 ft. past the Lady Shenton boundary, being the continuation level No. 3 Lady Shenton. The winze was down 11 ft., and already showed 10 in. stone carrying good, coarse gold, and the manager feels sure that this is likely to improve as he sinks on the vein. At the meeting of shareholders of the Sons of Gwalia, held on Wednesday last, the chairman, Mr. Cyril Wanklyn, was able to furnish very satisfactory particulars with regard to the progress made on the mine. He stated that the development so far carried out seems to indicate that there was hardly a point in the property where gold in large or small quantities was not found. Both assays and results range from a few pennyweights to some ounces per ton, and as any ore exceeding 8 dwts. per ton can be worked at a profit, the future is very promising. Messrs. Bewick, Moreing & Co. estimate the probable average milling value of the ore at 2 oz. 2 dwt. per ton from ore of both grades treated impartially. So far, the returns since November 17, 1897, have been 4,850 tons crushed for 6,163 oz. of gold, with an average assay of tailings of 29 dwt., so that the average return, including the tailings, is nearly 2¾ oz. per ton. The last crushing just received was 1,328 oz. from 960 tons. It is probable that a further 50-stamp mill will be erected, so that eventually the mine will doubtless become a very large producer. Although the previous cablegram from Mr. C. S. Stafford, the new manager of the Hannan's Golden Pike, was disappointing, he has evidently seen fit to alter his opinion, for he has now cabled as follows:—"Started driving north and south; have struck a seam of quartz, small, carrying rich, free gold, south face." This looks very promising, and the probability of finding the Great Boulder Perseverance lode is evident. The Wealth of Nations have had a decent crushing, 650 tons of ore having produced 433 oz. of Gold. Kalgurli rose at one time to 5½, but have since reacted to 5⅜. East Murchison United have improved to 1 on the announcement of the dividend. Golden Horseshoes have gone ahead to 8⅛ on "Bear" closing. Since publishing some of the communications which I had received concerning the Gladiators, Limited, I have discovered, in a financial paper, a short account of what is called the first ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of Gladiators, Limited, held last Wednesday at the offices, 43, Threadneedle-street, E.C., Mr. Nicol Brown presiding. This meeting, by the way, was not advertised, and many of the shareholders received no notice of the same. It appears, however, from this scanty report that the Chairman stated that the reconstruction had been very successful, and that the Directors' determination not to underwrite the shares had been justified by the result. In the old Company there were 110,000 shares issued, while in the new Company 86,035 were applied for and issued, and after allowing for reconstruction expenses and some few debts of the old Company, there was a net sum of £11,700 available. I presume that the 24,000 shares which have not been applied for in the reconstruction belonged to the outside public, and not to the vendors! It would have been as well, especially after the questions that had been asked in the Press, if Mr. Nicol Brown had positively stated that the vendors had taken up all their shares in the new Company. It appears that instructions to go ahead with the completion of the machinery and with the other work have been cabled out to the property some time ago, and the Chairman announced the receipt of a cablegram according to which milling operations were to have started on Monday last. It is to be hoped that in future the Secretary will send communications to the Press regularly as regards the progress made at the mine, and that the reports will not merely be kept at the office. As crushing started on May 2, a fortnight's return is due on the 16th inst. A nice little squabble has arisen between the Mount Yagahong Gold Mining and Exploration Company and the Star of the East Company which had leased its mine to the former for a term commencing June 24, 1897. The Star of the East directors assert that the lessee company has neglected to expend the £500 per year stipulated for on the property and apparently wish to terminate the lease, the mine turning out better than had been anticipated. The matter is now subject to arbitration.

Indian, Australasian, and British Columbian Mines.

In the Indian mining section there has been comparative steadiness, although Ooregum Ordinary and Balaghat are lower. On the other hand, Nundydroog and Road Blocks are better, and there has been an improvement in Mysore Gold and Champion Reefs. In Australian mines, other than West Australian, the feature has been a rise in Mount Morgan to 4$\frac{5}{16}$. New Australian Broken Hill are also firmer on a rich return, and Gibraltar have hardened to 1. Mount Lyell, however, are easier at 12¾, Mount Lyell North at 2½. In New Zealand mines business has been stagnant, and although Waihi have improved, most other changes were in the downward direction, Woodstock and Kauri more particularly having declined. In the general foreign section no special movement calls for notice. Amongst copper shares Rio Tinto Deferred are pretty steady at 26$\frac{1}{16}$xd., but this is of course very much below the highest point touched recently. Cape Copper and Namaqua are slightly firmer. British Columbian shares have been fairly steady, and there has been a tendency to improvement. Klondike and Columbian Goldfields have been steady at 1⅛, and London and British Columbia Goldfields and Whitewater mines have both been well maintained at $\frac{1}{16}$ premium. Declines are, however, marked in British Columbia Development Association, New Goldfields of British Columbia, and Klondike Bonanza. British America Corporation shares have experienced a very strong revival, and while the other day they were offered at from 18s. to 19s., they have since improved to 20s. 6d. The special settlement has now been fixed for the 25th inst. There is good reason to believe that a number of "Bear" sales have been made on all the irresponsible talk recently indulged in, and the ursine party will probably find themselves in a tight place, as the Directors of the Corporation have not been idle, and the sudden departure of the Hon. C. H. Mackintosh was of much significance. It now turns out that the final acquisition of the Le Roi Mine was then being negotiated, and this matter has been at last arranged at a price considerably below that at which this wonderfully rich property was under option to the British America Corporation. This will altogether take the wind out of the sails of those who have been blaming the management for not acquiring this mine, in accordance with the statements made in the prospectus. The purchase is probably made as to one half for the British America Corporation, and as to the other half for account of the London and Globe.

Operating across the Border—the Sequel.

A fortnight ago I referred to the efforts which were being made by London outside brokers and other touts to extend their operations across the Border, and I drew attention more particularly to some advertisements which had appeared in the North British Advertiser, of Edinburgh, of the London Equitable Exchange, stock and share brokers and dealers, and investment advisers, 18, Eldon-street, London, E.C., and of the Prudential Bank of London, Finsbury Circus Buildings, E.C. I have since received a communication from the proprietors of the North British Advertiser and Ladies' Journal, of Edinburgh, in which they inform me that having made inquiries in London, even before my article had appeared, they decided to refuse to insert these two advertisements in their paper any longer. This is as it should be, as the assertion of the Equitable Exchange (whoever may be the people trading behind this name) that their "investment, cover, deposit, three-monthly, and special operations are the only safe way of making profits on the London Stock Exchange" is an absolute misstatement. With reference to the Prudential Bank of London, which had also advertised in the columns of my contemporary, a correspondent has forwarded to me the circulars issued by this "institution," in which the high rates of interest allowed by it, viz., from 6 to 10 per cent., are explained. This is what the circular says :—

> The above rates of interest may appear to be high as compared with those allowed by other banks—namely, 2 to 3 per cent.—but if one considers for an instant the immense profits divided amongst the shareholders, of which the depositor, although helping considerably to make, receives not a halfpenny, it will be seen we are easily enabled to safely pay these rates.

This is quite a novel banking principle, and I should like to know whether any of our high-class banks could pay any dividends to its shareholders, if they were to allow interest to their depositors at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum? Again, one is inclined to ask whether the Prudential Bank of London is a philanthropic institution, started chiefly to benefit depositors? I am also somewhat curious as to whether the various country journals from which the newspaper puffs published in the circulars were taken, really know what they are writing about. Amongst these are the Isle of Wight Times, Weston-super-Mare Gazette, Monmouth Guardian, Farmers' Herald, Buteman, Ayr Observer and Galloway Chronicle, Scottish Referee, Auckland Times and Herald, and several others.

Retribution.

On Saturday the men connected with that arrant swindle, T. E. Brinsmead & Sons, Limited, were sentenced at the Central Criminal Court; and while some of the defendants, who were, perhaps, more sinned against than sinning, were let off with lighter sentences, Albert Harrison Ainsworth and Henry Peter Bernard were each sentenced to five years' penal servitude. The Brinsmead frauds are so fresh in the memory of the public that it is unnecessary for me to explain their nature. The promotion was conceived and carried out in fraud, there being really no business for which the public was induced to subscribe £40,000. I should like, however, to add here a few remarks with regard to the career of Harrison Ainsworth. He has for years been mixed up with the most shady promotions, and was one of the chief actors in the flotation of that notorious swindle, the Bread Union. At the time of the issue of this Company I entered an emphatic protest against it, and warned my readers against subscribing to the same, mentioning also the identity of Harrison Ainsworth, and of four other men who were connected with him in this scandalous transaction. I again and again repeated my warning, and if the deluded shareholders in the Bread Union had listened to me they would at least have reduced their loss, even if they were unable to escape it altogether. The partners of Ainsworth in the Bread Union scandal appear to have mended their ways to some extent, but he persisted in his fatal course, and I have had occasion at various times to expose the different concerns which he puffed in a paper called The Investor. Amongst the so-called "securities" therein recommended were the utterly worthless debentures in various slate quarries. It is not surprising that retribution has at last overtaken this man.

"Of Particular Importance."

Under this heading a circular is being sent out by Mr. Charles Turner, who hails from the Outer Temple, 222, Strand. The notice, "Agency for the New York Life Insurance Company" appears in very small type at the top of the sheet of note-paper. In this communication the offer is made of loans to such persons as are in receipt of private incomes, annuities from land, house, or shop property of any description, &c. On referring back to the issue of Truth, dated September 23, 1897, my readers will find that I then drew attention to a similar letter which was being circulated by Mr. John T. Higgins, the notepaper being headed "New York Life Company, the Outer Temple, 222, Strand." At the time, I stated that a correspondent wished to know whether it was not going beyond legitimate efforts to obtain business by offering loans in such a manner. I came to the conclusion that while there is a good deal of competition in insurance business, so that agents for life offices have to grant all kinds of facilities in order that they should continue in the race, Mr. Higgins was going a little too far in his anxiety to push business. Although the letter of Mr. Charles Turner is also issued from 222, Strand, his connection with the New York Life Office appears to be slighter, to judge from the small type in which the reference to the agency of the Company is printed. Yet I should like to know whether Mr. Turner is the successor of Mr. Higgins in pushing this class of business, the rates of interest being very much the same as those quoted by the latter, viz., 6 per cent. per annum up to £100; 5 per cent. per annum up to £500; 4½ per cent. per annum up to £1,000; 4 per cent. per annum up to £5,000; £5,000 and upwards special terms down to 3½ per cent. The most remarkable paragraph in the circular is, however, one which states that "interest and principal in approved cases may remain for any period up to twenty years, or until applicants inherit, or repayments can be made to suit each individual case." Finally, I should like to protest against the use of the name of Truth in connection with this circular, which commences as follows:—"Doubtless you have perused the many articles published in Truth regarding money-lenders with their extortionate rates of interest." My articles on this subject cannot in any case be construed into a recommendation of the system of Mr. Charles Turner.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

The Fine Cotton Spinners' and Doublers' Association, Limited.—This Association is formed for the purpose of amalgamating into one concern thirty-one companies and firms engaged in spinning fine (Sea Island) cotton, or in doubling yarns made from this and other staples of cotton, and carrying on the business of fine spinners and doublers hitherto carried on by them separately. The share capital is fixed at £4,000,000, equally divided into Five per Cent. Cumulative Preference and Ordinary shares of £1 each, and an issue of a Four per Cent. First Mortgage Debenture stock of £2,000,000.

The Spiral Globe, Limited.—This Company has been formed as a parent company to purchase the British, Foreign, and Colonial patents with the rights thereto of Messrs. Dunlap & Quain for their spiral glass cover for electric incandescent lamps. The share capital is £150,000 in shares of £1 each.

The capital asked is excessive, and this Company will have to meet with strong competition in the new improvements in the Welsbach burner. The large returns expected from the granting of licences, &c., are very much in the future.

The Lee-Metford Small Arms and Ammunition Company, Limited.—With a capital of £350,000 in shares of £1 each, and a Debenture issue of £50,000 in 4½ per cent. bonds of £100 each, this Company is formed to acquire fifty-seven patents and applications for patents for the Lee-Metford magazine rifle, the Lee Arms Company's turnbolt rifle, the Lee straight-pull rifle, and improvements in cartridge clips, &c., and also to purchase suitable and extensive freehold works in Birmingham, and equip the same as a first-class small arms factory.

Manchester Liners, Limited.—This Company has been formed as a Manchester Steamship Company for the purpose of establishing and working lines of steamers of large cargo capacity for trading to and from the port of Manchester. The share capital is fixed at £1,000,000, divided into Preference and Ordinary shares of £10 each.

The Manchester Canal has not yet paid its way, and at present I do not see much chance of success for this venture. It is something now for intending investors to have their names published, but the promoters wisely refrain from stating the number of shares which the persons named propose to subscribe for.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

Amateur.—I see no reason why you should not invest in New South Wales Three and a Half per Cent. stock at 106; and, as regards Corporation stocks, the following should also suit you:—Middlesbrough and Southampton Corporation stocks. P. F. O.—Yes, Uruguay bonds and Mexican Sixes are a fair investment of the kind. Glen Rosa.—My remarks as to the Hamburg and other State lotteries, and the shady touts who are trying to obtain subscriptions for the same, were of a general nature, and I cannot possibly give any information about particular firms. Neither do I choose to advise you on the subject of your taking any further part in these gambles. Querist.—You put the case too strongly. I dare say you would be able to obtain the prizes in question, but it remains to be seen whether you would be informed of the same having been drawn. T. J. S.—I note what you say with regard to the foreign lottery nuisance. As regards the other firm, repeated references have been made to it in the columns of Truth, and I do not advise you to deal with them. X. Y. Z.—The chance of drawing a prize is remote, and I should advise you to sell the bonds through the people of whom you purchased them.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

Alpha.—I strongly advise you, if you can do so, to drop this insurance and go to a better office. It is never worth while to insure with a doubtful concern. P. J. F.—You had better send me a prospectus of this concern, and I may then be able to advise you. E. M. P.—I strongly advise you not to touch this Canadian Company, which is being recommended by Howard, Marshall, & Co., of 4, Copthall Chambers, E.C. Constant Reader, Carlisle.—Have nothing whatever to do with these syndicate touts. G. M. G.—Sanford & Co., stock and share dealers, 20, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C., are merely syndicate touts, and their so-called "special individual accounts" should be left severely alone.

Home Rails.

Lanark.—I see no reason why you should not buy Great Central 1894 Five per Cent. Prefs. T. P. O.—The pick of the market for investment are Brighton "A," Dover "A," and Coras. For a lock-up I consider Great Central 1894 Ordinary and Metropolitan Districts the best purchase.

American and Foreign Rails.

Perplexed, Caterham.—You should certainly deposit the West Virginia and Pittsburg Mortgage bonds with Messrs. Brown,

China and Glass. — Messrs. Goode, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores

Shipley, & Co., as a reorganisation is now in sight. They will doubtless recover again. Fleet.—If you want to make a Canadian investment you cannot do better than buy Canadian Pacifics at 85½. No option but to hold the Leopoldina shares. F Z. P.—With reference to American Rails the best selection that can be made is one of the actively dealt in stocks of inherent merit, such as Milwaukee, Louisville, Union Pacific Prefs. and Ordinary, Norfolk and Western, &c. But you should also not forget Canadian Pacifics, that road doing exceedingly well. Harboro'.—The charge made by your broker is a fair one, but it would, of course, have been smaller if you had bought a larger quantity of the stock.

MINING SHARES.

Cleveland.—1. London and West Australian Exploration shares are a good purchase. 2. It is impossible to say when they will improve. That will depend very much upon the movements of the shares in the subsidiary companies. Siddals.—The Achilles Goldfields has been so frequently reconstructed that I should say the best thing would be not to throw any more good money after bad. A. D. L Z.—No; I do not advise you to join the reconstruction of the new Achilles Company. Ireland.—If you join the reconstruction of No. 1, the call can be enforced by law. 2. With regard to the Londonderry, everything depends upon future developments. 3. A fair Charters Towers mine. Major-General.—Yes, I consider that Simmer and Jack (1), Ivanhoe (2), Lady Shenton (3), and East Rands (4) would, as you suggest, form an excellent little mining trust, likely to pay good dividends. Exe.—Yes, Waterfall Estates are exceedingly cheap, and should now be bought on the improvement in the South African market. The Company is quite solvent, and pays dividends of 5 per cent. per annum from royalties alone. Clapham.—There does not appear to be any option but to join the reconstruction, by which the money will probably be eventually recovered for you. Quærens.—I have not a favourable opinion of any of the concerns mentioned by you. Author.—Hannan's Props (1) and Florence (5) are the best amongst the shares mentioned by you, and No. 2 may also have a chance; but you had better not touch the others just now. M., Westmoreland.—There may be a fair chance of an improvement in these shares eventually. T. T.—I have no special information about this Klondike concern, and do not advise the investment. As regards a map, Effingham Wilson, of the Royal Exchange, may be able to supply you with this. Florence shares are promising at their present price, and latest information is very favourable. H., Carlisle.—The South African shares you mention appear to be promising. Mermaid.—The position of the Company is good, and "Bear" sales have evidently been made. There is nothing for it but to hold for a recovery, which is already in progress. Como.—Yes, now that the Kaffir Circus is reviving, you will do well to buy Waterfall Estates. Westralia.—No; I do not consider Golden Links a good purchase at present. A New Subscriber.—1. £1 per share. 2. You must have seen what the recent trouble was. 3. Yes, at present the shares are a good purchase. S. G. T.—There is every prospect of these shares recovering again now that the South African market generally is improving, and you should hold. Rajputana.—I must leave it to you whether to take up these debentures or not. Scot.—1. Not as far as I know. 2, 3, and 4.—You must be aware that a full explanation was given at the meetings of shareholders. 5. These meetings have all been held, and have been fully reported in the financial Press.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

Ceres.—The American breweries should be held, but you should not buy more until the duration of the war can be fairly gauged. B. J. T.—Your selections of Brewery debentures and prefs., Nos. 1 to 9, is a good one, and there is nothing to say against the Industrial debentures Nos. 10 to 15. Virgo.—No particular reason to sell any of your Industrial shares Nos. 1 to 6; but I consider No. 1 quite high enough, and have always held an unfavourable opinion of No. 3. T. M. W.—I have always stated that National Explosives are a promising investment in view of the large dividend paid. A Widow.—These shares appear to be quite high enough. P. F., Belfast.—I certainly consider that the promotion of the Great Horseless Carriage Company has been a most objectionable one, and I have from the outset warned my readers against this concern; but nothing can be done unless the shareholders stand together. Mr. Hunter, solicitor, 16, Finsbury-square, once acted for the dissentients. Mrs. A. C. C.—1. What you require has been forwarded in your envelope. 2. I am afraid that a further decline in cycle shares will come before any lasting rally can take place. H. P., Reading.—You will have an opportunity of investing in some of the new Australian timber companies which are on the board, and as you will be able to get in at par, this will be a better opportunity than investing in the older undertakings.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

K. S., Bournemouth.—1. There is not much fear of Consols experiencing a material decline for the present. 2. Guinness shares are high enough, but I do not think there is much prospect of any serious fall. Tasmania.—I am afraid there is very little prospect of an improvement in Dumont Coffee shares. I still advise holding the South Africans, Nos. 2 to 6, and an improvement is already in progress. Caveat Emptor.—1. If I were you I should still leave Spanish bonds alone. 2. The Cordoba Central seems to be preferable under the circumstances. 3. There is every prospect of an arrangement being made, which will greatly enhance the price of these shares; hold. 4. This is not the time to sell. 5. You should certainly hold Johnnies Investment. 6. Hold Sheba, although they are not exactly the pick of the market for an investment. Wat.—1. The Japanese loan is a fair investment, but no catch. 2. I am afraid that just now American breweries are not looking up. Sparticus.—1. The shares are cheap, and after the heavy fall they look promising. 2. I cannot advise you on this stock. 3. When the line is opened, more will no doubt be heard of it. Tere.—It is difficult to form an opinion as to the immediate outlook for Eastman shares. Erie Prefs. stand at 35, and the various bonds mentioned by you should be held. They are quoted in the official list. Simplex.—An improvement in the Mining Market is now in progress, and under these circumstances you should hold Nos. 1 to 11. Also hold North British Deferred (12). Tregenza.—1. The Jarrah Timber and Wood Paving Corporation is a promising undertaking, and although there is no market for the shares at present, this will probably follow in due time. 2. The Lady Shenton pays a quarterly dividend of 1s. per share for the first quarter of 1898, although the machinery had not been at work for a considerable portion of that time, having undergone overhauling. The distributions are expected to increase. 3. Canadian Pacifics should be held for a further advance. R. D. N.—1. Hold, and average if you can afford to do so. 2. I have never heard of this concern. 3. Yes, Union Pacifics are a good investment, and since you wrote have risen 2½ dols.

A CHAPTER ON INDUSTRIAL STOCKS.

The special settlements which are being fixed for the various new Companies started in this department are providing mild excitement now and then. In the first instance, the Welsbach settlement disclosed a certain "Bull" account, as shown by somewhat high contangoes, but I am informed that large blocks will be taken up next account, and that the rate will then be much lower. The new burner is winning golden opinions from experts and others, and I should strongly advise holders not to part with their stocks. There has been a better market, and Welsbach Ordinary is now quoted 108, ditto Preferred 96, ditto Deferred 18s. 6d. The English Sewing Cotton settlement has been put off, much to the chagrin of the market; but, on the other hand, the special settlements has been fixed for Vickers, Sons, & Maxim, for the 18th inst. Quite a strong demand has been experienced for Anglo "A" and "B," which is not surprising considering the enormous increase in cable work as a consequence of the war. Anglo "A" are now quoted 15⅞, ditto "B" 113¼, and they are likely to go ahead in sympathy with the Yankee market. Coats Ordinary have been a weak market on continued Glasgow sales, and are lower at 58½ xd. I do not see much temptation to go into the Fine Cotton Spinners' and Doublers' Association, Limited. The estimates in the prospectus are incomplete in several respects, notably in the absence of any allowance for depreciation of stock, while the leasehold properties will naturally in time decrease in value. An improvement in Hammond's Meat Preference shares to 3 is apparently due chiefly to the rise in meat caused by the war. Liptons have become a very tired market, and hardly any dealings have taken place of late, the quotation of the Ordinary being $\frac{15}{16}$ premium. The Lipton settlement is expected at about the end of May. The tea fight is continuing, but it is supposed that it will take Liptons some time before they can beat the Mazzawattee Company, which has just paid the enormous sum of £63,147 in one cheque for duty. It was partly this circumstance that has caused an improvement in Mazzawattee Tea shares to 1½. Lyons are firmer at $4\frac{3}{16}$, and there has been an advance in Salmon and Gluckstein to 31s. 6d. Russian Oil shares have been steady at 23½, the special settlement for these shares and for Schiabieff Petroleum has been fixed for the 18th inst. By the way, another Russian Oil Company is on the board, although the capital will not be extensive, and I have heard it stated as £50,000. Fish oil shares were a little depressed on the settlement, and were thrown overboard by weak holders, the price falling to 4¾, from which there has been a recovery to 5. The carry-over rate in

If you want to entirely Furnish your House or select any article of Furniture or Carpet, &c., send for HEWETSONS' Illustrated Priced Catalogue.—HEWETSONS, Tottenham Court-road, London.

GILLOW & COMPANY.—The largest Stock of Furniture, of exclusively the best quality, although widely varying in cost. Designs and estimates free of cost.—496, Oxford street, London, W.

Dublin was much higher at from 10d. to 1s. than in London, where the contango was only from 4d. to 5d., and it is expected that there will be a much freer market here in future. As regards Volanite, Limited, to which I referred last week, and which is to be brought out under the auspices of the Fish Oil and Guano Company, I hear that the issue will be made in the course of the present week. The capital is fixed at £80,000 in £1 shares, but only 21,250 shares will be offered for subscription to the shareholders of the Fish Oil and Guano Company at par. As I have already stated, Volanite is an article lately discovered by Mr. F. Lamplough, C.E., who is an industrial chemist and Board of Trade engineer, and who, in co-operation with Mr. Shipton, has perfected a wonderful invention for the treatment of fish and fish offal. Mr. Lamplough has been experimenting with the oil produced by the Stanley process of the Fish Oil Company for some time, and has discovered Volanite, for which it is claimed that it will make railway sleepers, railway carriage wheels, brake blocks, carriage panels, embossed panels for decoration, and many other articles, imperishable. In fact, the numerous uses claimed for this new substance are remarkable, and if the anticipations are borne out by results, the Company should have a great future before it. Insiders are already speaking of a very high premium for the £1 shares. Bovrils have been distinctly firmer at 18s. 6d. for the Ordinary and at 11s. 9d. for the Deferred, while Schweppe Ordinary remain at $1\frac{1}{8}$, the Deferred dropping to 9s. I had anticipated some such movement, as, in view of the dividend paid on the Deferred, Bovril Ordinary ought really to stand higher than Schweppe Ordinary. Natal Steam Coal shares have improved to $1\frac{1}{4}$-$\frac{3}{8}$, partly in sympathy with the rise in Dundee Coal and Estate shares, which are being puffed to a considerable extent, and are now quoted $1\frac{9}{16}$. The Natal shares are really as good as the Dundee (Natal), although the latter Company has had the advantage of starting earlier. In Cycle shares depression continues to prevail, and every slight rally is followed by a fresh decline. Dunlop Deferred at one time fell to 5s. 3d., from which they have recovered to 5s. 6d., but a sharp decline of 8 points to 70 has taken place in the Debentures; while Singer Prefs. have also given way to 15s. Starley Brothers moved down to 4s. 6d., on the cutting down of the capital; but there have been active dealings at about this price. Swifts are unaltered at 12s., and Singer Ordinary are slightly firmer at 10s. 6d. Amalgamated Tyres have further declined 6d. to 4s. 6d., and Cycle Components are easier at $1\frac{3}{16}$. I hear that an improvement in Trent Cycle shares, now quoted 5s., may be looked for. By the way, I have received a communication from the Secretary of Welford & Sons, Limited, with regard to the debentures which were quoted in the list I gave a few weeks ago, and in which they are classed as redeemable. The Secretary wishes me to point out that although these debentures are redeemable, the redemption cannot take place until 1910 or 1915, and then at £105. Many of the other debentures mentioned in the same list are, however, in a similar position. Palace Theatre shares have experienced a slight set-back, but the knowing contingent are still buying, and talk about a big dividend. Music-hall shares generally are steady, and the public are once more investing in them, notwithstanding Mr. G. Adney Payne's recent stir-up. Drury Lane shares have received a fair amount of attention, the profits made by the "White Heather" and the pantomime pointing to a good dividend. Cambridge shares are quite neglected, and the £5 shares are only quoted at $2\frac{1}{2}$. I hear that a wonderful umbrella flotation is on the board. The Civil, Naval, and Military Outfitters, Limited, which was started in August last with a nominal capital of £80,000, has passed into the haven of liquidation, and the first meeting of the contributories is to be held on the 11th inst. This concern has certainly had a very short and inglorious career, and the proceedings at the meeting should prove interesting.—Your affectionate uncle,

MOSES.

Mortlock's (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "Mortlock's" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

All Rights Reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

SIR JOHN DEACLE'S AILMENT.

[During the past six months Truth office has suffered from quite an epidemic of true "Queer Stories," sent in by outside contributors. The larger number I have had to reject altogether; some on the ground of their moral impropriety, others because their veracity seemed to be their one and only merit. But a dozen or so have survived the editorial scrutiny, of which about half have appeared already, and the rest will do so in due course. I think that this one, printed below, will be considered sufficiently out of the common to justify its selection. It was sent to me by a young West End doctor, now rapidly rising into eminence for his successful treatment of mental and nervous disorders.—Ed. Truth.]

"WHAT is my practice worth? Oh! come now. That is rather a personal question. You must really excuse my answering it. But I don't mind telling you this, that I pay my way very comfortably, in addition to putting by a nice little sum every year; and you know that a man cannot live in one of the best streets in the West End and do that upon nothing. Rather unpleasant work? Dear me, no! Far too interesting to be unpleasant. Besides, it is a mistake to suppose that all cases of mental or nervous disorder are painful cases. I have come across not a few in which the comic has been the distinctly prevailing element. And the story which I now propose to tell you relates to a case of this character.

"I may say at once that it all arose out of golf. I have been a keen golfer ever since I was a lad; for, you see, I was educated at Loretto, and when I first went there, I had the honour to be golf-fag to the captain of the school, whose doughty performances, while yet a schoolboy, against the best professional talent of Musselburgh, roused in me a burning desire some day to attain like proficiency and renown. I made friends with every one who was likely to help me on in my ambition—especially with Tam Farquharson, at that time a prince amongst professional players. Good old Tam! Never have I met one who 'knew' more in the matter of golf. A shilling's worth off Tam—such was his modest fee for a brief instruction—was (as I often used to say) worth a sovereign's worth off anybody else. Perhaps I am prejudiced. The heroes of our boyhood have a way of looming large. But such was then my opinion. Such is my opinion still.

"And then what a dry humour had Farquharson—the dog! If I am not mistaken, 'twas he that christened the little bunker, so well known to Musselburgh golfers as 'Lord Blank'—the bunker which lies just in front of a certain tee, at the east corner of the course, and into which his lordship, an amiable and distinguished Judge of Session, but scarcely a distinguished golfer, was wont invariably to top his drive. I myself was once in hearing, when this same legal luminary, having to play a thirty yards approach to the hole, said to Tam, who was carrying for him,

"'I think I'll take my putter, Far-r-r-quharson.'

"'Nae, nae, my lord,' was the response, given with unexampled gravity. "Tak your driver, and lie well oop!'

"And, again——but I will spare you further anecdotes, and get under way with my story.

"It was five years ago that I set up in practice in London—at the age of twenty-eight; and being still as keen as ever on the royal and ancient game, I looked about for some good golf club in the neighbourhood of the Metropolis, to which to attach myself. A friend of mine, who was a member of Prince's, advised me to join Prince's, and kindly offered to put me up. I accepted his offer. In due course I was elected.

"Now, I have an uncle, a distinguished physician, and a man of the strictest old-fashioned ideas, who was quite horrified when he heard what I had done.

"'Good God!' said the old gentleman to me, 'you, a young doctor, with your way to make, wasting your time trapesing down to Mitcham to play—golf! It's professional suicide, sir."

"'I shan't go often,' I said. 'Probably only about one afternoon a week.'

"'Quite enough to ruin you, sir, even if you stick to your one afternoon. But you won't. I know what young men are when they go off playing golf.'

"'The air and exercise will keep me in health,' I answered. 'Besides, I shall make the acquaintance of a number of men well worth knowing, who may help to give me a lift, professionally. Nay! some of them, perhaps, may themselves develop into lucrative patients. Who can tell?'

"'Bosh!' retorted my uncle, 'you'll get no patients that way. Men who go tramping round a common all day in the fresh air, jogging up their livers and exercising their chest-muscles, aren't the sort to want a doctor, I'm sure. However, take your own line, sir. You won't listen to me, of course. You never do. But when you've ruined yourself with your senseless golf—as you will inevitably do if you don't give it up—you may, perhaps, remember my warning, and realise that I'm not quite the fool and the fogey that you are now evidently pleased to consider me!'

"So said my avuncular relative. But I did not take his advice; and I soon had every reason to be thankful that I did not; as you shall now hear.

"It all came about this way. On the occasion of my third or fourth visit to Mitcham, having played a round, and finding that I still had nearly an hour to spare for my train, I took out a club and a couple of balls, and indulged in a bit of driving practice on the wide open expanse in front of the club-house. While I was thus engaged, my attention was attracted to a tall, cadaverous man, of aristocratic appearance, who was also occupied in the same diversion, but who, despite his most persistent efforts, seemed unable to bring off anything longer than a forty-yard shot, and an unqualified daisy-cropper at that. I should not, indeed, have taken any particular notice of him—would-be golfers of this calibre being sufficiently common at Mitcham as elsewhere—but that, happening to pass him at close quarters in pursuit of a sliced ball, I was greatly struck by the expression of his face. In fact, I never recollected to have seen any one (except, possibly, a few patients whom I had attended for acute melancholia) whose countenance bespoke more evidently the deep dejection of an unutterable misery.

"His gait and bearing were entirely in accord with the expression of his face. He carried his head drooping forward on his breast. His shoulders were rounded. He slouched along with quick, shuffling steps, as one in whom the energy of self-respect was wholly wanting. I also noticed that he kept muttering to himself; a circumstance which, in conjunction with the others, struck me as rather significant.

"'By Jove!' I thought, 'if that fellow isn't badly hypped I never saw one who was. He looks to me like a man who wants taking care of.'

"I watched him address his ball and attempt another drive. No wonder he was making such execrable shots. He was doing everything that a golfer should not do; lifting his arms in taking back the club; pressing for all he was worth at the beginning of the swing; turning over his wrists at the end. Then, as the inevitable result followed, and his topped ball trickled its two score paces along the grass, I heard him exclaim, with a weary groan:

"'I never shall! I know I never shall!' And off he slouched after his ball, and repeated the performance.

"When I returned to the club-house, I saw the steward standing in the doorway, and asked him who the melancholy golfer was.

"'Oh!' he said. 'That's Sir John Deacle. He is down here every day, practising his drive; but he never gets any better. Seems to have no heart in him, either. Never speaks to any one. Some of the members say he's a little—a little——'

"Here the steward tapped his forehead, meaningly.

"'He must be awfully keen on golf to go on like that,' I observed.

"'Ah!' replied the steward. 'Golf's the subject on which they say he's touched. And I must say it looks uncommonly like it. However, it's a harmless mania, after all. There's your train just signalled, sir.'

"I went down to Mitcham again about a week later. This time I had not a match, and there was no one at the club disengaged to play with me. But hearing that another train was due from Victoria in less than an hour, I decided to wait about till then on the chance of getting a game. As I strolled out on to the course to while away the time in practising approaches with my mashie, I at once caught sight of Sir John Deacle, shuffling along after his ball. I watched him make a few drives—all the same feeble, forty-yard futilities, and then, acting on a sudden impulse, I made so bold as to approach him and address him; for, indeed, to a golfing enthusiast like myself it seemed intolerable to see a man persisting in such elementary faults without giving him a friendly hint.

"'Pardon me, sir,' I said. 'But you are lifting your arms, and pressing, and turning over your wrists every time.'

"He did not resent my words, in the least. He only turned towards me a face full of utter despondency, and answered, sighing deeply:

"'I know it—I know it, only too well.'

"'Excuse the liberty I am taking,' I said. 'But I have been a golfer ever since I could walk; and I believe that, if you will allow me, I can show you how to correct those faults.'

"He smiled at me, sadly, and shook his head.

"'Young man,' he replied, 'you do not know to whom you are talking. If it were merely a matter of being shown how to swing properly, I should drive as well as most; for I have had lessons from all the best professionals in the Three Kingdoms. I tell you, I know exactly what to do. But' (with an audible groan) 'I can't do it—I can't do it!'

"'May I suggest,' I said, 'that you should take a trial swing now—with no ball there, I mean.'

"'Ah!' he cried, quickly. 'That is the strange part of it. When there is no ball there, I can swing to perfection. See! Watch me crop off this daisy head! . . . There now! Was there much wrong with that?'

"'Very little indeed,' I answered, truthfully enough. It was a long, slow, steady, sweeping swing, with as good a final carry-through as any one need wish to achieve.

"'But,' I added, 'Why do you not do that when the ball's there?'

"He heaved a deep sigh, and his face again became clouded with dejected hopelessness.

"'Simply,' he said, 'Because, when the ball is there, it—it—utterly paralyses me! and—and—puts me into that state in which, if my very life depended on my swinging correctly, I could not do it. I don't suppose you can in the least understand the feeling, but——

"'Indeed,' I answered, 'I can understand it—up to a certain point. But surely, with a little determination——'

"'That is what everybody tells me,' he interposed, with a weary sigh. '"You've just got to make up your mind," they say, '"that you will swing as if there was no ball there—and the thing's done." "Make up your mind that you will?" Easy enough advice to give. But how am I to do what I can't? That's what I want to know?'

"'I imagine that you can—if you like,' I ventured to say.

"He laughed, hysterically.

"'If I like! If I like! Good God, man, isn't it the aim of my life to be a good golfer? Haven't I spent a small fortune on instructors? Wouldn't I pay almost any sum to a man who could teach me to drive? And you say to me: "If you like!"'

"'Perhaps,' I said, apologetically, noting the excited energy with which he had spoken, 'I ought rather to have said, if you will set about it in the right way.'

"'No way will make a man do what he can't,' replied Sir John, gloomily, 'I know I—I—am doomed to disappointment. It is the—the—darling wish of my heart to drive a long ball. But' (with unutterable melancholy) 'I never shall—I never shall!'

"I regarded him thoughtfully for some seconds. Then, making up my mind to a certain course of action, I said, boldly, 'Sir John, you are a rich man, I believe?'

"'So I am. I have twenty thousand a year. But what's the good of twenty thousand a year, when you can't drive?' he added, bitterly.

"'You expressed your willingness just now,' I went on, 'to pay almost any sum to a man who could teach you to do so.'

"'So I would!' he cried, earnestly. 'If such a man were to be found, I would gladly pay him—a thousand pounds!'

"'You mean that?'

"'I do.'

"'Well, then,' I said, looking him full in the face, 'with your permission, I will do my best to earn the money.'

"'You?' he ejaculated, with a half-contemptuous and wholly astonished air. 'Are you likely to succeed, think you, where all the best professionals have failed?'

"'I believe so,' I replied, with confidence. 'And for this reason. Your failure is not due to want of knowledge, but simply to want of nerve. In other words, you are suffering from a bad breakdown of your golfing nervous system. Now, I am a medical man as well as a golfer, and I believe I can cure you. I would willingly do so gratis; only I am a young man, with my way to make, and money is an object to me. Will you let me undertake your case on these terms: one thousand pounds if I cure you; if I fail—nothing?'

"'Very well,' he answered. 'I will place myself in your hands. It can do no harm, if you fail. And if you should succeed—— But psha!' (falling back into his most despondent and lugubrious tone). 'You won't succeed. For I shall never make a golfer—I never shall—I never shall!'

"'That remains to be seen,' I replied, cheerfully. 'And now you are under my directions, I must ask you to cease your practice for to-day. To go on in that faulty way only does harm. But will you meet me here to-morrow morning at a quarter past eleven? And then we can start upon our work in good earnest.'

"'I will be here,' he said, in his sad, hollow voice.

"Next morning, having carefully thought out Sir John's case and the best method of treating it, I repaired to Mitcham by the 10.43 train from Victoria. The baronet, as it happened, went by the same train, and we travelled together. He was terribly dejected and depressed, and he talked to me about himself and his golfing incapacity in the most melancholy manner.

"'I fear we are embarked on a useless attempt,' he remarked, slowly shaking his head and sighing. 'I have never hit a drive yet, and I never shall—I feel I never shall. Oh! how I envy other players who seem to send their ball two hundred yards with scarcely an effort. And I, who slave, and slave, and slave, can never bring off a shot. Why is Fate so cruel? Why did my mother ever bring forth such a miserable wretch—me, to whom is denied the one thing on earth that can make life tolerable?'

"These and other similar remarks, which he made in the course of the journey, and of which I affected to take little notice, served to confirm me in my opinion of what was the matter with him; and when we reached Mitcham, I proceeded to put into practice the scheme of treatment to which I had made up my mind.

"Sir John brought out his driver and half-a-dozen balls. One of these he teed and began to address. I immediately stopped him.

"'Pardon me,' I said. 'We must begin at the beginning. I wish you first to practise your swing thoroughly—with no ball there.'

"'Oh! but that is waste of time,' he expostulated. 'You know I can swing as well as any one, when there is no ball. You have seen me!'

"'Perhaps,' I replied. 'Nevertheless, Sir John, if you wish me to cure you, you must allow me to do so in my own way. Now! See this worm-cast here. Let me see you swing at that. That's right. Arms down—slow back—carry through. Hem! Very good!'

"'Yes! yes! I can do it every time when there is no ball there!'

"'Let me see you do it ten times running!'

"He did so. And certainly there was little fault to find with any of the ten performances.

"'The fact is,' I explained to him, 'I wish that swing to become a sort of second nature to you. I think, as you say, that you can do it well enough when you are aiming at some definite object, other than a golf ball. Supposing, therefore, you try whether you have sufficient confidence for the next stage; that is, to practise the swing, still with no ball there, but—with your eyes shut.'

"'With my eyes shut!' he ejaculated, greatly astonished. 'Why with my eyes shut?'

"'Because you must get into the way of making your swing absolutely mechanical; and there is no other such good method of attaining that result. For, as you can easily see, when you have once taken your stand and placed your club in position, it will, if swung with mechanical correctness, follow precisely the same line, though your eyes are shut, as it would if you were watching the point of impact, with your eyes open. Now let me see you try. Here, address this daisy head. Right. Now shut your eyes. Now—swing.'

"He shut his eyes and swung—only moderately well. But I kept him at it for nearly twenty minutes, until at last he was cropping off the daisy head or worm-cast, or whatever the object happened to be, nearly every time.

"Then I thought the time ripe for my great coup. When he had shut his eyes and was taking his club slowly back, I stooped and hastily deposited a Silvertown on the worm-cast which he had made his point of address. Round came the club in a long, steady, sweeping, powerful swing. It met the Silvertown full on the face, and sent it flying—a beautiful long, straight ball of which no golfer need have been ashamed. My heart bounded for joy as I watched it. For it was on the success of this experiment that my whole scheme had depended

"The effect on Sir John was extraordinary.

"'What was that?' he exclaimed, opening his eyes in great astonishment. 'I hit something hard. I—I—hit something fair—there was such a delicious feeling. I—I——'

"'Yes,' I said, quietly. 'You hit a Silvertown, which I teed for you. A fine long ball, too. No wonder it felt delicious. See! There it is just landing now, straight ahead, and just short of the bunker.'

"'What?' he cried, with intense, but half-incredulous, excitement. 'I—drove—that—ball? I—drove—that—ball?'

"I assured him that he, and nobody else, had done so. His eyes sparkled with delight. He shook and trembled for very triumphant eagerness. This fine long ball that had flown so deliciously from his club—this, the first drive he had ever hit—had worked an even more marvellous change in him than I had dared to expect. The hopeless despondency had vanished from his face. He looked positively alert and energetic.

"'Come!' he cried, with keen enthusiasm. 'Tee me another ball! Let—let—me—see if I can do that again!' . . . .

"That was the turning-point—the crisis—in Sir John Deacle's case. I need not weary you by detailing the assiduous practice at which I kept him for the next fortnight, first with eyes shut, lastly with eyes open, until (if I may be allowed the metaphor) I had fairly completed that structure whereof the episode of the Silvertown had been the foundation-stone.

"Suffice it to say that, at the end of that period, Sir John, a changed man and a transmogrified golfer, handed me his cheque for £1,000, with many expressions of pleasure and gratitude.

"'You have made life a new thing for me' he said, shaking me warmly by the hand. 'I—I—played a match yesterday, and—and—I went round in ninety-eight!'

"'I am delighted to hear it,' I answered. 'And you will soon improve on that, Sir John. You are quite cured of your complaint. I do not think it is in the least likely to recur.'

"'My complaint?' he exclaimed.

American Shoes of every description. Large consignment of newest designs and make of Spring and Summer goods just to hand.—American Shoe Co., 169, Regent-street, W.

"'Yes; your complaint. You were simply suffering from quite a common ailment, though, to be sure, it had in your case taken a novel and exceptional form. You had, in fact, an acute attack of—golfer's hysteria.'"

ART NOTES.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY—SECOND ARTICLE.

ARISTIDES, as we all of us know, grew very tired of being called "the Just." But what about the people who used to speak of him in this appreciative way? I am inclined to think that they must have grown as weary of applying the adjective as Aristides did of having it applied. But what else could they do? Whilst Aristides persisted in distinguishing himself by his exceptional impartiality and uprightness, to hail him as "the Just" was a necessity of the situation. There was, in fact, no getting out of it. It seems to me very much the same in the case of Mr. John S. Sargent, R.A. We may grow a little tired of calling him "the marvellous," and of applying such adjectives as "powerful," and "magnificent," and "amazing" to his pictures, but so long as he continues to paint portraits so superlatively fine, what else, let me ask, is it possible for us to do? Look, for example, at his portrait of Mr. Asher Wertheimer (No. 603), surely the most remarkable picture of the year. If ever the soul of a man were expressed in his painted portrait, Mr. Sargent has succeeded in expressing it here. The face, as has been well said, almost thinks as we gaze at it. One positively waits expectantly for the ironical eye to wink. Every inch of the canvas is palpitating with character and actuality. The panting black poodle lying at its master's feet, with its moist, red tongue hanging from its mouth, is an invaluable accessory to an ensemble well-nigh staggering in its force and strength. If there is more than a hint of Mephistopheles in the man there is certainly a suggestion of diablerie in the dog. There is something distinctly uncanny in the odd fascination this portrait exercises on the spectator. It was a cruel thing of the Hanging Committee to place in such proximity to this masterpiece of Mr. Sargent's the portrait of Mr. Herbert Spencer, painted by Professor Herkomer (No. 601). I had intended to say some hard things about this picture, but the explanatory letter sent to the Times by Mr. Spencer to a great extent disarms criticism. The fact that the portrait had to be painted to so great an extent from photographs certainly explains the artist's comparative failure to do justice to his eminent subject; but it none the less surely makes its presence on the line nothing less than deplorable.

Mr. George H. Boughton, R.A., has been well advised in seeking inspiration for his principal picture in "The Lady of Shalott." "The Road to Camelot," as he calls it (No. 216), is one of those mediæval subjects which he paints with such suave grace and decorative charm. He shows us the moving panoramic scene that the ill-fated lady saw in her mirror; the "shadows of the world" that used to appear to her as she wove her magic web. By the side of "the river winding clearly down to tower'd Camelot" we see the picturesque procession pass—the troop of glad damsels, the Abbot on his ambling pad, the long haired page clad in crimson and cloth of gold, and the knights that rode by with their pennoned lances, two and two. Mr. Boughton has revelled in the opportunities afforded him of dealing with the quaint and bizarre fashions of the middle ages, and has turned them to delightful account in a picture that cannot fail to please. Of his two portraits I prefer "Dorothy" (No. 374), a most graceful realisation of a young and pretty girl, with a fountain coolly plashing in the background; though his "Katharine" (No. 346) is another graceful presentation of the charm of innocent girlhood. This year's Academy is in fact very strong in portraiture, though, unfortunately, there is a per contra side to the balance-sheet, and against the successes of a Sargent and an Orchardson, a Boughton and a Carolus Duran have to be set the usual tale of ineptitudes and commonplaces, the uninteresting mayors, the wearisome M.F.H.'s, the all-prevailing major-generals, in aggressively new uniforms of scarlet and gold. I certainly think, however, that we owe a debt of gratitude to Lord Middleton for having commissioned Mr. Walter Urwick to paint him in what I may call the full paraphernalia of a peer of the realm (No. 258). In the colloquial words of a once popular comic song, his lordship has most decidedly "got 'em on"—coronet, ermine-trimmed robes, silk stockings, velvet cape, lace "fal-lals"—nothing has been forgotten. Whether a large cavalry sabre is a portion of the constitutional outfit of a British Peer I am not sufficiently well up in the mysterious details of a baronial wardrobe to be aware. But certainly Lord Middleton is grasping one in this memorable portrait, and as we see him standing defiant on the terrace of his lordly mansion, with a bare-headed retainer in attendance and a gilded coach and pair waiting for him in the background, it is impossible not to be struck at the audacity of those bold reformers who would attempt to "mend or end" a House consisting of five hundred and eighty-four such gorgeously-arrayed hereditary legislators as this. By one of those little ironies of which life is so full, the picture I have attempted thus feebly to describe, was, on the day of the Press-view, numbered 237 and 237 in the catalogue was described as a portrait of the Mayor of Middlesbrough! But though his worship would be one of the first to admit that even in his robes and chain of office he could hardly aspire to the sartorial magnificence of a genuine British lord, there is one municipal magnate in the Academy who is certainly able to put even Lord Middleton into the shade. I allude, of course, to the ex-Lord Mayor of London, who, in Mr. Solomon Solomon's, "On the Threshold of the City, June 22, 1897" (No. 625), is seen arrayed in a costume which the other Solomon, in all his glory, was never able to put on. Off the stage of an opéra-bouffe theatre I doubt if such a resplendent figure as that cut by the popular and urbane Sir George Faudel Phillips, Bart., on the Diamond Jubilee Day, was ever seen. The whole picture in which he appears is, in fact, a kind of apotheosis of the Corporation of the City of London; and should irreverent iconoclasts again advance to attack it, I would suggest that the City Fathers should have Mr. Solomon's glowing canvas carried before them as a banner when they muster for the defence of the Mansion House. If that does not strike consternation into the hearts of the Corporation's foes, I don't know what will. By the way, the ex-Lord Mayor enjoys what must be an almost unique distinction of having two life-size portraits of himself in the same Academy. In addition to the equestrian portrait I have mentioned, he is also to be seen in a less flamboyant costume on the wall of Gallery No. V. (No. 403).

It is pleasant to find Mr. Luke Fildes painting with much more force and distinction than he has shown in several recent Academies. His "Miss Irene Blair" (No. 220) is painted in his old manner. Professor Herkomer's Sir George Taubman-Goldie (No. 567) will not escape attention. It is painted with wonderful strength and directness; indeed, the realistic note in it is forced to cracking point. One positively feels inclined to resent the strenuous aggressiveness of the demand for notice made by this remarkable portrait. There is such a thing as brow-beating the public even with paint on a piece of canvas. Much to be preferred as a work of art is the Professor's portrait of Mr. Henry Tate (No. 572), a public benefactor whose face visitors to the Academy will be specially interested to see. Another excellent portrait is Mr. Hugh Riviere's likeness of his father, the Academician (No 399). Admirable, too, though in a perversely unimaginative way, is Mr. William Carter's portrait of his mother (No. 409). Mr. John Collier's full-length portrait of the Earl of Halsbury (No. 59) gives us an imposing presentment of his lordship's full dress robes, but the artist has not been so successful with his lordship's face and features. It is tantalising to think what a portrait the painter of Mr. Asher Wertheimer might have given us of our genial Lord High Jobber. A very cleverly arranged portrait group by Mr. F. H. Lorimer, full of refined colour and dexterous composition, should on no account be missed.

"Shelling 'Honesty,'" as it is called (No. 467), is a delightful picture. Amongst the younger portrait painters Mr. R. Jack, Mr. Ralph Peacock, and Mr. Charles Sims distinguish themselves, and I note again with pleasure the continued advance made by Mr. H. Harris Brown. I had noted for approval a military portrait of his which is favourably hung at the New Gallery, but at Burlington House he has achieved an even greater success with his "Bishop of Emmaus" (No. 592), which is hung in the centre of a side-wall on the portrait line of Gallery No. VIII. His portrait of Miss Dillon (No. 648) may be seen in the same room, and he has a third portrait in Gallery IV. (No. 339). Close to this last picture is a portrait of that prolific and protean writer Mr. H. Schutz-Wilson (No. 341). It is perhaps only a piece of poetic justice that the "Hill-top" novelist should find himself thus mercilessly "skied." But there is surely no justice, poetic or otherwise, in the "skying" of the landscape by the famous Dutch painter, Mynheer James Maris, in Gallery No. VIII. This seems to be not only a piece of churlish inhospitality, but a lamentable aberration of artistic taste and judgment.

It is high time that I should have mentioned the name of Mr. H. H. La Thangue, one of the newer Associates who continues amply to justify his election. He is still content to interpret those simple scenes from everyday rural life which he has so long painted with such rare insight and sympathy. He does for the English peasantry very much what Josef Israels does for the Dutch fisherfolk; he shows us the labour, the burden, the pathos of their lot, though without that insistence on grey skies and depressing cottage interiors in which the Dutch artist delights. Mr. La Thangue is essentially an "open airist," and revels in the light and atmosphere in which he steeps his painted annals of the poor. Look, for instance, at his "Bracken" (No. 123), a canvas positively vibrating with light and air! The strong afternoon sunlight which strikes on the faces of the girl and her mother, who are walking down an upland path with huge sheaves of newly-cut fern on their bowed backs, positively dazzles your eyes as you look at it. But Mr. La Thangue's most important work is "Harvesters at Supper" (No 608), which is to be found in gallery No. VIII. Here the effects of firelight and moonlight are most skilfully portrayed. Still, with all his cleverness, Mr. La Thangueis showing a tendency to mannerism, against which he would do well to guard. He should beware of a certain streakiness of technique, which he is inclined to overdo, and which detracts from the merits of at least two of his pictures at this season's Academy. But I have again outrun my space, and the fact that I still have to mention several pictures of exceptional interest, as well as some striking items in the Sculpture Gallery, tends, I think, to confirm what I stated last week—that the present exhibition of the Royal Academy is a better one than we have had for several seasons.

MUSIC.

OPENING OF THE OPERA SEASON.

THE Opera Syndicate, who again have control of Covent Garden this year, have certainly no reason to be dissatisfied with the opening of their season on Monday. Their delight would, perhaps, be the more unalloyed if M. Jean de Reszke were willing to relinquish his £200 a night, and to sing for the £40 per week which only eleven years ago Señor Lago refused him. Again they might have a surer idea of Paradise on earth if prime donne would only accept all the parts which Mr. Grau thinks best for them, and at the managers' own price. Happily all singers are not ambitions in money matters, but it is a fact of which the treasurer of the syndicate is painfully aware, that the salaries of great vocalists continuously go up, while as the walls of the opera house are not elastic, the receipts cannot proportionately increase. However, there is little to complain of, for the prospects are good and the subscription is a record one. It may be true that on Monday the relentless Wagner party would have preferred a German to an Italian conductor for "Lohengrin," but out of the four conductors engaged at the Royal Opera this season Signor Mancinelli has, it seems, the widest and most complete knowledge of "God Save the Queen," which preceded the opera, and, perhaps, partly for this reason, partly on the doctrine of seniores priores, he was chosen as the first conductor of the new season. The performance in which such well-known artists as M. Van Dyck took part in the titular rôle, Mme. Eames being the Elsa, Mme. Brema the Ortrud, M. E. de Reszke the King, and Herr Feinhals (a German high baritone and a promising recruit) the Telramund, need not, of course, be criticised in detail. On Tuesday there were some new comers, namely, M. Saleza, a native of Bruges, and chief tenor of the Paris Opéra Comique as Roméo, with the American soprano, Miss Adams, as Juliette, but of these I must speak next week.

It is early days to talk of the reforms which have been instituted this season. One of them, a more intelligent stage management, was greatly needed. The inadequate stage machinery of Covent Garden is against any new Continental régisseur, but when the season becomes a little older we shall doubtless find many much-needed improvements. M. Baudu has experience of stage direction abroad, and is also a linguist, so that, unlike those who only speak English, he is able to make himself understood by his forces. The orchestra has been slightly changed, some new-comers replacing those who insisted upon the supposed right to send deputies whenever they had a concert engagement, so that the band at Covent Garden is now exclusively engaged for the opera. The players are placed slightly lower than usual, with the brass concealed under the stage, while the conductor takes his place in the Italian fashion, near the audience, instead of at the footlights.

Next week, as I understand, we are to have revivals of "Die Meistersinger" and "Tannhäuser," and, indeed, before the close of the season the whole of the Wagner operas, from "Tannhäuser" to the "Ring" will be heard. M. Jean de Reszke and Mme. Nordica, who have both arrived, make their reappearance on Saturday in "Tristan," and on Monday week Mme. Calvé is expected to sing, for the first time here, Margaret, in Boïto's "Mefistofele," a part in which she achieved much success two years ago in the United States. In the same week we are to have Mancinelli's long contemplated opera-cantata, "Hero and Leander." June will see the return of Mme. Melba, and also the three cycles of "Der Ring des Nibelungen," which "dashed tomfoolery every night from four to twelve" in the dark it is hoped the subscribers will appreciate. The production of Dr. Saint Saëns' "Henry VIII." will probably be postponed until July. There will be no "gala" performance at the opera this year, for even if the Kaiser comes to England at all, it will only be for the yachting at Cowes in July. By the way, there seems to be some idea that the Wagner craze will be allowed to entirely place Italian music on the shelf. This, I am assured, is an absurdity; and, indeed, some of the older Italian operas will be expressly revived for Mme. Melba. New Italian singers have not been engaged this year because there are none up to the high standard of Covent Garden. You can secure plenty of Italian tenors and sopranos of a sort, at £10 a week upwards; but the British public insist upon the best, so that the Covent Garden syndicate have endeavoured to choose the finest singers available, irrespective of nationality or tongue.

We have heard a good deal about the iniquity of engaging an Italian band for the Imperial Institute; and at the meeting the other day it was admitted that the foreign article came cheaper than an orchestra of British taxpayers. So far as the public are concerned, they probably do not care a pin whether the band comes from the Sandwich Islands or Stratford-atte-Bow, providing that the players are adequate. I am not going to say that the Scala orchestra, who, in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales and half-a-dozen other royalties, made their first appearance on Monday afternoon, are in any way the equals of some of our own bands. It is, however, pretty certain that first-rate British orchestras—for example, those of Herr Mottl and Dr. Richter—would not play in the open air, and even the Italians at the last moment raised some demur to doing so, they being an opera and concert, and not a garden orchestra. They were distinctly handicapped under the circumstances, and it was also vastly absurd to expect them to play in the middle of a huge garden a work which required such delicacy of treatment as Cowen's "Scandinavian" Symphony, in the two middle movements of which the orchestral details were almost inaudible. I believe that the Scala orchestra will be found at its best in Italian music; and, in fact, an intermezzo and a ballet from Ponchielli's "Prodigal Son" were on Monday emphatically the most effective items of a programme which was devoted otherwise to the music of Berlioz, Reinecke, and Goldmark.

Sir Edward Bradford, I am happy to say, has lost no time in putting a stop to the cab block at Queen's Hall. As I mentioned last week, some strong though perfectly justifiable criticisms upon the police muddle had appeared in the London papers, and two musical critics were invited by Sir Edward Bradford to consult with him upon the point. The difficulty arose in the fact that the police insisted that all carriages setting down at Queen's Hall should come from the north, whereas the large majority of the traffic comes from the south, namely, from Piccadilly, Regent-street, and Oxford-street. Under the old police arrangements these carriages and cabs had to take up in a long rank, which frequently extended up Portland-place and nearly to the Regent's Park. Mr. Rubinstein, the energetic solicitor to the Queen's Hall Company, had in vain expostulated with the police, and had an unsuccessful interview with one of the chiefs at Scotland Yard, who, it seems, laid down the axiom that to introduce any reform was impossible. Last week I expressed a belief that the police took too modest a view of their own capabilities. The result proves that I was right. Whether he was convinced by the eloquence of the musical critics, or whether (which is much more likely) he recognised the absurdity of the situation, Sir Edward Bradford at once put his foot down, and the reform was immediate. At the Lamoureux Concert on the very day that the TRUTH article appeared the traffic regulations were entirely altered, the vehicles coming from the south being lined up Regent-street from Oxford-street, and, when emptied, being sent home along Portland-place. In consequence people were set down without a hitch, and the necessity was avoided of spending something like half an hour upon a long rank on a wet night, and losing the first, and, perhaps, the best portion of the concert.

On Sunday, the veteran Dr. Hopkins played for the last time at the Temple, where, as Canon Ainger, in an eloquent sermon, reminded us, he was the first, in 1843, to introduce into an ordinary church the so-called "Cathedral" service now almost universal. On the previous day Hopkins had completed fifty-five years of service at the Temple—almost a "record" so far as London is concerned—and as he has been granted by the Benchers an ample pension he now takes his well-earned rest. His successor, as I have announced, has already been appointed. Hopkins, who next June will attain the ripe old age of 80, was a choir boy of the Chapel Royal seventy-two years ago, and he is, perhaps, the only man living who sang at the Coronation of William IV. in Westminster Abbey in 1831, and on the steps of St. Paul's Cathedral on the occasion of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee in 1897, a span of sixty-six years. Dr. Hopkins, although retiring from the organ loft, will still have plenty of work to do, for he has undertaken a new and complete revision of the famous "History of the Organ," which he originally wrote in collaboration with Dr. Rimbault in 1855. Since that time, of course, the construction of the instrument has almost entirely altered.

A young British composer, the clever conductor of a suburban choir, has taken St. James's Hall on Wednesday, for the purpose of producing a new Mass in D from his own pen. It would be interesting to know whether the young gentleman is acting under the advice of anybody having experience in London concert life. A Mass by a British composer is never a particularly exhilarating entertainment; but on the third night of the opera season its chances of adequate notice are small indeed. The affection of young British composers for the Roman Catholic office is inexplicable, for I do not recollect a solitary instance in which such a work has attained lasting popularity. It is, of course, all very well in church, but not the wildest stretch of imagination can convert a Mass into an after-dinner entertainment.

That popular young Welsh singer, Miss Maggie Davies, has had to leave England for the benefit of her health, and she is now on a voyage to the Cape. Miss Maud Danks, another promising young vocalist, proposes in a few weeks to leave for the Continent, and in Paris and elsewhere to devote herself to study. Let us hope this implies a study of the languages rather than of the continental methods of singing which, in Miss Danks' case, as indeed it has more than once proved in even more celebrated instances, would be mere deterioration. Miss Macintyre, the Scottish soprano, and Mr. Ben Davies, the Welsh tenor, disdaining the terrors of the Spanish fleet, sail to-day (Wednesday) by the North German Lloyd steamer fo America where towards the end of the month they will take part in the Cincinnati Musical Festival. They will be back in June, and so too will Mme. Albani, who is now successfully touring in Australasia.

Verdi's new sacred works produced in Paris last Holy Thursday, namely, a "Stabat Mater" for chorus and orchestra, a "Te Deum" for double choir and orchestra, and a "Hymn to the Virgin" for female voices unaccompanied, will be produced for the first time in England at the Gloucester Festival next September. They will there take the place of Brahms' "German Requiem," which would probably prove rather a tough nut for the Gloucester Festival Choir to crack.

Mr. Bispham, I understand, proposes during the London season to play Beethoven in a performance of the dramatic piece entitled "Adelaide," in which he has already appeared in New York. The drama is an historical absurdity, and perhaps its most remarkable feature is that Mr. Bispham has nothing whatever to sing in it, "Adelaide" being given to another vocalist.

The bands of the London County Council gave a dress rehearsal at the Queen's Hall last Thursday. They certainly showed that the orchestras engaged for the present season which, by the way, commences next Monday, comprise some capital performers, who have obviously been well trained. On the other hand, there is no improvement at all in the programmes, which consist for the most part of trashy selections based upon music-hall and variety-piece ditties. It has been proved over and over again that miscellaneous audiences fully appreciate the best music, and they would certainly prefer something very much better than the stuff now set before them by the musical chiefs of the London County Council. In this respect it is not the people but the conductors who urgently require education. There need be no fear of going over the heads of the populace, and, at any rate, ratepayers who ungrudgingly pay large sums for these County Council bands, have a right to expect something much better than some of the music now put before them.

Saturday the 28th is at present fixed for the production of "The Beauty Stone" at the Savoy, and accordingly "The Gondoliers" will cease its run next Saturday week. Mr. D'Oyly Carte seems fated to have to withdraw his Gilbert and Sullivan revivals in the height of their success. "The Mikado" was thus taken off the bills in favour of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's comic opera, and now, despite the fact that it still draws large audiences, "The Gondoliers" has to disappear for the new Sullivan and Pinero opera. Indeed, if the new work had not been produced before June, it would have stood little or no chance of a run before August, notoriously a dull time for theatres. Messrs. Devoll and Isham are still announced as making "their first appearance in London," but as I have already stated they have more than once appeared here at concerts under the management of Mr. Cavour.

MERRYWEATHERS' HIGH-CLASS GARDEN HOSE is the Hose of the day. Write for samples and Lists. "Hoses bought ten years ago still in use."—MERRYWEATHERS, 63, Long-acre, London, W.C.

A rumour has appeared in print that Mme. Patti is likely to be engaged by Mr. Mapleson. There is not the slightest truth in this report, for which I do not suppose Mr. Mapleson himself is in any way responsible. In all probability it is evolved from the inner consciousness of the writer of the paragraph. At any rate, Mme. Patti does not intend to sing at all in London this summer except at two concerts at the Albert Hall managed by Messrs. Harrison, a concert at Queen's Hall for Mr. Ganz's jubilee, and the Festival concert at the Crystal Palace.

I fear that the Crystal Palace people have not had much luck this spring in their Saturday concerts. Nevertheless the autumn performances attracted large audiences, and accordingly they are to be tried again this year commencing on August 8. Herr Rosenthal will then make his reappearance, and on November 5, M. Paderewski, who will be fulfilling some engagements in London and the provinces, will be the chief attraction. Last Saturday Mr. Manns took his benefit before a large audience. The chief items of a long programme were Saint Saëns' fourth pianoforte concerto, well played by Mme. Zeisler, and airs for Mme. Russell and Mr. Lloyd. The British tenor has discovered two songs to add to his repertory, which had now become a little hackneyed. It is possible to have even too much of "Wake from thy grave, Giselle," and "Lend me your aid." The two new songs in question are a pretty air "In the Springtime," described as a "madrigal" from Gounod's "Pet Dove," and the "Song of Happiness," from Berlioz's "Lelio."

The concerts of the week have been very numerous, and I can only deal briefly with a few of them. The final performance at the Albert Hall on Thursday brought a repetition of Sir Frederick Bridge's stirring setting of Kipling's Jingo lines, "The Flag of England," and Sullivan's "Golden Legend." Mme. Grimaldi, a clever pianist though not a star, has introduced a pianoforte quartet in E flat by an Austrian composer, Herr Rabl, a gentleman who seems to have assimilated music of widely different schools. The Strolling players, under Mr. Norfolk Megone, at their Queen's Hall concert last Thursday, gave a capital performance of Dvorak's symphony in D; M. Lamoureux at his last concert drew so unexpectedly a large audience, that another concert was at once arranged for the benefit of that enterprising manager, Mr. Robert Newman, while clever Mme. Mathis and about a quarter of a hundred others have announced pianoforte and various recitals.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—The Grand Bazaar at the Empress Rooms, Kensington, was a grand success, if crowds of visitors can make such things successes. We went on the opening day, and saw the dainty little Duchess of Fife preside on the occasion, her husband saying the necessary words for her. She was dressed with her usual delicate simplicity, wearing a striped grey silk gown, the front of it white veiled with spotted black net, embroidered in steel. H.R.H. keeps her lovely little figure, and is as scrupulously neat in every way as her mother. Her headgear, a toast-coloured toque, was trimmed with a little bright pink, and she wore a white veil. I noticed that while the speeches were going on the Duchess watched with evident disapproval the rather heroic measures adopted by some of the stewards to clear a way for the Royal party to pass round the stalls. It would have been better, surely, to have put up the barriers at first, instead of allowing people to stand for half an hour where they could have a good view of the opening ceremony, and then, at the last moment, making them retreat into the background. Lady Bective, in a very simple black gown and her white muslin saleswoman apron, looked queenly and very handsome, throwing all the younger women into the shade. About three-fourths of them wore grey. There is a wonderful unanimity about that colour just now. Miss Marion Terry looked quite charming in a pale tone of this fashionable tint. Lady Annesley's beautiful face and fine figure were set forth to advantage by a well-fitting blue toilette. Lady Samuelson was all in white, a curious mixture of serge and silk. She wore a picturesque black hat. Most of the younger women had their collars cut away, and wore pearls. It is a pretty fashion when the throat is white and round. Mrs. Alfred Harmsworth had a sweet gown of striped grey silk bordered with chinchilla, the bodice being folded over at the back with a large steel buckle. Lady Maitland was as ornamental an item on the platform as her small boy in his military dress. He was balanced by the youthful son of Mrs. Macnaughten, in Highland costume.

Upstairs there were entertainments going on all the afternoon and evening. We mounted many stairs and attended the first. They were dealt out in half-hours, a very wise proceeding. Our share was a pleasant one, including a serenade sung by Mrs. Carl Meyer, who looked charming in creamy white, with a touch of pale blue in her black hat and a row of pearls round her neck. Mr. Maurice Farkoa sang most sympathetically, not to say coaxingly, a plea for charity composed by "Lambert" and dedicated to the Duchess of Fife. The Earl of Rosslyn was hovering about, arranging for his duologue with Miss Irene Vanbrugh, but we were too tired to wait for it—to say nothing of having to climb the stairs again. At the moment it seemed an undertaking far beyond mortal strength.

I hear of dresses in Paris made entirely of point lace over satin. Does it not sound sumptuous enough for fairy tales? I went to interview Hayward on the subject, and found that they had removed from their old quarters to 11, Old Bond-street. There we heard that real lace is to be tremendously in vogue this season, not only in the usual large pieces, but also as trimmings and in cravats, fichus, and sleeves. You cannot imagine, without having seen them, how intensely becoming these real lace sleeves are to the arms. The prettiest are those made of point Duchess and real Brussels. They are also made of chiffon and insertions of real lace. We were shown a perfectly exquisite specimen of point d'Argentan, the property, at one time, of Queen Marie Louise, Napoleon having presented it to his second wife. The whole history of the lace is attested by documents sealed and signed by various notaries, whose addresses and titles are all given. There are four yards of it, and the design is of an unique character. There are birds and flowers, all executed in an infinity of varied stitches, the whole having an effect of indescribable richness and refinement. Another lovely and inimitable piece, which some wealthy American is sure to pick up, is pillow lace, a long and perfect piece which once belonged to the Doge Grimani of Venice. Juno is represented seated under a canopy, rendered in the finest possible stitches, with her peacock by her.

You will like to hear of some of the modern ways of using old lace in dress. Very tempting they are to the purchaser. There are cravats with square ends like a Cavalier's tie, the lace having chiffon under it, a touch which is highly effective. Others, in which short ends of good lace have been utilised, have a bow of chiffon at one side and a deftly-arranged piece of lace at the other. The contrast between the pure white of the chiffon and the mellow tone of the lace is good. Made up in similar ways was some Lisle lace, the design of which was copied from the antique. Fichus of India muslin, bordered with point d'Alençon appliqué round the edge, were very taking. Others had small knots strewn over with baby ribbon, sewn on in the form of true-lover's knots. One of the prettiest, as well as simplest, was in spotted Alençon with frills round the edge. A sweet little border of narrow white gauze ribbon edged each frill. In a week or two the first floor is to be occupied by models of the newest designs in Charavel's well-known lingerie, skirts, and teagowns. Frequenters of Paris know this house and will be glad to have the models brought over here, freshly every month, for their choice.

FASHIONS UP TO DATE.—An elegant and svelte figure is produced by the easy and perfect-fitting anatomical corset shaped by the experts, Mesdames SYKES, JOSEPHINE, & Co., The Celebrated Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-st., Oxford-circus, London, W.

"MADGE'S advice—The "most up-to-date shop" for original Specialities in Shirts, Veils, Gloves, &c., is LEE, 100, Wigmore-st.

We sauntered up Bond-street, and came to the conclusion that it grows narrower and narrower every season, by which I mean that the traffic in this thoroughfare increases every year. We turned into Oliver Holmes' to see about your evening gown, and found it progressing satisfactorily. We saw a lovely evening dress, which I must endeavour to describe to you. It was palest green satin of richest and softest texture, and made with a long over-skirt with rounded edges, the whole trimmed with ruches of chiffon in the same tone of green and with lace in a warm tint of yellowish biscuit. It is a beautiful combination. There was a long sash, and it, too, was trimmed with ruches of green chiffon. The bodice was trimmed with lace and chiffon and embroideries in pearl, brilliants, and rubies, taking lines such as make the figure look its very best. This would be a lovely dress in white or orchid-mauve satin, on either of which the yellowish lace would be delicious. A pink tea-gown in rich, wide-ribbed Irish poplin, had incrustations of cream-coloured lace laid on over it. The front was filled in with pink chiffon, on which was laid a deep flounce of the creamy lace. At neck and waist the poplin was gathered in the centre. The sleeves were in soft pink chiffon, with a couple of rosettes in front of each just above the wrist.

Among the high-bodiced gowns we liked a blue China silk, the skirt made with a series of frills, while the bodice had Cluny lace very cleverly put on, revers of it in front being edged with frills of the blue chiffon. The sleeves were soft and hung in folds that had the look of arranging themselves, the very highest quality in draperies, as you know.

Printed muslins are to be worn this year again, and we saw one in a mixture of pink and yellow, a combination that may sound crude, but which is far from being so in reality. There were square revers in front edged with rucked chiffon in yellow, like the little folded chemisette. Over these revers fell others made of creamy lace, edged with chiffon frills. There is a dreadful quantity of work in the dresses this season. This sweet gown was finished at the waist with folds of bright pink glacé ribbon ending in a bow at the left side.

A nice afternoon dress was in hyacinth-blue taffetas with a little pattern on it in white. The only trimming on the skirt consisted of ends of rather wide black velvet caught with a steel buckle at the back. The bodice was black lace over white silk, the sleeves being made of the taffetas. The chemisette and collar were in folded chiffon of the hyacinth colour, and a large chiffon bow that finished the front was in the two shades. You would certainly have fallen in love with a Granny mantle in blue satin edged all round with frills of the same and of chiffon, also blue, and showing the white satin lining. The corners were rounded and cut away, and the frills followed the curve, coming up to the neck, which had a high collar lined with white satin edged with blue chiffon. The capes were very tempting. One, quite short, was in white silk covered with a veil of Chantilly over an intermediate one of black spotted net bordered with a ruche of the same. Much elaboration went to the making of this covetable little garment. The yoke was a series of small tucks over white, and there was a high collar with a couple of thousand stitches in it, at the very least.

I see that arrangements are being made for a military tournament, gymkhanas, polo pony races, a horse and pony show, with driving and coaching competitions, at the Ranelagh Club, Barnes, which must be looking quite lovely just now. It is by far the prettiest club near London. Herr Moritz Wurms' Blue Viennese band is to play there every Sunday afternoon and evening during the season, and his Drawing Room band—discoursing what may be described as mitigated music—will perform in the new dining gallery every evening. On Saturday afternoons the full band of the 15th Hussars will play, and on Saturday evenings the string band of the same regiment. Among the fixtures announced for this month are two polo matches for next Saturday, the Aldershot Division and the Royal Horse Guards against the Club; and on the 21st a meet of the Coaching Club. This will certainly be a smart occasion, and a good opportunity for displaying and reviewing summer toilettes.

There are to be some wonderful fireworks at the Crystal Palace on Thursday of next week. A battle-piece is to be the leading feature, in which all the modern appliances of war that now form part of a naval engagement will be introduced, and the blowing up and sinking of a large battleship will be depicted.

What a long time it takes to send out cards for a ball, reception, or at home! An admirable idea has been acted upon by the Belgrave Ladies' Agency, 83, Ebury-street, in arranging to supply, at a moment's notice, ladies who will take all this trouble off the hands of the hostess. I feel sure that this branch of their business will be as highly appreciated as their excellent House and Servant Agency.

The Women-writers' Dinner is fixed for the 20th of next month, at the usual place, the Criterion Restaurant. Mrs. Craigie (John Oliver Hobbes) is to be chairwoman of the dinner this year.

I wish I could properly depict for you the marvellous snake-suggesting gown that Miss Ellen Terry wears in the garden scene of "The Medicine Man" at the Lyceum. It is purple, green, and blue, all shoaling into each other in a kind of lividly lurid fantasy, the more striking as the outlines are of the most up-to-date description. The green combs in the hair, the blue and green necklace, and the sinuosity of the train, all carry out the serpent idea. Dr. Tregenna must himself have suggested the idea of this dress, which should subtly convey to the wearer the weird cast of thought his mesmerism is intended to produce. In the matter of mere effectiveness it quite casts into the shade the elaborately beautiful ball gown in the first act and the simple loveliness of the soft grey dress in the second. Miss Rose Leclercq and Miss Maud Milton also wear lovely clothes.

Half London was at the Earl's Court Exhibition on the opening day—last Saturday. Representatives of every class were to be seen mingling together in the grounds, round the band stands, riding in the Japanese 'rickshaw, viewing the Naval Engagement, listening to the Hungarian minstrels, and crowding round the entrance to the hall where the Lilliputian Comedy Company performed. This seemed to be the great attraction of the day. Earl's Court does not lack variety in the matter of amusement. There are the great wheel, the Belvedere tower, the switchback, and a score of side-shows, all of which would take about a week to explore with thoroughness. A shilling is not a high price for "twelve hours' unalloyed happiness," is it?

We have been testing the merits of "Glebe" pure cane sugar, and find it superior to any we have ever used. The greatest test is in spinning, and it spins beautifully, which the ordinary cheap sugars will not do. The "granulated" is as pure as the loaf; it spins equally well, and is fine enough for ordinary cakes. The "castor" is also perfectly pure and unadulterated, being snowy white and glistening. The "glebe" golden syrup is a delicate amber, and is most attractive in a glass jar on the breakfast-table, where it is much appreciated by adults and children, its flavour being unsurpassed. Would you like to know how to spin sugar? It is very simple when you have the pure cane sugar, and it adds so much to the appearance of sweet dishes:—

Put ½ lb. of "Glebe" pure cane sugar into a stewpan with a

New Spring Fashions.—Messrs. Redfern have now on view in their Showrooms a unique display of Toilettes, illustrative of the latest London and Paris fashions, and to which they invite an inspection.—26, Conduit-street, London, W.

For Mosquito Bites nothing allays the irritation so quickly as Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia, and it is an immediate remedy for Wasp or Bee Stings.

gill of cold water and allow it to dissolve before boiling, then simmer until it turns a golden colour. Test it by dipping a wooden spoon in the syrup, and then into cold water; if the sugar snaps it is ready, but if at all sticky it must be boiled a little longer. Meanwhile, oil the marble slab and the blade of the palette knife, place the stewpan containing the syrup on the right hand, hold the knife in the left hand and proceed to throw the sugar over the knife, when it will be found to fall into clear, bright threads of gold.

This is a pretty dish of oranges, not difficult to make when the art of boiling sugar is mastered :—

Put ½ lb. of pure cane sugar into a stewpan with a gill of cold water, when it is dissolved, boil to the snap. Have a dozen, or more, sections of Jaffa oranges ready drained on a cloth. Take each one separately on a skewer, dip them in the syrup and place them on an oiled baking-sheet, or slab. When the oranges are all coated, warm the syrup and proceed to dip them again, arranging them in a circle on a silver dish. Put whipped cream in the centre and garnish with spun sugar.

"Clear beetroot soup" is novel and delicious. It is particularly suitable for a hunt ball supper :—

Slice a large, raw, peeled beetroot into a stewpan, add a sliced tomato and a sliced onion, cover with two quarts of good, clear consommé. Bring slowly to the boil and simmer for two hours, adding cold water at intervals, to keep it its original quantity. Strain the soup carefully through a cloth, add a few drops of cochineal to make it a bright red, a wineglass of claret, a pinch of cayenne pepper, and salt to taste. Make the soup quite hot, and serve it with plainly whipped cream, handed in a separate sauceboat.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

CIGARES DE JOY
(JOY'S CIGARETTES)
Immediately Relieve
ASTHMA, WHEEZING, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS
Chemists & Stores, box of 35, 2/6, or Post Free from WILCOX & Co., 83, Mortimer Street, London, W.
TRIAL SAMPLE FREE.

WHY DRINK INFERIOR TEA?
UNITED KINGDOM TEA COMPANY'S TEAS
DIRECT FROM THE GROWERS.
1/-, 1/3, 1/4, 1/6, 1/7, 1/9, & 2/- per lb., DELIVERED CARRIAGE PAID.
Write for Samples, sent free, taste them, and judge for yourselves. Amazing superiority in Quality! Great Economy in prices.
Offices: 21, MINCING LANE, LONDON, E.C.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.
Liability under this Act is underwritten by the
RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE CO.,
Established 1849. Capital £1,000,000.
ACCIDENT ASSURANCE. FIDELITY GUARANTEE.
64, CORNHILL, LONDON. A. VIAN, Secretary.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide (259 pgs.), 3d., "How to open respectably £20 to £2,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., Euston-rd., Ldn. Hairdressers fitted.—H. MYERS.

GIVEN AWAY with every 6d. & 1/- Bottle of
John Bond's Crystal Palace Marking Ink
Awarded. Forty-four Gold Medals, Diplomas and Royal Appointments.
GOLD MEDAL
A voucher entitling purchasers to their Name or Monogram Rubber Stamp for marking linen or stamping paper. The name is elegantly mounted on a Nickel Silver Pen and Pencil Case, with enlarged 1s. size.
Works: 75, Southgate-road, London, N.

HAMPTON & SONS, Ltd., pay Carriage to any Railway Station in the United Kingdom on Purchases over 20s.
HAMPTON & SONS (LTD) GALLERIES
For the Best Values for furnishing Houses throughout for £250, £500, £750, £1,000, £1,500, and £2,000 respectively, see the Illustrated Estimates in Hampton & Sons' Catalogue, sent free.
NOW exhibit a Unique Display of all the Latest and Most Tasteful Productions in Decorations, Furniture, Upholstery, Carpets, Furnishing Fabrics, Blinds, Linens, Lace Curtains, China & Glass, Ironmongery, &c.
Together with the most extensive range of
Genuine Antique Furniture
To be seen in London. All marked in plain figures at the MOST COMPETITIVE LONDON PRICES. A Visit of Inspection always appreciated.
Hampton & Sons will prepare, free of charge, Suggestive Schemes and Competitive Estimates for the Decorating and Furnishing of an entire house or a single room in any of the Traditional Styles or in the most tasteful modern manner. See Illustrated Catalogue, sent free.
PALL MALL EAST, TRAFALGAR-SQ., S.W.
CABINET FACTORIES AND GENERAL WORKS: BELVEDERE RD., S.E.

Queen Anne Easy Chair, Upholstered in best manner, all Horse Hair and covered in Morocco Leather, £7 15s.; in Tapestry, from 70s.

A Feature of the Metropolis. SPIERS & POND'S
CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly Circus, London, W.
EAST ROOM. Finest Cuisine, unsurpassed by the most renowned Parisian Restaurants. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, à la carte and prix fixe. Viennese Band.
GRAND HALL. Musical Dinner 3/6 per head. Accompanied by the Imperial Austrian Band.
WEST ROOM. Academy Luncheon 2/6 Diner Parisien 5/-, during both of which the renowned Mandolin Quartette performs.
BUFFET & GRILL ROOM. Quick service à la carte and moderate prices. Joints in each room fresh from the Spit every half-hour.
AMERICAN BAR. Service of special American Dishes, Grills, &c.
Splendid Suites of Rooms for Military and other Dinners.

THE CELEBRATED

GR WHISKEY

Distillers' Guarantee of Purity and Age.

SEVEN YEARS OLD

Price 3/6 per Bottle.

In Cases of 3 Galls. (carriage paid), 42/-

WHOLESALE ONLY:

The Dublin Distillers' Co., Ltd.

Geo. Roe & Co. (Dublin).

Established 1757.

If any difficulty is experienced in obtaining this Whiskey from your WINE MERCHANT or GROCER, please write direct to the Distillery for the name and address of the nearest Trader selling same. On receipt of application, with 3d. in stamps to cover cost of postage, a free sample will be forwarded.

FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

MELLIN'S FOOD

When prepared is similar to Breast Milk.

SAMPLES POST FREE FROM

MELLIN'S FOOD WORKS, PECKHAM, S.E.

To

LADY CYCLISTS.

A

"PIRLE" COSTUME

Always Looks Fresh.

AS IT IS

unharmed by dirt or rain,
it does not mark or shrink,
and when dried and brushed
LOOKS AS GOOD AS NEW.

FROM LEADING DRAPERS.
Or particulars from—
E. RIPLEY & SON'S
LONDON OFFICE:
1000, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET.

INDISPENSABLE
For Outdoor Wear.

J. W. BENSON, LTD.

25, Old Bond Street, W.
LATEST NOVELTY,
TURQUOISE, PAVÉ JEWELLERY.
initiated by
J. W. BENSON, Ltd.

Pearls and Turquoise, £2 11s.

"It is quaint, pretty, and extremely inexpensive."—Queen, May 7th, 1898.

Turquoise and Pearls, £2 18s.

Catalogues Free.
Selections on Approval.

Turquoise and Pearls, £1 11s.

Steam Factory. 62 & 64, LUDGATE HILL, & 28, ROYAL EXCHANGE, E.C

MADE BY
POPE MANUFACTURING Co
HARTFORD, Conn., U.S.A.

Illustrated Catalogues, showing both CHAIN and CHAINLESS Models, free from European Representatives:

MARKT & CO.,
25 & 26, Shoe-lane, E.C.

West End Depot:
21, Baker-street, W.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

AMÉLIE RIVES'S new Novel, MERIEL, by the author of "The Quick or the Dead?" &c., is nearly ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE HERITAGE OF EVE. By H. H. SPETTIGUE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A RACE FOR MILLIONS. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Good wine needs no bush, neither does this first-rate detective story need further recommendation than the advice to get it at once. The first chapter once begun, the reader is bound to go on until the last is reached; then—so successfully has Mr. Christie Murray cultivated the 'soul of wit'—he will probably wish there were more."—Vanity Fair.

ACADEMY NOTES, 1898 (originated by HENRY BLACKBURN), now ready, contains a number of Copyright Pictures not found in any other publication. 1s.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE OF THE PARIS SALON, with over 300 Drawings, 3s.

THROUGH THE GOLD-FIELDS OF ALASKA TO BERING STRAITS. By HARRY DE WINDT. With 34 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

"The story of his rescue at half-past the eleventh hour by a belated whaler is one of the most dramatic and thrilling bits of romance in real life I have read for some time."—Pall Mall Gazette.

LIFE OF NAPOLEON III. By ARCHIBALD FORBES. With 37 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"It carries the reader breathless to the closing scene at Chislehurst."—Punch.

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

A WOMAN TEMPTED HIM. By WILLIAM WESTALL, Author of "With the Red Eagle," &c. Second Edition.

"The book is in every respect a delightful one."—Daily Telegraph.

WAS SHE JUSTIFIED? By FRANK BARRETT, Author of "Folly Morrison," &c.

"The story is a capital one from beginning to end."—World.

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST. By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Beyond the Pale," &c.

"A very enchanting story. . . . a very delightful novel."—Vanity Fair.

FORTUNE'S GATE. By ALAN ST. AUBYN, Author of "A Fellow of Trinity."

"One of the wholesomest and most delightful excursions into fiction"—Morning Leader.

A WOMAN WORTH WINNING. By G. MANVILLE FENN, Author of "The White Virgin."

"The book should not fail to prove enjoyable to every one who takes it up."—Scotsman.

COLONEL THORNDYKE'S SECRET. By G. A. HENTY, Author of "Rujub the Juggler."

"A rattling good story."—Daily Mail.

NEW 2/- NOVELS.

THE PROFESSOR'S EXPERIMENT. By Mrs. HUNGERFORD.

MARRIED OR SINGLE? By B. M. CROKER.

LADY KILPATRICK. By ROBERT BUCHANAN.

IS HE THE MAN? By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

THE RIDDLE RING. By JUSTIN McCARTHY.

LONG ODDS. By HAWLEY SMART.

NEW 3/6 NOVELS.

A FOUNTAIN SEALED. By WALTER BESANT. With Frontispiece.

A MODERN DICK WHITTINGTON; or, a Patron of Letters. By JAMES PAYN. With Portrait of the Author.

NULMA. By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED, Author of "Mrs. Tregaskiss."

LOVICE. By Mrs. HUNGERFORD, Author of "Lady Patty."

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S

NEW AND RECENT NOVELS.

A PHILOSOPHER'S ROMANCE. By JOHN BERWICK. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BY THE SAME.

THE SECRET OF SAINT FLOREL. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Daily Telegraph.—"A fascinating story. . . . The thrilling interest of the narrative is continuously sustained. . . . Teems with novel incidents and bristles with exciting adventures."

THE CONCERT-DIRECTOR. By NELLIE K. BLISSETT, Author of "The Wisdom of the Simple." Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MAN OF THE FAMILY: A Story of Fortunatus and the Barbarians. By F. EMILY PHILLIPS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Academy.—"A clever story."

BY THE SAME.

THE EDUCATION OF ANTONIA. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Daily Chronicle.—"She has keen observation, and her characters are drawn with clearness and decision of touch."

THE FOREST LOVERS: A ROMANCE. by MAURICE HEWLETT. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready May 17.

BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

CORLEONE: A TALE OF SICILY. In 2 vols. Globe 8vo, 12s.

Times.—"The most attractive tale he has yet written. . . . It is many a day since we have read a better one."

Speaker.—"Almost, if not quite, the strongest and most striking of the brilliant series of romances to which it belongs."

A ROSE OF YESTERDAY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Daily News.—"We cannot but admire this poignant and beautiful story."

TAQUISARA. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Cannot fail to be read with interest and pleasure by all to whom clever characterisation and delicate drawing make appeal."

BY MRS. HUGH FRASER.

A CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Literature.—"Her tale is at once exquisite and full of life."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"A thoroughly enjoyable, mirthful comedy."

PALLADIA. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Saturday Review.—"It has a capital plot, fascinating characters, and much dramatic interest. . . . A good piece of work, full of interest and humour."

BY JAMES LANE ALLEN.

Ninety-fifth Thousand.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Church Quarterly Review.—"A charmingly sweet and pathetic story. . . . It is long since we met in fiction a more fascinating creation than Mrs. Falconer."

Edinburgh Review.—"The book is a real effort of the creative imagination, a real addition to the literature of its country, and one which should serve as fruitful and permanent example."

BY A. E. W. MASON.

THE COURTSHIP OF MORRICE BUCKLER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Athenæum.—"No one who takes up his novel is likely to lay it down unfinished."

Punch.—"Readers will, unless gratitude be extinct, thank me for my strong recommendation as to the excellent entertainment provided for them in 'The Courtship of Morrice Buckler.'"

THE PHILANDERERS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Westminster Gazette.—"We can say without qualification that this is a clever and original story, told with much freshness and vivacity."

Speaker.—"A notable addition to the fiction of the day."

BY A NEW WRITER.

FOR PRINCE AND PEOPLE: A Tale of Old Genoa. By E. K. SANDERS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Saturday Review.—"A well-told story, and carries one through from start to finish with a succession of stirring episodes that never flags."

MACMILLAN & CO., Limited, London.

ON THE STŒCHIOLOGICAL CURE OF

CONSUMPTION,

ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, INFLUENZA, AND ALL THROAT AND LUNG COMPLAINTS By JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.

One Shilling, Post Free.

T. BURLEIGH, LATE DAVID SCOTT, 370, OXFORD STREET.

'Talking of the illustrated magazines brings us to the ever delightful HARPER'S In spite of the keen competition, this still remains the brightest and best illustrated magazine in the language.'

THE DAILY NEWS.

THE

JUNE HARPER

Ready May 20, forms the First Part of the New Volume. Price One Shilling; or post free to any address, 15/- a year.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, London and New York.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. An Illustrated Treatise based on the special practice and observation of the last 15 years. Price 3s. 6d.; post free, 3s. 8d.
London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

Post free, 1s. 1d.
EXHAUSTION AND PREMATURE DECLINE IN MAN.
A treatise on the restorative effects of Electrolysis.
HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand, London.

JUST ISSUED.

THE TEMPLE (London),

Containing Twelve ARTIST'S proof ETCHINGS by PERCY THOMAS, R.P.E., and INTRODUCTORY NOTES, &c., by the Master of The Temple (REV. CANON AINGER).
FROST & REED, 47, Queen's-road, and 8, Clare-street, Bristol, or all Booksellers and Fine Art Dealers.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, & SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS NOW OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 PAGES) SENT GRATIS AND POST FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.

The List contains Popular Works in Travel, Sport, History, Biography, Science, and Fiction. Also New and Surplus Copies of French, German, Italian, and Spanish Books.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED,

30—34, NEW OXFORD ST.; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. LONDON; AND AT BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY.

Square Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

A MIDDY'S RECOLLECTIONS,

1853 to 1860. By Rear-Admiral the Hon. VICTOR A. MONTAGU. Illustrated with Photogravures and Half-tone Blocks.

ARISTOCRACY AND EVOLUTION,

A Study of the Rights, the Origin, and the Social Functions of the Wealthier Classes. By W. H. MALLOCK, Author of "Labour and the Popular Welfare," "Classes and Masses," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

"With the main idea of this work, which is quite the most important that Mr. Mallock has yet produced, we do not think there can be any dispute, though most of the active sociologists in England either ignore that idea or are openly hostile to it."—Spectator.

HIS GRACE O' THE GUNNE.

By I. HOOPER. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

"A really beautiful story, in which sentiment, romance, and adventure are delightfully mingled. . . . How the youth, being generous at heart, responds to the better influences among which he finds himself, and ends by giving his life to save the younger lady of the house, who is the exquisitely good and sweet heroine of the story, we will not tell. But it is all told admirably in the book. The relations between the child and the young man who has undertaken to be his murderer are indicated with perfect delicacy and pathos, and Mr. Hooper may be congratulated on having added one more to the gallery of ideal children of fiction. If this is, as we suppose, Mr. Hooper's first novel, he has made an excellent beginning, and we hope he will follow it up with equally good works of the same kind."—The Guardian.

THE STORY OF GLADSTONE'S

LIFE. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Containing 45 Illustrations, mostly Page Portraits, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods. In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

"This is a charmingly written sketch of Mr. Gladstone's public career, with some interesting glimpses at the same time into his private life."—The Observer.

WHO'S WHO, 1898.

An Annual Biographical Dictionary. FIFTIETH YEAR OF ISSUE. Containing 1,143 New Biographies. In crown 8vo, 864 pages, bound in cloth gilt, with gilt edges and rounded corners, price 3s. 6d. net.

"This is undoubtedly the handiest biographical dictionary and compendium of information, referring to prominent persons and their doings, in existence."—Nature.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho-square, London.

This Day. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

FERGUS HUME'S NEW NOVEL.

HAGAR OF THE PAWNSHOP.

Country Life says: "Full of incident and interest, and a marvellous study. . . . The beauty of the story lies in the consummate skill with which the author works out the character of Hagar. . . . The wealth of imagination is prodigious, and the whole book is exceedingly clever and entertaining."

The most weird story published for many a day.

By RICHARD MARSH.

This Day. Price 6s. With Illustrations. FIFTH EDITION.

THE BEETLE: A Mystery.

The Daily Graphic says:—"'The Beetle' revels in the weird. It is the kind of book which you put down only for the purpose of turning up the gas and making sure that no person or thing is standing behind your chair—and it is a book which no one will put down until finished except for this reason."

The Speaker says:—"A story of the most terrific kind is duly recorded in this extremely powerful book. The skill with which its fantastic horrors are presented to us is undeniable."

LONDON: SKEFFINGTON & SON, 163, Piccadilly, W.

Publishers to H. M. the Queen and to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

NEW WORK BY DR. PARKER.

Now Ready, in 1 vol. crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CHRISTIAN PROFILES

IN A PAGAN MIRROR.

By JOSEPH PARKER, D.D.,

Minister of the City Temple, London.

An enlightened Pagan lady comes to England to acquaint herself with the beliefs, the habits, and the customs of Christians. She has long been asking herself such questions as "Who are the Christians? What do they believe? What life do they lead? How do they conduct themselves towards each other?" Having made enquiry and received impressions she reports to a friend in India.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 13, Great Marlborough-street.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

SALE ON ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OF THE LATE OWNER.

The HEAN CASTLE ESTATES, near Tenby.—The very valuable FREEHOLD MANORIAL and RESIDENTIAL ESTATE, known as "Hean Castle," extending to about 635 acres, one mile from Saundersfoot Station on the G.N.R., and within four miles of the fashionable seaside town of Tenby. It comprises a grand baronial, modern, castellated Mansion, occupying a charming position on an eminence backed by forest trees, seated in a beautifully undulating and well-timbered park, and possessing uninterrupted sea frontages to Carmarthen Bay. Several well-cultivated farms. The charming Residence known as "Netherwood" and numerous small accommodation holdings and building land adjoining the port of Saundersfoot. The Castle contains 5 handsome reception-rooms, 18 bed and dressing rooms, all commanding magnificent sea and landscape views. Stabling for 10 horses, and beautiful pleasure-grounds and gardens well stocked and finely timbered with grand old specimen shrubs and trees. In the grounds immediately surrounding the Castle are golf links, cricket ground, training gallop, racquet court, and 5 tennis courts. Splendid yachting, sea fishing, and bathing can be enjoyed, the sands of Carmarthen Bay being some of the finest in the world. Good shooting over the Estate and hunting with two packs of foxhounds, also otter hounds. The Castle was erected by the late owner regardless of cost, and the reception rooms are handsomely panelled in oak, ash, and pitch pine. Also the charming FREEHOLD MARINE ESTATE known as "Trevayne," extending to about 310 acres, in the out-liberties of and overlooking the town of Tenby.

It comprises two excellent farms, known as "The Lodge" and "Trevayne." The estate has a very valuable sea frontage of over 1½ miles, and abounds in magnificent sea and landscape views. It affords unlimited facilities for development as a first-class Marine Building Estate, the sands adjoining the property being equal to those at Tenby. Included in the estate are the well-known Monkstone Rocks, forming a natural bay and shelter. Another very desirable and valuable property, known as the "Moreton Estate," extending to about 620 acres, situate near Tenby, with several well tenanted farms and numerous small accommodation holdings. The three estates extend to an area of about 1,560 acres, and produce an actual and fairly estimated income for the castle and park in hand of about £3,000 per annum. All the lands are well let, and offer one of the soundest investments.

MESSRS. HAMPTON & SONS, in conjunction with Messrs. COCKETT & HENDERSON, are instructed to offer the above by Auction, first as a whole, and if not sold in that manner, then in numerous convenient lots to suit all buyers, at the MART, Tokenhouse Yard, London, E.C., on TUESDAY, JUNE 28th, 1898, at TWO o'clock precisely.

Particulars, plans, views, and conditions of sale may be obtained of Messrs. E. F. & H. LANDON, Solicitors, 53, New Broad-street, London, E.C.; Messrs. FOX & WHITTUCK, Solicitors, 33, Corn-street, Bristol; Messrs. HAMPTON & SONS, Estate Agents, 1, Cockspur-street, Pall Mall, London, S.W.; and Messrs. COCKETT & HENDERSON, Estate Agents, 72, Bishopsgate-street, London, E.C.

The WEIR-HOUSE, Teddington.

A singularly beautiful Freehold Residential Property, unequalled in position, between the Lock and Weir, and in its admirable arrangement comparing favourably with properties of greater pretension. The residence is surrounded by picturesque and finely-timbered grounds, and contains 14 bed and dressing rooms, square entrance hall panelled in oak, spacious reception rooms, and every appointment conducive to comfort and enjoyment. Fine modern stabling for 10 horses, arranged round paved courtyard; delightful pleasure gardens, with lawns sloping to the river bank adorned with fine forest trees, and affording lovely views; pretty boathouse; vegetable and fruit gardens; small farmery, gardeners' cottage, and two paddocks, having extensive frontages to main roads, the whole covering an area of about 7 acres.

MESSRS. ST. QUINTIN & SON will SELL by AUCTION, at the MART, E.C., on MONDAY, JUNE 6th, 1898, the above exceptionally charming PROPERTY, within less than an hour's journey of Town.—Particulars, plan, and conditions of sale may be obtained at the Mart, E.C.; of Messrs. POLLOCK & CO., Solicitors, 6, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.; and of the Auctioneers, 50, Threadneedle-street, E.C.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended.—Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 (Gerrard).

TATTERSALL'S THURSDAYS' SALES at ALBERT GATE.

Messrs. TATTERSALL beg to give notice that their THURSDAYS' SALES have commenced, and will be continued during the season.

SALES ON MONDAYS AND THURSDAYS.

Fourth Edition (Sixth Thousand), crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HEALTH and CONDITION in the ACTIVE and the SEDENTARY, by N. E. YORKE-DAVIES, Royal Coll. Phys. Lond., Author of "Foods for the Fat."—Contents:—Perfect health, how to attain. Deviations from health. Insidious causes of disease. Causes of premature decay. Diseases due to diet only curable by diet. Epochs in life. Exigencies of modern society. Idiosyncrasies. The foundation of health. Tight lacing, diseases from. Preservation of female beauty. A short life and a merry one. Constitutional flaws. Aristocratic ailments. The London season. The débutante. The diet of grief. Vegetarianism injurious. Ailments of mal-nutrition and of excess. Obesity, gout, acidity, leanness, indigestion, &c., &c.

Opinions of the Press.

"Those who desire a long and healthy life will perhaps find their best means of obtaining it in the study and observance of such rules as are laid down here. The book is a rational and practical guide to 'Health and Condition.'"—Morning Post.

"Full of valuable hints and suggestive warnings as to the results of improper food and insufficient exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

1/- (BY POST, 1/2½) 1/-

QUEER STORIES

—FROM—

"TRUTH."

"TRUTH" PUBLISHING OFFICE

10, BOLT COURT, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

AMUSEMENTS.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Sole Lessee, Mr. Frederick Harrison.
Managers, Mr. Frederick Harrison and Mr. Cyril Maude.
EVERY EVENING, at 8.30, THE LITTLE MINISTER, by J. M. Barrie.
Miss WINIFRED EMERY and Mr. CYRIL MAUDE.
MATINEES EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.30.

MR. SCHULZ-CURTIUS.
WAGNER CONCERTS.—QUEEN'S HALL.
SECOND CONCERT, TUESDAY NEXT, May 17, at 8 (for 8.15).
Conductor, Herr FELIX WEINGARTNER.
(His first and only appearance during the Season.)
Overture, "Der Freischutz" ..... Weber.
"Carnaval Romain" ..... Berlioz.
Symphonic Poem, "King Lear" (first time) ..... Weingartner.
Vorspiel and Closing Scene of Act III. from "Parsifal" ... Wagner.
Symphony in A, No. 7 ..... Beethoven.
Reserved seats, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 5s.; unreserved, 2s 6d.
Apply to the Box Office, Queen's Hall; Messrs. Chappell; Mr. Tree; usual Agents; or to Mr. A. Schulz-Curtius, 16, Shaftesbury-avenue, Piccadilly, W.

QUEEN'S HALL.
SUNDAY AFTERNOON CONCERTS.
EVERY SUNDAY, at 3.30.
Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood.
The Queen's Hall Grand Orchestra.
Admission free. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 1s., and 6d.

THE FIREWORK SEASON at the CRYSTAL PALACE will COMMENCE on THURSDAY, May 19, when Messrs. C. T. Brock & Co. will produce a Set Piece an Eighth of a Mile Long, depicting A COLOSSAL SEA FIGHT. Wonderful novelties in Living Fireworks. Mechanical Moving Devices and Aërial Displays. The displays can be witnessed by a hundred thousand visitors without extra payment.

34TH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of CABINET PICTURES, by Artists of the British and Foreign Schools, is NOW OPEN at THOMAS McLEAN'S GALLERY, 7, Haymarket (next the Theatre). Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

PAUL BOYER'S ARTISTIC PHOTOGRAPHS.
HANOVER GALLERY,
47, NEW BOND-STREET, W.
HOLLENDER and CREMETTI, Proprietors.

PAUL BOYER'S ARTISTIC PHOTOGRAPHS.
HANOVER GALLERY,
47, NEW BOND-STREET, W.
HOLLENDER and CREMETTI, Proprietors.

PAUL BOYER'S ARTISTIC PHOTOGRAPHS.
HANOVER GALLERY,
47, NEW BOND-STREET, W.
HOLLENDER and CREMETTI, Proprietors.

"ECCE HOMO!" Munkacsy's Sacred Masterpiece. This famous Work, containing over 70 figures, is NOW ON VIEW for the first time in London at the DOWDESWELL GALLERIES, 160, New Bond-street. Admission One Shilling. 315,000 people inspected the Picture during its exhibition at Budapest, often at the rate of 7,000 daily.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

SUMMER SEASON, 1898.
OPEN DAILY.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—COLLECTIONS of PRODUCTS from ALL PARTS of the EMPIRE. Open free to the public from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—MUSIC ARRANGEMENTS. The CONCERT ORCHESTRA from the Theatre "La Scala," Milan, consisting of 68 performers; under the direction of Signor LEANDRO CAMPANARI, Specially engaged for AFTERNOON and EVENING CONCERTS throughout the season. Afternoon Concerts 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. Evening Concerts 8.45 p.m. to 10.45 p.m.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—East Garden Pavilion. LUNCHEONS and LIGHT REFRESHMENTS. Dinners (at 5s. and 7s. 6d., or à la Carte) from 6.30 p.m. Orders addressed to Superintendent, Catering Syndicate, Imperial Institute. Telephone No. 623 Kensington.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—Admission from 1 p.m to 11 p.m. ONE SHILLING. Wednesdays (Fellows' Day) by ticket only, to be obtained from Fellows. COMMUNICATION by TRAIN and OMNIBUS to SOUTH KENSINGTON throughout the day. Covered way communication with the South Kensington Subway.

International Universal Exhibition.

EARL'S COURT, S.W., 1898.
IMRE KIRALFY, Director-General.
Season Tickets, 10s. 6d.,
Can be obtained at the Exhibition and Libraries.
Admission Daily, 1s.
Open 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.
BAND of the 1st GRENADIER GUARDS.
BAND of the HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.
The LONDON EXHIBITIONS ORCHESTRAL BAND.
THE EMPRESS THEATRE.
GRAND PATRIOTIC NAVAL SPECTACLE.
TWICE DAILY.
Peace and War. Naval Manœuvres. The Fleet at Night.
Attack on the Enemy's Forts.
TWICE DAILY, at 3.30 and 9 p.m.
Thousands of Reserved Seats at 6d., 1s., and 2s.
THE FLORAL LOUNGE.
The Most Delightful Entertainment Hall in the World.
The Chamounix Minstrels and other Novel Attractions Daily, Free.
The Hungarian Minstrels. American Liliputian Troupe.
Grand Hungarian Feszty Panorama. Royal Javanese Troupe.
Hagenbeck's Zoological Kindergarten. Moorish Camp.
Bella Napoli Troupe. Electric Theatre. Captive Balloon.
THE GREAT WHEEL, 300 ft. HIGH.
South Sea Islanders, "Astarte." Belvedere Tower. Electrophone.
Switchback.
Admission by Season Ticket, 10s. 6d., or Daily, 1s.

AMUSEMENTS.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—Lessees, THE GRAND OPERA SYNDICATE, LTD. Managing Director, Mr. Maurice Grau.
GRAND OPERA EVERY EVENING.
For full particulars see daily papers. Box-office now open.

LYCEUM.—THE MEDICINE MAN.
TO-NIGHT and Every Evening, at 8.
Dr. Tregenna.....HENRY IRVING.
Sylvia Wynford.....Miss ELLEN TERRY.
MATINEES Next Saturday and Saturdays, May 21 and 28, and Wednesday, May 18, at 2.
Box-office (Mr. J. Hurst) open 10 to 5, and 7.30 to 10. Seats also booked by letter or telegram. LYCEUM.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, Mr. HERBERT BEERBOHM TREE.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8,
JULIUS CÆSAR.
MATINEES EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.
Box-office open 10 to 10. Seats booked from 2s. HER MAJESTY'S.

ADELPHI. A. & S. GATTI,
Sole Proprietors and Managers.
Business Manager, Mr. FRED. G. LATHAM.
EVERY EVENING at 8 o'clock.
A Drama in Four Acts, by David Belasco, entitled:
THE HEART OF MARYLAND,
Interpreted by Mr. Charles Frohman's entire New York Company.
Box Office open from 10 till 10.

SAVOY THEATRE.—Every Evening at 8.30, and Every Saturday Afternoon at 2.30, will be reproduced THE GONDOLIERS, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan. At 7.45, OLD SARAH. Box-office 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.—R. D'OYLY CARTE, Manager.

COURT THEATRE, Sloane Square.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.—EVERY EVENING, at 8.30, TRELAWNY OF THE "WELLS," by A. W. Pinero. Doors 8. Commence 8.30. Box-office now open, 10 to 10. Telephone No. 3,031. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.

GARRICK.—Lessee and Manager, H. T. BRICKWELL.
EVERY EVENING, at 9,
WILLIAM GILLETTE. — TOO MUCH JOHNSON.
Doors open at 7.45. Carriages at 11.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY.—EVERY EVENING, and SATURDAY MATINEE. Mr. George Edwardes's Company in THE GEISHA. The book by Owen Hall. Lyrics by Harry Greenbank. Music by Sydney Jones.

ST. JAMES'S.—Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER,
Sole Lessee and Manager.
TO-NIGHT, and EVERY EVENING, at 8.15,
THE CONQUERORS,
A Drama, in Four Acts, by Paul M. Potter.
MATINEE SATURDAY NEXT, at 2.
Box-office open 10 to 10. ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

COMEDY THEATRE, Panton-street, Haymarket.
Sole Manager, Mr. CHARLES HAWTREY.
TO-NIGHT, and EVERY EVENING, at 8.30,
LORD AND LADY ALGY,
an Original Light Comedy, in Three Acts, by R. C. Carton.
Mr. Charles Hawtrey and Company.
Preceded, at 8 o'clock, by a Duologue, entitled CONSTANCY, by Cyril Hallward. Doors open 7.45.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 3. Box-office open 10 to 10.

VAUDEVILLE.
Sole Lessees and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
EVERY EVENING, at 8.20,
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.30,
THE FRENCH MAID,
With New Songs, Dances, and Dresses.
The very successful Musical Comedy by Basil Hood and Walter Slaughter.
Box-office open 10 to 10.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Directors, WILLIAMSON and MUSGROVE, Limited.
EVERY EVENING, at 8, Casino Theatre Company, of New York, in
THE BELLE OF NEW YORK.
"The subject of all the town talk."
Box-office now open at the Theatre from 10 till 10.
MATINEE EACH WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.

EMPIRE THEATRE. — EVERY EVENING, New Ballet, THE PRESS, and Sporting Sketch, THE RACE. Grand VARIETIES. Doors open at 7.45.

LONDON PAVILION.—Dan Leno, Marguerite Cornille, Brothers Griffiths, Harriet Vernon, Harry Randall, Bessie Wentworth, Billie Barlow, G. W. Hunter, Rosa Glenn, Leslie's Dogs, and many others. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s.—Manager, Mr. FRANK GLENISTER.

PALACE, Shaftesbury-avenue. — The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Full Licence. Prices from 6d. Doors open 8.—Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—The Greatest Combination of Talent in London.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINEE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station.—Gordon's Last Stand at Khartoum. Portrait Model of Emile Zola, &c.—Admission 1s. Children under Twelve, 6d. Extra rooms, 6d.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BONCHURCH HOTEL, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, one mile from Ventnor Station.
A comfortable, quiet, and most beautifully-situated Hotel. Pretty garden. Good sea view.
H. RIBEANDS, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HIGHCLIFFE HOTEL. Unrivalled position, West Cliff, full south. Splendid sea view. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Supplies from Alderney Dairy Farm. Telephone 27.—J. KILNER, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—South aspect, 150 rooms, electric light throughout, passenger lift, first-class cuisine, winter garden and lounge, covered tennis court. Turkish, sea-water, and medicated Baths. The Hotel is within two minutes' walk of the Golf Links.—For tariff, address W. KNEESE, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.—Centre of sea front. Electric Light throughout. Lift to all floors. Bicycle room. Inclusive terms if desired from 10s. 6d. to 15s. per day.—For particulars apply to A. D. HOOK, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

CARBIS BAY HOTEL, Cornwall. The very spot to obtain rest and quietude. Overlooking the finest bay in England. Mild yet bracing climate. Within easy distance of London by G. W. R. Splendid Golf Links. "A more beautiful spot for residence could hardly be imagined."—Truth.

EXMOUTH.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—In Private Gardens, facing Sea. Beautiful views. Billiard and smoking rooms. Ladies' drawing-rooms. Excellent cuisine. Good stabling. Perfect sanitation. Sea bathing. Trout and sea fishing. Boating, yachting, tennis, steam launch, golf, &c. Under the personal superintendence of Proprietor, H. W. HAYWARD.

FOLKESTONE.—The LEAS HOTEL.—Situated in private grounds. Adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Refurnished throughout. Passenger lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff. Good golf links and tennis court.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Lees. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor. Sanitation Certified.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position. Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

JERSEY.—GRAND HOTEL.—The only first-class modern Hotel facing the sea, and full south, the largest, the best appointed, and the up-to-date Hotel in the Channel Islands. Liberal Management.
D. DE LEIDI, Manager.

MALVERN—The IMPERIAL HOTEL occupies the best position, and receives visitors en pension. The golf-links (18 holes) are one of the best in England. Capital stabling for hunters. Droitwich Brine, Turkish and large Swimming Bath in separate buildings.—For tariff, apply to the Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

SALCOMBE (Devon).—BOLT HEAD HOTEL.—This first-class Family Hotel commands magnificent views of English Channel. Delightful cliff walks. Grand coast scenery. Admirable winter health resort. Climate mildest in England. Carriages meet trains when requested. Stabling Billiards. Special terms for winter months and for families.—Apply, Manager.

SANDGATE.—ROYAL KENT HOTEL, a favourite resort of Ruskin. An ideal summer and winter residence, delightfully situated in its own grounds, facing the sea. Redecorated and refurnished. New Coffee-room, Smoking-room, and Conservatory have recently been added. Fifteen minutes from Folkestone. Omnibus meets all trains Sandgate Station.—J. E. TANARE, Prop.

SOUTHSEA.—ROYAL BEACH MANSIONS HOTEL.—Largest in Southsea, splendidly situated on the beach; 300 yards nearer the sea than any other public hotel on the line of marine terraces. Passenger lift. Inclusive terms from £3. 13s. 6d. per week. Entirely under new management.—M. ECCLES, Manageress.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
F. FISCHER Manager.

BURLINGTON HOTELS COMPANY, Limited.

BURLINGTON HOTEL, Cork-street, W., near Burlington Arcade. Central, quiet, and most comfortable.
BUCKINGHAM PALACE HOTEL, S.W., close to Victoria Station. Specialty, Wedding Receptions. Suites of rooms facing Buckingham Palace Gardens from 12s. per day.
} London.

BURLINGTON.—The HOTEL BURLINGTON, Boscombe, Bournemouth. 200 rooms, facing sea, and protected from north and east. Acres of beautifully laid-out pleasure grounds, with abundance of winter foliage. A Winter Garden, 300 feet long, facing south, containing dining-room, and kept at a uniform temperature. Nearest approach in England to a Riviera Hotel. 135 minutes from Waterloo. Pullman Car service. East Bournemouth Station. Special Boarding terms. Excellent cuisine for above three Hotels. Tariffs on application to the Managers.

AVONDALE HOTEL & RESTAURANT

(Corner of Dover-street and Piccadilly).
MAGNIFICENT SUITES of ROOMS, including Ladies' Reception-room.
POLIAKIN'S renowned STRING BAND (three years at the Savoy) plays nightly during Dinner and Supper.
LUNCHEON, 4s.; DINNER, 10s. 6d.; SUPPER, 4s.
A SPECIAL ROYAL ACADEMY LUNCHEON at 2s. 6d. served daily.
The Wines have been most carefully selected by connoisseurs.
Manager: Mons. GABIN. Chef de Cuisine: Mons. DUTRU. } late of the Savoy Hotel.
AND

HATCHETT'S RESTAURANT.

UNDER AVONDALE HOTEL.

Under entirely new management. First-class Cuisine and Unrivalled Cellar of Wines. Moderate Prices. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, Table d'Hôte, Grill-room, and à la Carte. Arrangements are being made for a String Band to play nightly during Dinner and Supper.
Manager: Mons. EUGENE.

FOLKESTONE
ROYAL PAVILION HOTEL

Sheltered, yet close to the sea and the Boulogne Steamboat and Promenade Piers and beautiful Undercliffe private road. Celebrated for its home-like comforts, cuisine, and wines. Lighted throughout by electricity. Spacious winter garden, affording a delightful lounge amidst sub-tropical plants. Private dairy, farm, and gardens, insuring fresh milk, butter, eggs, vegetables. Private laundry. Hotel omnibus meets all trains at Folkestone Central. The New and Handsome additional buildings will be opened in July.

FOLKESTONE
ROYAL PAVILION HOTEL

RAMSGATE.
THE GRANVILLE.

CLARENDON HOTEL, Princes-street, Edinburgh.—First-class Family Hotel. Opposite Castle, and overlooking the gardens. Kitchen lately fitted up on top of Hotel. Recommended to American visitors. Under the personal management of the new Proprietor.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.
THE PALACE HOTEL.

200 rooms. Finest position. Own grounds. American elevator. Tariff, with plan of rooms and sketch map of Buxton, on application.
A. CROSS, Manager.

A FINE HOTEL] DOVER [IN DOVER BAY

Accommodates 400 guests. Is superbly appointed, with all the comforts of a well-arranged mansion, at moderate cost. Perfect cuisine. The Dover Golf Links for use of Hotel Burlington visitors. The finest coast hotel in England. Brochure and Tariff free.

Facing the Pleasure Pier and in centre of Dover Bay.
HOTEL BURLINGTON

HASTINGS. Due South, Facing Sea.
QUEEN'S HOTEL,

LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED.
Sunny, and most sheltered position in Hastings and St. Leonards.
ELECTRIC LIGHT. PASSENGER ELEVATOR.
Moderate Tariff. Hotel Flys attend the trains.
WILLIAM GLADE, Manager.

GRAND HOTEL, LYNDHURST (New Forest).—Charming Hotel, recently enlarged. Beautiful grounds of 4 acres adjoin golf links. Hunting, fishing, &c. Trains met at Brockenhurst.
Mrs. HART, Manageress.

ILFRACOMBE.
ILFRACOMBE HOTEL.

Famous for its high-class Cuisine and general comfort.
The PRINCIPAL and ONLY HOTEL on the SEASHORE.
An ideal position. 250 rooms. Grounds five acres. Tennis, Croquet. Splendid Swimming Bath. Elegant Lounge Hall. Moderate tariff. Terms "en pension."
H. R. GROVER, Manager.

FOLKESTONE.
WEST CLIFF HOTEL.
(180 Apartments)

Now opened for the reception of Visitors.
Important Structural Alterations and Additions have been made since October last.
The Hotel is under the personal superintendence of the Proprietor, to whom all communications should be addressed.
Electric Light and Passenger Lift.

MARGATE.—WHITE HART HOTEL.
Sixty Bedrooms, many commanding magnificent sea views. Famous for its perfect English cooking and choice cellar. Most invigorating sea air in England. Under supervision of Proprietor—G. MARSHALL.

ROYAL MAIL ROUTE, via HARWICH - HOOK of HOLLAND, daily (Sundays included) service to the Continent, by the Great Eastern Railway Company's twin-screw steamers. Cheapest Route to Germany and quickest to Holland.

IMPROVED SERVICE to NORWAY, DENMARK, and SWEDEN.

SCHEVENINGEN (Holland)—The Dutch Brighton.—Guide-book (free) and full particulars on application to the Manager, Hotel Kurhaus, Scheveningen, Holland.

HARWICH-ANTWERP route, every week-day, for the Ardennes (Cheapest Continental Holiday), Brussels (for Waterloo), Spa, Switzerland, &c.

Passengers leave London (Liverpool St. Station) at 8.30 p.m. for the Hook of Holland, and at 8.40 p.m. for Antwerp. Direct service to Harwich from Scotland, the North and Midlands. Restaurant car from York. HAMBURG by G.S.N. Co.'s fast passenger steamers "Peregrine" and "Seamew," Wednesdays and Saturdays. Cheap tickets and tours to all parts of the Continent. Read the G.E.R. Co.'s "Tourist Guide to the Continent," illustrated, price 6d., post 8d. Particulars at the American Rendezvous, 2, Cockspur-st., S.W.; or of the Continental Manager, Liverpool St. Station, E.C.

QUICK CHEAP ROUTE
TO SCANDINAVIA,
Via HARWICH and ESBJERG,

By the Steamers of the U.S.S. Co. of Copenhagen thrice weekly.

Apply to TEGNER, PRICE, & CO., 107, Fenchurch-street, London; or the Continental Manager, Liverpool-st. Station, E.C.

LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

COLLECTION, CONVEYANCE, AND DELIVERY
OF
PASSENGERS' LUGGAGE IN ADVANCE.

The Personal Luggage of Passengers will, on application, be COLLECTED, FORWARDED IN ADVANCE, AND DELIVERED at residence or hotel in North Wales, the English Lake District, Blackpool, Morecambe, and other Tourist Resorts at the

NOMINAL CHARGE OF 6d. PER PACKAGE,

which must be paid when the luggage is collected. No package must exceed 112 lbs. in weight.

Tickets dated beforehand to suit the convenience of passengers can be obtained at any of the Company's Stations and at the Receiving Offices, where also orders can be given for Collection of Luggage.

By availing themselves of this arrangement, passengers will be relieved of the trouble and inconvenience of looking after their luggage when travelling. In cases where apartments at destination have not been secured beforehand, the luggage can be addressed, "To be called for," at the Cloak Room of the arrival station.

FRED. HARRISON, General Manager.

SIX GUINEAS.—GENEVA TOUR, nine days, extensions to Chamounix (Mont Blanc), Zermatt (Matterhorn), St. Gothard, Oberland, &c. Lecturers, Sir Robert Ball, Mr. Edward Whymper, Dr. Lunn. Departures weekly from May 10.—Details from Secretary, 5, Endsleigh-gardens, Euston, N.W.; 32, Piccadilly, W.; 47, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.; 3, Charing-cross, S.W.

ORIENT COMPANY'S PLEASURE CRUISE
by their
Steamship "LUSITANIA," 3,912 tons register.

From London 15th June, Leith 17th June.
To the finest FIORDS in NORWAY
and the NORTH CAPE (for Midnight Sun),
arriving back in London 11th July.
Other Cruises to follow.

High-class Cuisine, String Band, Electric Light, &c.

Managers { F. GREEN & CO. / ANDERSON, ANDERSON, & CO. } Head Offices: Fenchurch-avenue.

For passage apply to the latter firm at 5, Fenchurch-avenue, London, E.C.; or to the West End Branch Office, 16, Cockspur-street, S.W.

NORWAY AND BALTIC CRUISES.

The S.Y. VICTORIA sails 11th JUNE for 16 days to Norwegian Fiords.
To be followed by other cruises on July 2nd and 30th, and August 18th.
The only modern pleasure cruiser with large airy cabins.
For particulars, apply Manager, 4, Regent-street; GRINDLAY & CO., 55, Parliament-street; or any of THOS. COOK & SONS' Offices.

12 GUINEA NORWAY CRUISES from NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE—FORTNIGHTLY.

"MIDNIGHT SUN," 3,178 Tons, 3,500 H.P.

Finest YACHTING STEAMER afloat. NO UPPER BERTHS.
Sailings:—May 28; June 11, 25; July 9, 23; and August 6, 20.
Special Cruises, September 3rd and 17th.
Fares from 12 Guineas, including first-class table.

For itinerary, &c., apply to the PASSENGER AGENT, ALBION S.S. Co., Ltd., Mercantile Chambers, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, HONOLULU, FIJI, NEW ZEALAND, and ROUND THE WORLD.
CANADIAN PACIFIC ROUTE,

For berths or descriptive pamphlets, apply CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, or 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square, S.W.

HOLIDAYS ABROAD.
DIEPPE.
AN IDEAL SEASIDE RESORT FOR ENGLISH VISITORS.
ONLY FIVE HOURS FROM LONDON.

Two English Churches. Superb cycling roads. Excellent Golf Links (Sunday play). Best Casino in Europe (June to October). Dancing, &c.
Information free from L. BRAU, 140, Grand Rue, Dieppe, France.

COLLEGES, SCHOOLS, &c.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS, Limited.
HOLLESLEY BAY, SUFFOLK.

On the fine seaside Estate of the College (1,800 acres), in a splendid climate; students have unique opportunities of receiving a training, practical and theoretical, which will fit them for a career abroad or at home.

Full information from the Director at above Address, or from the LONDON SECRETARY, 11, PALL MALL, S.W.

Next term commences May 16th.

AT MARGATE COLLEGE, MARGATE.
For FIRST-CLASS COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.
Most successful College. Beautiful grounds. Close to the sea. Moderate fees.
Every requisite for first-class school.
London Offices, Imperial-buildings, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

HOSPITALS & APPEALS.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL, Holloway.
VERY POOR and DEPENDENT ENTIRELY UPON VOLUNTARY SUPPORT.

PATIENTS ADMITTED FREE, sickness and poverty the only qualifications for relief.

£10,000 needed annually to support the work of relieving 1,500 in-patients and 25,000 out-patients.

LEWIS H. GLENTON KERR, Secretary.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.
Chief Office—SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

President—THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

This SOCIETY supplies Trusses, Elastic Stockings, Crutches, Artificial Limbs, Artificial Eyes, &c., and every other description of mechanical support to the poor, without limit as to locality or disease.

Water Beds and Invalid Chairs and Couches are lent to the Afflicted upon the Recommendation of Subscribers.
22,247 Appliances given during the past year.
Over 280 Patients Relieved every week.

Annual Subscription of 10s. 6d., or Life Subscription of 5 Guineas entitles to Two Recommendations per Annum; the number of Letters increasing in proportion to amount of contribution.

SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., Lombard-street, or by the Secretary at the Office of the Society.

RICHARD C. TRESIDDER, Secretary.

"COOPER" CYCLES.

From £5 10. Competition Defied.

Latest design Frame, large Weldless Steel Tubes, Ball Bearings, Tangent Wheels, Brake, and Mud-guards, Cushion Tyres, £5 10; Pneumatic, £7 10; Ladies', with Dress and Gear Guards, from £6. Twelve months' warranty. Lists free. AGENTS WANTED

Wm. Cooper, 753, Old Kent Rd., London, S.E.

Mülhens' "Rhine Violets"

4711 TRADE MARK.

READ THIS

From the "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS."

. . . One cannot but feel eternally indebted to Mr. Ferd. Mülhens for having invented so altogether delicious and delightful a perfume as the "Rhine Violets." . . . Little wonder indeed that this king of scents should be imitated as widely and piratically as it assuredly is, for no essence of modern times has approached its well-merited fame and favour. . . . Rhine Violets perfume is one thing and Mülhens' "Rhine Violets" (as sold by all good Chemists) is another, and if all who have tested the fragrant and delicious essences which bear this inventor's name would insist on seeing it on the labels, there would be fewer ensuing disillusionments . . . Mülhens has, in fact, discovered and perfected the following special perfume of "Rhine Violets"—"Maréchal Niel," "Rhine Gold," and "Malmaison," and without the magic prefix of his name, it may be taken that all such so-called scents are but "base-born counterfeits." . . .

3/-, 5/6, 9/-, 20/- per bottle.
"Rhine Violet" Sachets, 2/6 each.
"Rhine Violet" Soap, 2/6 per tablet, or 7/- per box of 3 tablets.

Of most dealers in first-class Perfumes, or from

4711 Depot, 62, NEW BOND STREET, W.

BADMINTON

HILL'S PERFECTION.

Can be obtained from all leading Tobacconists, including:

LONDON.

Beedle Morgan & Co., 4 and 5, Tottenham Court-road, W.
Bewlay & Co., Ltd. (Flor de Dindigul Cigars), 49 and 74, Strand, W.C.; 143, Cheapside, E.C.
Louis Coen, 88, Piccadilly, W.; 458, Oxford-street, W.; 44, Lombard-street, E.C.
A. H. Cornish & Co., Cigar Merchants, Streatham, S.W.
E. Grahnert, 20, Sussex-place; 167, Earl's Court-road; and Station Buildings, South Kensington.
J. Kevis, 263, Portobello-road, W.
Koppenhagen Bros., 4, Queen-st. Cheapside, E.C.
U. A. Mabille, 53, High-street, Lewisham, S.E.
Litsica Marx & Co., 174, High Holborn, W.C.; 21, Piccadilly, W.; 82, Strand, W.C.
J. & S. Oppenheim, 7, Angel-court, E.C.; 29, Throgmorton-street and Warnford-court, E.C.; 33, New Broad-street, E.C.; 37A, Walbrook, E.C.; 66, Westbourne-grove, W.; 5, Porchester-road, W.
James Quinton, 64, Moorgate-street, E.C., 25, Royal Exchange, E.C.
G. Sansford, 238, Great Portland-street, W.
W. Seymour, 198, Stroud Green-road; and 6, Crouch-hill, N.
Smith & Co., 30, Chancery-lane, E.C.
F. Smith & Co., 1, Sherwood-street, Piccadilly-circus.
H. E. Stubbings, 109, London Wall, E.C.
S. Weingott & Son, 83, Fleet-street; and Royal Hotel Buildings, Victoria Embankment, E.C.

In Tins only. ¼-lb. 2/3, post free.

HILL'S PERFECTION.

Can be obtained from all leading Tobacconists, including:

PROVINCIAL.

AYLESBURY—Robert Scott, Market-square.
BATH—Fredk. Wright, 17, Northgate-street.
BOURNEMOUTH—E. Offer, 7, Arcade.
BRIGHTON—Louis Coen, 55, East-street. Whale & Co., 73, Queen's-road.
CAMBRIDGE—T. W. Harris, 40, Petty Cury.
CHATHAM.—Owen J. Carter & Co., 41, High-st.
CHELTENHAM—Fredk. Wright, High-street and Montpellier.
CHICHESTER.—T. C. Willis, 27, East-street.
CIRENCESTER—Joseph Matthews, 16, Market-place.
COVENTRY—D. Cooke, Smithford-street and Cross Cheaping.
DORKING.—C. Wilkins, 65, High-street.
GLOUCESTER—Fredk. Wright, 96, Southgate-street.
ISLE OF WIGHT—H. Cresham, Union-st., Ryde. Dear & Morgan, High-street, Cowes. W. Rugg, Newport.
MELTON MOWBRAY—R. Jordan, 28, Nottingham-street.
NANTWICH.—E. C. Gilbert, 13, High-street.
OXFORD.—J. H. Lewis, 5, Market-street.
PUTNEY—J. H. Custance, High-street, and Station Buildings.
REDHILL—W. Rowland, Station-road.
REIGATE—J. R. Miller, High-street.
SOUTHAMPTON—W. J. Pitt, 60, Above Bar.
SURBITON—C. Holliday, Victoria-road.
WIMBLEDON—J. H. Custance, 36, Hill-road.

In Tins only. ½-lb. 4/3, post free.

TOBACCO

Is composed of Tobaccos of the highest quality, delightfully cool in smoking, free from any added matter, and prepared with scrupulous care.

And Wholesale only from the Manufacturers, R. & J. HILL, Ltd. (Established 1775), LONDON, E.

For Longhand, Shorthand, Pen-and-Ink Drawing, Music-Writing, indeed, whenever a Pen is necessary, use only a "SWAN."

Adds immeasurably to Celerity and Comfort in writing. Of all Pens most famous.

Made in 3 sizes at
10s. 6d.
16s. 6d.
25s.
UP TO £18 18s.
POST FREE.

MABIE, TODD & BARD,
DEPT. C. I.
93, Cheapside, London, E.C.
95, REGENT ST., W., and 3, EXCHANGE ST., MANCHESTER.

HIGHEST GRADE CYCLES.

Royal Enfield

ENFIELD CYCLE CO., Ltd.
REDDITCH.
LONDON—6c, Sloane-street, W.
DUBLIN—73, Grafton-street.
CITY AGENCY.—Benetfink & Co., Cheapside.
 Send for Catalogue.

THE NAME
"RALEIGH"
ON YOUR BICYCLE
Is a guarantee that you have the best that money can buy.

RALEIGH CYCLES combine
LIGHTNESS with STRENGTH.
GRACE with DURABILITY.
SPEED with COMFORT.
SCIENCE with COMMONSENSE.

Catalogue Free from
THE RALEIGH CYCLE COMPANY, Ltd., NOTTINGHAM.
London Depôt: 41, HOLBORN VIADUCT, E.C.

VINOLIA TOILET REQUISITES.

4d PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP
(For Family Use).

For Delicate, Sensitive, Irritable Skins.

The CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST reports:

"An ideal soap, delightfully perfumed."

1/- per box of 3 Tablets.

6d FLORAL VINOLIA SOAP
(For Private Use).

Keeps the Skin as soft as Velvet.

The MEDICAL NEWS reports:

"Beautifully emollient and softening to the skin."

1/6 per box of 3 Tablets.

10d TOILET VINOLIA SOAP
(OTTO)

Scented with Choice Otto of Rose Perfume.

Beautifies the Complexion.

The GENTLEWOMAN reports:

"Strongly recommended to keep the skin smooth and free from roughness."

2/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

6d BLONDEAU PERFUMES
Concentrated, Delicate, Pure.

*Vinolia Bouquet,	Rondeletia,
*Marequil,	Hyacinth,
*Jequilla,	Ylang Ylang
*Losaria,	Stephanotis
Wood Violet,	Opoponax,
White Heliotrope,	Patchouli,
Ess. Bouquet,	Musk,
Frangipanni,	Ambergris,
Jockey Club,	Amaryllis,
Maréchal Niel,	White Lilac,
Millefleur,	Narcissus,
White Rose,	Chypre,
Jasmin,	Violette de Parme,
Musk Rose,	Mignonette,
Honeysuckle,	Clematis,
New Mown Hay,	Wallflower,
Lily of the Valley,

Violet, | *Rhine Violets, | Peau d'Espagne.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/-, and 5/- per bottle.

*These perfumes are not supplied in the 6d. quality.

1/- VINOLIA HAIR WASH

DRY. Freshens and cleanses the Hair, and preserves it free from any oily moist appearance.

MOIST. Imparts a natural gloss to the Hair

1/ per Bottle.

Each in 3 odours: Portugal, Rose, and Violet.

1/1½ VINOLIA CREAM

For Itching, Face Spots, Sunburn, &c.

The LANCET reports:

"An emollient cream for the skin in eczema, rash, eruptions, &c."

1/1½, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

1/- VINOLIA POWDER

For Redness, Roughness, Toilet Nursery, &c.

The LADY'S PICTORIAL reports:

"Superseding the old-fashioned toilet powders which are apt to cause acne spots on the face by blocking up the pores of the skin."

In White, Pink, and Cream Tints.
1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.
6d

(STICKS AND FLAT CAKES.)
Causes no Blotches.
STICKS: Premier 6d., Toilet 1/-, 1/6, 2/6, Vestal 2/-.
FLAT CAKES: Premier 1/-, Toilet 2/-, Vestal 2/6.

6d LYPSYL.

A Coralline Emollient for Dry, Rough, Cracked, or Pallid Lips.

In Rose-Red and White Tints, 6d. and 1/- a Tube

6d VINOLIA LAVENDER WATER.

Natural and Very Lasting.

Contains the finest Essential Oils, Concentrated, therefore the Most Economical.

6d., 1/-, 2/-. and 3/6.

2/- VINOLIA TOILET WATER.

This is prepared with delicate, refreshing perfumes, and is a most exquisite and delightful preparation to use either clear or in water for the Toilet or in the bath.

2s. per Bottle.

6d VINOLIA DENTIFRICE

Aromatic, Tonic, Refreshing, Preservative.

Keeps the Teeth Ivory White.

Premier in Round Box and Glass Bottle, 6d.

English—2/6.

American—1/6.

6d VINOLIA TOOTH SOAP.

An exquisite preparation for the Teeth. Delightfully perfumed and free from any injurious ingredients.

In Round Metal Box, 6d.

6d VINOLIA TOOTH PASTE.

Delicately Perfumed.

Whitens and Cleanses the Teeth, without in any way injuriously affecting the dental structures.

In Collapsable Tube, 6d.

6d BLONDEAU INEXHAUSTIBLE LAVENDER SMELLING SALTS.

These Smelling Salts are of exceptional Strength and most Refreshing. They are agreeably scented, the pleasant odour of Lavender being very pronounced.

6d. per Bottle.

6d VINOLIA EAU DE COLOGNE.

Fragrant. Refreshing.

As fine as can possibly be made.

The "Court Circular" reports:

"Vinolia Eau de Cologne we consider is absolutely unequalled for strength, purity, and delicacy of aroma."

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/3, and 5/6.

3d per 2-oz. Packet. VINOLIA VIOLET POWDER.

Sanitary. Antiseptic. Soothing.

Specially prepared for Toilet and Nursery use.

In 2-oz. and ¼-lb. Packets, 3d. & 6d.
In ¼-lb. Tins, 6d.
In ½-lb. Tins, 9d

VINOLIA COMPANY, Ltd., MALDEN CRESCENT, LONDON, N.W.

HEATHMAN'S LADDER WORKS,
2, ENDELL STREET, LONDON, W.C.

REAL GERMAN HOLLOW GROUND
KROPP RAZOR

Black Handle 5/6 | Pair, Ivory Handles, in Russia Leather Case, 21/- | Kropp's Duplex Strop 7/6
Ivory Handle 7/6 | Kropp's Strop Paste ...6d.

☞ Write for Pamphlet, "Shaver's Kit and Outfit." Post free.

Wholesale: OSBORNE, GARRETT, & CO., LONDON, W.

SANITARY & DECORATIVE

RYLAND'S
"THE OLD ORIGINAL"
IMITATES ELIZABETHAN OAK.
FLOOR VARNISH
AT ALL PRINCIPAL STORES.

NICOLE FRÈRES
POLYPHON
MUSICAL BOX

Is the greatest novelty of the age. It plays to perfection any selections of secular or sacred music desired. It is not a toy but a delightful musical instrument. All Dealers, or write for No. 50 Catalogue, post free. From 16s. 6d. to 50 Guineas.

NICOLE FRÈRES Ltd., 21, Ely Place London, E.C. Established 1815.

Achille Serre
HIGH CLASS DYER AND CLEANER,
263, OXFORD STREET,
& 10, NEW BOND STREET, W.
THE MOST ELABORATE COSTUME CLEANED WHOLE.

ALL COUNTRY ORDERS TO BE SENT TO Works: White Post Lane, Hackney Wick, London, E.
WRITE FOR PRICE LIST.
CARRIAGE PAID ONE WAY ON ALL COUNTRY ORDERS.

SPIERS & POND'S STORES
QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C. (Opposite St. Paul's Station, L.C. & D. Rly.).

WE ARE NOW SHOWING A VERY SPECIAL LINE IN TABLE COVERS.

These are all exceptional value and very choice designs.

About 2 yds. by 2 yds.	7/6	10/6	12/9	15/6	18/9	25/6
,, 2 ,, ,, 2½ ,,	10/6	15/6	18/9	25/6	27/6
,, 2 ,, ,, 3 ,,	12/9	15/9	21/6	25/6
,, 2 ,, ,, 3½ ,,	25/6	35/6	42/-

Price Book, No. 51, Published 2nd May (1,000 pages), Illustrated, Free on Application.

CLARKE'S "CRICKLITE" LAMPS
For burning Clarke's Patent Double Wick Wax Lights.

The Cricklite Lamp and Light Co.
Respectfully invite the attention of Visitors to London to the beautiful
EXHIBIT OF THEIR NEW "CRICKLITE" LAMPS
AT 75, Regent Street (Next door to St. James's Hall)
now attracting so much attention as the Light of the Future for Decoratively Lighting Dining and Drawing Rooms.

SILK SHADES IN GREAT VARIETY.

SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY HOUSES.

CLARKE'S New Patent Double-Wick
WAX LIGHTS
Specially for burning in the
"CRICKLITE" LAMPS
1/- per Box of 12 Lights. Burn 5 hours each.

Always the same height, and absolutely safe. Lamps from 2/6 to 10 guineas each.

Trade Mark: "CRICKLITE."

SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY HOUSES.

CLARKE'S New Patent
WAX LIGHTS
With Double Wicks
Made specially for burning in the
"CRICKLITE" LAMPS
12 Lights in a Box. Burn 5 hours each. 1/- per Box.

Always the same height and absolutely safe. Lamps from 2/6 to 10 guineas each.

Trade Mark: "CRICKLITE."

Two to Seven Lamps on One Standard, 18 in. high, in richly cut Glass or Silver-plated, with beautiful Silk Shades. No trouble in trimming. They are absolutely safe, may be left burning without any attention the whole time, are very economical in use, and take up very little space on the table.

All Letters should be addressed to 75, Regent St., W., or the Manufacturers,

CLARKE'S PYRAMID AND FAIRY LIGHT COMPANY, LTD.
CRICKLEWOOD, LONDON, N.W.

Notice. A Supplementary Show Room is Open until the end of October at 156, Regent St. (corner of Beak St.)

N.B.—SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR USE IN COUNTRY HOUSES AND ABROAD.

WATER SUPPLY.

Send for Illustrated List, No. 49, of

JOHN BLAKE'S Patent Self-Acting HYDRAULIC RAMS

For Raising Water for the Supply of Towns, Villages, Irrigation, Railway Stations, Mansions, Fountains, Farms, &c.
No cost for Motive Power, which is obtained from a Stream of Water passing through the Ram. No Oiling or Packing required. Made in Sizes to raise from 300 to 400,000 gallons per day. Will force to a Height of 800 feet.

Fig. A.—This Ram lifts part of the same water that works it. (Engraved from photo. of Ram which raises 250,000 gallons per day of 24 hours to medium heights, with good working fall.)

This View represents Fig. A Ram forcing up a part of the same water that works it, which is supplied from a spring. Special Rams of A make can be supplied to force to a height of 800 feet.

Fig. B.—This Ram, whilst worked by a stream of impure water, will pump clean water from a well or spring.

BLAKE'S HYDRAULIC RAMS HAVE BEEN SUPPLIED TO THE FOLLOWING AMONGST OTHERS:—

His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught
His Highness the Maharajah of Kashmir
The Secretary of State for India in Council
The Crown Agents for the Colonies
His Grace The Duke of Devonshire
His Grace The Duke of Westminster
His Grace The Duke of Cleveland
His Grace The Duke of Portland
His Grace The Duke of Sutherland
His Grace The Duke of Leeds
His Grace The Duke of Marlborough
His Grace The Duke of Grafton
His Grace The Duke of Somerset
The Most Hon. The Marquess of Ripon
The Most Hon. The Marquess of Downshire
The Most Hon. The Marquess of Abergavenny
The Most Hon. The Marquess of Londonderry
The Most Hon. The Marquess of Cholmondeley
The Right Hon. The Earl of Derby
The Right Hon. The Earl of Devon
The Right Hon. The Earl of Gainsborough
The Right Hon. The Earl of Romney
The Right Hon. The Earl of Granard
The Right Hon. Earl Beauchamp
The Right Hon. The Earl of Caledon
The Right Hon. The Earl of Lichfield
The Right Hon. Earl Ferrers
The Right Hon. The Earl of Faversham
The Right Hon. The Earl of Harewood
The Right Hon. The Earl of Harrowby
The Right Hon. The Earl of Wemyss
The Right Hon. The Earl of Ancaster
The Right Hon. The Earl of Scarbrough
The Right Hon. The Earl of Londesborough
The Right Hon. The Earl of Carnarvon
The Right Hon. The Earl of Leicester
The Right Hon. Earl Bathurst
The Right Hon. Earl Fitzwilliam
The Right Hon. Earl Temple
The Right Hon. Earl Cowper
The Right Hon. Lady Northwick
The Right Hon. The Countess of Shaftesbury
The Countess de Morella
Lady Henry Cholmondeley
The Dowager Lady Williams Wynn
Lady Frankland, Thirkleby Park
Lady Henry Cavendish Bentinck
Lady Eliott Drake
Miss Talbot, Margam Park
Mrs. C. Salt, Saltaire
The Right Hon. Lord Mowbray and Stourton
The Right Hon. Lord Hothfield
The Right Hon. Lord Leconfield
The Right Hon. Lord Ribblesdale
The Right Hon. Lord Derwent
The Right Hon. Lord Hatherton
The Right Hon. Lord Leigh
The Right Hon. Lord Raglan
The Right Hon. Lord Northbourne
The Right Hon. Lord Crewe
The Right Hon. and Rev. Lord Searsdale
The Right Hon. Lord Brougham and Vaux
The Right Hon. Lord Schroder
The Right Hon. Lord Macnaghten
The Right Hon. Lord Clifford of Chudleigh
The Right Hon. Lord Walsingham
The Right Hon. Lord Hindlip
The Right Hon. Lord Wantage
The Right Hon. Lord Hampton (Trustees of)
The Right Hon. Lord Burton
The Right Hon. Lord Abinger (Executors of)
The Right Hon. Lord Denman
The Right Hon. Lord Portman
The Right Hon. Lord de Blaquiere
The Right Hon. Lord Belper
The Right Hon. Lord Viscount Galway
The Right Hon. Lord Viscount Bridport
The Right Hon. Lord Viscount Clifden
The Right Hon. Lord Viscount Boyne
The Right Hon. T. Sotheron-Estcourt
The Right Hon. R. More O'Farrell
The Right Hon. Sir M. E. Hicks-Beach, Bart.
The Hon. Sir William Ventris Field
The Hon. George Kenyon
The Hon A. C. G. Calthorpe
The Hon. H. Sewell
The Hon. Evelyn H. Ellis

JOHN BLAKE, Limited, Oxford Street Works, ACCRINGTON, LANCASHIRE, England.

POSITIVELY PRODUCES HAIR.

STOPS IT FALLING OUT.

KEEPS IT ITS NATURAL COLOUR.

PREVENTS IT GOING GREY.

BEST FOR BEARDS AND MOUSTACHES.

"TATCHO"

[THE "GEORGE R. SIMS" HAIR RESTORER.]

GROWS BEAUTIFUL BOUNTIFUL HAIR.

MAKES WOMEN'S TRESSES SOFT AND SILKEN.

A DELIGHTFUL HAIR WASH AND TONIC.

BEST FOR THE TOILET TABLE.

"TATCHO" is sold by all Chemists and Hairdressers throughout the World in Bottles, 2s. 9d. and 5s., or can be had post-free direct from the office, 11, Farringdon-avenue, E.C., on receipt of Postal Order for 3s. or 5s. 4d. Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "George R. Sims" Hair Restorer Company, and crossed Union Bank.

"GEORGE R. SIMS" HAIR RESTORER COMPANY, Ltd., 11, Farringdon-avenue, City, E.C.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH

Is the BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE in the WORLD.

PREVENTS THE DECAY OF THE TEETH.

Renders the Teeth Pearly White.

IS PERFECTLY HARMLESS AND DELICIOUS TO THE TASTE.

Is Partly Composed of Honey, and Extracts from Sweet Herbs and Plants.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World.

2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER,

Only put in Glass Jars, Price 1s.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from Falling off.

Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.

Being delicately perfumed, it leaves no Unpleasant Odour.

IS NOT A DYE.

Should be in every House where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST OR HAIRDRESSER FOR

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

IMPERIAL ROVER CYCLES

HIGHEST CLASS MACHINES. NOTED FOR STABILITY.

ANY MAKE OF TYRES FITTED TO ORDER.

Fully Illustrated Price List of these celebrated Machines Free on application to

THE ROVER CYCLE CO. LTD. (LATE J. K. STARLEY & CO. LTD.)

METEOR WORKS, COVENTRY.

LONDON { 4 and 5, HOLBORN VIADUCT, E.C.; 157, NEW BOND ST. W.
19 and 20, OLD BAILEY, E.C. (Repairs Department).

Solid Silver, £4 4s.

Substantially made afternoon tea set on approval. If you decide within two weeks that you do not want it, the money will be returned. Every piece is the highest strength consistent with neatness, and will last a life-time. English Hall Marked.

Delivered safe and secure on receipt of

£4 4s.

WATCHMAKERS' ALLIANCE LTD.,

227, Regent-st., & 184, Oxford-st., London.

Estd. 1784.

Old Bushmills

PURE MALT

WHISKEY.

ONE of Nature's greatest wonders is the Giant's Causeway, quite near to which the world-famed Old Bushmills Distillery is situated.

The geological formation of the adjoining country is such that barley of an extraordinary fine quality is grown there, and the water obtained from this region possesses wonderful medicinal qualities; hence the great superiority of the Whiskey made at Bushmills over any other in the World.

Old Liqueur, 51s. per doz.

* * * THREE STARS. 45s. ,, ,,

Carriage Paid. Packages Free. Nett Cash.

Orders will be executed from either of the undermentioned Offices or from the accredited Agents in all parts of the World.

The Old Bushmills Distillery Co., Ltd., Hill-street, Belfast.

The Old Bushmills Distillery Co., Ltd., 42, Norfolk-street Strand, W.C.

The Purest and the Nicest.

Hovis Bread

Perfectly Self Digestive.

Hovis Bread is baked and delivered daily by all good class Bakers in the British Isles; Hovis Biscuits are sold by most Grocers and Bakers; or 6d. and 1s. Samples of Bread and Biscuits will be sent on receipt of stamps by THE HOVIS-BREAD FLOUR Co., Ltd., Millers, Macclesfield.

Learning to write with the pen is a wearisome task. . .

But nothing can be simpler or more delightful than learning to manipulate

THE. . .

YOST

. . . Typewriter,

AND THE BENEFITS TO BE DERIVED FROM ITS USE ARE TESTIFIED TO BY AN ARMY OF PEOPLE

INVALUABLE to the Clergyman, the Judge, the Lawyer, the Editor, the Physician, the Business Man, and ALL WHO HAVE MUCH WRITING TO DO.

Sent on One Month's Hire, or Free Trial for Seven Days.

The YOST Typewriter Co., Ltd.,
50, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

FARADAY & SON's

Electric Light Fittings

New Designs

(in Classic and Renaissance)
for Season '98

2 & 3 BERNERS ST. LONDON W

FOR ACCURACY

H. SAMUEL'S KEYLESS WATCHES.

Prices show a considerable reduction as compared with the heavy London charges

Free by post to any address.

Illustrated Book of 168 Pages, comprising Watches, Diamonds, Jewellery, Clocks, Cutlery, Electro-Plate, &c., forwarded free on application.

LADY'S KEYLESS WATCH, fine jewelled movement, carefully adjusted. Handsome art-tinted dials or plain, as preferred. Also supplied two sizes smaller than drawn if desired. Gold, £3 Silver, 27/6

GENTLEMAN'S KEYLESS WATCH, fine jewelled movement carefully adjusted, hard enamel dial. Gold or steel hands, crystal glass front. Gold, £5 5s. Silver, 32/6

NEW GOLD INITIAL BROOCH. Any letter supplied. H. Samuel's price, 5/-

When writing please mark the envelope "accurate"

H. SAMUEL, LEVEE WATCH FACTORY, MARKET ST., MANCHESTER.

THE PATENT "RIGID-CURVE" STROP.
FOR THE HOLLOW GROUND RAZOR.

An indispensable addition to the dressing-bag of military men, clergymen, barristers, actors, men of business, and all whose professions render close, rapid, and repeated shaving a necessity. This Strop is quite different to all others, men to whom easy shaving is a boon are astonished at the solid comfort to be got out of shaving with a razor sharpened on the "Rigid-Curve," a Strop which invariably produces a keener edge than has hitherto been possible by any known means.

Price 3s. 6d., carriage paid. Money returned any time within a month if not approved.

A. HOWARTH, 53, Penn-road, Wolverhampton.

CARTER 6A NEW CAVENDISH ST. PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON.

ONLY ADDRESS OF ORIGINAL CARTER LITERARY MACHINE.

For holding book, lamp, meals, &c., in any position over an easy chair, bed, or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. Prices from 17/6

INVALID FURNITURE.
ADJUSTABLE COUCHES and BEDS from £1. 10/-

Bed Lift £3. 10/- Reclining Boards, 25/- Walking Machines Portable W.C.'s. Electric Bells, Urinals, &c. Air & Water Beds.

Bed Rests 7/6 Leg Rests 10/- Crutches 10/6 Bed Baths 12 6 Commodes, £1. 5/-

Carrying Chairs from £1.
Breakfast in Bed Tables from 30/-

Self-Propelling Chairs from £2

BATH CHAIRS FROM £1. 5/-

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES POST FREE.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, NEW CAVENDISH ST. Portland-pl. London, W.

BEST & SAFEST DENTIFRICE

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS AND PERFUMERS IN ELEGANT CRYSTAL TOILET CASKET PRICE 2/6.
ALSO IN PATENT METALLIC BOX PRICE 1/-

PRESERVE YOUR TEETH BY USING THE

OS TOOTH BLOCK

Established 20 years

OVER 3000 TESTIMONIALS

WIRE CYCLE SADDLE.

WOODS' PATENT.

AN IDEAL SADDLE FOR LADY OR GENTLEMAN.

NO MORE CHAFING.

SADDLE SORENESS ENTIRELY PREVENTED.

One Month's Trial Allowed.

Fitted with Felt or Leather Cover.

Prices and Testimonials on application to

THE LONGFORD WIRE CO., LTD., WARRINGTON.

Showrooms—61, ST. MARY AXE, LONDON. [Please mention this Journal.

USE ONLY

BLAISDELL PENCILS

SELF-POINTING.

ALL COLOURS. ALL GRADES.

NO WASTE. BEST LEADS.

Black Lead 1d. & 2d. Coloured Crayons 2d. & 3d.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Sample Box of 5 Pencils 1s., Free by Post in the U.K.

BLAISDELL PENCILS, Ltd., 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

WATER ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM DISEASE GERMS, BY USING THE

BERKEFELD FILTER.

Full Illustrated Price List and Testimonials free on application.

FILTER H. AS SKETCH, 42s.

SMALLER SIZE, 25s.

Extract from the Special Report to the British Medical Journal on "The Relative Efficiency of Water Filters," by Drs. Sims Woodhead and Cartwright Wood, Jan. 22nd, 1898. "Experiments were carried out with the Filter H., an exceedingly good model which seems to subserve the functions of a Filter better than any we have yet seen described. . . . The output is so large that there is no reason why such Filters should not supply sufficient water for all household requirements. These Berkefeld Filters afford complete protection against the communication of waterborne disease."—Offices and Showrooms:—

THE BERKEFELD FILTER CO., Ltd., 121, Oxford-street, London, W.

City Depot: W. SCHACHT & CO., 26, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.

"The Old Favourite."

MAX GREGER'S CARLOWITZ

SAFEST, SOUNDEST

Dinner Wine.

PURE HUNGARIAN BURGUNDY.

From 15/- per doz.

Of all Wine Merchants and Grocers.

See that every cork bears the brand 'Max Greger.' Without it the wine is not genuine.

MARTYRS TO INDIGESTION, KIDNEY TROUBLES, RHEUMATISM, GOUT, &c., &c.

AVOID BEETROOT SALTS!

USE ONLY 'GLEBE' SUGAR.

GOOD FRIENDS IN FOUL WEATHER.

GAMAGE'S WATERPROOF CYCLING PONCHOS from 3/3

Black proof or Electric Gossamer.

As Illustrated, from 4/11 to 13/6.

Ladies' from 5/6.

Write for post free Catalogue.

A. W. GAMAGE, Ld., Holborn, E.C.

DENTAKON

For Cleaning

ARTIFICIAL TEETH,

EITHER

Gold, Platinum, or Vulcanite,

Deodorizing, Disinfecting, removing Grease, keeping them Bright and Clean as when new.

ALL WEARERS SHOULD TRY IT.

Recommended by many eminent Dentists.

In Boxes, 1s. 6d., through any Chemist, or Post free from Maker,

C. LOWE, Chemist, Surbiton, S.W.

These Cigarettes are the Choicest in the Market, and will be appreciated by connoisseurs. Sample Box of 25, Post Free, 2s.

THE VASSO

HIGH-CLASS TURKISH CIGARETTES.

Of the Manufacturers,

LITSICA, MARX & Co.

21, Piccadilly, 84, Strand,

Or at Head Depot—174, HIGH HOLBORN, W.C.

Price List on Application

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.
THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up, £300,000. Total funds, over £1,500,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £30,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

BIRKBECK BANK (Estab. 1851), Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, London. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, on the minimum monthly balances when not below £100.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK with particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

H. HALFORD and COMPANY,
70 and 71, Palmerston Buildings, Old Broad Street, London.

Business in Stocks and Shares at close prices.

Dealings reported by wire if required.

Prompt Settlements.

Thousands of Testimonials from Clients.

Americans and Canadians a Speciality. Also Westralians and Kaffirs.

Lists of Closing Prices gratis.

ESTABLISHED 1869. Telegrams: "Monitor, London."
NO CONNECTION WITH ANY OTHER FIRM.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No Member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.
Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.
A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

THREE GOLD MEDALS.

Exquisite Models. Perfect Fit. Guaranteed Wear.
THE Y & N PATENT DIAGONAL SEAM CORSET
Will not split in the Seams nor tear in the Fabric. Made in White, Black, and all the fashionable colours and Shades in Italian Cloth, Satin, and Coutil, 4/11, 5/11, 6/11, 7/11 per pair and upwards.
CAUTION.—Every genuine Y & N Corset is stamped.
Sold by Drapers and Ladies' Outfitters in the United Kingdom and Colonies

MASSAGE AT HOME.
The MATTO CHAIN
Used by Sandow and all the leading Athletes, Cyclists, &c.
Recommended by the Medical Profession.
For Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, and all Nervous Disorders. Prevents Obesity.
Price 7s. 6d. each. By Post, 4d. extra. From all Chemists.
MATTO LIMITED, 32 & 34, Clerkenwell-rd. London, E.C.

BEST AND SAFEST NATURAL APERIENT.
Hunyadi János
"The Prototype of all Bitter Waters."
THE LANCET.
CAUTION.
Every Bottle bears the Signature of the Proprietor, ANDREAS SAXLEHNER.

The SUBSCRIPTION LIST will CLOSE at Birmingham THIS DAY (Wednesday), 11th MAY, 1898.

THE
Lee-Metford Small Arms and Ammunition Co. Ltd.

REGISTERED UNDER THE COMPANIES ACTS, 1862 TO 1893.

SHARE CAPITAL - - £350,000,
in £1 Ordinary Shares.
DEBENTURES - - £50,000,
In 500 Four-and-a-half per Cent. Debentures of £100 each.

Trustees for the Debenture Holders.
THE MIDLAND TRUST, Limited, Birmingham.

The Subscriptions for the £1 Ordinary Shares are payable as follows:—2s. 6d. per Share on Application; 2s. 6d. per Share on Allotment; and 15s. per Share on September 1st, 1898. Payments in advance in respect of the 15s. per Share, due on September 1st, will be credited with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

DIRECTORS.
Sir ROGER T. GOLDSWORTHY, K.C.M.G., formerly Colonial Secretary for Western Australia; late Governor Falkland Islands.
G. ALLAN, M.Inst.C.E., Chairman of the British Magazine Rifle Company, Limited.
Captain R. G. W. CHALONER, M.P.
Colonel FRED. HILL, formerly Assistant Managing Director of Kynochs, Limited, Birmingham.
Colonel W. F. NUTHALL, late H.M. Inspector of Small Arms, and of the Royal Small Arms Factory, Birmingham.
The Hon. W. F. B. MASSEY-MAINWARING, D.L., M.P., Director "Birmingham Gazette" Company, Limited.
The Hon. GEO. F. PARKER, late United States Consul, Birmingham.

Bankers.
NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK OF ENGLAND, Limited, Birmingham, and Branches.

Solicitors.
ROWLANDS & CO., Birmingham.

Auditors.
ABBOTT, DEELEY, HILL, & CO., Birmingham.

Broker.
WILLIAM H. HART,
26, Old Broad-street, and Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

Secretary (pro tem.) and Offices.
W. E. ALLDRITT, A.C.A., 9, Bennett's-hill, Birmingham.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire fifty-seven patents and applications for patents for the Lee-Metford Magazine Rifle, the Lee Arms Company's Turnbolt Rifle, the Lee Straight Pull Rifle, the Parkhurst and Lee Cartridge Clips, Magazine Cut-off, Improved Cartridge Extractor, Double Column Magazine, Magazine Cartridge Indicator, &c.; and also to purchase a suitable and extensive freehold works, excepting 180 square yards, which is leasehold, in Birmingham, and to equip the same as A FIRST-CLASS SMALL ARMS FACTORY.

The Lee-Metford Patents have from four to five years to run, and those covering the Rifles of the new types have on an average a life of from ten to twelve years.

No Licences have been issued in respect of the Lee Turnbolt or the Lee Straight Pull Rifles.

NEW SMALL ARMS FACTORY.—There has been, and still is, a large and increasing demand for the Lee-Metford Rifle, hence the necessity for establishing a new small arms factory, which is the principal reason for the formation of this Company. In one case last year, had 30,000 Lee-Metford Rifles been promptly available, seven months would have been allowed for the completion of an order for 100,000. An order for 50,000 Lee-Metford Rifles could not recently be secured because they could not be supplied as quickly as Continental manufacturers can supply other weapons.

The first Share Capital subscribed will be used for the equipment of the factory with the latest and most improved machinery, and for working capital, and until £100,000 has been subscribed the owners of the Patents will not receive any cash payment.

This Company will certainly be most advantageously placed for securing the future orders of the British Government, not only for the Lee-Metford Rifle, but also, should the War Office desire it, for the other rifles of the new types, which latter, it is considered, must command a preference in the choice of an improved weapon.

Suitable works in Adderley-street, Birmingham, will be acquired by the Company, and the most eminent makers of small arms machinery in the world are prepared to equip the factory within six months with the best and most approved machinery, capable of producing 360 rifles every ten hours, as well as machinery for manufacturing large quantities of clips and cartridge cases.

Working at full time in the manufacture of the Lee Turnbolt Rifle, or of the Lee Straight Pull Rifle, and realising for either of those rifles the present contract price of the Lee-Metford Rifle to the British Government, and for cartridge clips the price paid by the United States Government (with Royalty), it is estimated that the Company would make a profit of at least 50 per cent. per annum upon the entire Share capital after providing for all charges.

An output of only 30,000 rifles per annum would, upon this basis, provide a dividend of at least 10 per cent. per annum.

Copies of the Prospectus, with Forms of Application for Shares and Debentures, can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, or Auditors.

The following BANKS are authorised to RECEIVE APPLICATIONS for the DEBENTURE STOCK and PREFERENCE SHARES and ORDINARY SHARES, as undermentioned :—

WILLIAMS DEACON AND MANCHESTER AND SALFORD BANK, LIMITED, Mosley-street, Manchester; 20, Birchin-lane, London; or any other of its Branches.
The MANCHESTER AND LIVERPOOL DISTRICT BANKING COMPANY, LIMITED, Spring-gardens, Manchester; 75, Cornhill, London; or any other of its Branches.
The NATIONAL BANK OF SCOTLAND, LIMITED, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and any other of its Branches.
The COMMERCIAL BANK OF SCOTLAND, LIMITED, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and any other of its Branches.
The BELFAST BANKING COMPANY, LIMITED, Belfast, Dublin, and any other of its Branches.
CRAVEN BANK, LIMITED, Skipton, Bradford, and any other of its Branches.
SAMUEL SMITH & CO., Nottingham, and any of its Branches.

The Lists will OPEN on TUESDAY, MAY 10, at TEN o'clock a.m., and will be CLOSED the following day (WEDNESDAY) at FOUR o'clock in the Afternoon, or earlier, for Town and Country.

THE . .

Fine Cotton Spinners' and Doublers'

ASSOCIATION, LIMITED.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893.

SHARE CAPITAL	£4,000,000
FIRST MORTGAGE DEBENTURE STOCK	£2,000,000
	£6,000,000

THE SHARE CAPITAL IS DIVIDED INTO—

2,000,000 5 PER CENT. CUMULATIVE PREFERENCE SHARES of £1 each	£2,000,000
AND
2,000,000 ORDINARY SHARES of £1 each	£2,000,000

PRESENT ISSUE—

4 PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE DEBENTURE STOCK, part of the £2,000,000 Debenture Stock mentioned above	£1,333 300
1,333,350 5 PER CENT. CUMULATIVE PREFERENCE SHARES of £1 each	£1,333,350
1,333,350 ORDINARY SHARES of £1 each	£1,333,350
	£4,000,000

Of this issue one-third of each class will be reserved for issue to the Vendors in part payment of purchase money, and the balance is now offered for subscription at par.

Payable as follows, viz.:—	Preference Shares. s. d.	Ordinary Shares. s. d.	Debenture Stock.
On Application	2 6	2 6	10 per cent.
On Allotment	7 6	7 6	40 per cent.
On the 15th day of July, 1898	5 0	5 0	25 per cent.
On the 15th day of August, 1898	5 0	5 0	25 per cent.
	20 0	20 0	100 per cent.

The interest on the debenture stock will be paid half-yearly, on the 31st March and on the 30th September in each year, the first payment (calculated from the due dates of payment of the several instalments) being made on the 30th day of September, 1898.

The debenture stock will be redeemable at the option of the Association on or after the 30th day of September, 1918, at par, or before that date at a premium of 10 per cent., six months' notice being required in either case, and the principal and interest thereon will be secured by a trust deed, constituting a specific first mortgage upon the freehold, leasehold, and copyhold properties now purchased by the Association, and a floating first charge upon all the other assets of the Association, but not including its capital for the time being uncalled.

The debenture stock will be issued, and will be transferable when fully paid, in multiples of £10.
The preference shares are cumulative and preferential as to dividend, and preferential as to capital.
The Directors will proceed to allotment without delay after the closing of the lists.
The Association will pay no promotion money or underwriting commission.

Trustees for the Debenture Stock Holders:

ANDREW BENNIE, Esq., Manager, Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Company, Limited.
GEORGE HERVEY WOOD, Esq., Joint Manager, Williams Deacon and Manchester and Salford Bank, Limited.

DIRECTORS.

Sir WM. HY. HOULDSWORTH, Bart., M.P. (Messrs. Thomas Houldsworth & Co., Limited, Manchester), Chairman.

W. H. HOLLAND (Messrs. W. Holland & Sons, Manchester),
HECTOR CHRISTIE (Hector Christie, Settle, Yorkshire), } Vice-Chairmen.
A. H. DIXON (Messrs. A. & G. Murray, Limited, Manchester),
SCOTT LINGS (Reddish Spinning Company, Limited, Reddish),
VERNON BELLHOUSE (Messrs. James & Wainwright Bellhouse, Limited, Manchester),
LOUIS RIVETT (Messrs. Thomas Rivett, Limited, Stockport). } Executive Directors.

(The above Directors form the Executive Board.)

MAURICE G. BELLHOUSE (James & Wainwright Bellhouse, Limited, Manchester).
F. W. D. BOUTH (F. W. Bouth & Company, Limited, Leigh, Lancashire).
M. G. BRADLEY (M. G. & A. Bradley, Nottingham).
SAMUEL HOLLAND (W. Holland & Sons, Manchester)
JOSEPH HIGGINSON (T. Houldsworth & Company, Limited, Manchester).
GERALD PEEL (Jackson-street Spinning Company, Manchester).
HERBERT KNOTT (John Knott & Sons, Ashton-under-Lyne).
HERBERT W. LEE (H. W. Lee & Company, Salford).
H. J. MARSLAND (Robert Marsland & Company, Manchester).
J. W. M'CONNEL (M'Connel & Company, Limited, Manchester).
S. H. MOORHOUSE (Samuel Moorhouse, Stockport).
GEORGE R. MURRAY (A. & G. Murray, Limited, Manchester).
WM. FORREST (Ormrod, Hardcastle, & Company, Limited, Bolton).
DOUGLAS PHILLIPS (Reddish Spinning Company, Limtd., Reddish, Stockport).
JOHN R. OLIVER (Shaw, Jardine, & Company, Limited, Manchester).
EDWIN OLIVER (Shaw, Jardine, & Co., Limited, Manchester).
GEO. C. SWINDELLS (G. Swindells & Son, Limited, Bollington, Macclesfield).
A. E. RAHR (Thomas Taylor & Sons, Limited, Bolton).
H. WOLFENDEN (Wolfenden & Son, Limited, Bolton).

Bankers.

MANCHESTER AND LIVERPOOL DISTRICT BANKING COMPANY, LIMITED.
WILLIAMS DEACON AND MANCHESTER AND SALFORD BANK, LIMITED.

Brokers.

London—COATES, SONS, & CO., 99, Gresham-street, E.C.
Manchester—JONES, MURRAY, & FRYER, 26, Pall Mall.
Glasgow—AITKEN, MACKENZIE, & CLAPPERTON, 68, St. Vincent-street.
Dublin—J. D. CARNEGIE & CO., 48, Dame-street.
Belfast—OSBORNE & BARR, 13, Waring-street.
Bradford—KNIGHT & BARNES, 39, Swan Arcade.
Nottingham—BROMLEY, CUNLIFFE, & CO., Prudential Buildings, Queen-st.

Solicitors.—Messrs. ADDLESHAW, WARBURTON, & CO., 15, Norfolk-street, Manchester.

Auditors.—Messrs. EDWIN GUTHRIE & CO., 71, King-street, Manchester; and 10, Tokenhouse Yard, London, E.C.

Secretary.—FRANK WHITWORTH.

Registered Offices.—TEMPLE CHAMBERS, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, MANCHESTER.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be had on application at the Offices of the Association, or from their Bankers, Brokers, Auditors, or Solicitors.

FIFTY-FIFTH ANNUAL (ABRIDGED) REPORT

OF THE

Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York

RICHARD A. McCURDY, President.

Head Office for the United Kingdom—17 and 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

Bankers—THE BANK OF ENGLAND. THE NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK OF ENGLAND. THE BANK OF SCOTLAND. THE BANK OF IRELAND. THE GUARANTY TRUST COMPANY.

Solicitors—FRESHFIELDS & WILLIAMS. General Manager—D. C. HALDEMAN.

GENERAL MANAGER'S REPORT TO THE BRITISH POLICYHOLDERS.

It is my privilege to submit to you the following Report (abridged) of the Company for the year 1897, which shows continued and increased prosperity in every department.

FUNDS.

On December 31st, 1897, the Funds of the Company stood at £51,823,593, an increase of £3,933,138 over the previous year.

INCOME.

The Life Premium Income during the year amounted to £8,029,813, an increase over the previous year of £172,222. The total income for the year amounts to £11,312,833, an increase over that of 1896 of no less than £891,474.

OUTGO.

The amount paid for claims, £3,122,012, is £7,090 less than that for last year; and while other payments to Policyholders show an increase of £61,529 the expenses were reduced by £44,652. This result, which of course involves a corresponding reduction in the expense ratio, will be seen to be specially satisfactory when viewed in connection with the large increase in

THE NEW BUSINESS.

The number of Policies issued and paid for was 55,870, assuring £27,879,046, a total only once exceeded by the Company. The number of Policies in force at the end of the year was 342,642, assuring £192,115,478. The amounts to £7,291,210, an addition of no less than £1,185,766, the largest amount of surplus ever accumulated in a single year.

SURPLUS OVER LIABILITIES

THE BRITISH BRANCH.

The progress of the Company in the United Kingdom has been phenomenal. Although the London Office was opened so recently as 1887, we are able to present the following statement of the business transacted in the United Kingdom :—

3,645 Proposals were received during the year for	£2,084,176	0	0
Of which 3,074 were completed for	1,675,337	0	0
On which the New Premiums received amounted to	71,011	8	0
Consideration for Annuities	145,378	10	8
Total Premium Income for the year, excluding consideration for Annuities	380,930	2	7

The character of this business is shown by the fact that the Annual discontinuance from all causes, including termination by death, maturity, completion of Limited Payments, and surrenders, is only Five per cent. Such a record on British soil, accomplished in the space of eleven years, may be safely accepted as good evidence of the claims of the Office.

The firm hold thus established in Great Britain is no doubt largely due to its remarkable Bonus results, which may be illustrated by reference to some of the Policies still on the books.

The largest of the older Policies, No. 57 for £2.000, was issued in the year 1843. The present value of this Policy as a Death Claim, including Bonus additions, is £6,534. Or, to take another way of illustrating the results on Policies in the Mutual Life :—

On 23 Policies issued in 1843 and 1844, amounting to ...	£12,230
The Bonus additions declared amount to	26,467
Raising the total value of them to...	38,697

It will be seen that the original average amount of each Policy has been more than trebled by the bonus addition in 55 years.

These results show the position of Policies issued in the United States. After eleven years' work in Great Britain, the Company is able to show what it has done for its British Policyholders. Speaking generally, the Reversionary Bonus additions on WHOLE LIFE, Ten-Year Distribution Policies, range from £1 13s. 6d. to £5 5s. 1d. per cent. per annum, according to age of the assured. But the

VALUABLE OPTIONS

offered to the assured in connection with these results are even more striking than the actual amount of the Bonus itself. Under the options given on completion of the Distribution Period, a man may adapt the Policy to his changed circumstances. If he wants money, he can convert the Policy which has hitherto protected his family or Estate into an Endowment immediately payable to himself. Illustrations of this will be seen on reference to the LIBERAL SURRENDER VALUES.

The Cash Surrender Value of Life Policies recently completing their first Ten-Year Distribution period is equal to the return of nearly the whole of the premiums paid. For example, Life Policy No. 323,635, with a bonus of £2 10s. 2d. per cent. per annum, carries a Cash Surrender of 92 per cent. of the premiums paid, of which 78 per cent. was guaranteed. Another Life Policy, No. 326,801, with a bonus of £2 13s. 8d. per cent. per annum, bears a Cash Value of 95 per cent. If, on the other hand, a man still needing Life Insurance protection finds himself unable to continue his payments, he may take the full value of the Policy in Extended Insurance free of further charge. This may be illustrated by Whole Life Policy No. 391,455 for £250, issued at the London Office. After this Policy had been nine years in force, the insured desired to discontinue it, having paid in premiums £58 13s. 9d. Although the first distribution period had not been completed, the Company offered the following options :—

Extended insurance for a further 20 years for £250 (the full amount of the Policy), without any further payment of premium; or, a fully paid up Policy payable at death for £112 10s.; or, a Pure Endowment payable at age 54 for £112 10s.

These illustrations will serve to show the constant endeavour of the Company so as to safeguard the Policyholder that whatever change may occur in his circumstances he shall be secured the full value of his Policy in the form best adapted to his needs.

LOCAL ADVANTAGES.

The Company has done everything necessary to secure British Policyholders all the local advantages and conveniences obtainable from an Insurance Company. Every Policy is issued subject to British Law. Income Tax is allowed off the Premiums. Special policies are issued providing for payment of Estate Duty where required before probate is granted. Claims are paid in sterling at the London Office immediately upon acceptance of proof of death and title; indeed, nothing is left undone to facilitate the business of the Company in the United Kingdom

INVESTMENT INSURANCE.

The Company has introduced two Policies in which special prominence is given to the Investment feature. One of these, known as the Five per cent. Bond, becomes, at maturity, a negotiable instrument payable to bearer, carrying guaranteed interest, payable half-yearly on January 1st and July 1st each year, at the rate of Five per cent. per annum, for Twenty years, at the end of which time the Bond is redeemed by the Company at its Face value. The other Policy is known as the Five per cent. Bond Endowment, under which, at completion of the Endowment period selected, Five per cent. per annum is guaranteed to the investor himself, or, if he pre-decease, to the Holder of the Bond, for Twenty years, with payment thereafter, of the Face value.

VALUATION BASIS.

The rate of interest hitherto assumed in valuing the liabilities of the Company has been 4 per cent. The Company have decided that on all business received on and after January 1st, 1898, the rate assumed shall be 3½ per cent. The guaranteed Surrender Value on Policies will be increased, while any advance in the rate of interest will augment the surplus payable. The premium rates have been adjusted to correspond with the new valuation rate.

D. C. HALDEMAN, General Manager.

Copies of the full report, of which this is an abridgment, can be had on application to any of the Company's Branch Offices, or from the Head Office for the United Kingdom, 17 and 18, Cornhill, E.C.

HITCHINGS' GOLD MEDAL BABY STORES.

Under Royal Patronage. The Emporium of Baby Carriages and Baby Cars par excellence.

HITCHINGS, LIMITED, have recently had the honour of building the Baby Carriage for the Baby Prince Edward of York, having previously executed orders for H.M. the Queen, H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, H.R.H. Princess Henry of Battenberg, H.R.H. the Duchess of Fife, H.R.H. Princess Henry of Prussia, &c. Also the Royal and Imperial families of Russia, Germany, Denmark, Portugal, and Sweden.

Hitchings' Baby Carriages from 2 to 25 Guineas, and Baby Cars from 15/6 to 10 Guineas, are not only the Best, but also 25 per cent. cheaper than those sold by dealers and stores. A carriage should always be purchased from the actual manufacturer. Enquiries receive prompt and courteous attention. Illustrations free. Correspondence solicited. 300 varieties in stock.

LONDON { 198, Oxford Street, W.
19-21, Ludgate Hill, E.C.
28, St. George's Place (Hyde Park Corner).

LIVERPOOL; 74, Bold Street,

Bankers: CITY BANK, LTD., CAPITAL & COUNTIES BANK. Telegram Address: "HITCHINGS, LONDON."
Works: DUKE STREET, LIVERPOOL; LUDGATE SQUARE, LONDON. Boston (U.S.A.) Agency: 92, WASHINGTON STREET.

HITCHINGS' "PRINCESS MAY" BABY CARRIAGE IS MOST SUITABLE FOR A CHRISTENING PRESENT, BEING RECHERCHE & UNPROCURABLE ELSEWHERE.

Before going elsewhere send for Hitchings' Pictorial Price Book free on mentioning "TRUTH."

THE "TROUVILLE" BABY-CAR.

Is equally adapted for use as a Sleeping Car for a young baby, or a Mail Car for an older child.

1. New registered design.
2. Runs on four silent wheels.
3. Small light front wheels.
4. Very safe, centre of gravity being very low.
5. Hitchings' Patent Cee Springs. Very easy.
6. Occupies small space.
7. Has deep well for legs and feet. No cramping.
8. Hitchings' Patent "Any Position Hood."
9. Half the weight of a wood body. Fine wicker and grass.
10. Cool in summer.
11. Artistically painted.
12. Beautifully upholstered in pale blue or art green.

Price as drawn £4. 4s. nett.

Enormous Demand.

There can be no surer sign of popularity than the enormous demand all over the country for

LIPTONS' DELICIOUS TEAS

They are appreciated everywhere for their delicate flavour and exquisite aroma, and undoubtedly have attained the pinnacle of fame.

LIPTONS CONTROL THE TEA MARKET.

LIPTONS' TEAS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD

ROYAL APPOINTMENT
LIPTON,
Tea Merchant by Special Appointment To Her Majesty The Queen.

BUY FROM THE GROWERS
The Finest Tea the World can produce.
PER 1/7 LB.
NO HIGHER PRICE.
RICH, PURE, AND FRAGRANT.
PER 1/- AND 1/4 LB.

LIPTON LTD., TEA, COFFEE, AND COCOA PLANTERS, CEYLON, THE LARGEST TEA, COFFEE, AND PROVISION DEALERS IN THE WORLD.

Chief Offices: CITY ROAD, LONDON. Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

Ceylon Offices and Tea and Coffee Shipping Warehouses: PRINCE STREET, and MADDEMA MILLS, CINNAMON GARDENS, COLOMBO. Indian Offices and Shipping Warehouses: HARE STREET, CALCUTTA.

PATENT FAST DYED KHAKI MATERIALS.

Absolutely Fast to Washing.
Stand any amount of wear.

Most useful for all kinds of wear by Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children.

WOOL.
SERGES.
FLANNELS.
CORDS.
LEG BANDAGES.

Contractors to H.M. WAR OFFICE and INDIA OFFICE.

COTTON.
DRILLS.
SERGE.
CORDS.

Price List and Patterns Free on application to

E. SPINNER & CO., MANCHESTER AND BOMBAY, Sole Agents.

OUR PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,002.

After going through the whole of the lists received (a selection from them was published in TRUTH for April 28) I find that the six London Buildings which received most votes were:—1. The Houses of Parliament. 2. Westminster Abbey. 3. The Tower of London. 4. St. Paul's Cathedral. 5. The Royal Courts of Justice. 6. Somerset House. These, then, are, in the collective opinions of the competitors, "The Six Handsomest and most Effective Public Buildings in London." So far as I have been able to discover only one competitor, JEMIMA, gave the whole of these in her list. To JEMIMA, therefore, the prize of Two Guineas will be awarded.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,007.

In the interesting volume of Notes from his Diary, lately published by Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff, the following incident is to be found:—"Lady Wallace," he states, "on an occasion gave him an exceeding clever acrostic written by her granddaughter, Miss Milbank." Some one in the presence of that young lady had read the following lines on Gladstone:—

G was the Great man, mountain of mind,
L a Logician, expert and refined;
A was an Adept in rhetoric's art,
D was the Dark spot he had in his heart;
S was the Subtlety led him astray,
T was the Truth which he bartered away!
O was the Cipher his conscience became,
N the New light which enlightened the same;
E was the Evil one shouting with joy:
At it and down with it, Gladstone, my boy!

Without leaving the room Miss Milbank went to a table and wrote as follows:

G is the Genius that governs the nation,
L is the Lords who require education;
A is the Animus raised by the great,
D is the Donkeys who fear for the State;
S is the Standard that Liberals raise,
T is the Tories who howl in dispraise;
O 's Opposition, wanting a head,
N is the Nation, not driven but led;
E is old England shouting for joy:
Stick to the Government, Gladstone, my boy!

Without attempting to decide which of these sets of lines is the better one, it is proposed to make the writing of similar Acrostics the subject of this week's Competition. The usual prize of Two Guineas is offered, that is to say, to the competitor who is most successful

IN WRITING TWO RHYMED ACROSTICS ON LORD SALISBURY IN THE METRE OF THE LINES QUOTED ABOVE.

The word "Salisbury" only is to be taken, and each Acrostic is to consist of ten lines as in the given examples. Each of the first nine lines must begin with one of the letters S-A-L-I-S-B-U-R-Y, the tenth and last line being used to complete the stanza. Each competitor, let it be understood, is to send in two Acrostics, one eulogistic and the other critical. All answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, May 23, at the latest.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,003.

I hope to be able to announce the result of this competition next week.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of "R. F.," winner of a half of Prize No. 1,001, is R. Fright, Esq., 35, Ferndale-road, Leytonstone, E.

IMPISI.—I will take care that the misprint in no way affects your chance in the competition.

CLAYSHIRE.—Thanks for your letter.

NODDING VIOLET.—The necessary correction shall be made.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,004.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

HUMOROUS SONGS WITH THE REFRAIN, "HE WAS SUCH A METHODICAL MAN."

A child was once born, in a free land, a slave;
For method's own martyr was he.
From the first he resolved that from cradle to grave,
One should go by due stage and degree.
He stuck to his point, all his friends to annoy;
And so, before manhood began,
He insisted on being a hobbledehoy—
He was such a methodical man.

In methods of dress he was firm as a rock,
A stickler right down to his foot;
Made a point of invariably donning a sock
Before he would put on a boot.
His hobby ruled even his meal-times; in fine,
Throughout his terrestrial span,
He, ere he had breakfasted, never would dine—
He was such a methodical man.

Not even could love, undermining his whim,
Break down his tyranical sway.
Could ever punctilious person like him
To rites hymeneal find way?
Before to the altar with any he went—'Twas thus that his mania ran—
The lady had first to bestow her consent—
He was such a methodical man.

He ended his pilgrimage steadfast in soul,
And true to his principle still.
There exists not his like from the Pole to the Pole—
'Tis doubtful if ever there will.
In vain might mankind have unitedly tried
To change his deliberate plan;
For he would not be buried till first he had died—
He was such a methodical man.

Mos.

On identical days in the year
Fires were lit or left off in the grate.
Let the weather be mild or severe,
Or the summer come early or late,
For the almanac told him, he said,
When each of the seasons began
(This he could not get out of his head,
He was such a methodical man).

When the holiday season came round
In his registered watering-place,
As before he was sure to be found,
With him there was no change of base.
He always left by the same train
(The one that gets there when it can),
And arrived in the same shower of rain—
He was such a methodical man.

If a book was misplaced by mischance,
In putting it back on the shelf
He would note the mistake at a glance,
And for weeks would not be himself.
His razor of turns a fixed scale,
O'er the strop he most carefully ran,
Never one more or less without fail—
He was such a methodical man.

By some, with the wisdom of youth,
He was dubbed a mere fussy old fool,
And for no better reason, forsooth,
Than that he did all things by rule.
But neither sarcasm or chaff
Could induce him to alter his plan;
He gave all full freedom to laugh—
He was such a methodical man.

Marplot.

'Twas his way from his birth: In his first days on earth
He showed what a man he would be,
Never cried for the moon, nor, by supping too soon,
Burnt his mouth with his porridge—not he!
In his whole time at school ne'er caught breaking a rule,
Through his course of instruction he ran;
Never joined in a lark, which might bring a bad mark—
He was such a methodical man.

He became a young swell, at whom many a belle
Would cast glances admiring and shy;
No one's feelings to hurt, with each one he would flirt,
And make love to them all on the sly
Until when, the amount of their banking account
Opportunity finding to scan,
The most wealthy he took, and the rest he forsook—
He was such a methodical man.

In a bank he obtained a chief clerkship, and gained
So much trust by methodical ways,
That in handling their gold he contrived to withhold
The excess over "average days."
Not too much would he take, fearing lest he should wake
Any doubts of his nice little plan
By proceedings too rash in securing the cash—
He was such a methodical man

But unluckily he one fine day failed to see
That a keen eye was watching his hand;
And he tried to explain (but his efforts were vain)
The affair they could not understand;
So he paid for his shot, for hard labour he got
At the crank, yet, believe it who can,
Such monotonous work could his spirit ne'er irk—
He was such a methodical man.

Ludwig B.

Mr. Prim was a scholar, you bet your last dollar,
And O, it would fill up your cup
Of delight to the brim just to gaze upon him
When he'd had a long day's tidy-up.
He'd praise order in Greek or some language antique,
He would draw out from Euclid a plan;
Then, the whole of next day, all his things went astray—
He was such a methodical man.

He would always turn surly unless he was early
By full thirty minutes for trains;
And agonies suffer, because the old duffer
Went poking his nose into drains.
He wouldn't ask favours of porters or shavers
Belonging to any low clan;
So he always went wrong, as he fumbled along—
He was such a methodical man.

Mr. Prim's little kid couldn't do as 'twas bid—
(That's not grammar, I know, but it's his);
It did just what it chose, and, as you may suppose,
The kiddy thought that was good "biz."
"Spare the rod, spoil the child!" Mr. P. only smiled,
Ticklebody was laid under ban.
Prim was not to be foiled; he preferred children spoiled—
He was such a methodical man.

But old P. died at last; and his wife stood aghast,
For his method abode by him still.
Though he'd drawn it with care, yet I vow and declare
He had not signed his name to his will.
There were uncles and cousins and aunts by the dozens,
Each coming arrayed spick and span
For a share in the game; and they all said the same—
"He was such a methodical man!"

Rabelais.

Titus Tomkins might never have added his name
To the scroll of illustrious men
Had he sought for a niche in the temple of fame
By the aid of a sword or a pen;
But a feeling of awe overtook those who saw
How he lived by symmetrical plan;
And some hundreds of eyes gazed on him with surprise,
He was such a methodical man!

In his earliest infancy Titus betrayed
A profound mathematical mind;
He would not eat his pap until it had been weighed,
So this had to be done ere he dined.
When the era of bibs and innocuous fibs
Had departed, and manhood began,
He had grown most exact in his habits, in fact,
He was such a methodical man!

When he courted a lady of sweet seventeen,
She besought him, in vain, to relax,
And to cultivate habits less like a machine,
But her patience he sadly would tax
By the punctilious style of his love-making smile,
As he said, while she lowered her fan,
"Tuesday week, my dear Miss, I will ask for a kiss"—
He was such a methodical man!

By the aid of a compass he parted his hair,
With a marksman's precision, 'twas said,
He computed the puffs from his pipe with much care,
And laid always one way in his bed.
He arose with the lark, in the daylight or dark,
Walked half way to the station—then ran,
Read the news backwards first, to prepare for the worst;
He was such a methodical man!

Enaed.

Ebenezer was one in a hundred,
Or at least, you can guess what I mean,
For he never by any means blundered,
(As he thought) in his daily routine.
He believed in a system for all things
Since to toddle in life he began.
And he paid great attention to small things—
He was such a methodical man.

You could see by the tags of his laces
What a lover of order was he,
For he put all his things in their places
To a most conscientious degree.
But whenever he wanted to use them,
And his optics in search of them ran,
You may bet what you like he would lose them—
He was such a methodical man.

Now, he dealt very freely with tradesmen,
And he kept their accounts on a file
(It's a method that certainly aids men
To remember what's owing—don't smile!)
But although he was careful to lay them
In the order in which they began,
He was always forgetting to pay them—
He was such a methodical man.

He had even a system in drinking,
For of whiskey he knew all the blends,
And he went where the glasses were chinking,
As a rule, at the cost of his friends.
In a word, he was never erratic,
For he did everything on a plan,
And they called him by name Automatic—
He was such a methodical man. Walfred.

Why should any one try to be good or be great?
He can make himself readily known
By a study of trifles, and, smiling at Fate,
He can get quite a name of his own;
For although he may be more than half off his head,
He need only stick fast to one plan;
Then, whatever his faults, it will always be said,
"He was such a methodical man."

In the case of a Bishop; if livings so fat
He bestows on his relatives near,
And consistently holds that, in matters like that,
Worth and learning are counted small beer;
Though incumbents may growl and poor curates be sad,
And abuse in the papers we scan,
Yet, no doubt, 'twill be said that he can't have been bad,
"He was such a methodical man."

A Commander-in-Chief may employ all his time
In designing new buttons and coats,
And may think lack of ornament almost a crime,
While his talents to braid he devotes;
Though the officers curse and for uniforms pay,
While they bear up as well as they can,
Yet the future will show there are hundreds will say,
"He was such a methodical man."

Then, hold Britons, let's follow our insular ways.
What though foreigners' markets forestall;
What though times may be changed; we shall still have the praise,
Which can compensate fully for all;
For of each 'twill be said when he turns up his toes,
And has fully completed life's span,
"Though he never could see but an inch from his nose.
He was such a methodical man." Almaviva.

Although some might esteem him a fool,
He was such a methodical man
That he lived altogether by rule
On a regular pre-arranged plan.
Gi' me summer for flirting, he said,
And the winter for draining the can;
Then he never went sober to bed:
He was such a methodical man!

'Twas in summer he first saw Rosette,
And a captive was made by her charms;
For six months that audacious coquette
Led him, oh! such a life of alarms!
But he, then, to requite the fair maid,
In accord with his notable plan,
Called on winter to come to his aid
He was such a methodical man!

For in summer the cup he eschewed,
And felt little regret for the can,
Though the beer was the best ever brewed
While he flirted with Betty and Ann.
But if one of them, rosy or pale,
In the winter to visit him ran,
He'd prefer a good flagon of ale:
He was such a methodical man

But a damsel there was who, alas!
Could demolish his plans at her will;
In the summer she'd bring him a glass,
And his beer in the winter she'd spill.
For the sex is the mischief and all
To knock over a young fellow's plan,
And exclaim, with a laugh at his fall,
He was such a methodical man! Béranger.

At seven o'clock, without one turn or stretch,
From his neatly-made bed he arose;
And ere from the door his hot water he'd fetch,
He carefully turned down the clothes.
So much time was allowed for each bit of his laving,
The rubbing, the dressing, the brushing, the shaving;
In his bedroom, as elsewhere, he stuck to a plan;
He was such a methodical man!

His servant would shake in her neat, noiseless shoes
When she heard him descending the stair.
Was the salt the wrong side of his plate, or the news-Paper cutter, in spite of her care?
Had she put in the right place the scales used for weighing,
His butter and bacon—oh dear! 'twas no playing
To serve him, for well she knew, poor Mary Anne,
He was such a methodical man!

One morning the breakfast was three minutes late;
Says he, "Mary Anne, you must go
This day week, and exactly three minutes past eight;
My ways of precision you know."
Then calmly he drew from his ne'er-too-fat pocket
His pencil and neat memorandum, to stock it
With one entry more for the 29th Jan.:
He was such a methodical man!

He knew a young lady—well, not very young—
Whose ways much resembled his own;
Whose praise by her former preceptress was sung,
Her darning and book-keeping shown.
Thought he, "what a clock we should make if we married!"
But his neat plan of courtship and conquest miscarried;
The fair fish was caught ere his angling began:
He was such a methodical man! Sissie.

Now little Cis Timm, who was dapper and prim,
Was the son of a conjuring lot,
Who, from mouth all agape, produced yards of red-tape,
After eating red sealing-wax hot.
And as Cis was the pet of a Methodist set,
And was bred on a red-tapey plan,
The whole of his days were summed up in this phrase—
"He was such a methodical man!"

As a Government clerk he rose, after the lark,
Every morning to eggs and hot roll,
And a tongue with his tea (he was married, you see),
But on Sunday he wrestled with sole.
With self-satisfied smirk he arrived at his work
As the stroke of eleven began,
And then studied the Times till the two o'clock chimes:
He was such a methodical man!

For lunch he relied on a ham "cut and dried,"
After which he attended the "biz"
Of the public who cursed as they sadly traversed
Every room till they got back to his.
At a minute past four his work knew him no more,
And he finished his every-day plan
With his home and cigar—his Villar y Villar:
He was such a methodical man!

He expired by degrees: a long-winded disease
Undermined his poor system, may be;
But he died very game, saying "Timm is my name;
I'll be pigeon-holed, please, under 'T.'"
So, labelled like that, he, to Tophet, went pat,
Where the whole demoniacal clan
Sang out, might and main, this sarcastic refrain:
"He was such a methodical man!"
Oom Paul.

Mr. Clarke was a clerk with a moderate "screw,"
He was one of a type not by any means new;
He had daughters thirteen—which was more than a few—
And he named ev'ry one of them "Ann."
You may wonder how he could distinguish between
The short and the tall, or the fat and the lean,
Well, he numbered the lot up from one to thirteen:
He was such a methodical man!

Once at midnight, as he was about to retire
To the rest that "all sorts and conditions" require,
There were shouts and alarms that the house was on fire,
And his wife said, "Let's fly while we can!
Come along, for I've really no wish to be fried,
As we shall be unless we get quickly outside."
"I will come when I've wound up my watch," he replied:
He was such a methodical man!

Now, he went with some friends to a swell music-hall,
Where he very soon tired of the comic man's drawl,
And, in fact, once or twice fell asleep in his stall,
And to wish himself home he began.
But anon when appeared a smart girl in a frock
Of the kind that would give Mrs. Grundy a shock,
He declared it was fast—he, no doubt, meant the clock:
He was such a methodical man!

Though at steering his way through the City a dab
On a day when the fog was unusually drab,
He was knocked down and very near killed by a cab,
And the people to pick him up ran.
They inquired who he was, where he lived, and all that;
He was covered with mud, and though smashed pretty flat,
He replied, "You will find my address in my hat":
He was such a methodical man!
R. F.

He's born, and the world in its wonderment learns
What an orderly infant can do;
When his bottle was empty, he made it by turns
A plaything, a doll, a chew-chew;
He crowed with the cock, and he blubbered by rule,
As the days of his babyhood ran,
Cut his teeth by a timepiece—but never cut school:
He was such a methodical man!

Yet in schooltime his methods were equally smart,
For he wrote Latin lines by the score,
As penal prepayment, or learnt them by heart,
To be kept for correction in store;
At college, of course, he took infinite pains,
And crammed on an up-to-date plan,
For he filled up his head, and he emptied his brains:
He was such a methodical man!

He becomes an M.D., and his method exalts—
Cure-by-rule—as his patients well knew;
If they had influenza, 'twas senna and salts,
Salts and senna if tic-doloureux;
When manhood and fortune both urged him to choose
A wife, and love symptoms began,
He wired to the Matrimonial News:
He was such a methodical man!

For mortal mischances he cared not a rap,
To regular ways he was born;
Though the next door was blazing, he finished his nap,
And gazed on the ruins at morn;
For his funeral rites precise orders he gave,
When threescore-and-ten was his span,
And he held a rehearsal (full dress) at his grave:
He was such a methodical man! W. Nevermore.

He was such a methodical man!
They gave him command of the fleet;
He'd a new and original plan
For always avoiding defeat.
When the foeman roared, "Come, if you dare,"
And glory and carnage began,
He arranged that his fleet—wasn't there:
He was such a methodical man!

He was such a methodical chap!
They gave him command of the troops;
For tactics he cared not a rap,
But indulged in extensive war-whoops.
When the enemy bawled, "Can't you fight?
Ain't it time that the scrimmage began?"
The chief and his troops weren't in sight:
He was such a methodical man!

He was such a methodical cove!
When they said, "Where on earth can he be?"
He promptly and deftly arrove,
Then—vanished again, silently.
They lauded the courage and skill
He showed in concerting this plan;
Some even believe in him still:
He was such a methodical man!

He was such a methodical bloke!
When peace was concluded at last
(There had never been war—that's the joke!)
His colours he nailed to the mast.
The tars and the troops were distressed—
War was over before it began;
On his laurels we'll leave him to rest:
He was such a methodical man! Scrivener.

This world is a scene that is void of routine,
For no sense of a system we're got;
So Mr. Paul Prim said his ways should be trim,
And that method should lighten his lot.
He joined the vast ranks of the army of cranks,
And they made him the king of the clan;
For all pipes were put out when his fame got about:
He was such a methodical man!

With method sublime he apportioned his time,
All his fads were the latest new shape;
With method he stepped, 'tis reported he slept
With his pillows adorned with red tape.
And, what d'you think? why, he measured his drink,
And his food was weighed out from the pan!
For tender, for tough, thirty bites were enough:
He was such a methodical man!

His ways were the same when he courted a dame—
The prudent and peerless Miss Straight.
He met her one eve; at her ma's, I believe,
And his train was the 8.58.
At parting our Miss asked her beau for a kiss,
But he found, on consulting his plan,
That the next was at 9, so he had to decline:
He was such a methodical man!

But he's vanished from us, and he went in a fuss,
For a most systematical "tec."
Late called at his place with intentions to trace
An affair of a name on a cheque.
Yes, he's gone where routine breathes a calm o'er the scene,
Where thin skilly is sipped from a can;
All the court was in tears when the Judge said,
"Ten years":
He was such a methodical man! Cestrian.

Songs have also been received from Sol, Tea Eye, Gertrude, W. N., Viola, Effie, Peach Blossom, Laddie, A. Elmas, W. Fawcett, W. B., Nous, Cutter, Penguin, T. Mayinhan, Quis, Hen-a-Penny, Cockdolim, Meerschaum, Georgina, Simm Ciuque, Silver, Charlwood.

L. CARNIER.

LIQUEURS OF THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE.

These delicious Liqueurs, which have come so much into public favour on account of their wonderful properties of aiding Digestion and preventing Dyspepsia, can now be had of all the principal Wine and Spirit Merchants, and all good Hotels and Restaurants throughout the Kingdom.
Sole Consignee: W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

JUNO CYCLES ARE THE VERY BEST
Any JUNO Twelve Monthly Payments.
JUNO Lady's or Gent's Safety, £12 12s., 21/- monthly; £14 14s., 24/6 monthly. JUNOS from £10, 16/8 monthly. Write for New Season's List of JUNO Cycles & Accessories, sent post free. Junos shipped to all parts of the world. Large discount.
METROPOLITAN MACHINISTS CO., LTD., 75, 76, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.; & at Piccadilly Circus, London, W.

FRANZ JOSEF

APERIENT WATER

Highly appreciated all over the World for Twenty Years past.

Is the Only Palatable Natural Aperient Water. SOLD EVERYWHERE. HEAD OFFICE: BUDAPEST.

Genuine Old Welch Dressers

(Inlaid and Carved Oak), from £6. 10s.

ILLUSTRATED PRICED CATALOGUES POST FREE.
ALL GOODS CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY STATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

HEWETSONS,

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD, London, W.

PARISIAN

FONDANTS, CHOCOLATES, and BONBONS
of the finest quality and from the first makers in Paris.
Depôt des Chocolats de la Maison.
F. MARQUIS (Passage de Panoramas) PARIS.

S. SAINSBURY,

176 and 177, STRAND, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1839.
Third door west of Norfolk-st., connecting the Strand and Thames Embankment.
Lists on application.

FOR BREAKFAST AND SUPPER
THERE IS NOTHING TO EQUAL

DR. TIBBLES' VI-Cocoa

Prepared from kola, cocoa, malt, and hops. It gives strength and energy as a consequence of greater nourishment. Sold everywhere in 6d. packets, and 9d. and 1s. 6d. tins. Mention this paper and write for dainty Sample Tin offered as free test of merit by

DR. TIBBLES' VI-COCOA, Ltd.,
60, 61, & 62, Bunhill Row, London, E.C.

THERE IS ONLY ONE
Pill to a dose of

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

AND THERE IS ONLY ONE GENUINE PACKAGE.
It is EXACTLY like this, only the wrapper is printed in blue on white.

The vial contains forty pills, and costs 1s. 1½d. at the Chemist's. This is cheaper than pennyworths of doubtfully compounded pills. It is but a trifle over a farthing a dose, for ONE PILL IS A DOSE, though they are so small that FORTY-NINE of them only measure one inch square.

Cure TORPID LIVER WITHOUT FAIL. SICK HEADACHE, MALAISE, DISTRESS FROM EATING, and SALLOW COMPLEXION promptly done away with.

BRITISH DEPOT FOR
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS
46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

"BUT BE SURE THEY ARE CARTER'S."

MAPLE & CO

Tottenham Court Road LONDON and Rue Boudreau PARIS

THE LARGEST AND MOST CONVENIENT

Furnishing Establishment

IN THE WORLD

ACRES OF SHOWROOMS ACRES OF SHOWROOMS

MAPLE & CO have the largest and most perfect selection of well-made DINING-ROOM and LIBRARY FURNITURE in the WORLD, including Sideboards of original design in Pollard OAK, Fumigated OAK, rich dark Mahogany, and Walnut, as well as every variety in comfortable Chairs, Easy Chairs, Settees, Lounges for private or club use.

The Canterbury Sideboard, a new model in Oak, Walnut or Mahogany, fitted with two drawers, cupboard with cellaret, and recess below; plate glass in back with shelf above supported by fluted column, cupboard enclosed by cathedral glass door with recess above having plate glass at back; 4 ft. 6 in., £8 17s 6d

MAPLE & CO LONDON and PARIS

Specialities in LIBRARY FURNITURE

The "Russell" Shutter Front Table, in Oak, with panelled back and sides, having numerous fitted and other drawers, pigeon-holes and slides, the whole automatically closing with one operation; 4 ft. 2 in. wide, £6 6s Oak Revolving Chair, £1 2s 6d

"The very thing for a busy scribbler."—Purple Pansy.

Easy Chairs

FIVE HUNDRED TO SELECT FROM

The "Lincoln" Chair
A very comfortable and restful shape, well upholstered in durable tapestry, in various artistic colourings, £2 8s 6d

MAPLE & CO

LONDON AND PARIS

FURNISH HOUSES and RESIDENTIAL FLATS IN GOOD TASTE FROM ONE HUNDRED POUNDS UPWARDS FREE CONSULTATIONS WITH FURNISHING EXPERTS LARGEST STOCK IN THE WORLD

MAPLE & CO

The "University" Suite, in solid Carved Oak, consisting of Six Chairs, upholstered in tapestry or stamped leather finished brass nails, at 16s 9d each; Two Elbow Chairs, 26s 9d each; Sideboard, £6 15s; Dinner Wagon, £2 15s; Extending Dining Table, with patent screw, £3 12s 6d; Overmantel, £3 7s 6d. The very best value obtainable.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & WYMAN, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

TRUTH

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1116. Vol. XLIII. Thursday, May 19, 1898. Price Sixpence.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Building," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen's Drawing Room, on Tuesday, was a very brilliant function, but terribly crowded. There was a very full diplomatic circle, an overwhelming entrée, and so vast an attendance of general company that all the State Rooms were quite crowded long before three o'clock, and there were some stormy scenes at the barriers, in consequence of the frantic eagerness of loyal females to reach the Throne Room before the departure of the Queen, but her Majesty went away directly after the entrée people had passed, and very few indeed of the outsiders had the gratification of beholding her.

The Queen, who looked very well indeed, was punctual in entering the Throne Room, and the Duchess of Devonshire stood on the right of her Majesty to introduce the Ambassadresses as they passed. The Queen spoke a few words to each one of them, and then came the general entrée, for which there had been several special grants to individuals who are not entitled to that privilege. Consequently the first part of the Drawing Room occupied more time than usual, and it was nearly four o'clock before the general presentations commenced. The Princess of Wales, who literally blazed with diamonds, wore cream and silver. It was observed that the Queen wore both the Prussian and Russian orders.

There is a shocking lot of nonsense in the descriptive accounts of the function, with which several journals regaled their readers, the details being manifestly evolved out of some fertile and ingenious imagination. The Queen is stated to have been standing without fatigue for an hour, whereas she was all the time seated in a low chair. It is also utterly untrue that the privilege of appearing at the function was "balloted for," and it is difficult to understand how any sane person can print such crazy fiction. Then we are told that the Duchess of Bedford has not "claimed the honour" of the entrée, but she could not "claim" it, for this privilege is restricted to past and present Cabinet Ministers, great officers, ambassadors, and a number of high official and Court personages, with their wives and unmarried daughters. It is quite a mistake to suppose that a Duchess is, ipso facto, entitled to the entrée.

The Duchess of Manchester obtained a special grant for herself and her daughter for this function through the interest of her mother-in-law, the Duchess of Devonshire. If the Duchess of Bedford had applied for a similar ticket, the Queen would certainly have granted the request, as the late Duchess Dowager was one of her Majesty's oldest and most intimate friends. Lady Warwick is included among the entrée company, which is incorrect. She was received quite late in the afternoon by the Princess of Wales, and nearly all the members of the Royal circle shook hands with her.

The Princess of Wales was dreadfully fatigued after the Drawing Room, as well she might be, having been standing in the Throne Room all the time in a full dress and "attention" attitude, for more than two hours. It was past six before the Palace was clear of company.

The Prince of Wales is to dine at the Hôtel Cecil with the Prime Minister on Saturday night at his full dress banquet to celebrate the Queen's birthday; and H.R.H. and the Princess, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Duke and Duchess of York, the Duke of Cambridge, and other members of the Royal Family, will afterwards attend the Birthday reception at the Foreign Office, when the guests are to be received (in the absence of Lady Salisbury) by Lady Cranborne, Lady Selborne, and Lady Gwendolen Cecil.

There is not the slightest foundation for the statement, which has been going round the papers, that the Prince and Princess of Wales will pay a visit during the summer to the Emperor and Empress of Russia. Another fiction, which appeared in several journals last week, is the announcement that the Emperor and Empress of Russia are coming to England in July.

The Duke of York, during his summer cruise on H.M.S. Crescent, will visit Copenhagen, Stockholm, and St. Petersburg, where he is to be entertained by the Emperor and Empress of Russia, at Peterhof, their magnificent summer palace in the Gulf of Finland, where they were visited last August by President Faure.

Princess Henry of Battenberg is going to Germany next Thursday, and she will be absent from England for about five weeks. The Princess is to pay visits to the Empress Frederick at Kronberg, to Princess Louis of Battenberg at Heiligenberg, and to Count and Countess Erbach at Schönberg.

Princess Charles of Denmark, who returned to Copenhagen last week, after a very brief visit to England, will come back to this country in October for a stay of several months, as Prince Charles is then going for a long cruise about the Mediterranean in the Danish warship Fyn, which is commanded by his uncle Prince Waldemar.

In whatever other way Lord Cadogan may have surpassed, or fallen short of the records of Irish Viceroys, there is no doubt that he has beaten them all with regard to the number of Royal salutes fired at Kingstown in his honour. No Lord Lieutenant was ever so indefatigable in his journeyings across the Irish Channel, and no formalities are remitted, which, according to custom, attend them. Constant though the swearing-in of Deputy Governors at the Castle is, the "Turk, Jew, or Atheist, but not a Papist" principle is never deviated from. The fact stands out with additional prominence, because the Deputy Governors are for the most part taken from the Irish judiciary. The Catholic judges, however, are rigorously excluded, the Lord Chief Justice of Ireland and the Chief Baron among the rest. As all Churches in Ireland are on an equality, and the Irish Protestant is no more a State Church than the Irish Catholic, it is hard to understand on what principle Irish Protestants are legally more entitled to be Deputy Governors of Ireland during the Lord Lieutenant's absence than Irish Catholics. Irish grievances are said to be things of the past. No one now denies that Protestant ascendancy was a grievance in Ireland. It can hardly be said to have come to an end at Dublin Castle.

The announcement that Lord Lucan was to receive the vacant ribbon of St. Patrick caused some surprise in Ireland, where it had not been generally known that there was an Irish nobleman of the name. What a farce to make peers who are absolutely unknown in Ireland knights of a national Irish order, to bestow the ribbon on courtiers and those who are in the inner circles in English society! Personal distinction is not to be looked for in all Irish peers, but there are many noblemen in Ireland who identify themselves with their country and its interests. Surely the ribbon of St. Patrick ought to be for them rather than for those who, in addition to having distinguished themselves publicly in no way, are, for the most part, absentees from Ireland.

The late Duke of St. Albans was a remarkably intellectual-looking man, with a strong likeness to the Stuarts. He was somewhat shy and retiring in disposition, and had no inclination for the bustle and turmoil of an active political career, or he would assuredly have made a great figure in public life. The Duke had a fine and well-cultivated taste in art and literature, and his talk was always very good indeed. A better man of business never lived, and he was a most generous and considerate landlord, and exceedingly popular with his tenants, and among all classes of his neighbours.

For many years the Duke took an active and a very useful part in Notts county business, and in local affairs generally, and he occupied a number of important public positions in Nottingham, and did good work for the borough in many ways. He was a pithy, sensible, and forcible speaker, and his oration in support of the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill, in 1886, was warmly praised by many competent critics, including the late Archbishop Magee. He was most warmly interested in all educational questions. He had been slowly dying from cancer for a long time past, and he bore his most painful illness with all possible fortitude. In politics he was a most decided Liberal until 1886, and so great was his admiration for Mr. Gladstone that it is probable that he would then have followed him in his Home Rule policy but for domestic influences. He was such a genial, bright, and hospitable man, and so universally liked and esteemed by all who knew him, that his death will be sincerely and widely lamented.

The Duke himself created the domain of Bestwood, near Nottingham, where he principally resided. He built the stately house, which has replaced an old Royal hunting lodge, and himself superintended the elaborate decoration of the interior, and personally arranged the fine gallery of pictures and the vast and valuable collection of old furniture, Stuart relics, china, jewels, and general bric-à-brac with which the rooms are crammed. He also planned the beautiful gardens which are the great outdoor feature at Bestwood, and he much improved the grounds, which contain a famous cricket ground, besides planting extensively on his estates. The late Duke had absolute

---

For the Truth Hotel List, see page 1274 in the present issue.
For Hospitals and Appeals, see page 1268.
For Amusements, see page 1272.
For Our Puzzles, see page 1285.

power over his family property in Lincolnshire and Notts, none of it being entailed, and the Bestwood estate is now of great value. He also possessed a very large fortune.

The death of the Duke of St. Albans vacates the office of Lord Lieutenant of Notts, and there is likely to be a bitter fight between the Tories and the Liberal Unionists over the new appointment. The Duke of Portland is the Tory nominee, while the other lot are in favour of Lord Belper, on whom any sagacious man would be disposed to bet odds, as in every patronage conflict which has taken place during the last three years the Devonshire-Chamberlain party have gained the victory.

The Duke of St. Albans had been a member of the R.Y.S. for thirty-six years, having been elected to the club shortly after he came of age. He was very fond of yachting, and he always had a large vessel in commission, but he was very seldom at Cowes during the regatta week.

A Yorkshire correspondent writes:—

It was stated in last week's World that Sir Frederick Milbank made "the largest bag of grouse on record," and that a few months ago he said, "Not beat yet." I am quite sure that Sir Frederick can never have made any such ridiculous remark, as he must have been perfectly well aware that his bag has twice been "beaten." On the Blubberhouse Moor, in Yorkshire, Lord Walsingham killed 844 grouse in one day during the season of 1872, and on a day in August, 1888, the same sportsman's own bag amounted to 1,044 birds!

The Hean Castle Estates near Tenby, which are to be offered at the Mart at the end of June, comprise the property of the late Mr. Charles Ranken Vickerman, who was in his day one of the best-known sportsmen in Essex. Mr. Vickerman lived for many years at Thoby Priory, near Brentwood, and was for twenty years Secretary to the Essex Staghounds, during the Mastership of the late Lord Petre. He is said to have hunted for about sixty years with no less than fifty different packs of hounds. Extracts from his sporting diaries, which date from the year 1846, are to be published shortly.

Another gratifying illustration of the increased appreciation of British art was afforded by the record price obtained for a picture by George Morland, at the Rankin sale at Messrs. Christie & Manson's last week. The work in question, "Evening, or the Postboy's Return," realised the large sum of 1,250 guineas, as against 710 guineas, the price at which it was knocked down ten years ago upon the occasion of the Fish sale. Up to the present date the highest sum paid for a Morland picture was 1,100 guineas in the year 1895. This liberal patronage did not, however, extend to the bulk of the collection offered for sale at the same time, and in the case of many of the works of artists who are still with us only very moderate sums were secured.

I am grieved to learn that "Sir John Deacle's Ailment,"—the subject of last week's Queer Story—is widely prevalent in the golfing world. Until that story reached me I had never even heard of "golf hysteria"—though I have heard of golf mania, golfer's elbow, and other diseases connected with this seductive pastime. Within the last few days, however, I have had inquiries from all quarters respecting Sir John Deacle and his physician, and I have been implored by several would-be golfers to put them in communication with the latter gentleman, or the author of the story. One correspondent, who signs himself "Foozler," declares his willingness to pay double Sir John Deacle's fee to any physician who will cure him of the foozling habit.

In the face of so much affliction, it grieves me not to be able to render any assistance. But, unfortunately, the history of Sir John Deacle and his ailment was communicated in confidence, and editorial etiquette forbids me to disclose, even indirectly, the true names of the parties concerned, even if I knew them—which I don't. All I can do is to beg the medical profession to turn their attention at once to "golf hysteria," for, they may take my word for it, a huge fortune awaits the first specialist who makes a name in this line.

Perhaps I had better add, to save misapprehension, that when referring to Sir John Deacle's case as one of several "true Queer Stories" which had been sent to me lately, I had no intention of guaranteeing on my own account that the story really was true. All that I answer for is that the author says it is true. You may believe him or you may not; but, so far as I am concerned, I only offer it as fiction. This applies to all the Queer Stories in TRUTH. They are, however, the only part of the paper which is not true.

I am not of the opinion of the lady who, on being arrested for stealing and discharged "without a stain on her character," because she was rich, and consequently a kleptomaniac, said, "Thank Heaven that we live where there is one law for the rich and another for the poor!" Catherine Stevens was charged last week at the Bedford Police-court with fortune-telling. After a servant girl had deposed that she had paid 1s. for learning that she had two young men in love with her, the girl's admirer, who was a policeman, tried his luck with the cards. Having been told that there was a fair young woman who thought much of him, he at once arrested the fortune-teller, who was sentenced to twenty-one days' hard labour.

If this humble prophetess had so erred that this sentence was only her due, why is not some action taken against the palmists, and other seers, who openly practise their ridiculous calling in London, and advertise it in the newspapers? To tell the future by the lines on a person's hand is as much cheating as to tell it by the pips on a card, if money be taken. I would arrest neither the card-sharper nor the hand-sharper. But if one, why not the other?

SCOTT ADIE, 115, Regent-st., London, for Shooting Suits, Golf Suits, Travelling Coats, Inverness Capes, Carriage Rugs from 10/9, Shawls, hand-knit Hose, Scotch Cheviots, and Harris Homespuns.

"HÔTEL BURLINGTON," AT SUNNY BOSCOMBE. (200 rooms). Every luxury. Delightful grounds. Magnificent golf links. Sea-water baths. Moderate charges.—Bournemouth East Station.

A heartrending wail reaches me from a commercial traveller, enforced for his sins to pass a night at Andover. It has occasionally been the pleasant custom of the gentlemen of the road to beguile the tedium of an evening in that unlively town by playing penny whist at their hotel. Now they are dismayed to learn that, owing to the vigilant attentions of the police, this harmless diversion cannot be indulged in without bringing down upon the landlord divers pains and penalties under the Licensing Acts. My sympathies go out to the aggrieved whist-players. This grandmotherly solicitude for the well-being of grown-up guests at an hotel, whether commercial or uncommercial travellers, is, to say the least, supremely ridiculous; and the police must be terribly hard up for a job if they can find nothing better to do.

A barrister in the Temple sends me some interesting statistics with reference to the quantity of circulars, especially charitable appeals, which are delivered in the locality. Among other things he states that, having recently kept a record of the amount spent in postage on the appeals which he himself received, he found that in the course of ten days it represented one-third of his own rent for the corresponding period. The matter is well worth the attention of hospital secretaries and others, who discharge circulars wholesale into chambers at the Inns of Court and similar places. No doubt these gentlemen know their own business best, and I suppose that among the legal profession there are plenty of well-to-do and charitably disposed persons who pay for circularising. But when one reflects on the number of briefless and often impecunious barristers, and the still larger number who merely have their names upon doors at the Inns of Court, and whose circulars are, of course, never sent on to them, one cannot help thinking that more discrimination might be exercised in sending appeals in that direction.

It is a significant fact, which my Temple friend points out, that the money-lenders' circulars are nearly as numerous as the charitable appeals. So that while one class regards the Temple as a place where money is wanted, another regards it as a place where it is to be had for the asking. Both clearly cannot be right.

Judging from the number of complaints I receive from my lady readers in the course of a year, I should say there is more trickery in connection with registry offices than in any other line of business. Here is a recent case which shows rather a new phase of it. A lady answers what purports to be a parlourmaid's advertisement in the Morning Post, and gets a reply from a registry office in the suburbs, giving her the names and addresses of certain girls upon the agency's books. This is, of course, a trick universally adopted, and thoroughly understood by every experienced housekeeper. But on telegraphing to the first name on the agent's list the lady gets the telegram returned through the Post Office, the girl having removed from the address given; and on writing to the girl she gets a letter from her explaining that she had never put her name on the agency books, or authorised the agent to advertise for her, her only communication with the agency having been that she had, when looking for a place, answered what she took to be a lady's advertisement, but which proved to be an advertisement emanating from the said agency. It will be seen from this that not only do these agents humbug employers by advertising in the character of servants, but that they also humbug the servants by advertising in the character of employers, and thus get the girls' names upon their books.

In the Financial News the other day there was a letter from a land-agent referring to the high premiums charged by the Law Fire Insurance Society, and suggesting that the prices are kept up for the benefit of the solicitors and surveyors throughout the country who act as agents for that society, and more or less monopolise the insurance of landed estates. The letter has inspired another landowner to write on the same subject to TRUTH. He states that one insurance company, to his knowledge, pays £80,000 a year to its agents as commissions, calculated at the rate of 15 per cent. on the premiums. He has discovered that he can escape this charge by insuring direct with the company, and by so doing he saves £5 a year. In these days of agricultural depression, it seems desirable that these facts should be appreciated by landowners. There is no earthly reason at the present date why any one should insure through an agent rather than directly with the office; and if the employment of an agent merely means that 15 per cent. is to be added to the premium for the benefit of a solicitor or surveyor, there seems to be a strong reason for not insuring through an agent.

There are certainly plenty of claims of long descent from "the grand old gardener and his wife" to smile at in the new edition of the late Sir Bernard Burke's "Genealogical and Heraldic Dictionary of the Landed Gentry of Great Britain and Ireland," brought up to date by his son, Mr. A. P. Burke, and just published by Messrs. Harrison & Sons. These two massive

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

and handsome volumes must contain altogether some thousands of pedigrees; and I should be sorry for the editor if he had to make himself responsible for the accuracy of all of them. It would be too heavy a burden for one conscience to sustain, for in preparing their genealogies for such a publication some people gratify a harmless vanity by resorting to their imagination for their facts. Still this voluminous collection of the pedigrees and arms of the "untitled county gentlemen of these realms" is, doubtless, as correct as it can possibly be made, and the book undoubtedly forms a valuable work of reference. I have, by the way, to acknowledge the receipt of the usual May edition of another less pretentious but indispensable work—Kelly's "Royal Blue Book." In the street section of this fashionable directory the editor has indicated by italics tenancies of houses which are for the season only. The information so conveyed is often very useful.

The spring has an effect on the art publishers as well as on the "wanton lapwing" and the "young man's fancy." There is usually great activity amongst them about the time the Royal Academy opens. Mr. McLean, in the Haymarket, for example, has just issued an excellent reproduction of Mr. J. W. Godward's "Venus Binding her Hair," a highly-finished picture of the nude which was exhibited at Burlington House last year. This photogravure forms an appropriate pendant for the same artist's "Campaspe," another elaborate study of the nude, which was at the Academy two years ago. Another print recently published by Mr. McLean is "Hunters at Rest," after a picture by J. F. Herring. Amongst the newest reproductions issued by Messrs. Frost & Reed, of Clare-street, Bristol, is one engraved in mezzotint, by Skrimshire, of "A Wet Road," by Mr. E. M. Wimperis, of the Royal Institute. Mezzotint serves admirably for the reproduction of this artist's well-known landscapes. The same publishers have just issued a most successful etching by Mr. David Law, after a picture by Mr. E. W. Waite, called "A Flower-fringed Path," a delightful and typical bit of English rural scenery. I am glad to see, too, that Messrs. Frost and Reed are continuing the publication of their important illustrated work on the Church Towers of Somersetshire. This bids fair to be in all respects a monumental book.

I do not know what the ratepayers of Glasgow will say to the proposal of the Corporation that no less a sum than £15,000 "at least" should be spent in adorning the front of their new Art Galleries with sculptures. Mr. Aumonier is to have a trifle of £12,000 for carving, and the commissions to Mr. Frampton will amount to £4,400, while Messrs. Shannon & Young are down for £2,450, and Mr. Lawson will get £2,800. If some "millionaire" (of whom there are plenty in and around Glasgow) would present these works of art to the city it would be all very well to go to work on such a lavish scale, but it is quite another matter thus to fleece the ratepayers, who are constantly groaning under their burdens.

The Rev. William Ralph Inge, Fellow of Hertford College, has been elected Bampton lecturer for 1899, and he is to preach on "Christian Mysticism." There are no Bamptons this year, nor will there be any election in 1900, owing to the large reduction in the income from the endowment.

When Dr. Kirkpatrick was elected to the Mastership of Selwyn College, in the place of the late Bishop John Selwyn, it was generally expected that he would resign the Regius Professorship of Hebrew, to which he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone in 1882, on the death of Dr. Jarrett. It seems, however, that Dr. Kirkpatrick is to retain this chair. He will have quite enough to do, what with his Selwyn College work, his Hebrew lectures and general University business, and his duties at Ely, for a stall in that Cathedral is annexed by Act of Parliament to the Chair, which involves an annual residence there of between two and three months. There seems to be an increasing tendency to encourage pluralitics of offices both at Cambridge and at Oxford.

Many old Etonians will have heard with regret of the death of the Rev. William Wayte, who was for nearly a quarter of a century one of the most popular of the assistant masters. Mr. Wayte, who was educated at Eton and at King's College, gained both the Craven Scholarship and the Bronze Medal in 1850. He was a most accomplished scholar, and the few works which he published were highly prized by competent critics, and proved most successful. He was a very fine chess player, and had been for many years a recognised authority on the game. Few men have been more utterly devoid of ambition, for Mr. Wayte might have achieved a considerable and a wide reputation if he had at all cared to do so.

The premature death of the Rev. George Gent is a serious loss to the Anglican Church. He was a man of great ability, and was plainly marked out for the highest promotion. It is less than a year since Mr. Gent replaced the Bishop of St. David's as Principal of Lampeter College, and he was mainly indebted for his appointment to the efforts of his staunch friend the Bishop of St. Asaph.

"Kronenquelle" Water.—The famous Natural Mineral Water of Salzbrunn, Silesia. Imported since 1884. A specific against Gout, Rheumatism, and Diabetes. Prices: 1 dozen bottles, 10/6; original cases of 50 bottles, 40/-.—Sole Importers, W. Schacht & Co., 26, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C. Pamphlet by eminent medical specialists post free on application.

For Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth nothing equals Rowland's Odonto, which removes tartar, and imparts a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface. Use Rowland's Odonto for keeping your teeth sound and white. Of Stores and Chemists.

Mr. Gent's work at Lampeter had already justified the hopes of his admirers, and both the intellectual and spiritual tone of the Welsh clergy would assuredly have been greatly raised by his zealous and judicious efforts. He was for eleven years Principal of St. Mark's College, Chelsea, and he did excellent work there. On all questions connected with elementary education Mr. Gent was a recognised authority. Indeed, he was one of the very best educationists of the day, and admirably free from all fads. When the career of such a man is cut short at so early an age one is reminded of the remark of Archbishop Whateley when a divine, whom he had placed in a great office, died suddenly a few months afterwards and while still a young man:—"His predecessor ate, drank, and slept for forty years."

As a further illustration of my recent remarks on the absurdity of the present apportionment of the parochial endowments of the Church, a correspondent mentions the living of Higham Gobion, Bedfordshire. The value of this benefice is £247 per annum, with twenty-six acres of land, and the parish contains exactly six houses, including the vicarage! At the last census the population was seventy-one. In this instance, at any rate, it cannot be pleaded that though the flock is small the shepherd has a lot of ground to cover in looking after them, for the hamlet is so compact that were his reverence to preach on the church door-step, all his parishioners could hear him by standing at their own doors.

Another incumbent in the same neighbourhood, whose stipend is only a little larger, is charged with the spiritual guardianship of a population of upwards of 1,800, widely scattered over a parish of enormous area. The contrast between these two cases is only one of many—some still more striking—that could be adduced to show the need for a thorough overhauling and redistribution of the parochial organisation and revenues of the Church. The wastefulness of the existing arrangement, which allows the work in populous parishes to languish for lack of funds, and at the same time permits scores of clergymen to draw comfortable incomes for ministering to the inhabitants of half a dozen or a dozen houses, is self-evident; and nowhere else than in the Church of England would it have been tolerated so long.

The bump of bigotry must be abnormally developed in the Rector of Prestwich, Canon Jones. A field is leased from this reverend gentleman by the Prestwich District Council, and the members of that body lately granted the use of the ground for a meeting in connection with the Wesleyan Church. To this the Rector has objected. As the lessor, his sanction is necessary to any such arrangement, and he declines to allow the loan of the field for a gathering of Wesleyans. In the eyes of this narrow-minded priest the presence of Dissenters in his field would desecrate the sanctified soil, and no doubt, if he could have his way, none but Churchmen would be permitted to set foot anywhere within the bounds of the parish of Prestwich. It is gratifying to see that, at the meeting of the Council last week, the strongest protests against this pitiful exhibition of religious intolerance came from Churchmen.

I am told that the statement as to Bishop Percy, who held the stall of Finsbury at St. Paul's, having "received some £86,000, in consequence of the leases on the prebendal estate falling in, only a few weeks before his death in 1856," is not strictly accurate, the truth being that the leases fell in a few weeks after, and not before, the Bishop's death. My informant adds, however, that Bishop Percy had put on paper what he intended to do with the £86,000 in case he got it, namely, one half to go in augmentation of poor livings, &c., in the diocese of London, and the other half to similar purposes in the diocese of Carlisle. The paper was found after his death.

The most rabid anti-Ritualist could hardly, I should think, object to the use of incense in St. George's Parish Church, Southwark. I do not know whether incense ever is actually used there, but assuredly even to the ultra-Protestant nostrils of the doughty Kensit himself its perfume would be pleasanter than the noisome odour which, it is said, at present pervades the church. From the reports recently made to the Vestry, it seems that the crypt beneath the church contains something like 2,000 bodies, and that, owing to a fracture of a wall, the whole building is now filled with an effluvium from this charnel house which is not only offensive, but, in the opinion of the Medical Officer (Dr. Waldo) positively dangerous to health.

Up to the present the local sanitary authorities appear to be disinclined to take any action in the matter, and it is therefore satisfactory to learn that the Home Secretary has now decided to have the church examined by the Inspector of Burial Grounds with a view to the issue, if necessary, of an Order in Council for the removal and reburial of the remains now in the crypt. Meanwhile, one can only marvel at the rare devotion the congregation of St. George's show to their church by continuing to worship in such an atmosphere—that is, if it is really so bad as is represented.

In referring once or twice to the begging letters of the Rev. H. E. Smith, Vicar of Weston, near Crewe, I have treated him somewhat tenderly on account of the fact that his living is one of the leanest in the Church, though at the same time I have hinted that he makes a little too much of his domestic troubles. In view, however, of some information that has reached me from Weston, I am beginning to doubt whether Mr. Smith's pecuniary position can be—or, rather, need be—quite so desperate as has been supposed. It inclines me to wonder, moreover, whether he goes the right way to work to secure the sympathy and support of his neighbours—indeed, if an incident lately commented upon in the local Press is to be accepted as characteristic of his conduct, one can at once understand why he has to seek assistance from strangers. The case of this reverend mendicant seems to be altogether deserving of the attention of the Bishop of the diocese.

Duysen Pianos are the most superb of all modern Instruments. They stand absolutely unrivalled for beauty of tone, touch, & finish. A consummate success in small grands.—Lloyd's, 24, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

St. Ronan's, the Scottish Natural Mineral Water, as supplied to the House of Commons. Superior to, and cheaper than, any of the foreign mineral waters. Sold everywhere. Proprietors, "St. Ronan's Wells" Company, Limited, Innerleithen, N.B.

By a strange error of judgment, just when public opinion is setting against street collections, and the Hospital Saturday Fund has decided to abandon the practice, the National Lifeboat Institution has come upon the streets with a "Lifeboat Saturday" collection. It is a pity that the management should go out of their way to tar the Institution with this particular brush just after it has been newly whitewashed, at so much expense. The street-collecting business is thoroughly discredited for every purpose, and in the case of the National Lifeboat Institution there is no excuse for resorting to it, for the charity has enjoyed for many years past a revenue far in excess of its current needs, and possesses now a handsome amount of invested capital, the result of systematic hoarding. If the officials of the Institution devoted as much thought to improving the lifeboat service as they do to raising cash, the charity would stand much higher than it does in the public estimation.

I see, by the way, that Dr. Barnardo is appealing for voluntary workers who will "give up one day" next month to helping in his street collection. Let me in turn appeal to Dr. Barnardo to give up the street collection itself. We have had our little differences in the past, but it is in all friendliness that I make this request. It may seem at first sight a heavy sacrifice, but I do not think that the interests of any deserving charity will suffer, in the long run, from the abandonment of this much-abused form of mendicancy.

The following amounts have reached me towards Lady Jeune's Holiday Fund for Poor and Sickly London Children:—Dorothy, Charlie, and Teddy, £6 6s.; E. F. C., £3; the Proprietors of Scrubbs' Cloudy Fluid Ammonia, £5; E. B. £2 2s.

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

Various explanations are offered of the dearth of Militia officers pointed out in these columns a fortnight ago. One of them is that the regulation requiring an officer in his first year to serve for sixty days at a Depot, in addition to twenty-eight days' training, is a fatal obstacle in the way of many men of the class from whom Militia officers might be drawn. As one of my correspondents points out, a man who can devote three months to Militia service in the year must be a man of independent means, who might just as well be in the Army as in the Militia. No man engaged in a profession or business can devote this amount of time to soldiering without serious loss and inconvenience. One of my witnesses on this point is a Militia officer, who states that he has got hold of many men able and willing to do their month's training every year, but who backed out when they found themselves faced with the necessity of putting in sixty days at the Depot.

The general opinion, however, seems to be that the strongest reason for the depletion of the commissioned ranks in the Militia is the system of using the Militia as a stepping-stone to the Regular Army. I am told that a more detailed return would show that the Militia is plentifully supplied with subalterns, but that the deficiency of officers occurs in the ranks of Captain and upwards. I confess I do not quite see why greater inducements should be offered, as they are at present, to men to enter the Army through the Militia than through the Military Academies. While this may have the effect of bringing men temporarily into the Militia for the purpose of passing thence into the Army, it also seems to have the effect of tempting men to transfer to the Line, who would, under other circumstances, have remained permanently in the Militia. The truth is, of course, that the Militia is at present treated by the War Office as a mere feeder and reserve to the Line; and this is the chief cause at the bottom of its numerical weakness, both in the commissioned and lower ranks.

One correspondent writing to me on this subject suggests that the age rule for retirement of Militia officers might be relaxed with advantage. This is a reasonable suggestion. There is not the same necessity in the Militia as there is in the Line for pushing men out while they are still fit for further service merely to facilitate promotion; and also a man's health and constitution are less likely to break down under service in the Militia than in the Line. My correspondent points out that there are plenty of Militia majors of fifty years of age who are perfectly fit to put in another five or ten years' service; and where there is no question as to their medical fitness, I fail myself to see why we should not retain their services.

I do not know whether the question of £ s. d. has any effect in restricting the supply of officers in the Militia, as it undoubtedly has in the Volunteers. Judging, however, from the following figures furnished to me by a

Militia C.O., of an officer's expenses in training, it is pretty clear that a Militia officer has to pay substantially for the privilege of serving his country :—

Messing at 6s. per day	£8	14	2
Wine, including share of mess guests, band-beer, &c.	5	0	7½
Subscriptions (week's pay to band, athletic sports, reading-room, postman, cooks, servants, &c.) ...	12	17	4
Mess bill	£26	12	1½
Two servants (groom and other)	£2	15	0
Hire of furniture	1	5	0
Expenses to and fro...	5	5	0
Hire of horse...	10	0	0
Stabling and keep of horse for twenty-seven days ...	3	15	0
Washing	1	0	0
	£50	12	1½
Net cash received (including 1s. 6d. per day for keep of horse)	£34	9	6
Out of pocket in twenty-seven days	£16	2	7½

To this total a substantial addition has to be made for private subscriptions and other calls upon officers. From what I hear I fancy it will be found that these demands upon officers' purses are the heaviest in those battalions which make the best show on paper. In other words, the popularity of a battalion and the supply of recruits is largely dependent upon the readiness of the C.O. and his brother officers to put their hands in their pockets for the benefit of the rank and file.

The appointment of Major A. C. T. Boileau as Secretary of the Royal Artillery Institution is a curious incident. Only in September last Major Boileau exchanged—of course, on the usual terms—from a company in England to one in India. In applying for permission to do so, he must have declared, in the usual course, "on his honour, as an officer and a gentleman," that it was his bonâ-fide intention to do duty for at least a period of twelve months. Previous to the election of a Secretary of the Royal Artillery Institution, the names of candidates have to be sent to the War Office, presumably for the purpose of being approved by the authorities there.

Now it is, of course, in no way inconsistent with the bona fides of Major Boileau's intention last September to serve in India at least twelve months, that he should within six months abandon that intention and form another equally bonâ-fide intention of returning to England provided he obtained the Secretaryship of the Royal Artillery Institution. I should have thought, however, that it would be the obvious duty of the War Office to veto this second intention and insist upon the first one being carried out. All the more does this seem to be the duty of the War Office, seeing that some other officer will now have to be sent out to India to take Major Boileau's place, for which he will not receive (as the Major did) compensation in cash; and seeing that this officer will have to be sent out, and probably also Major Boileau be brought home, at the public expense. At the least, equity demands that whatever consideration Major Boileau originally received for his brief trip to India should now be divided between his successor and the British taxpayer.

FASHIONABLE STATIONERY.—LATEST DESIGNS.—Invitation Cards, Ball Programmes, Menus, Visiting Cards, &c.—PARKINS & GOTTO, Court Stationers, Oxford-street, London, W. Patterns free.

It appears that I did not by any means exhaust last week the performances of the sartorial genius who has lately had such a free hand in reconstructing the clothing and accoutrements of the Army. He is also responsible for the abolition of the saddle-cloths, shabracks, and bearskin flounces of mounted officers, other than those of the Household Brigade. These changes have saved officers little or nothing in pocket, as the saddle-cloth wore almost for ever, and the loss in appearance is conspicuous and is generally deplored—particularly in the substitution of a piece of rope round the horse's neck in place of the smart and inexpensive collar-chain, also abolished by the same individual. I am told, such is the craze for changes of costume at present, that it was proposed recently to abolish the bearskins of the Foot Guards, and to encase the nether limbs of the Blues and Life Guards in ankle boots and gaiters or "putties;" but these changes were promptly vetoed by a still higher authority with equally strong views on military uniform.

Apropos of the incessant changes of uniform in the British Army, my attention has been called to the following passage in a report on the manœuvres of the 14th German Army Corps, 1897, by Colonel Turner, A.A.G., R.A. :—

> The uniform of the German soldier is remarkably serviceable and simple. With the exception of the canvas frock and trousers for rough work, he has only a tunic (waffenrock) and cloth trousers or pantaloons. His dress is not subject to constant changes and experiments, and, with the exception of a great coat, his dress (both officer and man) is practically the same as that worn fifty years ago.

I suppose there is not a single corps in the whole of our Army of which this last remark could be made. Whether, however, a single one of them is better dressed, for military purposes, than it was fifty years ago is probably very doubtful. It may be safely said that of all the changes that have been made in uniform since the days of Marlborough, nine-tenths have been mere useless waste of money.

I was glad to hear Mr. Brodrick announce the other day that his Department had under consideration "the question of giving an improved status to some of the warrant officers of the Army Pay Corps." The improved status presumably means the removal of the bar which at present separates warrant officers of this Corps from all others in the Service—namely, their ineligibility for commissions. If the War Office are really thinking at last of introducing "commissions from the ranks" into the Army Pay Corps, I can only say that when they carry out that idea, they will be removing one of the most genuine grievances in the Army.

It also gives me pleasure to find that I am not the first in the field with the suggestion that Army pensioners should be paid weekly, or, at any rate, at shorter intervals than once a quarter. A movement is now on foot, initiated by the Guardians of St. George's (Hanover-square), to promote a simultaneous petition to Parliament on this subject from all the Boards of Guardians in the Kingdom. The Guardians have found by experience the truth of what was stated by a pensioner in last week's TRUTH, namely, that the present system tends to throw pensioners into the workhouse. It is, therefore, to be hoped—in the interest of the ratepayers as much as that of the pensioners themselves—that the attempt to get the present system altered will be general and successful.

Strange to say, I have had a letter from an N.C.O. in the Marines, who deprecates the change, and he tells me that the same objection is entertained and has been expressed by the Naval Pensioners' Protection Association. As to the grounds on which this objection is based, however, he tells me nothing, and I am at a loss to see what intelligible ground of objection there can be, except on the part of the Government department, which would have to undertake the additional work. On the other hand, my Marine friend reminds me of one point, which I had overlooked, and which goes far to meet any difficulty on the score of expense. Pensions are at present paid in advance. If, therefore, they were paid weekly, instead of quarterly, the Government would have the money in hand very much longer, and the interest which would accrue on it would go far towards meeting the increased cost of distribution.

Through the agency of Mr. Arnold Forster and Sir Charles Dilke a great deal was heard earlier in the year about the lamentable condition of our Artillery. That these statements were not exaggerated is pretty well shown by some particulars that I have before me with regard to the Garrison Artillery in the Southern District. One company which is now undergoing its annual course under the School of Gunnery can barely muster four gun squads instead of eight. Out of 130 men at one particular station ninety are mere boys in their teens, not one of them with more than four months' service. Last summer a new company was formed, and in order to do it, about a dozen gunners, with their complement of N.C.O.s, were taken from each company at home; and I believe it is a fact that down to the present moment their places have never been filled up. What may be the value of a new company formed on this principle is a mystery known only to the wiseacres of Whitehall. Of course I shall be told that all this will soon be put right by the additional men voted this year. That may or may not be, but there are no signs of its being put right yet.

For some years past the married N.C.O.s stationed at the Defensible Barracks, Pembroke Dock, have been patiently waiting for new quarters, the old ones having been condemned long ago on account of the insufficient accommodation for women and children. The site and plans for the buildings have long since been approved, but the commencement of building operations has been again and again postponed. At the end of last year it was understood that building would commence in the spring; but the tenant of the land has since had notice that no start will be made this year. It would be interesting to know who is responsible for this delay, and what is the excuse for it. There are about thirty families on the married establishment of the Royal Artillery at these barracks, all of them living in lodgings at great expense and inconvenience; for in places where lodgings are scarce, and the lodging-house keepers have more or less of a monopoly, they are always able to put up their prices to something in excess of the regulation lodging allowance; and, even at any price, lodgings are often not obtainable within a mile or so of barracks. Considering the amount of money that has been voted for barrack building of late years, it is inexcusable that at a station like Pembroke such a state of things should exist.

In TRUTH of March 31 reference was made to a recent appointment of a pension-paymaster at Vizagapatam, the complaint being that a civilian had been appointed in preference to a retired warrant officer, who, it was suggested, should have had the preference under the order governing such appointments. I have had a letter pointing out (1) that the order equally provides for the appointment of uncovenanted civilians and retired warrant officers; and (2) that the civilian in this case, although a retired Conservator of Forests, was a Chelsea Pensioner, having formerly been an N.C.O. in the 60th Rifles. It would seem from this that the complaint was unfounded, and I have no doubt that this information is correct, as it comes from Captain Formby, Superintendent of Pensions under the Government of Madras at Fort St. George. Captain Formby is good enough to give me, at the same time, his views as to the duties of Editors, and the best manner of conducting a newspaper. But though this advice is, no doubt, well meant, the gallant officer must excuse my saying that I hardly consider him as good an authority on these points as on matters relating to his own department.

A great deal has been said about the increasing prevalence of typhoid fever, euphemistically called enteric, among British troops in India, but up to the present time no light seems to have been thrown upon the source of this scourge. I would suggest to the military authorities that they should look for it in the regimental kitchens. Here is a hint in that direction from a non-commissioned officer in India who seems to know what he is talking about:—

> It would be one of the greatest benefits that could be conferred on soldiers in India if, instead of the employment of the filthy and inexperienced native cooks who at present prepare the meals for British troops, a corps of cooks, enlisted as soldiers and kept under military discipline, were formed, in the same way as the cooks in the hospitals are. There is a great deal more sickness caused through the uncleanliness of the natives employed by British troops in India than by all other causes put together. It is not only the cooks; for the native sweepers do not do their work anything like it should be done, and do not understand how the work should be done according to European ideas.

MAJOR HOWE & CO., LTD.—Fashionable BOOTS and SHOES.—16, Coventry-st., W.; 60, Strand, W.C.; 81, Gracechurch-st.; and 13, Queen Victoria-st., London. "Note Addresses." (Repairs.)

I would impress upon the authorities responsible for the condition of the Army that if all the natives employed by British troops in India were formed into a corps properly trained and disciplined, the amount of sickness among the troops would be greatly reduced. At the present time in Lucknow the number of deaths from enteric fever is something terrible. People at home would be shocked if they only knew the whole truth about it. I assert that it is almost wholly due to the uncleanliness of the native cooks, sweepers, and others employed in such domestic work.

Since the Aldershot School of Cookery has been at work complaints from soldiers at home on the subject of cooking have decreased in a gratifying manner; but I notice no similar tendency among our troops in India. On the contrary, almost every mail brings some growl on the subject. From what I can see, the native cooks must be in all cases dirty, in most incompetent, and in too many dishonest. If there is, as seems highly probable, reason to credit them with an important share in the dissemination of typhoid, the time has clearly come when Army cooking ought to be reformed in India as it has been in England

---

Here are a few more little growls from Mr. Atkins. It is much to be desired that some one in authority would take in hand the Medical Officer in Crete who figures in one paragraph, for he causes as much correspondence as all the rest of the Medical Staff put together—which is a considerable amount:—

1st Battalion Bedfordshire Regiment.—The officer commanding a detachment of this regiment at Fort Ferozepore has just issued an order with reference to articles to be supplied to the detachment by the master cook, which contains the following clause:—

"Under the above conditions the master cook will be allowed to take for himself the surplus rations of rice and coffee not required by the men."

It is calculated that there is a surplus of 2½ lb. of coffee per day, and something like 25 lb. of rice, the fact being that rice is only cooked for about fifteen men out of a detachment 115 strong. Is it a proper or satisfactory arrangement that surplus goods to this extent should be handed over to the cook as his perquisites?

Telegraph Battalion, Aldershot.—A detachment of this battalion was engaged recently in putting up a wire to Barossa Camp, on which work the men started out at six a.m. As it was not expected that they would be back till late in the afternoon, bread and cheese were issued to them and taken on one of the waggons. For some reason, however, the men were not allowed to eat their lunch, and it was brought back with them into camp, they having been about nine hours without food when they returned. Why on earth the men should take food with them if they are not to be allowed to eat it is a mystery known only to the officer in charge.

Army Medical Staff, Canea.—Here are two more eccentric punishments imposed by a Medical Officer at Canea, whose decisions have already been referred to in TRUTH:—(1) A prisoner charged with drunkenness is dealt with summarily, after having been remanded for district court-martial, which the General refused to sanction. Punishment: Fourteen days' hard labour and five shillings fine. (2) Another man is charged with the same offence, being found drunk in the afternoon after having been warned for duty. Punishment: Two days' C.B. There are certain personal considerations which may explain the difference between the punishment of these two men, but no others.

Depot, Royal West Kent Regiment, Maidstone.—In the barracks at Maidstone is a piece of ground used as a playground by the young Atkinses of the garrison, and separated by a high wall from a private road leading to a paper mill. In consequence of complaints that the children have been in the habit of throwing stones over the wall on to the road, all the fathers of children in the barracks have been put on sentry-go at the playground. The order is enforced regardless of rank, some of the men thus punished being staff and colour-sergeants. The author of this order has apparently been reading the Decalogue backwards, and has decided that the sins of the children must be visited upon the fathers. He has even gone beyond this, for, as there has been no inquiry for the purpose of identifying the offenders, it would seem that the sins of some children have been visited upon the fathers of other children. Apart from the indiscriminate and vexatious character of the punishment, it is open to question whether, under the regulations, such a punishment can be lawfully imposed upon non-commissioned officers.

2nd Battalion Leicestershire Regiment, Kilworth Camp.—This battalion has been for a week or two past under canvas at Kilworth, but up to the end of last week, although three marquees had been erected for the officers and two for the sergeants, no marquee for use as a library and recreation tent had been provided for the men. The latter had, in consequence, no other place to resort to outside their tents than the garrison canteen, which is described as anything but an attractive or well-managed place. Why should not a marquee be available for the men at the same time as the officers and N.C.O.s?

Lord Charles Beresford has, I believe, moved for returns of results of gunnery practice in the Navy with a view to showing the present state of proficiency in shooting in that branch of the Service. The idea is an excellent one, but, if I am accurately informed by some of my Service friends, too much faith ought not to be placed in the return when it appears, for there is some reason to suspect that the target practice returns are very often "cooked." I even hear of such practices as throwing overboard ammunition to avoid the trouble of gun practice, and then subsequently reporting it as expended. What truth there may be in this I cannot say, but it comes to me from a quarter likely to be well-informed. The question is a very important one, and too much attention cannot possibly be bestowed upon it. The best guns in the world are useless unless you can shoot straight with them. The recent fighting in the West Indies and Manila has shown that, whatever the American Navy may or may not be, its men are splendid gunners, and the boasted naval pre-eminence, to attain which we have made such enormous sacrifices, will be worth very little unless our shooting is as good as the best that is ever likely to be brought against us.

A traveller sends me the following notice, which he saw posted upon the P. and O. steamer Britannia, while on a recent outward voyage:—

NOTICE.

Choir Practice for the Purser's department will be held in the first saloon at 3 p.m., to-day, Friday. The Commander desires all hands to attend; those not attending will be found other work.

BY ORDER.

In accordance with this notice, those hands who did not attend were put to work cleaning the brass and scrubbing rubber matting, while their shipmates were training for Divine worship. It will no doubt be a great comfort to passengers by the P. and O. Line to know that they can rely on having a thoroughly good choral service on Sundays. But if any of the ship's company do not feel a calling for a chorister's vocation, or happen to have different religious opinions, why should they have punishment tasks imposed upon them in default of choir practice?

CHALLIS'S ROYAL HOTEL, Rupert-street, Piccadilly-circus.—The new Louis XV. Dining-room now open for Luncheons and Dinners. Table d'Hôte Luncheon, 2/-, from 12.30 to 3 p.m.: Table d'Hôte Dinner, 3/6, from 6.30 to 9 p.m., served at separate tables. Open to non-residents.

WAYGOOD LIFTS for Hotels, Mansions, Clubs, Flats, &c. These can be worked by hydraulic, hand or engine power, and electricity. R. WAYGOOD & CO., LTD., Falmouth-road, London, S.E.

The proprietors of a provincial newspaper having recently had occasion to register a publication at Stationers' Hall, and finding that the entry was made a day later than they con sidered itonght to have been, wrote to the Registrar asking the reason. For reply they received back their own letter, with a line scrawled in pencil at the foot, and for signature the stamp "Registrar, Copyright Office, Stationers' Hall." I am curious to know whether this is the usual method of conducting correspondence at the Copyright Office, for a more unbusinesslike and discourteous course of procedure it is difficult to imagine.

Since the Postmaster-General gave his attention last year, under the guidance of TRUTH, to the nuisance caused by the delivery in England of the circulars of Parisian vendors of obscenity in various shapes, there has been a marked diminution in the traffic. But I have received within the last week samples of circulars from Paris, delivered in different parts of England, one of which surpasses in offensiveness anything in this line that I have ever come across. I take the opportunity, therefore, of reminding any persons who may receive filth of this kind by post that it is the express desire of the Postmaster-General that all such circulars, accompanied by the envelopes, should at once be sent on to him; and I am quite confident that if this is done the English Post Office will do all that it can to stop further annoyance of the same description. The most objectionable of the last consignment of advertisements has the name and address of the senders stamped on the outside of the envelope, so that the postal authorities can have no difficulty in identifying it.

A question in Parliament last week elicited the curious information that in the first eight years of the existence of postal-orders, the Treasury came into a windfall of nearly £40,000—the proceeds of orders purchased and never presented for payment. The annual profit from this same source is at present estimated at £10,000. The other day a West End firm sent me as a curiosity a postal-order for 1s., which they had received—and unfortunately accepted—in payment of an account. Only on presenting it for payment was it discovered that the order had been issued in October, 1887, so that the payees could only obtain the shilling on paying the Post Office arrears of commission to the amount of 1s. 7½d. Seeing the vast quantity of old postal-orders which must be accumulated in one quarter and another, people will do well to look carefully at the dates of these instruments before accepting them as worth their face value.

During the last week the interesting fact has been made public that various officials in the service of the City Corporation have been in the habit of receiving substantial cash payments from contractors working for their Department. During the course of 1896 and 1897 four inspectors of pavements each received sums amounting to £60 and £70; a stoneyard foreman received £80, and a minor functionary £35. I do not notice that these revelations have been followed by any outcry against the Corporation on the part of those Conservative editors whose souls were filled with wrath and indignation when it was discovered, a couple of years ago, that officials of the London County Council had falsified certain accounts, with no worse intention than that of minimising the loss on the working of their Department. The scandal, however, certainly ought not to be allowed to drop at the present point, for though the officials above mentioned have been dismissed after an inquiry by a special committee, the committee has not yet got to the bottom of the reasons for these payments. As I understand it, the contractors allege that they paid about £375 to six officials in two years for no improper motive, but out of pure love and admiration for the honest fellows who look after the pavements, stoneyards, and underground conveniences of the City. My experience of contractors would not lead me to accept this generosity without further inquiry. In matters of business quid pro quo is the accepted doctrine, and 375 quids should represent a considerable number of quos.

There is something very comic in the cackling of the Court of Common Council over the premature publication in London of the "confidential" official report on this scandal. Mr. Turner, Chairman of the Streets Committee, has put on record his opinion that it is scarcely respectable on the part of a newspaper to print a report marked "Private and Confidential." Sir John Monckton, in the tenderness of his heart, expressed commiseration for the feelings of the party who gave the private and confidential document to the Press, and of the editors who printed it. Really, these City Fathers behave more like a party of civic grandmothers. The report is a document which concerns the public before anybody else, and anybody into whose hands it came was only discharging a public duty in making it public. You cannot give such a document a "private and confidential" character by merely writing those words across it; and the futile attempt to do so merely indicates a desire to hush up what ought to be made known. For these reasons, I should recommend the Common Councillors, now that the thing has come out, to accept the fact with a good grace, rather than make themselves ridiculous by publicly manifesting their discomfiture.

In one particular I think that I can make a little contribution to the latest civic scandal. One of the Inspectors of Pavements who received his £70 from Messrs. Clarke & Sons, was a Mr. F. B. Nicholson. This Nicholson was formerly in some position under the Army Works Department at Woolwich. It may be remembered that attention was recently called in TRUTH to the fact that a civilian, who had been concerned with certain work for the War Office at Woolwich, laid before the War Office last year various charges of dishonest practices between a local contractor and officials of the Army Works Department. All that the War Office did was to impound the informant's documents, and stick to them for six months, under pretence of making an investigation. Upon being stirred up in TRUTH they hurriedly returned the documents, but did nothing else. The F. B. Nicholson above referred to was implicated in some of those charges. As to his culpability or otherwise I express no opinion, for the matter has never been properly threshed out. It is, however, strange, to say the least of it, that having passed into the service of the Commissioners of Sewers, this individual should be detected in something bearing a decided resemblance to the transactions imputed to him at Woolwich; and I think that the City authorities in the course of their further inquiries would do well to look up Nicholson's record.

WATER SUPPLY TO COUNTRY HOUSES.—Read "Water Supply to Mansions." The Times says, "a practical pamphlet." Post free.—MERRYWEATHERS, 63, Long-acre, W.C., and Greenwich, S.E.

By way of fortifying the appeal to the Hastings ratepayers to assist the Harbour Company out of its present difficulties by guaranteeing the interest on a new issue of Debentures, the Harbour Commissioners recently called in Sir Douglas Fox to examine and report upon the works so far as they have gone. Sir Douglas Fox's report has just been issued, and his utterances are in the same spirit as those of the prophet Balaam, for he passes various serious criticisms upon the work so far as at present carried, and makes various suggestions, all of which will involve increased expenditure. Indeed, he estimates that the total expenditure required will amount to £270,000, though he endeavours to soften the blow by suggesting that work to the amount of £25,000 might be postponed for the present.

The Commissioners have issued with Sir Douglas Fox's report certain observations in reply by the engineer-in-chief, who, needless to say, differs materially from Sir Douglas. In the face of Sir Douglas Fox's opinion, however, it would be absurd to suppose that the £245,000 will be forthcoming for this fatuous enterprise, unless the interest is to be guaranteed by the Hastings ratepayers. And if the Hastings ratepayers show any desire to give the necessary guarantee, they must differ very much from the ratepayers of other localities with whom I am acquainted. At any rate, I would recommend them, before accepting any such liability, to obtain fuller information than has yet been offered respecting the mysterious disappearance of £41,000 in preliminary expenses.

Until a day or two since, I was not aware that I had been instrumental in obtaining the reconstruction of the Great Western station at Reading, so that the up and down trains no longer cross one another at that point in order to reach their respective platforms. But as I have had a letter complimenting me on this achievement, I conclude that I may take credit for it. As often happens, the gratitude of my correspondent is allied to a sense of favours to come. He thinks that having done so much for Reading, I might do the same for Cambridge. When I knew Cambridge, the up and down trains each had a platform on its own side; but it seems that there is now only one platform, inconveniently long, very crowded, and, I should imagine, dangerous. The wise men in railway matters have lately hailed from the East rather than the West; but in this instance the Great Western directors have been progressing in the right direction while the Great Eastern have been moving backwards. I invite the latter to study what TRUTH has done at Reading, and to relieve me from the necessity of taking Cambridge in hand also.

One or two of my readers at Aldershot have also asked me to say a word in favour of a movement for a quicker train service to and from London. It is a request that can be complied with the more hopefully since, whatever it may have been formerly, the management of the South Western Railway of late years has been creditably progressive and always ready to redress, if practicable, any reasonable grievance. The Aldershot people complain of the fact that something like an hour and a quarter is generally taken to cover the thirty-three miles to Waterloo, the only exceptions being one comparatively fast train down, which does the journey in sixty-two minutes, and one up, which does it in sixty-six minutes. Considering what an exceptionally large passenger traffic there is from Aldershot, and what is accomplished for other towns a similar distance from London, this service certainly seems open to improvement; and now that the matter is being brought under the notice of the Company by means of a memorial from the inhabitants, I have little doubt that an improvement will be effected.

The Home Secretary has done well to order the prosecution of Bryant & May, Limited, or the representative of the firm who was responsible for the failure to report the recent case of "phossy jaw." It is clear from the facts which have been brought to light in the columns of the Star, that the recent death from this cause is far from being the first that has occurred, or the first that has not been reported, and the whole matter demands thorough investigation. Sir Mathew White Ridley promises an inquiry which will go beyond this particular case, and it is to be hoped that it will be an inquiry of such a nature that the whole question of the use of yellow phosphorus in the match-making trade may be thoroughly investigated, with a view to such legislation as may be necessary either to stop it, or to place it under restrictions which will render it innocuous.

Lawyers who have business before the Official Referees are complaining very strongly at present about the irritating manners and eccentric behaviour of one member of that body; indeed, I have been told by one learned friend that it is virtually impossible to conduct a case before this particular functionary. The suitors have to ballot, I understand, as to which Referee their cases shall go before; and the fear of being allotted to the obnoxious official introduces an element of stirring excitement into the lottery. It seems desirable that the Lord Chancellor should cast his august eye upon the particular corner of the Courts where the Official Referees disport themselves.

In my Legal Pillory this week the Bristol County Court Judge, sitting at the Police Court as a J.P., is given a place with the Great Unpaid on account of a sentence on a first offender. The first offender in question was a pauper who had been detected in the act of walking off with some workhouse soap, and as he has reached the age of 76, he was undoubtedly old enough to know better. Still, seeing that the old fellow has borne a good character all his life, it appears hard that he should have to go to gaol at his great age for so trivial an offence, and I do not think that any serious injury would have been done to the interests of justice or the morality of Bumbledom if he had been mercifully let off this time with a reprimand. As usual at this season of the year the game-preserving magistrates of East Anglia are distinguishing themselves by the severity of the penalties they inflict upon persons found in possession of eggs of the sacred birds; and the past week has also been marked by a notable increase in the number of sentences for sleeping out. The failure of the charge at Cheadle, owing to the fact that the accused had the sum of threepence in his pocket, is, of course, recorded, not as a reflection upon the judgment of the magistrates, but as an illustration of the arrant absurdity of the law on the subject of sleeping out. With regard to the cases on the other side of the list, it is scarcely necessary to do more than point out the remarkable leniency of the various penalties for assaults and cruelty :—

Bridgwater Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor and Mr. T. Manchip. John Coombs, charged with cruelty to a horse. The animal, which was about 20 years old, and in an emaciated condition, was employed in hauling stones and was put to draw a load weighing 32 cwt., but fell down exhausted. Fined 5s. and costs.

Warrington Police-court. Wm. Salt, charged with an aggravated assault upon his wife. He struck her behind the head with his clenched fist, kicked her in the back, and then tried to strangle her, causing blood to flow from her ear. The woman had previously complained of the conduct of the defendant, and a separation order was granted. Fined £2 and costs.

Smethwick Police-court. Joseph Bird charged with assaulting Richard Green. Defendant struck complainant a violent blow in the face, knocked him into a coal box, and banged his head against the coal, disfiguring his face. Fined 15s., including costs.

Kirkcaldy Police-court. Before Bailie Peebles. James Neaves, charged (1) with assaulting his wife by striking her a severe blow on the forehead, (2) with assaulting John Bisset by striking him a blow on the mouth to the effusion of blood, and (3) with committing a breach of the peace. Fined 30s.

Honiton Borough Police-court. Before Mr. H. Banfield. James Hooper and Charles Hooper, charged with vagrancy by sleeping in an outhouse and having no visible means of subsistence. Fined 5s. each, and in default of payment committed for seven days.

Bristol Police-court. Before Judge Austin and Mr. J. W. S. Dix. James Bond, aged 76, charged with stealing a quantity of soap, &c., the property of the Guardians. Prisoner was an inmate of the workhouse, and on being searched before leaving the house for a day the soap was found in his possession. A police inspector mentioned that the old man had never previously been before the court. Seven days.

Harleston Petty Sessions. Before Rev. Spencer Fellowes, Captain Meade, Messrs. A. Taylor and J. Piper. Wm. Sturman charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of four pheasants' eggs. Fined £1 17s.

East Dereham Petty Sessions. Before Colonel H. E. Hyde and other justices. Henry Robinson, charged with being found in possession of sixteen game eggs. Fined £5, including costs.

Aldershot Police-court. Before Major Barton and other justices. James Wilson and Frederick Cooper, charged with sleeping out. Seven days each.

Troon Police-court. George Blythe charged with assaulting his wife. A doctor's evidence showed that the assault was of a very brutal character, the woman, who was a helpless invalid, being severely marked all over the body. Fined £1 10s.

Reading County Police-court. Before Captain Cobham and other magistrates. Charles Beasley, charged with cruelty by causing a pony to be worked whilst in an unfit state. The animal was very aged, in very poor condition, lame in both hind legs, and totally unfit for work. Defendant persisted in working it, and drove it out again an hour after he had been warned by the inspector. Fined £1 and costs.

Alfreton Petty Sessions. Before Mr. J. Roberts, Colonel Pearson, and the Rev. E. E. Morris. George Lumley, charged with assaulting Lewis Blore. Defendant struck complainant a violent blow on the head, causing him to fall, and then knelt upon him and beat him about the head. Fined 10s. and costs.

Sleaford Police-court. Before Captain Reeve-King, Lieutenants J. S. Reeve and J. A. Cole, Messrs. H. Smith, G. W. Lloyd, and C. Smith. George Bellairs charged with stealing a piece of mutton. He pleaded guilty, saying he was in drink at the time. Twenty-eight days.

Wenlock Petty Sessions. Before Mr. R. E. Anstree, Colonel H. Wayne, Messrs. J. Bodenham, and T. Cooke. Henry Potts, charged with trespassing in search of game. Fined £2 and costs, or twenty-eight days.

Brixham Police-court. Before Mr. W. J. Sanders. John Williams, charged with sleeping out. Seven days.

Ormskirk Police-court. Before Messrs. C. P. Symonds and R. Ainscough. John Lea, charged with stealing ½ lb. of butter. It appeared to be the prisoner's first offence, and he pleaded for leniency for the sake of his eleven children. Fourteen days.

Cheadle Petty Sessions. Before Sir Morton E. M. Buller and Mr. A. S. Bolton. Wm. Brady, charged with vagrancy by sleeping in a brickshed It appeared that he had the sum of threepence in his possession, and as he was not, therefore, without "visible means of subsistence," the case failed and he was discharged.

I erred in speaking last week of a "Parliamentary return" of certain officials in the Four Courts, Dublin, as being in course of preparation. The return to which I referred is a Departmental one. As an example of the jobbery that goes on in this department, here is a case of recent occurrence. Some few months back the Accountant-General was retired, and the vacancy filled by the promotion of the Chief Clerk of the department, at a reduction of one-sixth on the salary. The vacancy in the Chief Clerkship, however, was filled by the appointment of a gentleman of mature age, pitchforked in from some distant District-Registry over the heads of the rest of the staff. This is one of those objectionable appointments which necessitate the appointee being instructed in his work by a junior (or else leaving his work to juniors), while, the Department being one thrown open to public competition, the appointment is an injustice not only to the existing staff, but to all the men who have duly passed examinations and are waiting for employment. It is a sample of what is continually occurring in the Irish legal departments.

Once more a bill of sale in favour of the usurer Shuckburgh, alias the Clerical and Medical Bank, has been set aside on the ground that it was obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation. The case was tried at Exeter County Court last week, and the facts were of the usual character. A farmer named Prowse applied to the so-called Bank for a loan of £30, and he understood both from Shuckburgh's agent, Stone, and from Shuckburgh himself that the interest would be at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. He was also deluded into the belief that the document he signed was not a bill of sale, but a sort of mortgage, and that it would not be mentioned in the Gazette. He afterwards found, of course, that it was an ordinary bill of sale that he had given, and that the interest was 5 per cent. per month, not per annum. Shuckburgh's counsel pointed out that if the verdict went against his client "it would convict him of deceit and almost fraud." Of "deceit and almost fraud" Shuckburgh was duly convicted, for Judge Woodfall believed the evidence of the plaintiff Prowse in preference to that of the defendant and his tool, Stone, and made an order setting aside the bill, of sale on payment of the £30 with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. It is a matter of satisfaction to know that Shuckburgh will also have to pay costs on the higher scale.

Subscriptions greatly needed by The Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—6,929 convictions this year; 7,320 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to Secretary, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

In the course of his cross-examination, Shuckburgh was asked whether TRUTH had not called him a "financial wolf" and a "rapacious shark." He admitted the soft impeachment, and in reply to a further question as to why he did not take proceedings against me, he said his solicitor had advised him that my remarks were "simply abuse and not libel." This, if true, is a serious reflection on the intelligence of the solicitor in question. But Shuckburgh himself is too astute a rascal to be deceived by such nonsensical advice, even if it were given. He knows very well that it would be futile to bring an action against me, simply and solely because I am prepared to justify every word I have written respecting him during the past five or six years. Once, in 1893, his solicitor did favour me with a letter, threatening "proceedings without further notice," unless I immediately published an apology for certain statements that I had made in these columns. Of course, I published no apology, and equally of course I never heard anything more of the promised "proceedings."

If Shuckburgh is ever disposed to try a bout with me in a Court of Law I am always at his service. It would be a pleasure to me to sum up before a Judge and jury the exposures I have made week after week of one who is not only an unconscionable extortioner, but an unscrupulous scoundrel. I should begin with the action at Bristol Assizes, in which the verdict of the jury morally, if not legally, convicted Shuckburgh of attempting to rob his own brother and of perjuring himself in pursuance of that project. From that I should go on to the cases, too numerous to mention, in which he and his agents have been guilty of what his counsel calls "almost fraud," and what I call actual fraud. But Shuckburgh will never, I feel sure, give me such an opportunity of unfolding the record of his shady career as a bloodsucker. He is too sharp to be caught in that way.

My friend Mr. Harlequin Smith has just concluded another of his entertaining competitions, with the following highly amusing results. (1) 17,000 competitors succeeded in solving all three words propounded, and are, therefore, entitled among them to the first prize of £20. As this would allow less than a half-penny apiece, and there is, as Mr. Harlequin truthfully remarks, no postage stamp for less than a half-penny, he has very considerately added £15 to the first prize, in order to give himself the pleasure of forwarding a half-penny to each successful competitor. (2) The second prize of £10, offered to those who succeeded in solving two out of the three words, has been won by 220 competitors, who consequently get one shilling each, £1 having been added to the sum offered. (3) The third prize of £5, offered to those who only solved one word correctly, is divided among 53 competitors, who consequently get two shillings each. So the last shall be first, and the first last.

Far be it from me to detract in any way from Mr. Harlequin Smith's peculiar form of humour. Until, however, ocular evidence to the contrary is forthcoming, I decline to believe that there are now at large in this country 220 fools of such phenomenal calibre that they could only solve two out of the three words in Smith's anagram, and still less that there are fifty-three in such an alarming mental condition that they could only succeed in deciphering one of the three words. For this reason I take it that Smith's announcement that he is offering 1s. to each of the winners of the second prize, and 2s. to each of the winners of the third prize, is a mere fiction, concocted for Smith's own purposes. I question also whether 17,000 persons have successfully competed for the first prize. Assuming, however, that they have, as each competitor has paid 1s. 3d., Smith has, by his own account, bagged the sum of £1,079 11s. 3d., less the trifle distributed in prizes. I can only say once more that I look upon anybody who publishes Smith's advertisements after this as morally indistinguishable from the Harlequin himself.

Nearly two years ago I introduced my readers to Miss Mary L. Eyres, of 97, Newark-road, Lincoln. Miss Eyres is a granddaughter, so she says, of a late Colonel of the Grenadier Guards, and a great-granddaughter, so she says, of another Colonel who was an M.P. According to Miss Eyres, the late Colonel of the Grenadier Guards left his widow and four children in such a deplorable condition that the mother is now obliged to earn her living by making widows' mourning, which she sends out "on appro."; and the daughter is obliged to write begging letters, appealing to the tender-hearted to purchase the goods and thereby relieve the family affliction. The peculiar line of operations adopted by Mrs. and Miss Eyres is to select freshly-bereaved widows by means of advertisements of deaths in the newspapers, and send to them letters of condolence, accompanied by these offers of suitable mourning. It is a very annoying thing that notices of births, marriages, and deaths cannot be inserted in the papers without exposing families to the attentions of shoals of people like Mrs. and Miss Eyres, who come bothering with requests for orders; and the few weak-minded people who encourage this kind of business are very much to blame. I should uncommonly like to know whether the genealogy of the Eyres family as given by Miss Mary is an authentic one.

SURPLICE SHIRTS for evening wear, with pique fronts, 9/6, 10/6 each, made to measure.—SAMPSON & Co., Shirt Tailors, 268, 270, Oxford-street, London, W. Price lists forwarded.

I have been favoured with the following letter with reference to a circular of the same firm published in last week's TRUTH:—

Aston Cross, Birmingham,
May 12, 1898.

Randall Bros.,
Printers and Paper Merchants.

The Editor of TRUTH.

DEAR SIR,—You publish in this week's TRUTH a paragraph respecting our employees' picnic, which some spiteful and mean individual, too miserly to live, has inspired. We are constantly giving donations to similar funds on behalf of our customers' employees, and why those to whom we may be paying hundreds of pounds in a year should not do the same we fail to comprehend.

Perhaps you will kindly favour us with their name and address for publication, or publish it in TRUTH. As you have given us a very wide notoriety, we do not see why these objectionable individuals should not be "gibbeted" in your columns.

We enclose stamped envelope for the address asked for.—Yours truly,

RANDALL BROTHERS.

Messrs. Randall Brothers can scarcely be so simple as to make this request seriously. They issued a circular to persons with whom they deal, inviting such persons to subscribe to a treat for their employees. One of the recipients forwarded the circular to me as a sample of a form of impudence which deserves gibbeting. I agreed with him, and published the circular. If, therefore, my correspondent was "spiteful and mean," and "too miserly to live," I am equally spiteful, mean, and miserly. Not admitting this, however, I feel under no obligation to oblige Messrs. Randall, or to enable them to get at my other correspondent.

The Hispano-American war has been obligingly brought off at the right moment for the appearance of the map showing the world's telegraphic system which Mr. Charles Bright is publishing in connection with his work on "Submarine Telegraphs." A glance at the map enables one to see both the existing girdles round the earth and those which it is proposed to lay for the benefit and protection of the British Empire. Whether all the latter are really needed is a debateable question; but current events are at any rate proving what an important instrument the cable is in modern naval warfare. Moreover, it is not merely the fate of a fleet or the capture of a fort which may depend upon the cable; it is also indispensable for the due gratification of the appetite of the public for news. How would the daily papers get on without those long cablegrams, which not only record in minutest detail all the facts of the war, but—equally important—when there are no facts (which seems to be generally the case) transmit appetising fictions?

If you want to entirely Furnish your House or select any article of Furniture or Carpet, &c., send for HEWETSONS' Illustrated Priced Catalogue.—HEWETSONS, Tottenham Court-road, London.

The American newspapers are wasting a good deal of ink in discussing the question whether any of the European Great Powers are likely to interfere in their war with Spain, and speculating on what would be our attitude were this the case. They may rest certain that no European Power has ever had the remotest intention to interfere, or has ever dreamt of imposing terms of accommodation on one or other of the belligerents, whilst all or any would be ready, if asked, to act as a medium of negotiation with a view to peace. The object of modern diplomacy, when a war arises between two great nations, is to localise it, and thus to prevent its spreading. In the first Italian war between France and Italy, which resulted in the loss to the latter of Lombardy, in the Austro-German war, and in the Franco-Prussian war, the struggle was localised by neutrals acting on this principle of non-interference. All that is written about some Powers wanting to interfere on behalf of Spain, and our insisting that such interference must not take place, is mere journalistic myth.

Very aptly has a French newspaper described Mr. Chamberlain as a civilian Boulanger. The General was not wanting in parts, and he had a laudable ambition to rise in the service of his country. But the means that he adopted to rise were not so laudable. He started as a Republican, and, having as such become Minister of War, he proceeded to intrigue against his ministerial colleagues. He perpetually issued proclamations to attract attention to himself, and he managed to get the Press to boom him. The President of the Republic dismissed him from the War Ministry. On this, he turned Orleanist, and managed to convince these French Conservatives that a better Conservative than himself never lived. In order to win the hearts of both Republicans and Conservatives, he preached a crusade against all nations, and he rode about on a white charger. The music-hall echoed with his praise in bad verse. The mention of his name at these assemblages of festive gentlemen and ladies elicited the wildest applause. Up to this point the parallel holds closely. Mr. Chamberlain has reached the white-horse stage, except that, as befits a civilian, his white-horse is the Birmingham rostrum. Will the parallel still continue?

West Norfolk is an agricultural constituency, and the candidate who can secure the vote of the agricultural labourers wins. It used to be a safe Liberal seat; then it veered round, and now it has come back to its old love. The London newspapers seem to ascribe this last change to Norfolk Hodge being indignant with Lord Salisbury, for having allowed Russia to get hold of Port Arthur and Ta-lien-wan. Few of them probably knew whether these are the names of men or of places; and, if the latter, where the places are. The Tory Press in revolt against the Premier explains that the rebuke is personal to him, and trusts that he will realise, now that the great heart of the Tory Party has sadly but sternly administered this rebuke to him, that he must obey his journalistic masters. One of these infatuated organs opines that if he would do something desperate in Yunnan, this might possibly pacify Hodge.

I should rather have thought that Hodge is displeased at the dole which has been vouchsafed to the agricultural interest having gone into the landlords' pockets and not into his, and to his having been kept out of the Workmen's Compensation Act, because his gain would have been the farmer's loss. Probably the rise in the price of bread also tended to lead him to express his disapproval of Tory rule; for though dear wheat may benefit farmers and landlords, it is the reverse of a gain to the man whose wage does not go up, but whose bread does. Hodge is not quite the fool that the Tories take him to be, and he is inclined to judge of politics and politicians from a domestic standpoint. His affection for parson, squire, and farmer is not strong, and for a candidate to have them on his side is generally to have him on the other.

When a man earns some 14s. a week, and has to keep his family out of it, with the prospect of ultimately retiring to the happy home provided by a beneficent State for the veterans of toil, he is quite right to make his political allegiance subordinate to his desire that his lot should be bettered. His politics begin at home, and end there. When he is told we ought to go to war to prevent Russia getting Port Arthur, or that we possibly may go to war to get an African village called Boussa for ourselves, he does not clearly see his advantage. His plain, practical common-sense has no sympathy with Jingoism in its aggressive aspect. If he hears of one of his neighbours having enlisted in the Army, he shakes his head over him, and instead of honouring him as a hero, regards him as a fool, or something worse.

We Liberals lost the agricultural labourer's vote by promising him three acres and a cow, and not giving him even a rood of land, or a sheep's trotter. To regain it, we must counter Mr. Chamberlain's forward policy abroad, by a forward policy at home, that will convert our labourer from a struggling serf into a free man, able, if he works, to live in decent comfort. In the House of Commons about fifty members have formed themselves into an Association to promote expenditure on the Army and Navy. There should be an Association of Members to promote the welfare of those who till the soil on the sic vos non vobis scheme of economy.

The Anarchists may have been ready to turn the Italian discontent, culminating as it has in riots, to their advantage. But the discontent has its origin in the taxation that has converted Italy into a country of paupers. When a trader or a manufacturer has to pay 50 per cent. of his income to the tax collector, he finds it difficult to make two ends meet. When a labourer with a wage of one shilling per diem has to pay half in taxes, he finds it still more difficult, and the slightest rise in the price of necessaries means starvation. Far from being surprised at the riots, I am surprised that they have not occurred sooner.

The King of Italy is not popular, nor is the Chamber that meets at Rome. Between them they divide the unpopularity resulting from over-taxation. An Italian looks to his own Province as his country. Unity will only succeed in Italy provided that each Province is as independent of the other as is a Swiss Canton in all matters that locally concern it. The Italian as thoroughly distrusts a meddling central Government as does an Irish Nationalist the Castle. If there is no decentralisation there is little hope for Italy. I have at various times lived in Italy. I have known it under Austrian Archdukes and Bourbons, and I have seen it under one King. Better material than an Italian working man I do not know. He is honest, sober, and most industrious. But against a state of things that reduces him to starvation he rightly rises, all the more if he suspects that his rulers rob and plunder him in order to fill their own pockets.

To meet this almost universal uprising, the Times correspondent suggests a remedy. It is: "Ruthless repression of political insurrection, and sounder administration under a practical dictatorship, if the Chamber shows the white feather. The King must dare to do his duty. He, like the Queen and his soldiers, must cry 'Avanti Savoja.'" My remedy would be to leave each of the Provinces that once were separate States to work out its own salvation under a federal bond, such as exists in Switzerland; to reduce the army, which is only maintained at its present strength to enable the country to fulfil its obligations as a member of the Triple Alliance; to clear out of the Public Departments all employees in excess of their needs; and, boldly admitting that Italy cannot pay full interest on its Public Debt, to reduce that interest by one-half. If this be not done, the creditors of Italy will lose, not half their interest, but all of it, the King will lose his throne, all industrial undertakings will be blighted, and thousands on thousands of the labourers will slowly starve to death.

From the terrible condition of Italy we should learn a lesson, or what has befallen her will ultimately befall us. We should give Home Rule to Ireland, and thus put an end to the discontent there; we should reduce and not increase taxation; what we do levy in taxes should be spent for the welfare of the community, instead of being squandered in buccaneering and in the armaments that are rendered necessary by our predatory habits. Peace, economy, and reform are scouted nowadays as not fitted for this enlightened age. We should revert to them.

For Truth, and all other Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals, send your Subscriptions to WM. DAWSON & SONS, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's-bldngs., London. (Estab. 1809.) Catalogue gratis.

Periodically it is asserted that we have an alliance with Italy, and with other Continental Powers, in regard to the maintenance of the status quo in the Mediterranean. What happened was this: When Crispi went to Berlin, Bismarck urged him to join in an alliance (subsequently called the Triple Alliance) with Germany and Austria. He pleaded that France, in case of war, would be master of the Italian coasts. On this Bismarck applied to Lord Salisbury to express an opinion that England was interested in maintaining the status quo in the Mediterranean. This Lord Salisbury did in a quasi-private letter. Later on, Lord Salisbury sent a letter to our Ambassadors at some of the European Courts, suggesting that there should be a general agreement to maintain this status quo. The Great Powers applied to, replied that, so far as Morocco was concerned, they were ready to enter with us into a declaration that it should not be annexed, in whole or in part, by any European Power, but further they were not prepared to go. Thus the matter rests.

MUZZLES FOR MINISTERS:

WRITTEN AFTER READING MR. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN'S RECENT SPEECH AT BIRMINGHAM.

Mr. Long, as we know,
For some two years or so,
In a way that has often been puzzling,
Has, with little excuse,
Played, now fast and now loose,
With the question of dogs and their muzzling.
He disgusts with his plan
Every dog-owning man,
And the wrath of that man's kith and kin he stirs,
But his fault we'd condone
If he'd leave dogs alone
And go in for the muzzling of Ministers!

Yes, here is a chance,
A good work to advance,
Which would cause scarce one protest divergent:
Ay, here is a field
Which a harvest would yield;
And here is a need that is urgent.
So, come, Mr. Long,
Show yourself to be strong,
Assume a most resolute attitude!
Though your colleagues may squall,
Take and muzzle them all!
And England will hail you with gratitude.

The Marquis, be sure,
You'd do well to secure
With a muzzle that cannot be *un*done;
For you know how he made
That attempt to degrade
The new County Council of London;
You know how his bark
Was the cause of remark,
How the hopes of the Jingoes in him rose,
When he uttered such rash
And such purposeless trash
In the ears of the Dames of the Primrose!

Arthur Balfour, alas!
Is in much the same pass;
You should muzzle him, too, without quarter,
Seeing how his own side
Have had reason to chide
His remarks about ports—with hot water!
And Gerald as well,
He could hardly rebel,
If a muzzle his chatter arrested;
For 'twould serve to restrain
Gibes about free champagne
For the starving in districts congested!

Curzon, too, and Hicks-Beach,
Clap a muzzle on each!
For recent experience teaches
What risks we still run
From the harm that was done
By their maladroit "open-door" speeches.
Muzzle all the small fry,
Who, with fire in their eye,
Like Bobadils prate about fighting!
For those dogs are at best
But a nuisance and pest,
Who bark with no notion of biting.

But whatever you do
With this mischievous crew
To stifle their snarling corrosive,
A muzzle, if wise,
Of exceptional size,
You'll reserve, Mr. Long, for your Joseph.
Of the snarlers the worst
He has been from the first,
Of the snappers by far most outrageous;
Then muzzle him, pray,
And no longer delay,
For even his bark is contagious.

P'rhaps his Brummagem breed,
'Tis that makes him exceed
All the rest of the pack in malignity;
P'rhaps the cross in his strain,
Makes him spiteful and vain,
And wholly deficient in dignity;
But be that as it may,
There is only one way
To solve the political puzzle—
For the good of our land,
Some predominant hand
On Joseph should fasten a muzzle!

SCRUTATOR.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN HAS ANOTHER PLAN.

ONE of the peculiarities of Mr. Chamberlain is that he always has a plan. No sooner does his house of cards fall to pieces than he proceeds to build up another, which meets with the same fate. During the active phase of Irish Home Rule, he must have submitted to the unappreciative public at least one hundred of these card erections As Colonial Secretary, he has, of course, had plans. He placed the first of them before the Colonial Premiers, and they laughed it out of existence. His present plan in regard to our Colonies is, apparently, to give large sums of our money to bolster up those of them that cannot pay their own way. Although not Foreign Secretary, it is almost needless to say that he considers that he knows a good deal more of foreign affairs than Lord Salisbury, and last week,

H. L. SAVORY & CO.'S CIGARETTES.—By Special Warrants of Appointments to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, H.S.H. the Duke of Teck, and the Houses of Lords and Commons. To be obtained of all the leading Houses in the trade.—Sole address, 59, Piccadilly, London, W. Specimen case of samples, containing all sizes, 2s. 6d., with price list.

at Birmingham, he submitted his plan to his chief, under the guise of a speech to the Birmingham Liberal Unionists. The speech is to be ascribed to his restless desire to attract attention to himself. So potent is this desire, that if he had been born in a humbler sphere, I believe that, rather than pass unnoticed in the crowd, he would have walked every day round the West End with his cheeks blackened, his nose painted blue, and a green hat on his head. Fate having made him a Cabinet Minister, he must be the one man in the Cabinet about whom the public talk. No Premier, no colleague, must come between the sun and him. If the Cabinet has taken any action which does not find popular favour, he must make it clear that if it had acted on his advice the result would have been different. As an opponent he is a weighty one, owing to his push and his debating abilities. But I am inclined to think that he is still more dangerous as a colleague. This relation barbs the arrow that the candid friend discharges from his bow.

His plan is this: we are to renounce in future that isolation which Mr. Goschen boasted was our strength, and that concerted action with Europe which a few short months ago Lord Salisbury lauded to the skies as the perfection of wisdom is henceforward to be eschewed. In order to meet any European combination against us, we are to form an alliance with some great Continental Power that has a large army, and by this means maintain our commercial supremacy throughout the globe. Which Power our ally is to be Mr. Chamberlain does not especially state. It is not Russia, because he reviles Russia, and suggests that we must have a long spoon if we wish to sup with the Russian devil. It is hardly complimentary of Mr. Chamberlain to describe Mr. Curzon as a spoon; but for a Minister of the Crown to allude to the sovereign of a country with which we are at peace as the Devil, is language unknown to diplomacy before the Birmingham era. Again, our proposed ally cannot be France, because Mr. Chamberlain has of late been doing his utmost to involve us in war with that Power about some worthless village in the interior of Africa. Is it Turkey, Austria, Italy, or Germany? Against an alliance with Turkey the nation would with one voice protest. Austria would not, and could not, enter into such an alliance with us; Italy has renounced foreign adventure after a disastrous experience of it, and she must reduce her Army rather then augment it for the purpose of furnishing us with two or three corps d'armée to aid us in the Far East. Remains alone Germany. We are, it would seem, to go hat in hand to her, and entreat her to join us in an alliance, in order that we may maintain our naval supremacy, and be able to dictate terms to Europe in respect to the Far East. That Mr. Chamberlain should suppose such an alliance posssible shows abysmal ignorance of the existing relations between Continental Powers.

The main aim of Germany is to hinder a joint attack from France and Russia. This is the keystone of her policy. France has a general alliance with Russia. So long as Germany keeps on good terms with that Power, she is safe from this joint attack. She, therefore, is not likely to join us in an alliance aimed against Russia and France. Were we to go to war with the latter, it is probable that Russia would make common cause with her; but this probability would become a certainty if Germany were to join us. Is it, then, within the bounds of reasonable probability that Germany would come to our aid if we went to war with France, or that she would send her troops to the Far East to help us if we went to war with Russia, thus denuding herself of her troops at the very moment when she would be attacked by the forces of France and Russia? Do ut des is the sound German principle; we have no des that would induce her to give us the do. What would be the object of an alliance between us and her? That we might maintain our supremacy over the sea roads of the globe. Is Germany likely to place her Army at our disposal for any such object? She is becoming every day more of a manufacturing centre, and she aspires to the possession of Colonies. More than any other Power she must be averse to our absolute rule of the seas. More than any other Power she must wish that the system of balance of power should be applied to the ocean. Even if Germany were to consent to this felo de se, a German alliance would be unpopular in England, particularly if aimed against France. We may occasionally have our tiffs with France, but between Englishmen and Frenchmen there is a warm friendship. In regard to Germans this does not exist. A German alliance has always been the aim of the Court, and Lord Palmerston had the nation with him when he successfully struggled against it. Cordial amity with France has always been the aim of the English people. Germany has now become our commercial competitor in all parts of the earth. The "made in Germany" has not tended to increase our love for the "Fatherland."

I have heard it suggested that, in thus tendering our alliance to some Power unknown, Mr. Chamberlain had Japan in his eye. This, however, is hardly credible. Japan is not yet a great military Power, and having obtained a paramount influence in Corea by a friendly arrangement with Russia, she is hardly likely to imperil this influence by entering into an alliance against Russia, from which she has absolutely nothing to gain.

Mr. Chamberlain's proposal, that we should look here, there, and everywhere to find some great Military Power ready to join us in an alliance against all other European Continental Powers, in order to make the Eastern commercial relations of all Powers, including those of our ally, dependent on our good will, is, therefore, about as practical as the "dilly, dilly, come and be killed" of the old woman to the ducks. It would be convenient, no doubt, to us, but how about the ducks? So long as we declare it to be our fixed policy to build and maintain such a fleet as places the commerce and the distant dependencies of all European Powers at our mercy, not only cannot we have an ally in Europe, but, in the very nature of things, those who are menaced with this scheme of maritime supremacy must be drawn together in opposition to it. I am not now discussing whether the scheme be sound or the reverse, I am only pointing to the consequences that are involved in it in respect to our relations with foreign Powers. The dual alliance between us and some great military Empire, from which we are to derive all the profit, and our ally to incur all the risks, is not likely ever to occur, for the plain and simple reason, that it can be to the interest of no European military Power to join us in any such alliance. Why, then, suggest it? The suggestion is practically an admission that our plan of absolute maritime supremacy must fail, unless we find some Great Power ready to join us in fighting for it.

The Maximum of Effect at the Minimum of Cost.—An Object Lesson in Decorating and Furnishing can be obtained by inspecting Messrs. WARING'S Suites of furnished rooms at 175-181, Oxford-st. W.

Having thus implored some European Power to come to our aid, Mr. Chamberlain proceeded to advocate an Anglo-Saxon alliance between us and the United States. A war, he said, would be cheaply purchased if the Stars and the Union Jack waved over an Anglo-Saxon alliance in a great and holy cause. Our wars never have been, and are never likely to be, undertaken in a great and holy cause. It may be desirable that the integrity of the Chinese Empire should be maintained, and that all the nations of the world should be able to import freely goods (including opium) into China. But this is hardly a great and holy cause, for the Empire that we would maintain is as badly governed a one as it is possible to conceive. Nor can our endeavour to grab African territory and to prevent others from following our example be termed a great and holy cause, whatever may be said of its expediency. The Americans have become a great, powerful, and prosperous nation because they have kept clear of alliances with us or any European Power, and it is not the least likely that they will alter this policy to please us. They are far too practical a nation to be led into drawing the chestnuts out of the fire for us by a little cheap claptrap about our common parentage and the greater thickness of blood than water. We may be, and I trust we always shall be, the best of friends, but each has its own axe to grind. We are, it is true, of the same race with a large number of Americans; but I have never perceived that the "man and brother" talk has ever prevented men and brothers from killing each other. The "man and the cousin" talk will not hinder cousins from quarrelling if the two cousins are after the same bone.

The only importance that I attach to Mr. Chamberlain's present utterances is that they show a dawning consciousness on his part that the Jingo policy of brag, bluster, and grab is breaking down. Our threat to outbuild the world in ships has been taken up by the world, with the result that the relative strength of our Navy and that of other Powers is much about the same, notwithstanding our heavy expenditure. We have grabbed, and they have grabbed. And now Mr. Chamberlain admits that we have made a mistake in thus throwing down the gauntlet to the world, cringes to the United States, like a poor relation asking for assistance—although a little while ago we were urged by the Jingoes to go to war with our dear cousin about some Venezuelan bog—and piteously implores some European Great Power to aid us with its soldiers against any combination of the Great European Powers. I am not a Jingo; but I feel ashamed at the country being thus rendered contemptible.

I am amused at the Colonial Secretary administering aid and comfort to the Liberal Unionists by assuring them that the Liberal Party is prepared to kill a fatted calf for their consumption, if only they will return to the fold. We are prepared to receive any who, renouncing the errors of their ways, ask to be received back into grace; but if Mr. Chamberlain imagines that we are longing for his return as our shepherd he is under a singular illusion. A Radical who enters a Tory Cabinet bids adieu to the Liberal fold. Our policy is not, as he imagines, that of the open door to such a gentleman. So far as we are concerned, the notice that was inscribed over Dante's hell is written over the Tory Cabinet door, "Ye who enter, leave all hope behind." He has made his election between the narrow Radical path and the broad Tory path, and he must abide by it. Fully acknowledging his abilities as a debater, we shall never seek to avail ourselves of them, for with us consistency and principle rank more highly than debating ability. So long as he remains in public life he must defend Tory principles, however much he may despise them. He must be the galley slave, chained to the Tory oar. If he can lead the Tories, by all means let him. But I doubt whether he ever will. Some of the Tories may complain of Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour not being sufficiently Jingo to suit them. But Mr. Chamberlain's endeavour to win them over to him by outjingoing his colleagues will not succeed. They do not trust him; indeed, it is no exaggeration to say they thoroughly distrust him. Whatever may be their cause of complaint against Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour, and however Mr. Chamberlain may flatter their Jingo propensities, they will not desert their own leaders in order to replace them by the leadership of a clever renegade, whose presence in the Salisbury Cabinet is a cause of offence to many of them. Rightly or wrongly, they are under the impression that Mr. Chamberlain is not entirely unconnected with the Press campaign against the Premier, and this hardly tends to increase their confidence in their Colonial Secretary.

IS MR. RAYNER'S CONDUCT DISGRACEFUL?

Since the exposure of the true character of the Inventions Competition trick in TRUTH of April 14 and 21, I have thought it fair to all parties concerned to keep silence for a time and await "developments." Such developments might have occurred in several directions. In the first place it was possible that Mr. G. H. Rayner, of Chancery-lane, might have taken exception to articles in which he was accused of "an unscrupulous attempt to humbug ignorant people into parting with their money" and of carrying out "a raid upon a peculiarly simple and gullible portion of the public" by a process characterised throughout "by deception and trickery." At an earlier stage of my criticism, Mr. Rayner felt it necessary to write and correct a statement which he thought he had an answer to; and it was therefore reasonable to expect that when the case against his firm was presented with so much more force and completeness, he would have thought it even more necessary to make a reply. Four weeks have elapsed, however, without any sign of a desire on Mr. Rayner's part to continue the controversy, and it may be now presumed that he has definitely decided to hold his peace. There was also a possibility, when I last wrote on the subject, that some of the victims of the various competitions organised by Rayner & Co. would have taken combined action against the newspapers through which they had been led into the trap. Not having heard of any such proceedings, I conclude that there is no longer much hope in that direction. The question, therefore, now arises whether the matter is to stop where it stands at present. It certainly will not do so if TRUTH can prevent it; and for that reason I now return to the subject.

The first point to which I would call attention is that a patent agent is not an irresponsible practitioner, subject to no control in the conduct of his business but that of the general law of the land. On the contrary, he belongs, like a lawyer or a doctor, to a profession which is recognised and controlled by statutory authority. The point was mooted in my last article whether the Chartered Institute of Patent Agents has power to deal with abuses such as the Inventions Competitions have brought to light. As far as I can learn, the Institute has no disciplinary powers over the profession; but the Board of Trade has, and the Board of Trade is a much more efficient and likely authority for the purpose than any mere professional organisation. The Board of Trade gets its power from the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888, under which it makes rules for the registration of patent agents and other cognate purposes. The Rules at present in force contain the following clause:—

> 16. If any registered person shall be convicted in Her Majesty's dominions or elsewhere of an offence which, if committed in England, would be a felony or misdemeanour, or after due inquiry, is proved to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade to have been guilty of disgraceful professional conduct . . . . the Board of Trade may order the Registrar to erase from the Register the name of such person. Provided that no person shall be adjudged by the Board of Trade to have been guilty of disgraceful professional conduct unless such person has received notice of, and had an opportunity of defending himself from, any charge brought against him.

If these words have any bearing upon the present case, it is under the phrase "disgraceful professional conduct." The term "disgraceful" in such a connection is a vague one. What is or is not disgraceful must, in any case, be more or less a matter of opinion; and what is or is not disgraceful in a professional sense must be a matter primarily for the opinion of the profession concerned. Not having the slightest knowledge of the recognised standard of ethics among patent agents, I have no means of even conjecturing whether the conduct of Mr. Rayner and his partners (if he has any on the register) is such as would be considered by his profession becoming or the reverse in one of their number. But as it is important that some qualified authority should pronounce upon this point, it may conduce to a correct decision if I explain precisely what the conduct of Mr. Rayner, or Messrs. Rayner & Co., has been.

1. Mr. Rayner (or his firm) induces various newspapers—presumably by paying for the privilege—to appoint him as "Patent Editor," with the power of acting in that capacity in the name of each paper. 2. Mr. Rayner (or his firm) induces newspapers, in the same way, to publish the prospectuses of competitions, in which pecuniary prizes, medals, and diplomas are offered for the invention of the greatest merit, subject to the condition that every invention submitted must first be protected. 3. The prospectus announces that the proprietors of the newspaper have made arrangements by which the competitors can take out such protection through them (i.e., through Rayner & Co., in their character of "Patent Editors") on specially reduced terms. 4. The competitions, though announced as enterprises started by each newspaper for the purpose of encouraging inventive genius among its readers, and to give them an opportunity of earning vast sums by obtaining valuable patents, are in reality originated and managed throughout by Rayner & Co., and Rayner & Co. alone; Rayner & Co. act as judges, and actually themselves provide the prizes, medals, and diplomas. 5. The competition is announced simultaneously in numbers of different papers, and represented in each one as a special enterprise of that paper; whereas there is only one set of prizes for all the papers running the competition at the same time, and, in fact, only one competition among the readers of half-a-dozen or more papers. 6. The papers selected as the medium of these competitions are chiefly the weekly editions of Provincial journals, which circulate largely among the working class—i.e., among the people most likely to produce small mechanical inventions, and least capable of estimating their commercial value, or detecting the true character of the so-called competition. 7. By these means Mr. Rayner (or his firm) has during the last twelve months induced hundreds upon hundreds of working men and other inexperienced and imperfectly educated people to pay to him sums ranging from three and half to eleven guineas, for the purpose of taking out provisional protection or complete patents for inventions which have no commercial value whatever. The game was started by inviting the readers of the Western Mail (Cardiff) to compete for prizes which the proprietors of the paper were represented as offering by way of commemorating the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. The competition was limited to improvements in window-sash fasteners, and no less than 148 prizes, medals, and diplomas were awarded to competitors, forty-five extra diplomas beyond the number originally offered being given, owing (presumably) to the unexpected display of merit in the inventions submitted. Within six months or so of this Mr. Rayner started a second series of competitions in other papers, in which no particular subject for invention was suggested; but in the prospectuses of this competition Mr. Rayner expressly specified a window-fastener as a promising line of experiment in which no satisfactory invention had yet been produced. A County Court action being brought against the Leeds Mercury by one of the competitors, who impeached the bona fides of this second competition, an application was made for the removal of the action to the High Court, and in support of it Mr. Rayner made an affidavit to the effect that if the plaintiff succeeded, the Leeds Mercury would be liable to upwards of 200 similar actions. At least 350 competitors, therefore, took out protection through the Western Mail and the Leeds Mercury alone. The total number of papers in which these competitions have been advertised at the present time is more than twenty.

Such are the plain facts, stated in the briefest form.

What is the conclusion from them? First, that these competitions are an elaborate piece of trickery, calculated at every stage to mislead and deceive simple and unsuspecting people; secondly, that this trick is simply devised and carried out by a firm of patent agents for the purpose of putting money into their own pockets; thirdly, that by this trick Mr. Rayner (or his firm) has obtained some thousands of pounds, chiefly from men in very humble circumstances, well knowing that the majority of them are throwing away their money without the slighest prospect of any return. That this would amount to "disgraceful conduct" in any ordinary acceptation of the term, there cannot, I take it, be any question. Whether it amounts to "disgraceful professional conduct" on the part of a registered patent agent, is a technical question to be decided by the Board of Trade. I will only make two observations upon it: (1) that in the United States (as shown by the extract given in my last article on the subject) very similar conduct on the part of a patent agent has been pronounced fraudulent, and has been punished by a sentence of disqualification for further practice; (2) that if such conduct is not deemed professionally disgraceful in this country, it will be the duty of the Board of Trade to insert in its Rules without loss of time some other form of words which will bring such conduct within the reach of proper punishment.

That, however, is a question for the future. The immediate necessity of the situation is that the Board of Trade should be moved to inquire into the conduct of Mr., or Messrs., Rayner, under the rules cited above, and to deal with it according to the result of the inquiry. How the Board is to be set in motion I do not precisely know. If it takes cognizance of newspaper articles I hereby call upon it to exercise its powers upon Mr. Rayner. If it requires an aggrieved party to apply to it, let it only give the hint, and I will undertake that a hundred shall send in their applications forthwith. If it requires the profession to take the initiative, then I call upon the Chartered Institute of Patent Agents to take this matter up without delay. But let it be clearly understood that either by the Board of Trade or the Institute action of some kind must be taken.

THE STAFF COLLEGE IN 1898.

During the last few weeks a good deal of correspondence has reached me respecting the shortcomings of the Staff College. Attention was first called to the subject by the criticism which the Staff incurred during the Afridi campaign, and further remark was provoked by the appointment of the new Commandant—an officer who, whatever his qualifications for the post, is totally without experience of practical warfare in any shape. On the one hand, it has been alleged that much of the blundering which marked the late campaign was due to the exclusion of Staff College officers from Staff appointments in India. On the other hand, we have been told that in India Staff College officers are considered to be a fraud, and that the Indian Army can get on better without them. It is significant that this view is not confined to India, for I have before me many similar expressions of opinion from English officers, all of them men who have had practical experience of the working of the College. The work of the Staff College is purely technical. It is, therefore, a subject which an outsider is hardly qualified to criticise in detail. All that a humble civilian can attempt is to reflect the opinions of judges more competent than himself, and I think it may be to the interest of the public if I offer a few reflections of this kind at the present moment.

It is alleged against the Staff College that the teaching is defective, and that jobbery, favouritism, and toadyism reign supreme there, with the result that success is due to many other causes than professional ability or industry. An officer, who I think may be acquitted of any personal animus in the matter, writes:—

> You, Sir, had much to say respecting the management of the Staff College two or three years ago. Much of what you said was true, and it was written in time to prevent the establishment of a complete reign of terror there. But notwithstanding this the College remains a fraud. It is utterly absurd to regard it as an institution in which the best men come to the front. Nominally entrance is gained by means of a competitive examination. As a matter of fact, a great proportion of the vacancies are filled by Commander-in-Chief's nominees, who are "selected" on the same principle as that on which officers are "selected" for most things in the Army—i.e., because they are who they are, or because their fathers are who they are. It is not an exaggeration to say that a large proportion of them are men who before being selected have failed once or twice in the open competition. To those who know them it is a mystery how the majority succeed in passing the qualifying examination and the examinations that take place during the two years' course. Again, in the College the personal element is everything. The lord, or the son of a lord, the rich or influential man's son, may be as idle as he likes, just performing the compulsory course and no more. But he is certain of his billet when he leaves; whilst the hardworking individual who has taken up all the extra subjects waits in vain for employment. . . .

All this is in close corroboration of what was said in TRUTH in October, 1894. At that time four Staff College officers had been returned to their regiments, nominally in consequent of their failure at one of the periodical examinations; but it was alleged that there were other motives at work, and evidence of this was supplied by the fact that, whereas seven officers had failed at the same examination, only these four were dismissed from the College, the three whose failure was overlooked being nominees of the Commander-in-Chief. The following were among the remarks which I made at that time upon the case:—

> The truth seems to be that the Commandant and his staff are by no means so closely in touch as they ought to be with the men on whom they have to report, while among the men there prevails to a considerable extent a want of faith in the capacity of the College authorities and the value of the teaching. The men consequently who stand highest in the official estimation are those who are most astute at ingratiating themselves with the Commandant and the professors, personally and socially, or who have the most potent influences at their backs. Conversely, the man who does not bow down to the ruling authorities and worship them, or who does not convey with sufficient unction his sense of the supreme wisdom and learning of the professors at whose feet he sits, is liable to get a very unfavourable experience of that deadly official weapon, the confidential report.

At the same time the fact was noted in TRUTH that there prevailed among the students at the Staff College by no means that amount of reverence for the qualifications of their teachers which ought to prevail in an educational institution. That this also is as true in 1898 as it was in 1894 is shown by the following extract from a recent letter on the subject.—

> Most officers who have completed a Staff College course are of opinion that there are not many professors from whom it is possible to learn anything. To this there is one brilliant exception, as will be universally admitted, but surely in such an establishment there should be more than one professor who is recognised as a highly successful teacher. I have myself come across more than one officer who has stated that on leaving the College he felt that he knew less than when he went in. In short, the College under present conditions is less an educational institution than a stepping-stone to preferment for those who have the necessary means of getting it. . . .

Good reasons for this state of things were given in my articles in 1894. It was then pointed out that one of the professors when at the Staff College himself had failed to pass in mathematics, that two others had never passed the Staff College at all, and one of them had actually failed to pass the entrance examination for the College. On the other hand, many of the students at the College—those, at any rate, who were not Commander-in-Chief's nominees—are men who, in order to obtain admission, have obtained the highest possible personal testimonials from their regimental officers, and have qualified by passing a severe examination under the Civil Service Commissioners. It stands to reason that if the qualifying standard is properly kept up among the students, the Commandant and the professors ought to be men of the very highest possible qualifications. What new appointments have been made among the teaching staff at the College since 1894 I do not know. But judging by the recent appointment as Commandant of an officer who has never done a day's soldiering on active service in his life, it would hardly seem that the War Office is yet alive to the qualifications that are required in the staff of an institution of this character.

It would seem, too, that toadyism and personal favouritism are not the only influences which have a prejudicial effect upon Staff College training. Here is another count of the indictment:—

The cant of sport rules supreme at the Staff College. To be master of the drag hunt or captain of the cricket team is held far more honourable, and is far more likely to serve the individual who achieves that position, than to take the foremost place in the work of the course. In recent times an officer whose every scheme, even his examination sketch, had to be executed for him by a comrade—a fact well known to the professors—was appointed a garrison instructor merely on the strength of his riding, and because he "talked horse" incessantly, in default of other ideas.

Now I should certainly be the last to deny the value of sport—that is to say, sport of the athletic kind—in military training. But it is quite certain that by the time an officer goes to the Staff College he has passed that period of life at which physical training is a matter of primary importance. Unless he were a man of sound physique and well-developed nerve and muscle, he could hardly get into the Staff College at all. When he is once there, he has other things to think about than cricket and hunting. He must keep himself in condition—of course every officer ought to do that until he retires, though to the outward eye it would not seem that all of them do. But there cannot be any excuse for giving proficiency in athletics a definite place in the Staff College curriculum.

If the foregoing allegations are well founded—and on that point there seems very little room for doubt—I am not surprised to be told by an Indian officer that the "Indian Army does not want Staff College officers," or that "whenever a vacancy on the Staff occurs a hope is universally expressed that it will not be filled by one of them." The Staff College costs the country a handsome sum of money every year. It is also a very expensive place for the officers who go there—so much so that we have been told that the officers of the Indian Army cannot, as a rule, afford to undertake a course at Camberley. It is of importance to all parties, therefore, that the money spent upon the institution should be expended to advantage. Over and above this, the proper education of the Staff is a matter of vital importance to the country. Cœteris paribus, the army which has the best Staff is the army which will win in any campaign. The Prussians learnt this long ago, and their readiness to learn the lesson contributed as much as anything else to the successes of 1866 and 1870. A thoroughly efficient Staff College should serve a double purpose. It should train officers for the most important and responsible work that has to be performed when an army takes the field, and it should serve as a guarantee to the country against jobbery and favouritism in connection with appointments upon which the safety of the Army and country may depend. There seems the best reason to doubt whether the Camberley institution fulfils these purposes in any degree. If men are jobbed into it, and jobbed out of it, and go out no better qualified for Staff work than they went in, the place may as well be abolished to-morrow, and the money saved which the country and the Service at present spend there.

"MY INNOCENT BOY" AT THE ROYALTY.

Round the central idea of an early indiscretion, Mr. George R Sims and Mr. Leonard Merrick have arranged the material of their "farcical comedy." They are to be congratulated upon the deftness of their workmanship as upon the discreetness of their indiscretion. For their hero, Mr. Valentine Smith, who is thirty-six when we are first introduced to him, had secretly loved, married, and lost a charming girl before he came of age. But she has left behind her a daughter, now seventeen; and it is out of the widower's attempts to conceal the existence of this daughter alike from his irate father, the Commodore, for whom he is still merely an innocent boy, and from his fiancée, Hypatia, that the fun is manufactured. The preliminary explanations fill up a good part of the first act, but once well under way, we are carried, on the light ripple of school-girls' laughter, to the inevitable happy conclusion.

Complications there are, of course, and very ingeniously do Messrs. Sims and Merrick dovetail in the lisping idiotcy of the curate—so helplessly a curate, and so excellently parodied by Mr. Harry Farmer—and the absurd affectations of the French dancing-master, rendered to the life by Mr. H. de Lange, with the prim posing of the schoolmistress, well given by Miss Helena Rous. For in the second act we find ourselves at a girls' school, whither Felix Jellicoe, friend of Valentine Smith, and secretly in love with his daughter Dulcie, an inmate of the school, has betaken himself, with a view to stealing a march upon the curate betrothed to the same young lady. We find Mr. Jellicoe installed as drawing-master, and dominating, from his raised desk in a corner of the room, a rosebed of real schoolgirls. Le vrai seul est aimable, says some Frenchman, and there can certainly be no doubt that these are real schoolgirls, fresh and charming, who follow the leading of Miss Dora Barton through the windings and alightings, the laughter and the comical supplications of the second act. Nothing could be prettier than their decision en masse, like the chirping of decided linnets, that they will never allow their comrade Dulcie to be married to the anæmic curate, and the way that, fluttering up to him like a swarm of meadow-whites, they finally alight in circle round the astonished parent—for Valentine, now married to Hypatia, has come to pay a secret visit to his child—and plead that Dulcie may be spared the curate. These are suddenly joined by Jellicoe, and when he also falls upon his knees and asks for the dismissal of his rival, the whole house applauds an amusing and ingenious situation.

To follow all the turns and twists of the action through this act and the following would give little of the amusement they afford the audience. Suffice it to say that after a marvellous imbroglio, where slammed doors, Gladstone-bags, irate wives and aunts, school-girls, the curate, and the Commodore are but part of the ingredients that go to the making us laugh, we find in the last act peace and kisses.

As has already been remarked, the play is ingeniously constructed, with here and there a bright repartee, in a dialogue that is everywhere adequate, though, perhaps, the joke about the Commodore's collars—not very brilliant at the first saying—is insisted upon a little too often not to be tiring, and those faint suggestions from the "Circus Girl" might be dispensed with where there is so much else to amuse us.

The acting throughout was satisfactory, though Mr. Charles Rock, as the Commodore, is inclined to force the fury of that personage a little too monotonously upon the audience. Miss Doris Templeton also makes rather less than the most of Dulcie Smith, giving the impression of being years younger than the sweet seventeen of the authors. Mr. Sidney Drew is a great acquisition, playing the part of Valentine with tact and humour. He is sure of his effects and often reminded me of his talented brother. May he long remain on this side of the Atlantic. Among the smaller parts Miss Dora Barton shows great promise as the leader of the school-girls, and Mr. J. Brabourne was excellent as the servant Crump.

"TERESA."

This new play by Mr. George Bancroft, given at the Métropole Theatre, Camberwell, on Monday, was well received by a large audience, by no means drawn altogether from the neighbourhood. Mr. Bancroft's theme is not new, and his treatment is upon traditional lines. We have for heroine a charming Italian girl, who is beloved by the virtuous Englishman, Valentine Elsbrooke, and by her evil compatriot, Count Caprile. To detail the machinations of this latter fiend (no exaggeration when Mr. Laurence Irving's impersonation is taken into account), how Teresa's father, an aristocratic socialist, is implicated in treasonable dealings, of which Caprile has the secret, how he tries to force her to marry him, with the threat of vengeance upon her father in case of refusal; how, when all is arranged for her wedding with Valentine, it is discovered that his brother, the ne'er-do-weel Claude Elsbrooke, has been murdered—all this would steal beyond my limits. The ending is sad, for Teresa, through a complicated fatality, is the murderess, and she finds herself obliged to choose between Caprile and death. Her choice is soon made, and the curtain falls upon her last breath, with the stillo, Valentine's gift, plunged into her side. Here, and in the last scene with her fiancé, Valentine, where her love for him struggles with horror at her involuntary crime, Miss Violet Vanbrugh shows a thorough grasp of this character, so emotional in all its phases. Certain moments of her final interview with Caprile were, indeed, within the domain of tragedy. Mr. Laurence Irving, although he certainly looked sufficiently sinister as her detested admirer, seems to lack distinction, and, above all, coherency; for his accent was not always Italian, and his utterance on more than one occasion appeared confused—though this was, no doubt, intentional. As Valentine Elsbrooke, Mr. Arthur Bourchier was natural and easy in a somewhat trying part. Whenever he was on the stage one felt that life was being lived, one listened and looked with increased attention. This is a rare quality in an actor, and one that Mr. Bourchier has always possessed in common with Mr. Wyndham. In conclusion, a word may be said for Mr. Aubrey Smith, who acquitted himself well as the Ambassador, and for Mr. Charles Troode's Geoffrey Ward, the typical American.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE LATE MARQUIS DE CHERVILLE.

We have lost in the course of the week the Marquis de Cherville—a sweet, indeed a matchless, writer on rustic subjects. He began life as a rich young nobleman, and spent the best part of his fortune in supplanting an Orleans prince in Mlle. Ozy's boudoir. This obliged him to bestir himself for a livelihood, and he became a collaborateur of old Dumas. Dumas was to write the plot, and De Cherville to fill in; but when the former sat down to write, the fount of inspiration overflowed. He wrote on and on until the novel or play was finished, or nearly so. From a feeling of delicacy he left the young assistant something to do at the end.

De Cherville lived, as long as I remember him, in the country near Versailles. He farmed there a small estate, and sent regularly to the Temps his weekly chronique, "La Vie à la Campagne." There was not a word about his billionaire or trillionaire neighbours, the Heines, the Hirschs, the Blancs (of Monaco), et tutti quanti. But what insight he gave you into the ways of the robin and the wren, the snipe, woodcock, bittern, weasel, ferret, and other denizens of the woods and fields! Birds, he believed, conveyed the news of the country that concerned them to each other. Did I say he believed? He was sure of it. It was the same with ants. The Marquis had endless anecdotes to illustrate his theories. They were as sparkling as if invented, but were the fruit of close and sympathetic observation. Sympathy is the only door through which we can have access to the mind of bird, beast, or insect.

De Cherville set his face against the mole-catcher. The mole, he found, was the farmer's best friend. It scented a wireworm as a hound scents a fox.

The Marquis de Cherville was thus first driven to write his weekly contribution, "La Vie à la Campagne," to the Temps. He had, in fearfully wet weather, a friend staying on a visit at his country-place. The friend liked gambling, but there were no cards in the house. How send a servant in such a downpour to buy them? But the host was resourceful. He proposed pitch and toss, and lost 80,000 francs. The money not being at hand, he wrote to his notary to raise it at once. On receiving the sum, he remitted it to the winner, who refused it. The Marquis sent it back, but this time with two seconds. Their message was that he was particular in paying gambling debts, especially when he lost. He found himself hard up in consequence of this honourable behaviour. One day, as he walked in the woods near his place he met the Temps book-critic. They fell into chat. De Cherville was in a blouse and leggings, like a gamekeeper in slop clothes; but he was very much the gentleman notwithstanding. His conversation was more than engaging. It was full, fluent, fresh, and original; and it was all about the objects they saw in the forest walk. An acquaintance thus began. The Marquis told his new friend of his pecuniary troubles. Said the latter: "Put into writing what you said to me in the forest the other day, and send it to the Temps. They will be delighted to pay handsomely for it. You have the knack of the literary man, and a freshness of observation and raciness given to very few. Head your article 'La Vie à la Campagne.'" So said so done. The Temps took the contribution, and asked for more. De Cherville regularly filled several columns once a week. If one sifted everything he wrote during twenty-seven years, one would not find a sentence of mere "copy." "La Vie à la Campagne" may secure him permanent renown.

The Hispano-American war does not take from the sociable animation of American society here. One only hears of dinners, dances, concerts, receptions. That inimitable hostess, Mrs. Harris Phelps, after an after-Easter series of fêtes, has issued cards for theatricals and a dance. She will have no mouthing amateurs on her drawing-room stage, but the pick of the theatres. The Austrian Ambassador is her next-door neighbour. Their gardens are contiguous. He and the Ambassadress and staff are sure to drop in. If Corneille filled the play-bill, the Nuncio might honour the fête with his presence. To go to see a tragedy of Corneille used to be thought an exercise of Lenten devotion. Mrs. Henry Drake, another delightful hostess, has been giving afternoon parties on Tuesdays, and has issued cards for two others. Her company is generally cosmopolitan. She goes in for distinction in making up her list—distinction of mind, weight of purse, brilliancy of situation, beauty, grace—but will not have dull nobodies round her. You may dress as plainly as you please, if you have reputation. A lady distinguished by her talents would be made more of than the mere wifely satellite of a great man. Last Tuesday Mme. Drake had for the delectation of her guests Mmes. Achté and Bartot, of the Opéra; Mlle. Lainé, a very finished singer, and Fugère, of the Opéra Comique; and Mrs. Homer (what a name for the lyric stage!), who is to sing through the season at Vichy. Mrs. Homer is fine-looking, quite unaffected, and has a clear voice, bien timbré, which she throws out with the freedom of the true song-bird.

Dr. Evans has at length had Christian burial. After lying in a vault somewhere for three months, his remains were fetched back to his residence in the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne. Invitations, as if to an undeferred funeral, were issued, and a religious service was performed. The body was then transported to Philadelphia, and now lies in the same vault with the remains of Mrs. Evans.

Relic worshippers may like to hear of the fate of an old carriage of Dr. Evans. It is the one in which he took the Empress out of Paris on September 5, 1870. The executors of the will thought, because of its shabbiness, of selling it for what it might fetch. But they were dissuaded, and it is to be placed in the proposed Evans Museum at Philadelphia. Meanwhile, it will remain in the custody of François, the stableman of Dr. Evans. It was François who drove the Empress—dressed in clothes of Mrs. Evans—Mme. Lebreton, Dr. Evans, and his secretary to Trouville. They were three days on the road, but they obtained another carriage and fresh horses at Evreux. The Empress, in the hurry of running away, only took the one pocket-handkerchief in her pocket. She wept often on the road. The Doctor alighted several times to wash it in roadside brooks, and dried it in the sun. The Empress and Mme. Lebreton sat back to the horses to avoid being noticed, and, if noticed, to pass for humble relatives of Dr. Evans.

The Emperor Frederick's entourage are disappointed at their Imperial mistress not having a line in the will of Doctor Evans. At one time he thought of leaving her £100,000 or so—"like the Duchess of Galliera." But that was before she lost influence over her son, and ceased to be backed up against him by popularity. Evans was a worshipper of success.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

A FORTNIGHT ago, dear Lady Betty, it was maintained in these columns that "A war between Great Britain and the United States could scarcely occur, for public feeling in this country would be so much opposed to such a conflict. On the other hand, a war against any combination of European Powers, with the English and the Americans fighting as allies, would rouse the enthusiasm of the nation to the utmost pitch." That this view is correct has been perceived by Mr. Joseph Chamberlain. In his speech at Birmingham last Friday, however, Mr. Chamberlain could not—very unfortunately, as most people think—resist an oratorical temptation to exaggerate this simple statement of an undoubted fact into the following outburst of flamboyant rhetoric: "And I even go so far as to say that, terrible as war may be, even war itself would be cheaply purchased if in a great and noble cause the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack should wave together over an Anglo-Saxon alliance. (Loud and prolonged cheers)."

. . . . .

This is the Age of Transition, and the acute stage in the transitionary period is approaching. The Press, steam, electricity and education are working together to remove oppression and to dispel superstition; and the former must conquer, for circumstances are stronger than combination. The nations are divided into two classes; the commercial and the mediæval. The former are rich, enjoy free institutions, and are little troubled by internal disorder. The latter are mostly bankrupt, are cramped by mediæval restrictions, and are exposed to internal trouble. Obviously, it is only with countries of the former class that Great Britain can form any true alliance—if any alliance whatever is desirable.

* * * * *

By the way, it is curious that the countries whose population, are clothed in distinctive costumes are all on the down grade, whilst those that have adopted modern dress are prospering.

* * * *

Meanwhile, the Lion of Liberty is fast fading into history at Hawarden. It is the common rule that the nearer an object is the greater its size seems to be; but in estimating the magnitude of our fellow-creatures the further they are removed from us the greater do they appear. In the natural course of events, the time cannot now be far distant when the attention of the whole world will be directed upon the career of Mr. Gladstone, and then many will realise for the first time what a magnificent figure he has been in the history of the past half-century. His main aim has been throughout his life to promote liberty, and a nation which enjoys freedom not only enjoys the best of gifts but is enabled to increase in prosperity and in strength. It is not only a memorable orator who is passing away at Hawarden, but one of the greatest apostles of progress that the world has ever seen. The Empire craze turned the trend of popularity for a moment in the direction of the Court and of the official classes, and as popularity nowadays is power, these classes used it to overthrow Mr. Gladstone. When the end comes there will be a tremendous reaction, a reaction which will be all the more accentuated by the danger of war that overshadows the nation. It is the politicians who make war; the people are for peace, prosperity, and progress.

* * * * *

Don Carlos is one of the feeblest pretenders to a throne that the world has ever seen. It is only in the Basque Provinces that he has any adherents, and the Basque people would not fight for Don Carlos, but to recover certain privileges which they formerly possessed. If a revolution occurs in Spain, not Don Carlos but a Republic will be established, and, as the Republicans in Spain are far more socialistic than are those in France, it is inevitable that such an event would influence France very materially. The French Government is aware of this, and is therefore very apprehensive of a Spanish Republic.

* * * * *

It is understood that the system of sixpenny cab fares is to be tried again in London almost immediately. The announcement that this is to be, has frightened the drivers, who cannot be made to understand that it will greatly benefit them. There are thousands of people who would willingly be driven a short distance and pay sixpence, but who prefer to walk rather than pay a shilling. In the West End, where men and women are being moulded to modern ways by the scarcity of money, many now use the omnibus who only a few years ago would have scorned to do so. Any evening during the season, well-known men may now be met in these vehicles, going either to their club or to the place which is nearest to where they are to dine. Say what they will, the inside of a London omnibus, especially at night, is not agreeable, and to those to whom I have referred the sixpenny cab fare would be a material boon.

* * * * *

One feature of the Exhibition at Earl's Court this year is not only excellent in itself, but comes at an opportune moment. For some not altogether explicable reason the public has in recent years lost its appetite for the monster and magnificent ballets which were at one time so popular at Olympia, and therefore the great theatre at Earl's Court, which was designed for that kind of entertainment, became somewhat of a white elephant. This year it has been flooded with water, and on this artificial sea is represented first a naval review, and second the bombardment of a fortified town by ships. These last were all built in Germany, and are models of British ships. It may be added that in Berlin the entertainment achieved a big success. It has already done the same here. The manœuvres are very skilfully carried out, and the bombardment gives an excellent idea of how terrible a real conflict of the sort must be. The firing of torpedoes, the explosion of the mines, the din of the guns, and the final collapse of the forts together present an especially exciting scene, and one which is well worth witnessing.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE Duke of St. Albans was an owner of racehorses for about thirty-five years, but he never kept a large stud, and during the greater part of that period he had only two or three animals in training. The Duke was elected to the Jockey Club in 1863, and he did much good work as a member of that body in a quiet way, and exercised a considerable, but unobtrusive, influence. He was distinguished for his strong, shrewd common sense, and was always most sagacious and judicious in his advice when consulted by friends, as very often happened. The Duke was a great favourite with the late Lord Falmouth, and his close intimacy with him and with Matthew Dawson gave him the "first run" with Heath House horses in the palmy days of that establishment. I see it is stated that the best horse owned by the Duke was Lord Clive; but the writers who express this view are presumably ignorant of the fact that his Grace was, for a short time, the owner of Thunder. The Duke was a great friend of Prince Batthyany, and he was one of the syndicate that bought Galopin in 1883 for 8,000 gs., the others (I believe) being the present Duke of Devonshire, the late Lord Granville, and Mr. Henry Chaplin. The Duke of St. Albans was principally known in early life in connection with very high whist, and, being an exceptionally good player, he won largely, both at home and abroad. The Duke betted very heavily for many years whenever he had come to the conclusion that a plunge was justifiable, and he was a really consummate judge of horses and racing, and rarely made a mistake. He was probably the biggest winner over all Lord Falmouth's horses from the days of Queen Bertha, and he netted very large sums over Silvio's Derby and Leger, and Jannette's Leger. In 1875 the Duke was far and away the heaviest winner when Camballo won the Two Thousand, but, with rare good sense, he declined to follow Mr. Vyner's horse at Epsom, and was again the largest winner over the Derby, which Galopin won. Another of his great wins was over Thunder's City and Suburban.

Captain Machell's Blackwing, by Gallinule, is probably the smartest two-year-old by a long way that has run this season. Blackwing, who was bred in Ireland, had been so highly tried that he missed his Newmarket engagement on Wednesday in order that he might be kept fresh for the more valuable Worth Stakes at Gatwick, and he won that race in a common canter, literally all the way. He was all the week a strong tip at Newmarket for these Stakes, and he started a great favourite. This colt has very few engagements, and his next race will be the Coventry Stakes at Ascot, in which event he has no extra weight to carry. He is a very fine colt.

I hear that Ninus will not be sent to Paris for the Grand Prix on June 5, but that he is to be reserved for Ascot, when he will probably be started for either the Biennial or the St James's Palace Stakes, or very likely for both those races if the going there is good. Be this as it may, however, Ninus can have no earthly chance for the Grand Prix, as he is clearly deficient in stamina, and if he could not stay the R.M., he most assuredly is not likely to distinguish himself over the much longer distance at Longchamps.

Mr. Gubbins would have been a most infatuated simpleton if he had refused the insanely extravagant bid of 20,000 gs. from the Russian Government for Galtee More. The horse has been sold with his engagements, and if he goes on all right he will, no doubt, start for the Gold Cup at Ascot, and for the Goodwood Cup. The sporting papers announce that Galtee More has been bought in the name of "Prince Dimitri, who is aide-de-camp to the Czar." As a matter of fact, the Czar has several hundreds of aides-de-camp, so that this appointment practically has no significance whatever. I suppose the personage intended to be indicated is the Emperor's cousin, the Grand Duke Dimitri, youngest son of the late Grand Duke Constantine Nicolaievitch, and first cousin of the Duke of Cumberland. It would be very appropriate for the Emperor Nicholas II. (for Galtee More is de facto his Majesty's own property if bought by the Government) to win the Gold Cup, as for ten years from 1844 that piece of plate was given every year by his great-grandfather, the Emperor Nicholas I., in memory of his visit to Ascot, with the late King of Saxony and Prince Albert, in 1844.

I was amused to read last week that Mr. Cassel may be congratulated upon having bought Love Wisely for 5,000 gs., because that horse will probably win the Ascot Cup now that Galtee More is out of the way. Such jubilation over the withdrawal of last year's Derby winner is decidedly premature, but the writer of this trash must be an oaf of most infantile ingenuousness not to be aware that Love Wisely's entry for the Ascot Cup has become void by the death of Mr. Bass. Of course, Love Wisely will go for the Vase at Ascot, but his prospects of success in that race are not very bright with a penalty of 14 lb. to carry.

The racing at Newmarket was not of much general interest, apart from the three-year-old events. I do not believe that a single two-year-old was seen out at the meeting that has any pretensions to first-class form, and some much-fancied animals have grievously disappointed their friends of late, both in public and in private. Mr. Baird's filly, Musa, by Martagon out of Palmflower, who had been well galloped, won the Breeders' Plate in a canter, and she ran as if she can stay. She is well-bred enough for anything, and it is unlucky for Mr. Baird that, as she is very fit and well just now, she has no other engagement until the Coventry Stakes at Ascot, when it is probable that she will find the company much too good for her, and also in the New Stakes. Musa appears to have a temper of her own, which is not likely to improve as time goes on.

The three-year-olds keep on beating each other in a most perplexing manner, and they are no doubt a very moderate lot, their recent running affording proof of the correctness of the old saying that "it is impossible to handicap cocktails." The official handicap of the three-year-olds, which is to be published in this week's Calendar, is awaited with considerable curiosity, but Cyllene, Disraeli, and Dieudonné will no doubt be the top weights. Mr. Rose's colt won the Newmarket Stakes very easily, as I had anticipated would be the case after hearing how well he had been going in his gallops. It was an idiotic blunder to start Cyllene during the Craven week, when he was not properly fit; but I suspect that in the race for the Column Stakes he was fairly "chopped" at the start, and never properly got into his stride until it was too late. Cyllene's next race will be the Ascot Cup, and after the very hollow fashion in which he won the Newmarket Stakes he may be a most dangerous candidate; but, of course, we have yet to learn that he can stay the distance.

Weeks ago, when there was a great deal of laudatory cackling about Dunlop, I expressed the opinion that this colt would certainly be found deficient in stamina, and his running at Newmarket on Thursday proves this view to be correct. I had quite expected, however, that he would be able to win the Payne Stakes, with such a bad field of horses opposing him, and he had been a great tip at Newmarket for several days, as he had performed to the satisfaction of his trainer in a rough gallop. Batt appeared to be quite fit when he ran so badly in the Two Thousand, and in that race he performed like a non-stayer, but in the Payne Stakes he clearly won only through stamina, as he palpably outstayed Succoth, who was very much fancied. Elfin, who cantered away with the Burwell Stakes on Tuesday, ran miserably in the Newmarket Stakes, and he need no longer be thought of in connection with any classic race. Mr. Leigh's colt, The Wyvern, must be a rogue, as, according to his private form, he ought to have lost Argosy in the race for the Newmarket Stakes, whereas the despised stable companion beat him a long way. The Wyvern disappointed the Bedford Cottage stable just in the same fashion when he made his début last year in the Coventry Stakes at Ascot. Of the beaten lot in the Newmarket Stakes I am disposed to think best of The Virginian, by Ayrshire out of Virginia Shore, dam of Whittier, who made his début in this race, and he is altogether a most promising colt, and still capable of much improvement. The Virginian will be worth looking after at the Newcastle meeting in June, where he has accepted for the North Derby of £1,500, which race he will probably win if he goes on all right. Wantage requires a lot more work, and his ignominious exhibition in the Newmarket Stakes need not be seriously regarded. If Wantage can be kept on his legs he ought to win a race at Ascot, but he has no chance for the Derby, and the Duke of Portland will act wisely if he withdraws his colt from that event, as he is not the stamp of horse to show to advantage over the Epsom gradients.

There ought to be a large field for the Derby, as, after the recent running, there is every reason for the owner of any horse that can raise a gallop to start his steed just on the off chance. Disraeli has done well since he won the Two Thousand, but he has never yet been galloped over the Derby distance. With this colt it is a case of he who runs may read. Under the circumstances, however much I fancied him, the present price would not tempt me to back him. Dieudonné has gone back somewhat in the betting since his trial over the R.M. ground with Minstrel and Glentilt. It was thought that the Duke of Devonshire's colt tired ominously towards the end of this gallop, but it must be remembered that the ground was very heavy indeed, and that the pace was a cracker throughout. Dieudonné will be admirably suited by the up and down hill course at Epsom, and it is silly and absurd for people to shrug their shoulders because the colt missed the Two Thousand, for he certainly would not have been anything like fit to run for that race, and the same stable pursued the same tactics with Persimmon two years ago, the result being that the Prince of Wales's colt won the Derby and St. Leger, races which he probably would have lost if he had been prematurely bustled about during the spring. As to Batt, there is nothing in his Newmarket victory to justify the expectation that he will be able to beat Disraeli at Epsom, considering the great distance by which the Duke of Westminster's colt was defeated in the Two Thousand. The American colt, Archduke II., is being prepared to run for the Derby, and he looks well and goes well, but I do not believe that anything tangible is known about his present form, although he has been backed down to 20 to 1. Wildfowler figures in the betting at 20 to 1, but this colt was doing no work last week, and I should fancy that he is a doubtful starter at Epsom. He will probably carry off a big handicap in the course of the season. Perthshire is said to be a certain starter, but he is more likely to distinguish himself in T.Y.C. races. Jeddah again disgraced himself last week, and The Wyvern evidently cannot be trusted. It would be waste of time and space to wade any further through the list of probable starters—the most fancied of the outsiders being Craftsman, who has been much backed for a place. I shall expect to see Dieudonné win the Derby if the going at Epsom is good.

There are forty-three acceptances for the Woodcote

Stakes of £1,000, and Desmond, Lord Dunraven's colt by St. Simon out of L'Abbesse de Jouarre, will no doubt prove to be the best of the public lot, which includes Fascination, Saint Vaast, and the Hampton Rose filly. The Duke of Portland has left in Manners, own brother to Amiable, who has a great reputation, but he has never yet been galloped in any way whatever. The Kingsclere stable may be represented by Mr. Low's colt by Rightaway out of Hall Mark, who is expected presently to turn out a smart animal. I shall give a plumper for Mr. Brassey's Boniface, by St Simon out of Merry Miser, dam of Orzil, who won a good trial at Newmarket last week. Boniface was mentioned by me early in the spring as being one of the finest and most racing-like two-year-olds at Newmarket.

The other two-year-old events at Epsom will be dealt with next week, but I may now remark that the Caterham Plate will be a most interesting race if it brings out both Eventail and Sister Angela. The Prince of Wales's filly has also accepted for the Acorn Stakes on Friday.

I see that Lord Rosebery's mare Chelandry is mentioned as likely to run well for the Epsom Cup, but it is most improbable that she will start for that race, as she has been doing no work for some time, and I should not fancy that she will be seen in winning form before the autumn. The Cup, which is not likely to bring out a large field, may fall to Champ de Mars or Newhaven II.

I shall attempt next week to predict the winner of the Oaks, for which race Nun Nicer is sure to start a great favourite if she is all right. Lord Rosebery will run Mauchline, in preference to Ebba, who did badly in the One Thousand, and this filly is believed to have come on considerably during the last fortnight. It is clear that the Newmarket form was exceedingly moderate, but it is difficult to see where a filly likely to beat Nun Nicer is to come from unless from Kingsclere, as the Duke of Westminster's Lowood may have made the necessary improvement during the intervening month. She was the best looking filly that ran for the One Thousand, but was somewhat backward. The Duke also has Orpah left in.

Some people who are interested in horse racing are agitating for a better method of identifying horses in the paddock. Compared with other branches of sport, the Jockey Club may be behind the time. But even in other branches there is room for improvement. Some day, perhaps, on the football card the players will be numbered and figures will be hoisted to show who gets a try or kicks a goal. Then in cricket, how thankful one would be for a small concession to the natural curiosity of human nature. Of course, the present scoring boards on county grounds are an immense convenience. The game can be followed with much greater comfort than in the old days, and the information gratuitously given by these boards has certainly not tended to lessen the number of "correct cards down to the last wicket" that are sold. On the contrary, each man buys a card, and he can fill it up as each wicket falls by the score on the board, which shows him who are the bowlers and the batsmen. Is it too much to ask that the number of the fieldsman who catches a man out should be hoisted as well? A big capital F over the number would clearly indicate what was meant. The convenience of the public should be studied. The fieldsman is surely quite as worthy of identification as the batsman or the bowler. If on one county ground the innovation is introduced the rest will soon follow suit.

The weather pretty well spoilt cricket last week. The opening of the County Championship resulted in the matches that were played ending in drawn games. Hants started their season against Lancashire, and it looks as though the southern team would feel the need of bowlers badly. Wynyard and Hill were both in capital form with the bat. For the northern team Tyldesley again showed complete indifference to tricky wickets. Earlier in the week he was the only player able to stand up at Lords to the bowling of Mead and Hearne. He scored sixty-three in just over the hour, every hit being beautifully timed. His batting was not free, but resolute, and he did not potter with the bowling as the other men did. Hallows looks like making a useful bat and bowler for the northern team. For the M.C.C. Sewell scored the first century of the season in first-class cricket, and Captain Poore, who has been running up big scores for several seasons out at the Cape where he has been on duty, also did well. He will help Hants, I believe, this season. There was some interesting cricket between the M.C.C. and Yorkshire. Hearne and Trott bowled well, and the county victory was due to a fine innings by Wainwright and the bowling of Jackson and Rhodes, who is a left-hand bowler with a break both ways. Stocks bowled for Leicester against Warwick, while King and Lilley were the chief scorers.

It is very satisfactory to find Hearne and Richardson bowling so well. This shows that it was simply the condition of the Australian wickets that spoilt them. The state of the wicket last week helped them a lot, but still Hearne's thirty-three wickets for 265 runs is remarkable.

At Oxford the only interest in the match between the first twelve and the next sixteen was a brilliant innings by Champain, who scored 73 without a chance. The Cambridge men have every reason to be satisfied with the good fight they made against C. I. Thornton's team, which included Trott, Richardson, Hayward, and Storer. The old Cantab, F. S. Jackson, was Captain. The Light Blues were without Jessop and Fernie, while De Zoete hurt his foot during the game. This weakened the bowling, but it gave a chance to Hind, who took seven wickets in the first innings for 30 runs. He is a slow, left-hand bowler, with a break both ways. He keeps an excellent length, and uses his head. He should be certain of his blue, as in addition he can bat well. Last year at Uppingham he had a good bowling average, and a boy who can do well on that wicket is sure to have a future before him. This was one find. Then Worthington, a senior from Caius, showed strong defence with undoubted hitting powers. He will certainly be in the running for his blue. Burnup was in excellent form. In the second innings he was over two hours making 59. He was never in difficulties, at the same time he never took any liberties with the bowling. The prospects of Cambridge look decidedly rosy.

Athletic and cycling meetings do not seem to attract the public to any great extent. At Catford Bridge the Blackheath Harriers had a poor attendance, and the gathering to see the Polytechnic sports at Kensal Rise was scarcely satisfactory. As against the attendance at these events there were a good number present to see the Sutton Football Club sports. The public will generally come to see crack runners perform. There is, however, little pleasure in watching a crowded handicap with a lot of nobodies trying to carry off a pot, or to get put on a better mark next time. Local sports with one or two good invitation races are much more likely to create interest. The runners are known to the spectators, who welcome the opportunity of a pleasant social gathering. Now that bicycling is so popular, there should be little difficulty in organising sports of this description, if only the leading local football and cricket clubs will make the effort.

At Catford Bridge the chief item on the programme was a mile and a half scratch race. On this occasion Bennett, the four-mile champion, beat Munro rather easily, and the latter will have to take care that he does not run himself stale before the championships. The sprint handicap was won by H. N. Coltart, L.A.C., while Jupp, who was practically on the scratch mark, was close up. This runner should have a try at longer distances. Shepherd, of the Blackheath H., gave a very promising display in the quarter. The Polytechnic Cycling Club provided some good racing. The mile amateur scratch race was won by Ingram, while Bourke, who was fourth, did not show good judgment. There was a road-skating competition, but, judging by the times, this method of getting along does not seem to create flyers. At Cardiff, Roberts did a fine performance in the sprint.

At Cambridge rowing men have been busy. There was a great race for the pairs. It resulted in a dead heat, Etheringon Smith and Goldie holding their own with Howell and Bell. The same couple meet in the Lowe sculls. The practice for these events has kept the Hall crew back. They will no doubt soon get together. First have the making of a good crew, and look like being the best on the river. Emmanuel lack strength and length, while Lady Margaret are not so good as one would wish. There seems to be no doubt that Hall will keep head. Nor is it likely that the headship at Oxford will be changed. New are on their day a decidedly good crew, but they vary in their work. Magdalen are improving, and they are rowing longer. Both Trinity and Balliol are powerful crews, and if they can acquire better leg work they should do well. The rowing looks like being well up to the standard of recent years.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS,

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—The transition from optimism to pessimism is easy enough in the Stock Markets, especially when the disturbing influences are foreign politics. Of the latter we have had enough and to spare during the week, for in addition to the war in full progress between the United States and Spain, we have had disturbing pronouncements from leading statesmen, which were calculated to send a shiver through the Stock Exchanges and Bourses. The markets kept up a bold front at first, but finally gave way when Mr. Chamberlain followed up the statements made by the Marquis of Salisbury with his own version of the position. Far be it from me to wish to minimise the importance of these utterances, but it will be as well if the public do not jump at once to the conclusion that a great foreign war is imminent.

Clouds on the Political Horizon.

In the City I have heard a good many people express the opinion that Lord Salisbury, by representing the political position in so ominous a fashion, was really trying to cover up the non-success of his dealings with Russia, and amongst the "Bulls" on the Stock Exchange a good deal of irritation prevails at what is called the needless alarm created by our statesmen. But I have no doubt that there is some substratum which justified the warnings so emphatically given, and possibly the rattling of the sword in the scabbard may even avert any explosion in the near future, although Mr. Chamberlain's language must be characterised as most incautious. The isolation of this country, as compared with the various Continental alliances, is, however, an undoubted fact, and, on the other hand, an alliance with the United States—as suggested by Mr. Chamberlain — would, if practicable, be a re-assuring feature. American sentiment as regards Great Britain has certainly undergone a momentous change since the Venezuelan incident, and it is chiefly the possibility of a recurrence of such action as was then taken by President Cleveland which prevents one from accepting the suggestion unreservedly. Unless any immediate result of friction between this country and Russia or France were to appear, however, the Stock Markets will probably right themselves again gradually, especially if the news of some American success should cause a recovery in Yankee Rails, as that department at present furnishes the key to all the other sections, and anything tending to shorten the conflict would naturally be looked upon as a "Bull" point. American and Canadian Rails during the past week reached the highest prices touched since the outbreak of the war, but the latest warlike operations created the impression that the struggle would last longer than had been anticipated, and thus a distinct reaction set in. Home Railway stocks were at one time buoyant, but they have also been affected by the political scare, almost the only exceptions being Great Centrals and Metropolitan, which retained an important advance in view of the early opening of the Great Central extension to London for traffic. The Foreign market was at times quite strong under the lead of Spanish, but the Bourses were quick to take alarm at Mr. Chamberlain's remarks. South and Central American securities, after improving, have also reacted for the same reason. The Kaffir Circus was not much affected by President Kruger's idiotic speech, which was chiefly manufactured for home consumption; but the political rumours caused a setback, notwithstanding the splendid record crushings for April. South Africans have of late moved very much with American Rails, and will probably continue to do so in the future. The West Australian section has held up much better than the South African and it appears that the recent severe shake-out has placed this department in a much sounder position. The Industrial market shows signs of reviving animation, and should the political tension relax we may look for active dealings in the shares of some of the more important Companies, notably Welsbachs.

Money and Gilt-Edged Investments.

After temporary stringency in the Money Market, owing to the transfer of the large sum forming the balance of the Chinese indemnity to Japan, there has been a slightly easier tendency. Some of the Japanese money appears to have been released, and more will probably be loaned in the market. The demand for gold for the United States, moreover, has slackened, partly in consequence of considerable sales of American securities on this side. The golden current to the Bank of England is still flowing, although the amounts are becoming smaller. The fact, however, that something like £5,000,000 sterling have now come to strengthen the stock of gold at the central institution is distinctly favourable. All the same, it would be foolish to anticipate very easy money for the present, and rates of discount will probably remain for some time in the neighbourhood of 3¾ per cent., even though short money is only worth from 2 to 2½ per cent. A Russian loan of some importance is on the tapis, and will probably mop up surplus funds on the Continent, and although it is now authoritively stated that no new Japanese Loan is in sight, there must be at no distant date a new Transvaal loan. President Kruger will, however, have to trim sails considerably before he can get it. High-class investment securities have been affected by the political scare, and Consols have now declined to 110⅝, while British Corporation stocks are also lower, and Colonial Government Bonds are more or less nominal. The new Greek loan, which was at first quoted at ½ premium, has now dropped to ¼ discount, and all the Chinese loans are lower, the new Four and a Half per Cent. Gold Loan having fallen to 87¼, the Seven per Cent. Silver Loan to 96½, and the Six and Five per Cent. Gold Loans to 106½ and 97¾ respectively. Japanese Scrip, after improving to 103½, has given way to 103, and India Stock is 1 down.

Home Rails—Great Centrals and Metropolitan to the Front.

Quite a "Bullish" feeling prevailed in Home Railway stocks at the commencement of the week, after the carry-over had again shown that stock generally continued scarce. There is, in fact, no indication yet of a "Bull" account, and rates were generally easy. Brighton "A" at one time rose to 177, and the political rumours alone are responsible for a reaction to 174½. Dover "A" have for some time been favourites of mine, and they rose very sharply to 111¼ on the talk that the considerable increases in traffics foreshadowed an improvement of at least ¼ in the dividend, but Mr. Chamberlain's lucubrations caused a fresh relapse to 108¾. They had a similar effect upon Chatham and Great Eastern, while the stocks of the Heavy Lines are fractionally lower all round, after also having experienced a little spurt. The same changes are in evidence amongst the Scotch Deferred stocks, which, after a temporary improvement, have dropped back below the quotations of a week ago. Had it not been for the political scare, Great Centrals would doubtless have marked a more important advance, as there is a strong disposition in well-informed circles to pick these up at present values, in anticipation of the opening of the extension to London. The favourites have been the 1894 Ordinary, which have rose at one time to 42¾, reacting, however, to 41½, and the Preferred Ordinary which are quoted 66. It is, of course, impossible to say how the traffics will turn out during the first few months, but it is not at all improbable that the history of the Midland will repeat itself, in which case these stocks would, undoubtedly, turn out one of the best locks-up in the market, while the risk at present prices is not great. Metropolitan also went ahead to 133, as the new extension must naturally bring a good deal of additional traffic to it, but the political scare has caused a reaction to 131. Metropolitan Districts, at one time improved to 28¼, from which there has been a set-back. These are also, as I have already stated, a promising speculative lock-up.

THE YANKEE MARKET.—AN ADVANCE FOLLOWED BY A REACTION.

While the collapse of the Spanish fleet at Manila had created the belief that the war would prove a walk-over for the United States, subsequent events tend to show that there is, after all, some life left in the Spanish navy and army. It is true that the skirmishes at Cardenas and Cienfuegos can only be looked upon as reconnoitring expeditions, and that the landing of the Americans in force in Cuba would doubtless lead to different results. But everything now depends upon the issue of the naval battle which may shortly be expected. The Spanish Admiral has shown considerable astuteness in misleading his adversaries as to his whereabouts, and although he could not withstand the united American squadrons, he might yet lead them a lively dance. London has throughout the week been selling, and there was evidence of a good deal of real stock coming out at the higher prices. At all events, most mornings' quotations here were from ½ to 1 dols. below Wall-street parity, although the latter generally put up values again in the afternoon. The highest prices were reached in Wall-street on Tuesday night, when Milwaukee touched parity of 100¼, Louisville parity of 57¼. London, however, the next morning opened at 99½ and at 56½ respectively, and quotations have been slipping away since, although the decline is by no means important. An American reverse would naturally cause a smart relapse, just as a victory would be followed by an immediate important advance. Apart from the war, conditions in the United States are distinctly favourable. The important rise in grain is filling the pockets of the American farmers to an extent that must favourably react upon business generally. Wheat in the neighbourhood of 1·50 must spell prosperity for the large producing countries, and the great scarcity in Europe will, of course, cause large quantities to be hurried forward, thus increasing the railroad traffics. Should the conflict come to an end there will be a reaction, but we shall not see anything like the old prices again. As the accounts of the growing crops in the States are exceedingly favourable, the outlook is promising, and, apart from the war, a continuance of large profits seems to be assured to the farmers. Traffics, moreover, in spite of the war, continue on a large scale, the conflict having actually stimulated passenger and goods traffic. With reference to "bombardment assurance," I find further remarks in the New York papers just to hand. The statement of Insurance-Commissioner Payn to the effect that it is illegal for New York State Insurance Companies or underwriters to accept risks against bombardment has caused much comment, and, according to the New York Journal of Commerce, one of the leading underwriters says that bombardment policies are being taken out daily, and adds:—

> While it is true that companies doing business in this State are not permitted to accept risks of this class, it will continue to be taken by foreign and American companies outside of Mr. Payn's ban. In England there are no restrictions placed by law against bombardment risks, as the law recognises the fact that insurance companies are as able to define risks in the insurance business as bankers in theirs. The argument raised by Mr. Payn that the element of risk is so great, should there be bombardment, that insurance companies would be hopelessly ruined, has no force, as the element of risk against destruction is comparatively small, and fully discounted in the rates quoted. The business men of the State of Massachusetts have recently secured the passage of a bill through the State legislature abrogating the prohibition against bombardment business. This branch of the insurance business is just as legitimate as any other, and there is no doubt of the ability of any reliable company to liquidate any losses which may come.

Should the Spanish fleet by any chance achieve a success, there will doubtless be quite a rush for "bombardment insurance" along the American coast. The present policy for those who wish to take a hand in Yankee Rails should be to buy on reactions and sell on recoveries. Those who followed my advice on this point during the last few weeks could easily have made profits of from $2 to $3, without running much risk. The stocks most actively dealt in on this side are still Milwaukee and Louisville, but Union Pacifics should not be neglected, as it is now stated in well-informed circles that the payment of dividends on the Preferred stock will commence in July. Should this come about, we may see considerable advances both in the Preferred and Ordinary stocks. Northern Pacifics are also very much in favour owing to recent phenomenal traffics, a large amount of increase being retained in the shape of net earnings. There is no doubt that, after paying the full Preference dividend of 4 per cent., a surplus of at least 2 per cent. for the Common stock will be shown, but whether anything will be paid is another question. The rate war has not yet been settled between the Canadian Pacific on the one side, and the Grand Trunk and American north-western roads on the other. It is quite time, however, that a final effort should be made to restore tariffs. With reference to the proposed Baltimore and Ohio reorganisation, the statement has been reiterated that an assessment of 20 dols. is to be exacted from the common stockholders, but that they are to receive in exchange a security representing half that assessment, in which case the net amount to be paid by them would be 10 dols. Canadian Pacifics and Grand Trunks were buoyant at one time, in sympathy with the American market, on the traffic increases, that of the Canadian Pacifics being 82,000 dols., and that of the Grand Trunk £8,483. This shows, after all, that the war of rates does not hurt these companies much, least of all the Canadian Pacific. The latter stock at one time touched 87, reacting to 84⅜, and the Grand Trunk First Prefs., after rising to 69⅛ are down to 67¼. Any advance in Yankee Rails would cause a fresh improvement in these stocks, while any reverse to the United States arms would not hurt them so much as American Rails.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS—CHAMBERLAIN SCARES THE BOURSES.

The Bourses did not like the gloomy pronouncement of Mr. Chamberlain, coming as it did close upon the heels of Lord Salisbury's mysterious warnings, and it was really the general drop on the Paris Bourse which caused jobbers in London to put prices down generally. I suppose that some of the mysteries will be cleared up during the present week, but the London Stock Exchange is not now so easily scared. First of all, the speculative account is fortunately very much reduced, and secondly, we have become so used to these periodical warnings from high places, that we are getting somewhat callous in the City. The best proof that the apprehension has not grown very severe is the fact that Consols still stand at 110⅝. At one time the Foreign market was quite buoyant on Paris advices, which foreshadowed an early conclusion of peace through Spain caving in. At the same time Spanish were put up to 35, from which there has been a fresh reaction to 33⅛. It transpired afterwards that the rise was due to an advance of 100,000,000 francs made to Spain by the Banque de Paris et des Pays-Bas on Bank of Spain notes or bills. I suppose the Banque de Paris had good reason for lending this money, but it seems to be a drop in the ocean, in view of the war in which that country is engaged. The payment of the July coupon is now again being foreshadowed by "Bulls" of Spanish. Of the latter, however, there are very few here, operators in London being mostly "Bears" of Spanish. The extraordinary extent of the upheaval in Italy has created quite a sensation. It seems to show that the population is actually groaning under the heavy taxes, caused in part, by the maintenance of a large army and navy. Italy, in fact, has not money enough to act the rôle of a great Power. There would have been a much heavier fall in Italian Rentes had not the Italian Government stepped in by making large purchases. Those favourites of the Paris Bourse, Rio Tintos, were at one time very buoyant, but have since reacted again to $25\frac{7}{16}$. Greeks and Turks are lower, but Russians remain remarkably firm. South Americans also displayed strength at one time, but the political scare too has caused a reaction in these. Argentines, for instance, are more than a point below the best. The reason for the dulness in these securities, by the way, is partly due to the fact that the Argentine Government is experiencing considerable difficulty in keeping to its promise to return to the payment of the full interest on the National loans. The 1886 and Funding Loans at 87 and 85 respectively show a further decline for the week. Argentine Rails have also improved, although not maintaining top figures. Buenos Ayres Great Southern are quoted 135, while Buenos Ayres and Rosario are steady at 71, Central Argentine at 77. It is stated with reference to the Cordoba Central that the Argentine Government is now prepared to settle with the guarantee, and a considerable advance has thereupon taken place, Cordoba Central First Prefs. being up at 82, and the Central Northern Section Income Debenture stock at $50\frac{1}{2}$. Brazilian bonds have not altogether maintained the recent recovery, but Chilians have been steady, as it now appears that the boundary difficulty with Argentina is likely to be amicably settled. Mexican Sixes, after improving, are about unchanged for the week, and Uruguay bonds have been steady at $44\frac{1}{2}$ for the Old Loan, and $54\frac{1}{2}$ for the New Loan. Peruvian Corporation stocks have been steady; but Nitrate Rails have dropped back to 5, and Mexican Rails have been adversely affected by the political scare, the First Prefs. falling to $71\frac{1}{2}$, after touching 74.

The Kaffir Circus—Oom Paul Plays to the Gallery.

It is a thousand pities that the Kaffir Circus is not sufficiently affected by the progress which the mining industry in the Transvaal is making and by the actual results of the different mines, but rather by whatever announcements may be made by President Kruger The April crushings marked another record at the figure of 353,243 oz., of which the Witwatersrand district contributed as much as 335,925 oz. The respective figures for March were 347,643 oz. and 325,907 oz., so that last month's figures for the Witwatersrand mines show an increase of nearly 10,000 oz. over March, while as compared with April, 1897, when the output was 235,698 oz., the increase is as much as 100,000 oz. Yet these splendid crushings did not cause a further rise in the shares even of the Companies which have large outputs to show. The reason of the indifference displayed by the market was partly the speech made by President Kruger on his being sworn in. But the political scare produced by Salisbury, Chamberlain, & Co. also counted for something in the fresh important reaction which has set in. Oom Paul's speech was undoubteldy more especially intended for the consumption of the burghers, and he played to the gallery with a vengeance. Some of his remarks were simply absurd, and expose him to ridicule in Europe. What the market was disappointed in is that it did not discover any definite pronouncements with regard to concessions to the mining industry; but there were again some indefinite promises, which should make it easy for the Transvaal Government—when they cannot put off borrowing any longer—to grant reductions in consideration of their getting a loan in Europe. According to the cabled extracts, Oom Paul stated that the Government was doing all in its power by reductions in the railway tariffs, in the duties on the necessaries of life in the dynamite charges, and by assistance in obtaining an increased supply of native labour, to assist the mining industry, and that he was endeavouring to obtain a further reduction in the price of dynamite, and would not rest until he had secured it. His argument against ex-Chief Justice Kotze—viz., that if the latter's opinion was right it would mean the opening of the whole boundary question, and perhaps drawing the sword against England—is altogether obscure, and no importance need be attributed to it. I dare say that if the political clouds clear away, South African gold mining shares will again recover, especially as the much-wanted rain has fallen. There are indications that fresh "Bear" sales have been made, and these will no doubt have to eventually be bought back again at higher prices, unless our statesmen send another shiver through the markets. Turning to individual mines, I find that the Simmer and Jack has done particularly well by obtaining an output of 14,351 oz., against 11,420 oz. in March. Again, the Ferreira yielded 13,516 oz, against 12,299 oz. in March; the Langlaagte Estate 11,191 oz., against 10,191 oz.; the Village Main Reef 8,030 oz., against 5,964 oz.; the Crown Deep 12,632 oz., against 12,020 oz. Satisfactory increases are also shown by the Angelo, Geldenhuis Deep, Jumpers Deep, New Primrose, Nigel, and Worcester; but, on the other hand, the Crown Reef, Geldenhuis Estate, Buffelsdoorn, Langlaagte Block B, Langlaagte Star, Transvaal Estates, and several others, show decreases. The full reports of the Rand Mines, Limited, received by mail have now confirmed the statement of the results which I gave on the receipt of cable information. Basing its calculations on these figures, the African Review publishes an article containing a forecast of the probable dividends, and it summarises these results and estimates, and thus arrives at the following figures as representing the income of Rand Mines, Limited, from its subsidiaries during 1898:—

Name of Company.	Probable Average Monthly Earnings in 1898.	Percentage [illegible] taken by Rand Mine Limited.	[illegible] Limited, [illegible]	[illegible] Limited, in 1898.
	£		£	£
Crown Deep.....	15,000	77·6	11,640	140,000
Geldenhuis Deep...	20,000	40·8	8,160	98,000
Rose Deep	17,000	35·9	6,103	73,000
Jumpers Deep	10,000	66·4	6,640	80,000
Nourse Deep	5,000	71·5	3,575	43,000
Wolhuter	9,000	18·76	1,688	20,000
Paarl Central	3,000	50	1,500	18,000
Glen Deep (six months)	5,000	45·83	2,290	27,000
Durban - Roodepoort Deep	5,000	20·27	1,013	12,000
	89,000		42,609	511,000

My contemporary thus anticipates an income of half a million for the Rand Mines, Limited, during 1898. This, of course, leaves out of the calculation many other properties which have not yet arrived at the producing stage. Rand Mines, after rising to $30\frac{3}{4}$, have receded to $28\frac{1}{8}$, chiefly on the political speeches, but they may easily rebound again on any favourable development East Rands have moved down to $4\frac{1}{4}$, Consolidated Goldfields Deferred to $3\frac{15}{16}$, Chartered to $2\frac{1}{4}$; but unless any unforseen trouble should arise, a recovery is probable, especially if the American department should improve. The shares of the Robinson and Barnato groups have also given way slightly, and the Deep Level shares—although showing a firm front at first—have since eased off, Goldfields Deep being quoted $8\frac{5}{16}$, Crown Deep 11, Geldenhuis Deep $7\frac{1}{8}$, Robinson Deep $9\frac{5}{8}$, Henry Nourse Deep $4\frac{7}{8}$, Durban Roodepoot Deep $3\frac{1}{4}$, Knight's Deep $1\frac{13}{16}$, Rose Deep $5\frac{7}{8}$, Roodepoort Central Deep $1\frac{1}{4}$, Nigel Deep $\frac{15}{16}$. De Beers have fluctuated with gold mining shares, and are down to $25\frac{9}{16}$, after touching much higher prices, while New Jagersfontein are quoted $7\frac{1}{2}$.

London and Paris Exchange, Ltd., 24, Throgmorton-street, London, E.C. This Corporation is prepared to make Advances on Mining Shares, at 6 per cent. per annum, subject to a deposit of 20 per cent. Clients by this system save the heavy contangoes usually charged.

GOLDEN WEST AUSTRALIA.

A firmer tone prevailed in the West Australian department during the week, and even the political scares did not affect these shares so much as the Kaffir Circus, this being no doubt due to the shake-out which has recently taken place. Of course, a certain reaction was inevitable, but most of the weak holders have evidently now been eliminated, and the position of the W.A. Market Trust group, moreover, has improved, as there is a fair prospect of this Company being reconstructed, in view of rumours that the committee are satisfied with their examination of the assets. An improvement has thereupon taken place in the various shares of this group. Lake View Consols have not maintained their recent rise, having receded to $8\frac{5}{16}$, after having touched $9\frac{1}{4}$. The crushing shows a very considerable increase, and is, in fact, as will be seen from the figures contained in the following list of crushings, very good :—

—	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Oz. of Gold.	Assay of Tailings per ton.
Hannan's Brownhill—
Sands	450 }	2,300	—
Slimes	565 }
Associated Gold Mines	500	3,250	—
Westralia and East Extension.	1,732	1,192	—
Belle Vue Proprietary	192	402	—
Weld-Hercules	265	367	—
Sheriaw's	220	194	—
Kalgoorlie Mint and Iron King	110	49
Lake View Consols	5,670	5,955¼	19¾ dwt.
Do. Cyanide...	3,498	2,804½	4 dwt.
Cuddingwarra.....	902	818	—
Cons. Gold Mines of W.A. (Yellow Aster).....	30	59¼	—
Burbank's Thursday Gift.....	465	635	—
Robinson (W A.)	135	72	—
Lady Montefiore United	69	67½	4 oz.

The returns from the Associated Mines are also exceptionally favourable, and the Hannan's Brownhill, too, yields substantial returns. The shares of this Company have been fairly steady at $7\frac{7}{16}$. They are likely to rise to a much higher level, as I have frequently foreshadowed, and as a reader of TRUTH has favoured me with an estimate of the position of the mine and of its future, I will give herewith some extracts from his letter :—

I am at a loss to understand why the shares of this very promising Company are not in stronger demand. The new machinery to treat all kind of ores we are told is ready, if not actually running. The contractors say that the trial crushing extracted 94 per cent., and that the machinery can crush 150 tons per day. Taking past returns of crushings at about 2 oz. per ton, and telluride at from 4 oz. to 7 oz., or higher, an average of these would not be high at 3 oz. per ton, and 150 tons per day means 900 per week, or a weekly return of 2,700 oz., which, at £4 per oz., is equal to £10,800, and for one month to £43,200, less expenses. The capital issued is only £85,000 out of £110,000, and the new machinery is to be paid not by cash but by delivery of the unissued shares, viz., £25,000. We have, therefore, to pay dividend upon £110,000, which at 5s. per share would take £22,000. It will thus be seen that there is a clear monthly dividend in sight of 5s. per share, and if the average goes another 1 oz. or more to the ton it may be 7s. 6d., or even 10s. The Company has already paid two 5s. dividends this year, 50 per cent., and I should think they must have cash in hand to pay another very soon.

I quite agree with my correspondent that the Hannan's Brownhill has an excellent future before it, and the reason why the shares have not so far risen to a higher level must be chiefly sought in the present unpropitious times, and the severe troubles through which the West Australian Market has of late had to pass. Ivanhoe improved to $5\frac{5}{8}$ on satisfactory advices from the mine, but have since reacted to $5\frac{3}{8}$ on the political scare, while London and Globe have been dull, reacting to $1\frac{1}{4}$. For Lady Shenton shares a strong demand has been experienced up to $2\frac{7}{16}$, which is not surprising in view of the excellent position of the mine, as shown to exist by recent cablegrams. In this case, however, the political rumours have also forced a reaction to $2\frac{1}{4}$. Florence shares have been steady at about $\frac{1}{2}$, and a more favourable tone has prevailed for Hannan's Golden Pike, which are also quoted about $\frac{1}{2}$. Sons of Gwalia have been easier at $1\frac{3}{4}$, while Golden Horseshoes, after an important recovery, have reacted again to $7\frac{5}{8}$. Great Boulder Proprietary stand at 18s. x.d., while West Australian Goldfields and Hampton Plains have been dull at $1\frac{1}{4}$ and $\frac{3}{4}$ respectively. From the Hill End Consols a cablegram has been received stating that the shaft has reached a depth of 203 ft., and that they are cross-cutting towards the reef.

INDIAN, AUSTRALASIAN, AND BRITISH COLUMBIAN MINES.

The Indian mining section has been altogether neglected during the week, with the exception, chiefly, of Nundydroog, which have advanced to $3\frac{13}{16}$. On the other hand, Coromandel, Mysore West, Mysore Wynaad, and Goldfields of Mysore are all lower. Champion Reefs are fairly steady at $4\frac{13}{16}$ x.d. In Australian mines, other than West Australian, Mount Morgan are again better at $4\frac{15}{16}$ x.d., while Gibraltar have been dealt in at $\frac{15}{16}$ x.d., and Broken Hill Proprietary have declined to $2\frac{3}{16}$. New Australian Broken Hill are somewhat dull, and Mount Lyell are lower at $12\frac{1}{8}$. In New Zealand shares declines are marked in Woodstock, Kauri, and Waitekauri Extended. Waihi have improved. A cablegram has been received from the Moanatairi Mine reporting the result of the crushing for the month of April as follows :—"Cleaned up on April 30. Result is over the plates 302 oz. of gold from 1,010 tons crushed. Assay value of concentrates, £433." This is rather a low yield. From the New Zealand Talisman the following cablegram has been received :—"Mill has worked stamps twenty-four days, Krupp mill four days, crushed 491 tons of ore; yielded 1,655 oz. of bullion of the total value of £1,160. Average assay value of output for past month, £3 5s. Low extraction due to excessive percentage of sulphide of silver." I have to make a correction with regard to the Achilles Goldfields, concerning which I mentioned in my letter-box that they had been frequently reconstructed. This, as Messrs. Hays, Schmettau, and Acrum, the solicitors of the Achilles Goldfields, inform me, is not correct, and the present reconstruction is the only one that has ever taken place. I have much pleasure in giving prominence to this correction, and there is, therefore, nothing to prevent the shareholders of the Achilles Goldfields, Limited, from joining the reconstruction, if they should feel inclined to do so. The Company was started in 1893 with an authorised capital of £100,000, of which 80,307 shares were issued and fully paid, but a resolution to subdivide these shares into eight shares of 2s. 6d. each was passed in June, 1894, and this change was apparently in my mind when replying to my correspondent. I should be sorry if any of my former remarks were to prevent shareholders from joining this reconstruction. In British Columbian mines dealings have been on a fairly large scale, although movements have been irregular. British Columbia Development Association have improved, and Klondyke Bonanza are also slightly better. London and British Columbia Goldfields are steady at $\frac{1}{16}$ premium, and Whitewater Mines are also fairly well maintained at $\frac{1}{32}$ premium, while Klondike and Columbian Goldfields close unchanged at $1\frac{1}{16}$. On the other hand, a decline has taken place in New Goldfields of British Columbia, Klondike Mining, Trading, and Transport, and Fairview, Tangier being also the turn lower. Mr. T. R. Hardiman, of Vancouver, who has been engaged in London for the past month in arranging for the issue of the Associated Gold Mines of British Columbia, sailed by the Umbria to-day, and will at once proceed with the active development of the various properties of the Company. The prospectus is to be issued early next week. I stated last week that the Le Roi Mine had been acquired by the British America Corporation, and I am now enabled to confirm this statement, and to mention that the purchase price is only £600,000, as against the £1,000,000 at which it was originally under option to the Company. The purchase has been made for account of the British America Corporation and the London and Globe Finance Corporation, and should prove valuable to both. The average output of the mine is about 200 tons daily, the total since the beginning of the year having amounted to 16,891 tons.

Three classes of ore are shipped from the mine for smelting, the lowest class producing about 16 dwt. to 17 dwt., the second class 1½ oz., and the first class from 3 oz. to 4 oz. The total dividends so far paid amount to $825,000; and the twenty-fourth dividend, amounting to $50,000, was declared a few weeks ago. The British America Corporation is also acquiring properties in other parts of British Columbia, and work on the other mines already acquired is proceeding actively. The shares are quoted 19s. to 19s. 6d., and should rise to a much higher level, more particularly when the special settlement has been completed.

NEW ENTERPRISES AND ISSUES.

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

The Kent Coast Mineral Water Company, Limited.—This Company is formed with a share capital of £60,000, in £1 shares, and a Four and a Half per Cent. Debenture issue of £15,000 in debentures of £50 each, for the purpose of acquiring and carrying on, under one management, eight mineral water manufactories now carried on at Folkestone, Dover, and elsewhere.

It is difficult to understand the reason for this amalgamation, as it will not create a monopoly. There is, and always will be, competition in this business, which makes a concern like this a rather speculative venture.

Harvey Yoker Distillery, Limited, Glasgow.—This Company is formed to acquire and carry on, as a going concern, a distillery at Yoker, near Glasgow (late Messrs. J. & W. Harvey & Co.), with the premises, properties, &c., attached thereto. The share capital is fixed at £90,000 in £1 shares, and a Four per Cent. Debenture issue of £40,000.

The profits given in the prospectus for 1896 amounted to £9,792, and for 1897, to £8,271, or double what they were for the previous four years. Should anything occur to cause a reaction to the former profits (last year they were £1,500 less than 1896), there would be barely enough to pay the Preference dividend and Debenture interest.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

GOVERNMENT, &C., BONDS.

Red Dragon.—I really do not think it is worth your while to sell the Brazilians, Nos. 1 and 2, now, as efforts are apparently being made to place the finances of the Republic on a sounder footing. 3. I should think that an ultimate improvement is probable. 4. Most likely. Beaulieu.—1. I do not consider a purchase of Spanish advisable at present, as everything depends upon the length of the war, and the contingency of the Paris bankers supporting the country. The price, by the way, is now 33⅛. 2. I should say that in the worst case a portion, at least, of the interest will be paid.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

Edinburgensis.—It is a great pity that the Debenture-holders in this American concern do not work together, as otherwise it would have been possible to obtain some redress. I have for a long time advocated strong measures, but the Debenture-holders have not seen fit to support me. J. E. P.—You really cannot expect me to advise you on a benefit association in Manchester, which is of very small importance, and concerning which it is impossible to learn anything in London. Personally, I should think it would be advisable not to have anything to do with such small concerns. M. S., Liverpool.—I am much afraid that the creditors of Gregory, the outside broker, will get very little, as the Gambling Act is being pleaded by the liquidator. E. C. P.—You must really tell me what kind of investment you require—whether industrial or Home Railways. Perhaps you can gather the information from my leter. An improving investment is undoubtedly Welsbach Ordinary, which are at present quoted about 108. A Wiser Man.—An utter swindle, against which I have repeatedly warned my readers. It is a great pity that you ever had anything to do with this concern, but I do not see how I can help you.

HOME RAILS.

Paddy.—I do not think it advisable to sell North-Western now, as an improvement is probable. You got in far too high, though, but I suppose you have since received a dividend. Glen B.—It is impossible to say how long you will have to hold Districts, but these have their chance every year, and will doubtless experience an important improvement during the present year. The traffic returns are excellent, and the prospects are equally so. E. G.—Thanks. I am glad to learn that you have benefited by the rise in Dover "A." I have expressed a favourable opinion of this stock ever since the recent decline, and there is now a three-point rise. TRUTH Reader, Bristol.—Yes, Great Central 1894 Ordinary are an excellent purchase. You ought to have bought the stock when I recommended it at 40, but even at 41½ it is promising in view of the opening of the extension to London on June 30.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN RAILS.

A. K., Manchester.—In the long run American Rails should improve considerably, even on present prices, as the war must terminate in favour of the United States; but you might sell when the market is strong, and repurchase on reactions. Curious.—There is every prospect of the companies Nos. 1 to 4 paying the dividend mentioned for a considerable time to come, but it would be a fallacy to say permanently. Nos. 5 and 6 are fair purchases, but I prefer Milwaukee, Louisville, and Union Pacific Ordinary and Prefs. With regard to No. 6 there is no combination, and I do not think much chance of an advance on the present quotations. L. J. D.—There is nothing against your investing the small amount in Grand Trunk Four per Cent. Guaranteed, which are certain to eventually improve in value. R. H. B.—Yes, you would do well to deposit your Baltimore and Ohio bonds with Messrs. Brown, Shipley & Co. The reorganisation is about to be taken in hand. I cannot reply by letter. K., Magherafelt.—Kindly not expect me to again telegraph to you. I have done so this time as an exception. I look for a considerable improvement in American Rails, more especially in Milwaukee and Louisville. Medicus, Northumberland-avenue.—I quite agree with you, that these debentures are at a very low level, and there is every prospect of an improvement, although this will not come about until some of the big firms are agreeable to it.

MINING SHARES.

Aaron.—I am very pleased to hear that you "had a nice win over my tip of Lady Shentons," and that you have bought them back again at 2. You will see them much higher again. Hold Brownhill Central for the present. X. Y. Z.—Certainly; Hannan's Brownhill are an excellent purchase, and may be expected to go considerably above the present price of 7 1/16. Lex.—I do not recommend investment in Klondike and North-West Territories. You can do better in the shares mentioned in my letter under "Indian, Australasian, and British Columbian Mines." Madeline, Madeira.—I do not know any good of the Finance Corporation in question, and advise you to leave it severely alone. Aurelius.—I do not see how you can refuse to accept an allotment of the shares, if you applied for them. Worcester.—The mine is doing very well, but there are rumours that it will not have a long life. Replica.—You might put the money into Hannan's Brownhill, Ivanhoe, and Lake View Consols. C. J. B.—If the Croydon Consols strike the reef again, as is expected, the shares will rise rapidly. The other mines should have a fair chance. Kildare Patty.—If the W. A. Market Trust arranges its affairs, the other Companies should be all right. Veritas, Hawick.—I quite agree with you as to the excellent position of Hannan's Brownhills, and you will see that I am making use of your remarks under "Golden West Australia." Nero, Bantry.—The best thing is to hold and to join the reconstruction. W. Y.—Yes, you should hold Johnnies and Hampton Plains (1 and 2). You are quite right as to the insiders not having got out. As soon as definite information is available, I will state it. 3. A fair proposition. I should also hold Nos. 4 and 5. Yorks.—Yes, the Debentures are well secured. Glen Rosa.—No option but to hold Nos. 1-4 and to join the reconstruction of No. 3. Hold also the other shares. J. McI.—Ivanhoe have now recovered to 5⅜, and with some patience you will see them higher. Yes, the new plant has been ordered. C. W. H.—Unfortunately, the shareholders in the Umtoli and Abercorn Reefs did not take the matter in hand when I urged them to do so, and there is no hope left now. Leamington.—1. Waterfalls are promising, and you should average if you can afford to do so. 2. The same applies to Woodstock Transvaal. 3. Yes. B. H. W.—1. The legal decision concerning the Londonderry and Colonel North's estate has not been rendered yet. The news from the mine is distinctly more favourable. 2. Quite so. Bob.—1. Yes, the Sons of Gwalia deal was a good one, and should benefit the promoting Company. 2. Hold. Waipero.—This mine may come right, and you had better hold. Fern.—Yes, W.A. Joint Stock Founders are very cheap, and should be bought to average. The dividend is in course of preparation. Kingsroad.—Yes, prospects of the London and Globe Finance Corporation are good. The South African shares should be held. Robert.—The best course appears to be to join the reconstruction, which, if successful, should place matters on a much better footing generally. I cannot reply by letter. R. P. I.—1. There is still a prospect of the Company retrieving its fortunes. 2. A fair investment of the kind. Nos. 3-5 should be held, and more especially No. 6 (British America Corporation). See remarks in my letter. Common.—Rand Mines or Barnato Consols. Furnessia.—1. It is a fair gamble. 2. The Associated Gold Mines is the best. 3. No, Messrs. W. & A. Gilbey are not going into the tea trade. Argus.—1. I have no further information about the distribution. 2. The mine is a promising one, but the management is bad. A. L.—If the W. A. Market Trust arranges its affairs sua-

CHINA AND GLASS. — Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

cessfully, there will doubtless be a recovery, but the position has been fully explained at the meetings.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

Cigars.—Welsbach Ordinary shares should suit you. Amongst brewery stocks J. & J. Yardley's & Co.'s 5½ per Cent. Prefs. at 5 to 5¼ should also suit you. 2. The American Brewery Company No. 2 has fallen on bad times, owing to the Raine Prohibition Bill having been passed. The Company may eventually recover, but it must naturally suffer through the closing of the drinking saloons. The same applies to Nos. 1 and 3. I do not advise averaging now, although the time may come when this will be advisable. Geo. Rex.—I have no special information on this point with regard to the Rudge-Whitworth Company (Foreign), but the Secretary ought at your request to furnish you with the fullest information. A.T.C.—1. I hold an unfavourable opinion of this Music-hall Company, and have always stated this. I do not see how I can advise you in the matter. 2. This Company seems to have a fair future before it, but the market is overloaded with vendor shares. Tunbridge Wells.—No; I do not advise a purchase of these American brewery shares, as the Company is doing badly. F. C. Plymouth.—Yes, there is every prospect of Welsbach Ordinary and Prefs. advancing, and the rise will probably extend to 5 or 10 points. The Deferred will probably follow more slowly. S. A.—1. Yes, Yardley Five and a Half per Cent. Prefs. are a fair purchase at their present price of 5¼. 2. Trent Cycle shares are exceedingly cheap at their present quotation of 5s. You may expect a considerable advance, as the market shares have nearly all been concentrated in one hand, and the assets of the Company are stated to exceed 10s. per share, apart from the fact that a good business is being done. S. G., Brighton.—I think you might hold these brewery shares now, as after the war—which cannot last long—things will doubtless go better. E. A. T.—I do not think the shares Nos. 1 and 2 are any catch. You would do far better to place the money into Welsbach Ordinary and Preferred at 109 and 99 respectively. See remarks in my letter. Verax, Dublin.—I quite agree with your tirade about the Component Tubes latest scandal, but do not forget that Irish investors went mad over Cycle shares and thus facilitated such transactions. W. C.—There has been far too much reckless promotion of Dairy Companies and I do not advise you to join the reconstruction of the Southampton Dairy Company. It looks like throwing good money after bad. Tyrone.—I am afraid that Ordinary shareholders would receive very little in that case and it seems advisable to agree to a reorganisation. Theta.—As you are aware, I expressed a very unfavourable view of the Patent Double Pick Loom Company. Get out if you can. Nemo, Watford.—I do not think much of this concern. Roland.—Yes, Welsbach stocks are in the ascendant. See remarks under "Welsbach Prospects." F. O.—Yes, there appears to be every reason for a rise in Trent Cycle shares, as the present price is unduly depressed. See remarks under "My Chapter on the Industrial Market." J. P. S.—No reason to sell the Store shares, and the Karri shares should certainly go better. East Sutton.—1. Apollinaris and Johannis Ordinary are fair value at present price, but no catch. 2. Welsbach Ordinary and Deferred should be held for a rise. 3. British Tea Table are quite high enough. 4. A fair speculative investment.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

Perplexed, Brighton.—Why not sell some of the Egyptians, Nos. 2 and 3 and the Bank shares, No. 4, which are not likely to improve just now, and keep the rest. E. H.—1. With regard to the Central Pacific, some arrangement has yet to be come to with the U.S. Government, and it is impossible to say on what terms that will be made. 2. I do not think that Portuguese are a particularly promising investment, in view of the troubles in Spain, but the country will probably endeavour to maintain the 1 per cent. dividend. 3. Certainly not; I advise you to hold Johnnies Investment shares, and to a moderate extent you should average Nos. 4 and 5. Ubique.—1. No reason to sell Chilian bonds. Latest advices from Santiago are to the effect that reasonable progress has been made with the adjustment of the boundary dispute. 2. A fair mining proposition. 3. You cannot, of course, get Home Railway Debentures to yield anything like this, but Buenos Ayres Great Southern Four per Cent. Debentures at 117 would yield 3¾ per cent., and Buenos Ayres Western Four per Cent. Debenture stock at 108½ would give a somewhat higher yield. Pharao.—1. Yes, Welsbach Ordinary at 109 are a promising investment, and Welsbach Prefs. at 99 may almost be called a gilt-edged industrial stock, equal to some Debentures, as there are no debentures before it. See remarks under "Welsbach Prospects." 2. Yardley Brewery Prefs. should suit you. An Inquirer.—The delay in the issue of this Cycling balance-sheet is certainly not creditable, but after all you must not forget that it is a semi-foreign concern. 2. I should think that if the affairs of the W.A. Market Trust are arranged the other stocks of this group will recover. Tregenza.—1. I quite agree with you that you would get a better chance in West Australian shares than in the Cycle market, and you might exchange into Lady Shenton which paid 20 per cent. dividend in 1897, and is likely to pay 30 per cent. at least in 1898 at 2¼, and into the shares in the adjoining Florence. 2. Ten per cent. interim dividend paid, and a further dividend due in a few months. Senior.—1. The results of this Brewery has fallen off, but I really should not like to prophesy on the future of Allsopps. 2. Great Northern Deferred shares are depressed owing to the coming competition of the extension to London of the Great Central. 3. Yes, every prospect, as soon as the Spanish-American War is ended. Poor Paddy.—Yes, a fair purchase. 2. No, I do not like this British Columbian concern. British America Corporation shares are far more promising, and will, doubtless, after the settlement, experience an important rise. 3. Not yet, wait for the end of the war. Perplexed.—A. Yes, you should hold Johannesburg Consolidated Investment shares, and I fully stated the reason for the resignation of the two Directors in last week's issue. Better hold A and B for an improvement. D. I do not anticipate any special effect of this Act upon Home Rails.

WELSBACH PROSPECTS.

Last week I made some remarks concerning the market position of the stocks of the Welsbach Incandescent Gas Light Company, and I strongly advised my readers not to part with their holdings. The Ordinary then stood at 108, the Preferred at 96, the Deferred at 18s. 6d. A considerable advance has since taken place; but owing to the political scare, an improvement in the Ordinary to 111, the Preferred to 99, and the Deferred to 19s. 6d., has since been lost again. I referred last week to the excellence of the new burner of which an exhibition was recently given at Niagara Hall, both in its application for street lighting and for domestic use. What was more particularly noticed was that in a specially fitted-up suite of rooms an old-fashioned gasalier with these new burners consumed 12 cubic feet of gas per hour, while in an adjoining room was shown a gasalier fitted with sixteen ordinary burners which consumed the same amount of gas per hour, and the wonderful difference in the light was remarkable. I understand that the Company has lately concluded contracts with several towns for street lighting, and some other large firms are also adopting the new light in preference to electricity. The Preference stock carries 5 per cent. dividend, and at the present price is tempting even for trustee investments, as there is no debenture debt before it, while the authority of the Preference stockholders will be necessary before any can be created. The Ordinary stock carries 7 per cent. dividend, and it is reported in usually well-informed quarters that the Preference and Ordinary dividends for the whole year have already been earned during the short period in which the new Company has been in existence, so that a very considerable amount, viz., the results of seven months' working, remains as a surplus, out of which a substantial distribution on the Deferred could be made. The latter are entitled to a 7 per cent. dividend before the Ordinary receive any further distribution. Unless, therefore, the political position should change for the worse, we may look for a considerable improvement in all the classes of these stocks, in view of the lighter contangoes which may be anticipated next settlement as a consequence of the large take-up which I have already foreshadowed.

MY CHAPTER ON INDUSTRIAL STOCKS.

Had it not been for the political scare the Industrial department would doubtless have continued the more active course upon which it has of late entered. One of the features has been a revival in Welsbach Incandescent Gas shares, to which I refer above. Special settlements in some of the other important undertakings are also approaching, and will doubtless cause renewed activity. In the first instance, the special settlement in Liptons has been fixed for June 2, and on the same day the long-expected English Sewing Cotton settlement will take place, with the exception of the debentures, for which a settlement has not yet been fixed. Liptons have obviously been very much more prompt with the settlement than the English Sewing Cotton Company, in connection with which interminable delays have all along been the order of the day. "Threads" are now quoted $\frac{3}{8}$-$\frac{7}{16}$ premium. The flotation of the Fine Spinners' Company cannot be said to have been a success, which is proved by the fact that there is practically no premium on the shares. Lipton shares have been fairly steady, the Ordinary at ¾ premium,

MORTLOCK'S (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "MORTLOCK'S" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

the Prefs. at $\frac{1}{8}$ premium Cycle shares have moved very irregularly, but there is at last an improvement in some instances. Thus, a strong recovery is marked in the various Dunlop issues. Dunlop Deferred, which at one time fell as low as 5s. 3d., have rebounded to 8s, reacting again to 7s., while the Ordinary have improved to 13s., the Debentures alone hanging fire at 70. Another share to which a good deal of attention has been directed is Trent Cycle, which has hardened to 5s. This Company is said to be doing a good business and earning fair profits, while the assets are reported to amount to at least double the present price of the shares. The total nominal capital amounts to £100,000 in £1 shares, and there seems to be a prospect of a sharp improvement. The weakest stocks in this section have been Humbers, which, apparently on forced sales, have declined to 8s. for the Ordinary and to 13s. 6d. for the Prefs. Some rumours were about as to the passing of the dividend, and these have now been confirmed. Starley Bros. remain at the low price of 4s. 6d., and Swifts have receded 2s. to 10s., while Singer Ordinary are also down to 3s. Amalgamated Tyres have not yet improved upon their price of 4s. 6d., and Cycle Components remain at $1\frac{1}{8}$, notwithstanding the increasing agitation as regards the promotion of the Company. The Volenite Company, although not introduced publicly until Friday next, has already caught on with the public, and the £1 shares have been dealt in at $7\frac{5}{8}$ premium in the London market, where there is a freer market than in Dublin but a reaction to $7\frac{1}{4}$ premium has since taken place. Fish Oil shares remain steady at about 5 to $5\frac{1}{4}$, and several hundred shares have been bought by a knowing clique during the last ten days. Russian Oils were also quoted $24\frac{3}{4}$ at one time, declining to 23, and Schibaieff are dull at $\frac{1}{16}$ premium. The highest prices touched during the week have hardly in any instance been maintained, owing chiefly to the political scare. In the case of Anglo "A" and "B" the weaker tone of the American department has been a depressing feature, and the former after touching $16\frac{7}{16}$ are down to $14\frac{7}{8}$, while Anglo "B" from $113\frac{7}{8}$ have receded to 113. Lyons, on various favourable developments, rose at one time to $4\frac{1}{4}$, and then dropped again to 4, but Salmon & Gluckstein have been very steady all the week at $1\frac{9}{16}$. British Tea-Table shares have been very jumpy, and after touching $2\frac{11}{16}$ have fallen again to $2\frac{1}{2}$. With reference to the rumour which I mentioned last week as having been current, that Messrs. Gilbey were going into the tea trade, I am informed that there is no truth in this report. The Directors of the Liebig's Extract of Meat Company, Limited, have resolved to recommend at the next ordinary general meeting of the Company, to be held on June 7 next, the distribution of a final dividend for the year 1897 of 15 per cent., free of income-tax, making with the interim dividend of 5 per cent. paid on February 15 last, 20 per cent. for the year, being the same dividend as paid last year. Amongst brewery stocks Allsopp Ordinary, after being up at $146\frac{1}{4}$, have reacted again to 143. Hudson's Bay shares were also affected by the easier tone of the Yankee market, and instead of $22\frac{1}{4}$—the highest price touched—they are quoted now only $20\frac{3}{4}$. The weakness has also extended to theatre and music-hall shares. Palace Theatre touched $1\frac{3}{16}$ and dropped to $1\frac{1}{16}$; Drury Lane, 15s. paid, fell from $1\frac{1}{4}$ ($\frac{1}{2}$ premium) to $1\frac{1}{8}$ ($\frac{3}{8}$ premium). Natal Steam Coal shares have been steady at $1\frac{3}{16}$ to $1\frac{5}{16}$. With the Hispano-American war going on, the eyes of all good politicians are looking about to see where good coal can be obtained in different parts of the world, and this Company's Managing Director recently announced that this coal is equal to the Cardiff steam coal so sought after in the two hemispheres. Concerning my remarks as to the conversion of Vinolia Soap, I have received a communication from the Secretary informing me that none of the capital will be offered to the public, the business having been converted into a limited liability Company for purely private reasons. The Millars' Karri and Jarrah Forests, Limited, have decided to issue the 50,000 Ordinary shares held in reserve at a premium of £1 per share to existing shareholders. This would really constitute a bonus, notwithstanding which the price has reacted to $2\frac{7}{8}$. The Lagunas litigation has terminated in favour of the Lagunas Nitrate Syndicate, and thus the Lagunas Nitrate Company has a big law bill to pay and nothing to show for it. The shares in the Syndicate have consequently improved to $1\frac{1}{4}$, while the shares in the Company are down to 1.—Your affectionate Uncle,

MOSES.

WHITEHALL COURT, S.W.—To Let, Bachelor and other Suites, Electric Light, Service, Bath-rooms. Meals in public or tenants' own rooms.—Apply, Manager.

All Rights Reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

DOWLER'S DOUBLE.

A DINGY public-house in the Commercial-road, known as the "Three Feathers," was the haunt of the very shadiest section of racing men—welshers, nobblers, exponents of the three-card trick, in fact, swindlers of all kinds If a particularly nefarious "plant" there projected, the landlord had no difficulty in finding among his customers the very men, qualified by previous training, to carry it through successfully. It was a dirty, untidily-kept hole, and the liquors were vile; yet the long, semi-elliptical counter was rarely without a frowsy crowd standing three-deep about it. A row of wooden benches lined the walls, with small, white-topped tables at intervals; but these luxuries were not often used save when matters of a very confidential nature had to be discussed.

At one of these tables, on a muggy afternoon in late November, a couple of worthies, known among their intimates as "Nosey" and "Smiler," were seated. It is supposed that at some remote period of their previous history these individuals were possessed of names and surnames like other people; but it was so long ago that they had quite forgotten them; at all events, they were never used. The distinctive appellations were obviously derived from personal peculiarities. Nosey was a biggish man, inclined to corpulence, with a red face, and a proboscis of the most approved "grog-blossom" type. His companion, a lean, little fellow, with a bright, alert look, was noted for taking the hardest knocks of fortune with unruffled serenity, and was for ever on the broad grin.

This estimable pair posed as bookmakers, which perhaps they were—of a sort. When there was nothing more profitable in the way, they "stood up" in the shilling-ring at some of the more easily accessible race meetings. The standing position was not usually maintained for any lengthened period; not, in fact, after the first favourite had got home. As soon as that occurred the occasional fielders made a hasty exit from the enclosure; in their own classic language, they "did a bunk." Nosey and Smiler had a rooted aversion against the ceremony known as "paying out," and never, if they could help it, demeaned themselves by resorting to a proceeding only fit for those despised beings termed "jay," or "mugs."

Their glasses were very low—about half-an inch of liquid in each—and there were no present means of getting them replenished, for the funds of the partnership were at the lowest ebb. As they put it, they were "on the rocks—stony." Persistent ill-luck had dogged their footsteps during the season now drawing near its close, and the winter's keep, which every follower of the turf looks upon as his inalienable right, was as far off as ever. Fortunately for the two, as for many other scamps, they were blessed with thrifty and industrious wives, who somehow contrived in the worst of times to keep the family pot a-boiling, and even to provide their lords with a daily modicum of the twin necessaries of life, beer and tobacco. Under these circumstances, it is needless to mention that Nosey and Smiler were ripe for anything, good, bad, or indifferent, that had money in it.

The fiery-nosed one knocked the ashes out of his pipe and turned to his friend.

"Got any 'bacca?"

"Not a crumb."

"No more 'ave I; let's take our 'ook."

He rose, stretched himself with a yawn, and was moving out, when he stopped short at sight of Smiler, who was gazing in open-mouthed astonishment at a young man who had just taken his place behind the counter. Nosey's glance, following the direction of his companion's, rested upon this person, and instantly Smiler's amazed expression was repeated upon his own rubicund countenance.

"Well, I'm dashed!" he exclaimed.

The word he used was not "dashed," nor anything like it; but, as every sentence uttered by these gentry was freely interlarded with blasphemous or revolting adjectives, it is necessary to dilute their language considerably.

He reseated himself, looking extremely bewildered, and turned his eyes from the barman to Smiler, and then back again, as if mutely asking what this portent might mean.

"'Struth!" ejaculated the latter, under his breath, "if 'e ain't as like 'im as two peas!'

"Might be 'is twin brother," Nosey muttered, in a tone of astonishment, mingled with awe.

It was certainly not the good looks of the new barman that had called forth these excited comments from the self-styled bookmakers, for he was a sallow-faced young fellow, with dark hair, a snub nose, prominent cheek-bones, and a wide mouth, from which several unsightly, discoloured teeth projected. But he bore the most extraordinary resemblance to Jack Dowler, the crack jockey of the day, and it was this, as Nosey said, that knocked him silly.

"Lor' love me! did y'ear that?" he whispered.

The barman had just replied to some casual remark of a customer with a sharp "No, no!" delivered in a high-pitched, nasal tone

"His ackshal voice!" he went on; "just as you might 'ear 'im yell 'No, no!' to the starter when 'e wasn't ready to sneak a few lengths. Blow me, if I ever 'eard o' the like since the Siamese twins!"

When he had got over his first feelings of amazement, Nosey sat for a long time unconsciously sucking at his empty pipe, with eyes half closed, and to all appearance lost in thought

Smiler fidgeted a good deal, but made no attempt to interrupt his partner's profound cogitations. The big man, it was admitted, carried the brains of the firm, and the lesser rogue was well satisfied to leave the thinking part of the business to him.

He waited in silent suspense for a considerable time, and it was only when he could endure it no longer that he broke out:

"Wot is it, old pal? Got somethink in your noddle, eh?"

Not even a look was vouchsafed him in reply, but out of the corner of Nosey's mouth a savage—"Shut up, will you!" was jerked.

After that there was nothing for Smiler to do but possess his soul in patience till such time as the leading spirit thought fit to unburthen himself.

When, at last, Nosey spoke, his opening remarks mystified his friend more than ever. "Look 'ere, old chap," he said in a cautious undertone, "you must get all the coin you can lay 'ands on by to-morrow. Don't matter a button 'ow you manage it—pop, sell, crib—anyhow, it's got to be done. I'll do my little bit as well, and we'll meet 'ere to-morrer at ten. I must 'ave a jaw with that there cove be'ind the counter."

"But I'm all in the dark," grumbled Smiler. "Wot's it about? Out with it!"

"It ain't fixed altogether to my likin' yet," was the reply. "I must sleep on it fust; but I think I can see my way to a winter's keep for both on us. Oh, it's a lovely plant! A real hay-woner!"

And with this meagre information Smiler had to be content.

Nosey spent many hours of the night in the perfecting of his scheme, which was a project of remarkable audacity, and not unattended with risk to the principal actor in it. However, as that part was to be allotted to the barman at the Feathers, the consideration of danger was not allowed to weigh unduly. The undertaking, as confided to Smiler on the following morning, may be thus briefly summarised: A certain bookmaker, well known to both of them, who was possessed of ample means and troubled with less than the average of scruples, would most probably be found at his house, in the neighbourhood of Brompton, on the evening of the next day (Wednesday), when he was expected to return from the Warwick meeting. The other Metropolitan pencillers as a rule went on to Manchester from the Midland town, but this one, Nosey had ascertained beyond doubt, would come home before proceeding to Cottonopolis. Nosey's idea was to send the new barman —"Dowler's double," as he called him—to the abode of Steve Flitterby, the bookmaker, between ten and eleven at night. Dressed with as near an approach to the style usually affected by the crack jockey as the funds of the confederacy would permit, there was little doubt that he could easily pass himself off upon Flitterby as the real Simon Pure. He was to say that he, Dowler, was in pressing need of a thousand pounds—in fact, he must have that sum at once, and, if the bookmaker would lend it to him, he would, in return, render Flitterby a most important service, one which would enable him to recoup himself many times over. The nature of this service will be understood when it is explained that the Manchester November Handicap had that year dwindled down to what is generally called a "one-horse" race. In fact, it was the universal belief that, bar accident, the favourite, Fireaway, could not lose. The horse was nominally at two to one in the betting, but it was impossible to get the odds to money; the layers were all full. Now, Dowler (the real one) was engaged to ride Fireaway, and his impersonator had simply to offer to pull the horse, in return for a thousand pounds down, and a similar amount to be paid after the race. The latter contingency, of course, would come to nothing, but Nosey considered it a particularly happy stroke in order to avert suspicion. It was very unlikely that the proposal would be declined, as Flitterby's unscrupulous greed was well known. It was a dazzling bait to dangle before the bookmaker's eyes, for an immense haul might be made without risk by the fielder who knew that he was dealing with "dead meat."

Such was the result of Nosey's inspiration, and as the details were imparted to Smiler, the little man could only give vent to his feelings in broken gasps of wonder and delight.

"It'll go like winkin'," he said, with profound conviction.

"Well, it ought," said Nosey, with an air of modest pride. "'Tain't everybody as could ha' planned a fake like it."

"There ain't another livin' as could touch it," rejoined Smiler; "but," he added hesitatingly, "don't you think a thou's a bit too hot?"

"Not it," returned Nosey, firmly. "When the idee fust come in my 'ead, I thought of three 'undred, or five at the outside. But d'ye suppose Dowler 'ud pull an hoss for five 'undred? Not 'e. The bigger the money, the less doubts Flitterby'll 'ave. And now, about our little bank; 'ow much 'ave you got?"

Smiler produced twenty shillings in silver, with a look that said plainly, "Beat that, if you can."

But Nosey easily went one better; he exhibited one pound ten in bright gold. "That licks you," he said triumphantly. "The old 'oman 'ad got it put by for Chris'mas, an' didn't want to part; but I said I'd wring 'er bloomin' neck for 'er, if she didn't fork out, an' that soon settled the matter. A man's got to be master in 'is own 'ouse."

The next move was to scrape acquaintance with the barman, and this proved a matter of small difficulty. Business at the "Feathers" was usually slack in a morning, and Jem, as he was called, had no objection whatever to the "pony" of bitter which Nosey generously proffered. By degrees the talk turned upon the young man's marvellous resemblance to the great jockey, and it soon became evident that Jem was quite aware of the fact, and not a little proud of it.

"Ho, yes," he said, with a gratified smile, "at my larst place all the chaps used to call me Dowler, an' arst me wot was a-goin' to win."

But when Nosey, cautiously and by slow degrees, put forth his project, Jem's lank hair almost stood on end with horror. "Ho, no," he said, with prompt decision, "not for me; I ain't a-takin' any. That's a laggin' job, that is."

But the arch conspirator was not to be dismayed by a single refusal. He plied his oily tongue so eloquently and persistently that before long the barman wavered.

"'Ow if Dowler's gone on to Manchester, and this 'ere Flitterby knows it?" he objected. The difficulty was obviously raised only for Nosey to smooth away.

"That's all right," replied the latter. "Dowler ain't bin ridin' at Warwick. 'E'd a spill larst Satu'day, an' got a bad shakin', so 'e's savin' 'isself for the 'andicap. I tell yer," he went on, impressively, "the 'ole thing's as safe as 'ouses. W'y shouldn't Dowler be up in town? an' w'y shouldn't 'e want a thousan'? 'E's bin specilatin', that's wot 'e's bin a-doin' of, an' got 'ard 'it. So the oof's to be found at once—see?"

"I see," returned Jem, thoughtfully. "Yes," he added, after a pause, "I begin to think it might be done."

"Might!" repeated Nosey; "s'elp me Bob, there never was a softer thing! All you've got to do is to put on one of them long coats as racin' toffs wear—you've seen 'em?"

Jem nodded.

"You can pick 'em up dirt cheap at some o' the second-'and shops, an' that'll look more nateral-like than a bran' noo one. Then off you goes in a 'ansom—proper style, you know—'ave a quarter-of-an-hour's jaw with old Flitterby, and away you comes with yer pockets loaded fit to bust. But no bloomin' cheques, mind. Yaller boys or Bank of England's your ticket."

"You think 'e'll bite then?"

"Bite like an 'ungry jack, 'e will. knows 'im. Can't you see wot a thing it'd be for 'im to 'ave Dowler under 'is thumb? Lor' love me! 'e'd give any money for it a'most."

Then came the important question of how the prospective spoil was to be divided Nosey proposed that in consideration of his extra risk the barman should receive £400, the remainder to be shared equally between the partners. But to this arrangement Jem demurred, contending—which was indeed the fact—that neither Nosey nor Smiler ran any risk at all, and stood out stoutly for half the plunder.

Greatly to Smiler's astonishment, the senior partner agreed with scarcely a protest. "Well, dash it!" he cried, in a burst of generosity, "you shall 'ave five 'undred. You've got the job to do, an' it's on'y right you should 'ave most o' the swag. Me an' Smiler 'll do very well with two-fifty apiece."

So the matter was settled. The necessary outfit was purchased, Jem freely contributing towards the cost, and by an arrangement with one of his fellows the barman managed to get off for a few hours on the Wednesday evening. Accompanied by his friends, he made his way to the neighbourhood of Flitterby's house, and, shortly before eleven o'clock, chartered a hansom, so as to arrive "in style," as Nosey said. The partners were to await his return at a convenient public-house, and they watched the disappearing vehicle with hopeful anxiety.

"Nosey," remarked Smiler, thoughtfully, "you ain't never a-goin' to let that blitherin' Juggins 'ave five 'undred all to 'is own bloomin' cheek, are you?"

Nosey turned on him with withering contempt. "Think I've gone dotty all of a suddent, eh? Five 'undred! 'E may think 'isself jolly lucky if 'o gets a tenner out 'n it."

* * * * *

When the numbers went up for the November Handicap on the following Saturday, it was seen that there were only half-a-dozen runners; and immediately there was a wild rush to get on Fireaway. In a couple of minutes he was an odds-on chance, and soon the majority of the bookmakers declined to deal at any price, contenting themselves with offering "10 to 1 bar one!"

A marked exception to this rule was noticeable in Steve Flitterby, who took 6 to 4 from all comers right up to the fall of the flag. His brothers of the pencil looked at each other in amazement, and the questions went round, "What's it all about? Does he know anything?"

Apparently Steve was "in the know," for when the bell rang to announce the start he shut up his book, took out his field glass, and proceeded to watch the race with the air of a man who has no uneasiness whatever about the result.

It was not till the horses were nearly home that a look of horrified amazement overspread his countenance, and his jaw fell. For at that moment a horse shot out from the ruck, leaving the others as if standing still; and instantly a jubilant roar of "Fireaway! Fireaway!" proclaimed the victory of the favourite. Flitterby grew purple with rage, and from between his clenched teeth came the muttered words:

"By ——, the scoundrel has sold me!"

For a moment he stood as if paralysed, then a mad impulse of homicidal mania took possession of him, and he tore through the ring like a wild bull, heedless of the threats and curses called forth by his headlong charge. In the course of a few seconds he was in the paddock, and reached the weighing-room door just as the rider of the winner was coming out. With the cry of a hungry tiger the bookmaker threw himself upon the jockey, and seized him by the throat.

"My money, you thief, my money!" he roared. "Out with it!" And at each word he shook Dowler as a terrier might a rat.

The bystanders surrounded Flitterby, and succeeded, though not without difficulty, in freeing the jockey from his murderous grip. By that time he was almost black in the face, and completely breathless.

"W-what's it all about?" he stammered, as soon as he was able to speak.

"What's it about?" yelled Flitterby. "Fraud, and lies, and thievery—that's what it's about. Give me back my thousand pounds, you——." And he burst into a torrent of profanity which the most case-hardened "comp." on earth dare not set in type.

"Oh, he's mad," said Dowler, "mad as a hatter."

"No, but I was mad to let you bleed me!" retorted Flitterby. "A thousand pound he's had out of me!" he shouted to the crowd that had quickly assembled. "And put me in the cart as well!"

This aspersion on his character roused Dowler thoroughly. He faced the angry man, and in steadfast tones rejoined:

"If you say I ever had £1,000 from you, or 1,000 farthings, you lie, and you know it."

At this juncture one of the stewards appeared upon the scene, and heard some of the jockey's words. "What does this mean, Dowler?" he asked.

But Flitterby, eager to seize the opportunity, broke in: "I'll tell you that, sir. This incorruptible jockey, this 'honest Jack,' came to my house at Brompton on Wednesday night last, and told me he was in pressing need of £1,000; so I lent it to him on the spot. And he promised me faithful he'd ——" and Steve paused in confusion.

"Yes," said the steward, suavely; "and what was he to do in return for that large sum of money?"

Steve couldn't blush, but his face took on a deeper shade of purple as he rejoined: "He promised to pull Fireaway."

The gentleman whistled. "Whew! A very pretty arrangement! Now, Dowler, what have you to say to this most damaging statement?"

"I can prove there isn't a word of truth in it, sir," returned the jockey, with the utmost coolness. He called to an elderly man on the outskirts of the crowd: "Mr. Rawson! a moment, please."

The person thus addressed, one of the most respected trainers at Newmarket, came forward. Then Dowler turned to Flitterby.

"I think you said last Wednesday night?"

"Yes, about eleven o'clock."

"You hear that, Mr. Rawson? Perhaps you'll tell this—this lunatic where I was last Wednesday night."

"Certainly; in your own house at Newmarket. I spent the evening with him," he said, turning to the steward, "and didn't leave till after eleven."

"I think that settles the question, sir," said Dowler, addressing the man in authority. "I couldn't very well have been at Brompton and in Newmarket at the same hour—could I? More than that, I can prove by scores of witnesses, if necessary, that I never left Newmarket all the week, till to-day."

"I don't doubt it for a moment," returned the steward;

"there must be some mistake," and he turned back to the weighing-room.

"If there's any truth in your story," said the jockey to Flitterby, "you've been had properly. But it serves you right. I'd willingly die on the roadside before I'd ask you for a penny," and he walked off with his head in the air.

Then the idea dawned upon the unhappy bookmaker that he had been most cleverly and cruelly duped.

* * * * *

Nosey and Smiler waited for their friend, the barman, till they were turned out at closing time, and then proceeded slowly in the direction of Flitterby's, expecting every moment to meet Jem returning triumphant with the spoils. But they saw nothing of him that night, and next day he was missing from the Three Feathers. Then were the minds of the partners racked with horrible doubts. Had Jem been discovered, and handed over to justice? Or, more fearful still to contemplate, had he succeeded in obtaining the money, and, basely oblivious of the time-worn maxim concerning honour among thieves, levanted with it, leaving not a solitary "skiv" behind him? They could neither eat nor sleep; drink was impossible—for lack of funds; and when, on the following day, hoping against hope, they presented themselves at the Feathers, their faces were pale, drawn, and haggard with gnawing anxiety.

"Do they call you 'Nosey'?" inquired one of the barmen.

"Mostly," was the meek reply.

"Then, 'ere's a letter for you."

The envelope was addressed, "Mr. Nosey & Co., Three Feathers," &c. Eagerly tearing it open, he read:—

Deer frend,—yu will bee pleesed to no that i got the stuf all rite, but I thot it a pity to devoid it, so im hof with the lot.—yours trewly, Jem.

Nosey staggered, and would have fallen, but for the sustaining arm of Smiler, who had read the letter over his partner's shoulder.

"Bear up, old pal; bear up!" he whispered, tremulously.

"Nosey pulled himself together, and the pair walked slowly and sadly away, their bright dreams of affluence shattered in the dust. When they had gone a little way, Nosey turned to his friend, and, in a voice broken with grief, he said:—

"I wouldn't ha' cared if the bloomer 'ad done us out'n 'is own nut; but to go and take a mean advantage of another cove's brains, an' never even leave us the price of a drink—it's 'art-breakin', that's wot it is, 'art-breakin'! Come on, Smiler," he added, desperately, "let's go and 'ire ourselves out for blanky sangwich men! It's all we're bally well fit for!"

ART NOTES.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY—CONCLUDING ARTICLE.

THIS year's Academy is somewhat rich in pictorial coincidences. To Mr. La Thangue's "Bringing Home the Bracken" I alluded last week; Mr. Colin Hunter, it will be seen, deals with an identical subject in No. 380. Mr. Orchardson and Mr. John Collier both have genre pictures depicting a domestic incident to which they have given the same name—"Trouble" (Nos. 243 and 657). That there are two ex-Lord Mayors in the field I have already pointed out, and it is not strange, perhaps, that two Piper Findlaters are to be seen upon the walls at Burlington House. Mr. Vereker M. Hamilton and Mr. Caton Woodville have both painted the charge of the Gordon Highlanders at Dargai (Nos. 237 and 899). I have now seen four oil paintings of this recent military event, and it has been rather bewildering to find that each differs in essential details from the others. Piper Findlater playing his historical pipes has already been painted in four diametrically different positions. It only remains for a fifth artist to paint this resolute Highlander standing on his head as he pipes his comrades on to victory, and the pictorial possibilities of the incident, I should imagine, will be virtually exhausted. But fancy the perplexity of the future historian when, in writing at some distant date the story of the Dargai charge, he consults the pictorial annals of the present year of grace! Small wonder if, after many vain attempts to reconcile the conflicting authorities, he should feel inclined to regard Private Findlater as a mythical hero, a sort of military Pied Piper of Hamelin.

As I have previously hinted, there must have been at least one gentleman with a facetious turn of mind on the Hanging Committee this year. The "skying" of James Maris is, of course, going too far—or should I say too high?—even for a joke; but there is certainly humour of a sort in commencing the Academy Catalogue with "When the Heart is Young" (No. 1), and finishing it with "The Crash of Doom" (No. 1,967). In these two extremes the experience of many visitors to Burlington House is only too significantly expressed. Who, indeed, has not gone through the experience for himself? It is with buoyant step and head erect that one enters the first room. Of course, one does not exactly whistle or sing, but there is the expectancy of hope in the eye, and all the sanguineness of youth in the heart. But oh! what a change has come over one when one issues some hours later from the Lecture Room: "The Crash of Doom" has too surely done its fell work; and if one's heart ever felt young, one forgets it as limp, and listless, and despondent one steals down the steps and totters into Piccadilly. And yet, as I have said, there is much to cheer one on in a progress that is really too long for even the most assiduous art pilgrim. M. Fantin Latour, for example, has never painted still life better than in his "Grapes and Peaches" (No. 111), and Mr. Spenlove Spenlove's "Avenues of Gold" (No. 117) would, I am sure, be worth closer attention if the "hangers" had only placed it where it could be properly seen. Mr. J. W. Godward's "Nymph of the Chase" (No. 128) is only his now familiar nude model under a new name. Take away her bow and arrows, and give her a laurel branch, and she would do equally well for Daphne, or, with a swan flapping its wings in the background, might be as appropriately named Leda. So, too, might the painting in of a pharos be made to justify the appellation Hero; or the addition of long back hair and a gaily-caparisoned steed turn her into a comely Lady Godiva. "The 'properties' may vary, the model is the same," as a modern bardlet once wrote. The scoffer may feel inclined to wonder why Miss Lily Wrangel gives such prominence to the thumb in her "Portrait of the Artist" (No. 131), but I shall be much surprised if a general verdict of approval does not greet Mr. Edward G. Hobley's "Shaft of Light" (No. 149), a picture of undoubted and effective cleverness. Mr. John Brett is getting more geologic than ever in his "Trevose Head" (No. 194). This seems a picture that would be more in place in the Museum of Geology in Jermyn-street than in its present position at Burlington House. I should like Mr. George Joy's work (No. 223) better if the central figure were not quite so reminiscent of Mr. Hall Caine. Perfection of flower painting is to be seen in M. Fantin Latour's "Summer Chrysanthemums (No. 251), and Mr. Ralph Peacock's "Ethel" (No. 256) is well worth attention. Then there is Mr. John S. Sargent's "Portrait of a Lady" (a sister, I believe, of Mrs. George Curzon), another of those amazing impressionistic portraits of his which are almost literally "monuments of a moment;" and Mr. Alma Tadema's unusually dramatic "Conversion of Paula" (No. 286). So dramatic, indeed, is this picture that there is said to be an impression amongst visitors to Burlington House that it depicts some hitherto unrecorded incident in the life of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." Lady Butler's "On the Morrow of Talavera" (No. 303) is not a large picture, but she has managed very cleverly to express in it the chill air of the early dawn. Mr. Laurence Koe's "Sappho" (No. 307) is lying in perhaps the most uncomfortable position that a classical model has ever been called upon to assume. If it was in this position that Sappho wrote her odes, the wonder is not that the odes have not survived, but that the poetess herself lived long enough to have ever written any. In Mr. John Da Costa's "Idleness" (No. 360) the limbs of the figures are somewhat puzzlingly mixed up; and it is, alas, "Ichabod!" that one murmurs as one looks at Mr. George Leslie's landscape (No. 369). Mr. Seymour Lucas's painting of "William the Conqueror Granting a Charter" (No. 449) is much too large to be overlooked. But it need not delay the visitor long. It will be seen to more advantage, I think, when it reaches its destination on the walls of the Royal Exchange. The longer I looked at Mr. T. C. Gotch's "Awakening" (No. 511) the more I wondered how the young lady in the picture ever managed to sleep in the bedstead from which she has arisen. Short of doubling herself up, or of having the rough and ready method of Procrustes applied to her, I fail to see how she could ever have sought repose on such an inadequate couch. Mr. George Clausen's "The Harrow" (No. 552) might have been more appropriately called "The Horse," whilst Mr. J. W. North's picture (No. 571) shows only too clearly that though manners may make the man, mannerism may only too surely mar the master.

The Hotel Cecil Restaurant.—Orchestra daily during Luncheon, Dinner, and Supper. M. François, Chef de Restaurant, from the Grand Hotel, Monte Carlo.

It will be remembered that Miss Lucy E. Kemp-Welch woke up one morning last May to find herself famous in the world of art. Not only had her large picture of "Colts in the New Forest" been well hung at Burlington House, but it had also been purchased by the Trustees of the Chantrey Bequest. An equally large picture by Miss Kemp-Welch is hung in Gallery No. VII. at this year's Academy, but it fails to fulfil the promise of last year's work. "To Arms," as it is called (No. 570), represents early morning in the camp of the Duke of York's army before the first battle of the Roses at St. Albans. It is an ambitious subject for this clever young lady to have attempted, and it must be said that the result is only a qualified success. The horses on which the Knights of the White Rose are mounted are admirably painted, but the rest of the picture —the horsemen and their armour, the tents, the banners, and all the paraphernalia of the camp, lack the necessary air of reality. It is an artificial, well stage-managed group that is shown us rather than an actual camp of real warriors. The scene, if I may so put it, is a little too "Astleyan" to be convincing. It would be better, I think, were Miss Kemp Welch to stick to nature. Not far from "To Arms" is a remarkable picture by Mr. William Stott, entitled "Autumn" (No. 566). Countless attempts have been made to personify autumn on canvas, but I doubt if any more poetic, original, and delightful result has been achieved than that obtained by Mr. William Stott. To this and the same artist's landscape in the next gallery, "The Happy Valley" (No. 614), I am inclined to give a very high place amongst the pictures of the year. "Smart" society finds its painter in Mr. Robert W. Macbeth, whose "Sparklets" (No. 644) is a not unsuccessful attempt to realise the glitter and kaleidoscopic colour of a costume ball at a fashionable skating rink Much more likely to be generally popular is Mr. John R. Reid's "Hiding the Deserter" (No. 470), one of those stories told on canvas in which the British public continues to delight. This picture, which looks like an illustration to one of Mr. Thomas Hardy's earlier novels, tells its own tale so clearly as to need no explanation, and this is what the shilling public hugely like. But was it not an unnecessary underlining of his point for Mr. Reid to have painted his deserter in a scarlet tunic? Soldiers do not, as a rule, desert in the full uniform of the regiments to which they belong.

In the last Gallery, attention may be called to Mr. Spottiswood Duthie's "Alone" (No. 943), and Mr. Eugène Burnand's "Group of Lansquenets" (No. 953). There is also a remarkably clever painting by Sir Harry H. Johnston, a sort of up-to-date Admirable Crichton who seems to explore continents, annex provinces, organise protectorates, adorn the Consular Service, write books and paint pictures with equal facility. His "After the Battle" (No. 977), is a strikingly effective rendering of an incident of warfare in "Darkest Africa."

For the DECORATING and FURNSHING in best modern manner, or in any of the traditional styles, of a single room or an entire house, HAMPTON & SONS, LTD., prepare, free of charge, suggestive schemes and competitive estimates.—Pall Mall East, S.W.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—Southern interest in Mr. Crockett's "The Standard Bearer" (1) will be somewhat damped by a sense of the priggishness of its hero and of the Bombastes Furioso bathos of his heroism. When the charming heroine adjures him, on pain of the loss of her love, to forego his lecture to her father upon his drunkenness, he insists upon delivering the twaddling message at the risk of his life and at the cost of her wrath. Indeed, to Southerners, or at any rate to Southerners of to-day, the whole last-century crusade of this Scotch minister seems bathetic, and surprising

> Strange all this difference should be > 'Twixt Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

It is edifying to note how extremes meet, and how a Scotch Covenanter can curse as vigorously as Uncle Toby's Papist, who outswore even the British troops in Flanders:—

> Cast into the deepest hell, Lord, if any power is left in Thee, the whole Presbytery of Kirkcudbright! Set the dogs upon them, O Satan, Prince of Evil, for they have worked ill-will and mischief upon earth. Specially and particularly gie Andrew Cameron his paiks! Rub the fiery brimstone flame into his bones, like salt into a new-killed swine. Scowder him with irons heated white hot. Tear his inward parts with twice-barbed fishing-hooks. Give William Boyd his bellyful of curses. Turn him as often on thy roasting-spit as he has turned his coat on the earth. Frighten wee Telfair wi' the uncanniest o' a' thy deils' imps. And as for the rest of them, may they burn back and front, ingate and outgate, hide, hair, and harrigals, till there is nocht left o' them but a wee pluff o' ash, that I shall hold like snuff between my fingers and thumb and blaw away like the white head o' a dandelion.

I ought to say that the ministers cursed with such edifying gusto, richly earned, by their Machiavellian subtlety and malignity, the rancorous hatred of this outburst. The most unfortunate effect, perhaps, of making the hero a Peter the Hermit of such a crusade is its rendering his two courtships incongruous. You hardly expect him to have the heart to make love at all in his circumstances, while you certainly do not expect him to have the heart to make the high-born heroine a partner of the sufferings, privations, perils, and hardships of his dangerous shepherding of the few sheep in the wilderness.

"Outcast of the Islands" made a sudden and just reputation for its author which "Tales of Unrest" (2) will sustain without enhancing. Mr. Conrad's descriptions of Malayan scenes and scenery are as vivid and vigorous in his latest as in his earliest venture; but when he comes to London and attempts to describe with the same subtlety and elaboration the emotions of a smug City man upon the discovery of his wife's infidelity, he overdoes the psychology. You can see that he is laboriously pumping up profundity, and you get weary of the strain and operoseness of the futile process. For instance, no man that ever had such an injury done him by a friend who owed to him everything would feel thus towards the ingrate and traitor:—

> He did not feel the slightest pang of jealousy or indignation. That one was ready to give up everything he had for that woman, who did not come, who had not the faith, the love, the courage

(1) "The Standard Bearer." By S. R. Crockett. (London: Methuen & Co Price 6s.)
(2) "Tales of Unrest." By Joseph Conrad. (London: T. Fisher Unwin Price 6s.)
(3) "The Open Boat, and Other Stories." By Stephen Crane. (London: William Heinemann. Price 6s.)
(4) "The Romance of Zion Chapel." By Richard Le Gallienne. (London John Lane. Price 6s.)
(5) "Complete Prose Works by Walt Whitman." (London: G. P. Putnam's Sons.)
(6) "The Egoist." By George Meredith. Revised edition. (London: A. Constable & Co. Price 6s.)
(7) "The History of the Holy Graal." Two Volumes of the Temple Classics. (London: J. M. Dent & Co.)
(8) "By Virtue of his Office." By Rowland Grey. (London: Jarrold & Sons Price 3s. 6d.)

to come. What did that man expect, what did he hope, what did he want? The woman—or the certitude, immaterial and precious? The first unselfish thought he had ever given to any human being was for that man who had tried to do him a terrible wrong. He was not angry. He was saddened by an impersonal sorrow, by a vast melancholy, as of all mankind longing for what cannot be attained. He felt his fellowship with every man—even with that man—especially with that man.

This kind of psychology is what Sam Johnson would call "milking the bull" with a vengeance. On the other hand, in such Malayan scenes, incidents, and characters as are described in "Karain" and "An Outpost of Progress," Mr. Conrad shows the hand of a master. Mr. Stephen Crane's reputation, which also was suddenly and justly made, will be decidedly enhanced by the striking collection of short stories, "The Open Boat" (3). Mr. Crane's sea tales are his best, and of his sea tales the best is "Flanagan" and his Cuban filibustering adventure. "An Open Boat" also is a finely told story of the sea, where your interest in the monotonous and prolonged peril of the shipwrecked crew is kept as alive and lively as though their dangers were of the most varied and melodramatic kind. Mr. Stephen Crane, however, was ill-advised in publishing such inane pot-boilers as "A Great Mistake," "An Ominous Baby," and some other of his "Midnight Sketches," which are as infantile as their subjects.

Mr. Le Gallienne's "Romance of Zion Chapel" (4) is high-fantastical to morbidity. The Methodist minister of a Little Bethel in a dingy slum of a Philistine town, who lectures on Walt Whitman to the intensely respectable and Bœotian audience of its Lyceum, is startlingly consistent throughout. He adores and is adored by two women equally, one of whom dies from the shock of the discovery of his love for her rival, while the other commits suicide, and induces him on his deathbed to commit suicide! To say the whole truth about this autobiographical volume, it is as hysterical as it is clever. If one must

> Peep and botanise
> Upon his mother's grave,

it should be done with more scientific self-control. The story opens with such promise that you resent all the more the preposterous impossibilities of the hero's relations to his two lady-loves, and of their even less credible acceptance of these relations. The morbid climax of this hysterical tale is naturally reserved for its last page, where the surviving lady-love proposes to hasten his death and procure her own by poison.

> "Oh, Isabel—to die!" he moaned one night, as she sat by his side. "But think, dear," she answered, with her head turned away, "think of Jenny." "Perhaps there is no Jenny." "No Jenny!" Isabel's heart gave a little cry. No Jenny! Then there could be no harm. . . .

No harm, that is, in suicide. Accordingly she suggests a double suicide, and the shining light of the New Zion accepts her suggestion;

Apropos of the Rev. Theophilus Londonderry's lecture on Walt Whitman, I ought to advertise you of a new edition of "The Complete Prose Works" of that poet of the future (5), which has just been published here by G. P. Putnam's Sons. "The Egoist" (6) has appeared in the admirable revised edition of Meredith; and "The History of the Holy Graal" (7), translated from the old French by Dr. Sebastian Evans, and embellished with frontispieces and title-pages by Sir Edward Burne Jones, forms, in two volumes, the latest addition to the dainty series of the Temple classics. Finally, I can recommend to you a pleasant novel, "By Virtue of his Office" (8), where the sin of the father against a good woman is atoned for by the marriage of his son to her daughter.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

Spa, Belgium.—Summer Season.—Casino, Concerts, Racing, Pigeon Shooting, Theatre. Delightful situation. Excellent Hotels. For details apply to Jules Crehay, Secretary, Casino.

MUSIC.

BOGUS "REGISTERED" TEACHERS.

However honestly, and with whatever apparent care, a set of rules may be drawn up, it seems that there are people clever enough to circumvent them. The examinations of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy and Royal College of Music were expressly devised by some of our leading musicians and music lovers, with the Prince of Wales at their head, in the hope of enabling school mistresses and parents to submit pupils to a genuine musical examination, instead of to the unofficial and sometimes vastly absurd diploma tests of mushroom limited liability concerns. Numerous rules have been promulgated by the Associated Board, and it was doubtless thought that all due precautions had been taken to prevent any improper use being made of the examinations. A loophole, however, has been discovered, and hopelessly unqualified persons may, and do, now blossom forth as "Registered Teachers R.A.M. and R.C.M."

The Associated Board, it seems, made a rule that the school (or teacher) which desired to avail itself of the examinations of the Board, should send in an application, and on that application being accepted, should pay an annual registration fee of a guinea, and thereby, instead of sending the young people to London, should acquire the privilege of presenting its pupils for examination in its own locality at a specified scale of fees. The reason why this regulation was made is perfectly obvious. The ordinary examinations are held either in London or at some big centre, such as Birmingham, Manchester, or Liverpool. It is, nevertheless, sometimes inconvenient for schoolmistresses and teachers to send pupils any long distance for examination, and the system of registration was introduced, so that if a certain number of pupils in any locality were available, the Associated Board could send down an examiner and hold a special examination. To meet this some sort of extra charge was thought necessary, but it was announced that the registration fee of one guinea would be returned to every registered school which presented a dozen or more pupils for examination during the year. This rule would to the plain man appear to be a very innocent, and indeed a very proper one.

Sir John Stainer and others have for many years past been agitating to secure an Act of Parliament for the registration of teachers, so that the duly qualified musician may be separated from the charlatan and the humbug. It is a very important part of Sir John's plan that after a certain time no one shall be registered as a music teacher except after passing an examination to show his qualifications for the office. Indeed, I believe (though I am not sure) the Associated Board itself has a special examination for teachers, as a test of their capacity to impart tuition to others. It seems, however, that in various parts of the country the innocent scheme of the Associated Board in the matter of extra local examinations has been taken up by a certain number of adventurers as an excellent opportunity of securing their so-called "registration" without the expense or suspense of prior examination. In all, it is said there are 741 schools, or teachers, who paid the Associated Board the guinea fee last year. A proportion (a small one, I trust) of these people, it is alleged, now announce themselves as "Registered Teacher, R.A.M. and R.C.M.," that is to say, as "registered" by the Associated Board under the auspices of the Prince of Wales. It is perfectly obvious that the Associated Board never intended anything of the sort.

Indeed, although I believe the Board reserves the right of refusing or accepting the application of any teacher, yet, as a matter of practice, almost every application for registration is granted. In fact, the registration is merely a subscription towards the expenses of the local examination of pupils, while the teacher or schoolmistress (who very possibly does not pretend to know anything at all about music) has nothing to do with the matter further than to send pupils up. Yet not only have certain real or pretended musicians held themselves out as "Registered Teachers" under this rule, but also I am informed some of the teachers at the "registered" schools have adopted this wholly authorised title even after they have left the school, and have set up business on their own account.

This clearly constitutes a scandal, and one which, I am sure, both the Royal Academy and Royal College of Music will be anxious at once to put a stop to. In the case of schools, indeed, teachers are so frequently changed that it is quite impossible to determine whether the instructor is competent or not, short of an examination to test his fitness. That these people should be allowed to go through the country and describe themselves as "Registered Teachers" under the Associated Board merely because they once belonged to a "registered" boarding school is, of course, a gross absurdity. There can be no doubt that it is the unfortunate use of the word "registered" which (combined with the guinea subscription) has done the mischief. The Associated Board indeed makes quite enough profit (several thousands a year) out of the examinations to drop both the term "registered" and the consequent guinea.

A country correspondent of mine sends me the latest development of the "Incorporated Society of Professional Musicians." It is in the form of a printed circular, announcing a "Musician's Prayer Union," with a president whose name is left blank, a committee of two, an hon. treasurer (without which no such society would be complete), and an hon. secretary who rejoices in the name of "Livesey Carrott, Esq." My correspondent thinks the new Union a most useful thing for musicians, and expresses a hope that it may also be open to musical critics, who, he appears to believe, are more addicted to commination than prayer. My own rather wide experience of such circulars, however, coupled with the mention of an "hon. treasurer," led me to look for the inevitable "subscription." It is moderate enough, namely, half-a-crown for professional musicians, and three and sixpence for non-professionals—a typical professional separation of the sheep from the goats. For this, by Rule 5, every member is to be entitled to make prayer "at least one day a week." I trust I shall not be held guilty of irreverence if I ask whether the average Christian, who prays twice a day, is to be charged pro ratâ, or whether, as is, indeed, only meet and just, there will be a reduction upon taking a quantity?

During the first fortnight of the Covent Garden season, Mr. Maurice Grau will have produced no fewer than ten works, a fact which shows that operatic enterprise was not exhausted by the death of Sir Augustus Harris. Moreover, he has, during the first fortnight of the season, introduced many of his new singers and several of his leading artists: among them, M. Jean de Reszke and Mme. Nordica, who on Saturday proved to be a rather matured, though vocally almost perfect, Tristan and Isolde. Many of the new-comers are distinctly above the average, although none of them perhaps at present may be of "star" rank. The best of them beyond much doubt is M. Saleza, an extremely promising young tenor, who comes from the Paris Opéra Comique. M. Saleza is slim, has good stage presence, has a fresh voice, entirely free from the tremolo, and sings well in tune. It is, in fact, at once a pleasure and a novelty to see a Romeo and a Don José turning the scale at something under fifteen stone, for the majority of tenors nowadays run to fleshiness, if not to actual obesity. As Don José, too, the new tenor proved that he could be dramatic and even melodramatic when he chooses. Miss Adams was rather a tame Micaela, but her Juliette (in which part she was on Monday succeeded by Mme. Eames) was an agreeable surprise. This young American lady's voice may not be particularly powerful, but she is pretty, she is a girlish and graceful actress, and she has evidently mastered the Marchesi style. The nightingale duet, and the balcony scene in "Romeo" were really well done by both artists. Miss Fanchon Thompson, who played the page Stephano, had never before appeared upon the stage. She, like Miss Adams, is an American, and she promises well, although the page's song is no particularly strong test.

Wednesday was a night for the Germans, for "Die Walküre" was given with almost an entirely new cast. We have heard a great deal about the improvements in the stage management, but they were not greatly apparent in "Die Walküre." The great reform it appears is reserved for the "Ring" cycle, when we are to have fresh scenery instead of that ridiculous back cloth in Hunding's hut, and something better than the switchback railway business in the ride of Walkyries, an arrangement which last week nearly resulted in a collision between two immortals. It had originally been intended that Miss Ella Russell should play the part of Sieglinde, but that lady had not studied it in German, and accordingly at short notice it was entrusted to Frau Cziuk, a soprano from Mayence, and the bride of the tenor Herr Costa, who sang the part of Siegmund. The pair were only married last month, and, like other busy people, they have no time for a full honeymoon. Herr Costa, although distinctly a vocalist of the German school, and occasionally lapsing into essentially Teutonic intonation, is one of the best German tenors we have had here for some time. That he is so fine an actor may be due to the fact that before he joined the operatic stage he was a star of the German drama. The lady also acts well, and has an agreeable voice, although she is not free from the vibrato. The best thing done by both was in the much abbreviated scene immediately before the appearance of Brünnhilde, a role now played forcibly, though without undue exaggeration, by Mme. Brema. The best of the new comers in "Die Walküre" was Herr Van Rooy, the famous Bayreuth Wotan. This gentleman has already appeared at the Schulz-Curtius concerts, but he is of course far better upon the stage, almost making interesting the character of the lugubrious Wanderer. On Saturday again his rendering of Kurwenal in "Tristan" was quite the finest we have yet seen here. Neither in "Die Walküre" nor in "Tristan" did the new conductor, Herr Zumpe, do himself justice. At times he was fussy, thereby apparently perplexing the band, while at others he was tameness itself. It is very possible he was nervous, and indeed in a new theatre, and with an English band, many of whom do not understand a word of German, his task was sufficiently arduous. Still, he is anything but a strong successor to poor Anton Seidl.

Mme. Wagner, I learn, will not after all come to London for the "Ring" cycle at Covent Garden, next month. I suppose it would be considered infra dig. for this lady to appear outside of Bayreuth, the fortunes of which theatre also are of pecuniary consequence to the Wagner family. It is a pity, for Mme. Cosima Wagner will never have heard her husband's music sung by so fine a cast as will be accorded to it by Mr. Grau and Mr. Schulz-Curtius at Covent Garden.

I have received from Matlock a long correspondence which has appeared in the local papers concerning musical diplomas in general, and those granted by the so-called College of Violinists in particular. Mr. Foucher, who combines with the duties of secretary of the College of Violinists the sale of musical instruments of the violin family, has, I see, written a letter in which he challenges anybody to come to the examinations (of which, by the way, I may shortly have something further to say), which he declares are "unlike many others (whether Chartered or Limited Companies) not held behind closed doors, not even the teacher of the candidate being allowed to be present (possibly to guard against a too prominent display of the utter want of capacity and knowledge of some of their examiners)." The Chartered institutions may be trusted to defend themselves, though I am bound to say there are many and obvious objections to the presence of the teacher at examinations. I have already, in TRUTH on June 3 last, dealt with this College of Violinists, and also with the College of Pianists (owned chiefly by the family of a plumber), and other speculations. The College of Violinists, as I pointed out, was an enterprise carried on by a musical instrument dealer, his wife and two daughters, his son (a law student), besides a newspaper proprietor, a commercial clerk, and a solitary professor of music, the whole company boasting a total cash paid-up capital of £17 10s. If any one cares to pay his money for the diplomas of such a concern it will, I imagine, only afford further proof that the axiom of Carlyle still holds good.

Miss Clara Butt has had a carriage accident; and, therefore, may now I hope be included in the census among great prime donne. The usual programme is something like this. The vocalist studies in England and learns here practically all she ever knows. Then she goes abroad, forgets some of the most useful of her knowledge, but acquires acquaintance with foreign tongues. Perhaps she may even have money enough to appear at a Continental opera-house, for abroad these things are not done without cost. Then she returns to England as a full-blown prima donna. But the finishing touch is invariably put to the matter by either a jewel robbery or a carriage accident. The former is more expensive, the latter more painful. Miss Butt's accident, however, I am sorry to say, is a real one, resulting in a mild attack of concussion of the brain, and, although the patient is progressing favourably, the incident will deprive us of the pleasure of hearing her for something like a couple of months.

Dr. Moritz Moszkowski, who made his début as a pianist at the Philharmonic Concert last week, was unwise to restrict himself to his own works. He is doubtless a sound musician, but he is not a great composer, and his merits as a pianist would have been far more effectively demonstrated if he had chosen some classic for his début. His Concerto in E which he produced at Queen's Hall last week is, I believe, entirely new. Dr. Moszkowski, it appears, wrote a pianoforte concerto some years ago, but is now dissatisfied with it and has consequently withdrawn it. The Concerto in E was designed for the Gewandhaus Concerts at Leipzig, where it is to be produced next winter by Herr Nikisch. Before this is done, the composer may be counselled to rewrite the first movement, which at present is fragmentary, not to say diffuse. The second or slow movement is better; while the third, a bright scherzo almost recalling the gipsy music of Liszt, is the best of all. The finale, however, like the rest of the concerto, has some extremely brilliant work for the solo part. Indeed, in this composition, the orchestra play quite a secondary rôle, and the work is, beyond question, one written by a pianist for pianists. Moszkowski likewise played three shorter pieces of no particular interest. The audience was again not a very large one, and the Philharmonic people this year do not seem to be having much luck. Perhaps they would do better if they could only make up their minds to relinquish those unfortunate Thursdays. The old Philharmonic days were Monday, or Wednesday, and either evening is more convenient for concert goers than Thursday.

Since six years ago, when M. de Pachmann made his last appearance in London, he has shaved off that wonderful beard; but "the great Chopinzee," as he used to be called, proved on Saturday at St. James's Hall that he could play the music of Chopin as delightfully as ever. The major part of his programme was, indeed, devoted to the Polish master's works, and the Study in Thirds, the Berceuse (which he played for an encore), and the Valse in D flat could hardly have been better. M. de Pachmann's little eccentricities even added to the interest of his performance, but no pianist now before the public has a more beautiful touch nor a greater command over the gradations of tone in the pianoforte. This was the most important of about five and twenty recitals given in London during the week. Why performers should thus always hasten to crowd an already overcrowded season is not exactly clear. It is perfectly certain that some of these young ladies and gentlemen might enjoy proper recognition if they reserved themselves for a less busy time of the year. Some of the great pianists have already recognised this fact, and M. Paderewski, Herr Rosenthal and others now refuse to come to us in the summer, though both will be back in London in the autumn.

Hotel Albemarle, Piccadilly, London. Private Suite, Bath, Electric Light, Lift. Vermersch, Proprietor. Paris: Imperial Hotel, Champs Elysées. Boulogne S/M: Imperial Pavilion Hotel.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

Dearest Amy,—London has got through her week of two Drawing Rooms, and is fervently hoping that such a concatenation of circumstances may never occur again. Who shall estimate what the double event has cost thousands in nervous energy, temper, and last, and perhaps not least, profit? When things are huddled on the top of each other in this hasty way, it is impossible for the unfortunate, ill-used West-End tradesmen to derive the full amount of benefit from them. There is something undignified, too, about this rush and scramble. And the next Drawing Room is fixed for a Monday, a most inconvenient day for those very necessary people, dressmakers and florists. How can bonquets made on Saturday be fresh on Monday? And when empty-headed women will insist on putting off ordering their gowns till the very last moment, the work-girls and many others must lose their Saturday afternoon holiday. Court milliners are allowed to keep their work-girls late three or four times in the year, and probably June 4 will be one of these. The Queen is so considerate and kind to every one whose case is intelligently brought under her notice, that it seems a pity that no intelligent individual has seen fit to put the case of the loyal tradesmen in its true light before her Majesty.

And the quantity of work in this season's dresses is appalling. There is an infinity of stitches in the gaugings, gatherings, quillings, and ruching of chiffon and silk muslin. I do not suppose that I call them by their right names, but you will know what I mean. Some of the Court trains were trimmed all round with a ruching of chiffon, the edges of which were bordered on both sides with Liliputian ruches of gauze about an inch wide. On a smart bodice that Lilla bought herself the other day, I counted seventeen rows of tucks, about seven of which went to the inch. The sleeves were tucked in the same way from shoulder to wrist, so you may imagine what a time it would take to make the dress. No one but a dressmaker could realise the amount of work in such a garment, so it is not surprising that fashionable women order elaborate gowns and expect them to be built in a day.

The sensation of the Drawing Room on Tuesday was the number of Duchesses present. We counted no fewer than eight. Some of them were beautiful women. The Duchess of Portland is looking very handsome just now. She wore a modified Empire dress with high Josephine collar of lace, all a-glitter with strass diamonds. A pale blue sash was twisted gracefully round her waist, the ends falling to the hem. Her train was lovely lace that had once belonged to the Empress Josephine. It was lined with blue chiffon. The Duchess of Bedford, sympathetic with the worker in every line of life, had ordered some lovely Honiton to be made for her Court gown. There is a beautiful suitability in this, that English workers should benefit by our English Court. I only wish that all the ladies who attend the Drawing Rooms would take the same view. What a marvellous difference it would make in the prosperity of our country! There is no reckoning it up. Spitalfields would flourish again, and the looms of Macclesfield, Leek, and Essex would spread ease and comfort among thousands of humble homes. Coventry and Nottingham would rejoice in sunny prosperity, and the lacemakers of Buckinghamshire, Limerick, and Devonshire would be happy again with heaps of work to do.

But there is no use in contemplating this millennial might-have-been, for Englishwomen run after everything foreign in dress matters. Just a few of them, like the Duchess of Abercorn, the Duchess of Bedford, the Marchioness of Londonderry, and Lady Bective, are really patriotic and do all they can to encourage home manufactures and native handiwork. Every one who saw the Duchess of Bedford's lovely lace must have admired it. It was like a cobweb in texture, and the colour of it was delicious. It may be hoped that some of the ladies who admired it may order some and pay for it.

New Spring Fashions.—Messrs. Redfern have now on view in their Showrooms a unique display of Toilettes, illustrative of the latest London and Paris fashions, and to which they invite an inspection.—26, Conduit-street, London, W.

I am forgetting, however, to describe the dress itself. It was white satin embroidered in relief in silks of the most delicate tones of the violet, the design being clusters of those flowers, with dewdrops in the form of diamonds resting upon the leaves, and the inevitable Louis Seize trellis wrought in gold and pointed with diamonds. A wide belt of the latticework made a becoming finish to the bodice with its folds of satin and berthe of exquisite Honiton. The train was pansy-tinted velvet lined with white satin. The historic Bedford pearls were worn by the Duchess on this occasion, as well as fine diamonds.

The Duchess of Devonshire wore pale green and white satin most artistically combined, with train of cloth of silver lined and turned up with willow-green satin and trimmed with orchids. At the second Drawing Room her Grace was in black and white, which sounds nothing without a longer description than I am able to give you. The black was relieved with diamonds and folds of palest yellow, and the train was lined with yellow.

Among the Duchesses at the first Drawing Room were her Grace of Rutland, who presented her youngest daughter, Lady Elizabeth Manners; the Duchesses of Buccleuch and Roxburghe, in attendance on her Majesty; the Duchess of Manchester, presenting her pretty daughter, Lady Alice Montagu; and the wonderful Duchess of Cleveland, who, with Lord Rosebery and Lady Leconfield made up an interesting family party to watch the presentation of the Ladies Primrose. The elder, Lady Sybil, had technically been presented to the Queen before, at Windsor, but, like her sister, she wore pure white satin and chiffon, the dresses being charming compositions to the theme of girlish innocence and the high hopes of youthful hearts. A pathetic touch was imparted to Lady Sybil's toilette, the flowers in her bouquet including Hannah Rothschild roses. Lady Peggy's Arcade bouquet was composed of white orchids and white roses, and was of the new bow shape, which is so graceful and does not hide the front of the dress.

The flowers at both Drawing Rooms were lovely, the arrangement being much lighter and looser than of old. Several ladies carried loose branches of their favourite flowers. Lady Algernon Gordon-Lennox's sprays of gardenias looked lovely with her sweet gown of white satin, veiled with gold-embroidered silk muslin, and worn with a train which was an inspired fugue in tones of peach and pink. Lady Warwick had the prettiest dress to be seen at the first Drawing Room. It was made of fine old lace over white satin, above the hem of which two very large and full ostrich feathers were laid, the stems being concealed by a spray of white and cream-tinted roses. This unique arrangement was most successful. The beautiful Countess's train was white satin embroidered in graduated circles of pearls filled in with diamonds, gold, and seed pearls. She carried a Goodyear bouquet of glorious white orchids. The Ladies Helena and Flora Douglas-Hamilton, sisters of the young Duke of Hamilton, were at the Drawing Room, the elder in white and turquoise, and carrying an Arcade bouquet of lily-of-the-valley and white roses, and Lady Flora in a clinging gown of palest green chiffon, over which hung soft panels of creamy lace. The train, in white satin, was lined with green chiffon. The Marchioness of Breadalbane's dress was English brocade draped with Flanders point, and her train was green velvet in a sweet shade lined with blue satin.

Among other pretty dresses seen at this Drawing Room were Lady Harriet Cavendish's rose and silver, Lady Carysfort's white and pink brocade and cherry-coloured train, Lady Herschell's pink and silver, with train of rich brocade, Lady Aylesford's dahlia mauve with yellow satin and yellow orchids (she presented her daughter, Lady Violet Finch), Lady De La Warr's quite exquisite Empire gown in shades of violet satin and chiffon, with train in violet satin trimmed with white Chantilly, and Lady Tweeddale's splendidly effective yellow satin with velvet, diamond and pearl embroidery in relief, and yellow velvet train. Scatter over this in your imagination quantities of old Brussels lace, and add emerald and diamond ornaments, and you will have before your mind's eye a perfect toilette for a handsome brunette. Lady Waldegrave was like an ideal April day in her soft mauve and green. Lady Seale had a pretty mingling of grey, petunia and pansies with beautiful old lace. Lady Faudel-Phillips was in white and gold satin, embroidered with silver and diamonds, her daughter in white and palest green.

Lady Esther Smith's cherry-velvet and white satin was a distinct success. The embroidery on Lady Hutton's ivory satin was worthy of the lovely Brussels lace with which it was trimmed. She wore diamond and ruby ornaments and carried a bouquet of shaded roses. Her daughter, Miss Constance May Hutton, whose portrait appears in the Academy this year, wore white satin embroidered with silver and pearls. The train was trimmed with pale pink roses and heather, and the bouquet consisted of roses and heather. Mrs. Reginald Bingham wore Nile-green watered silk with real silver embroidery in relief, the train being in shot moire antique brocaded in a design of rose-sprays. It was lined with hedge-rose satin and trimmed with roses and lily of the valley. Mrs. Ernest Hutton (presented on her marriage) wore white satin and old Brussels point, trimmed with white lilies and narcissi. Her ornaments were pearls and turquoises. A lovely combination of tints was to be seen in Mrs. Herbert Alderson's dress of palest green satin and train of green brocade lined with shell-pink, and trimmed with apple-blossom. Her bouquet was composed of pink roses and apple-blossoms.

At the second Drawing Room there were some very pretty dresses. Lady Fitzwygram was in pale blue and mauve over yellow satin, with steel and jet embroideries. The Countess of Huntingdon presented her two sisters-in-law, the Ladies Rowena and Doreen Hastings, both wearing presentation white, and carrying loosely tied clusters of little Banksia roses. Lady Angela Forbes was in a white satin Empire costume, elaborately embroidered in silver. Her train was pink China crêpe, lined with white satin, and bordered with a ruching of white tulle. The Duchess of Abercorn presented Lady Clodagh Beresford, and also the Lady Mayoress of Belfast. Lady Marshall's white satin, with chiffon relieved with black satin rouleautés and lace, proved what can be done by skill and taste to render a half-mourning gown artistic. Miss Joan Wilson was much observed, as you may imagine, owing to the announcement of her engagement to the Duke of Manchester. She was presented by her mother, Mrs. Charles Wilson, and was dressed exactly like her sister, Miss Enid Wilson, in white tulle over satin, very gracefully draped, and train of white glacé velvet, trimmed all round with laurel leaves laid on over each other. Festoons and loops of pearls trimmed the bodices of the dresses, and a triple row of pearls hung over the arms, under the high-draped sleeves. Mrs. Wilson wore pale blue brocade and satin, and carried a bouquet of roses. Her daughters had each a sheaf of Madonna lilies.

Lady George Gordon-Lennox wore a grey gown and ruby velvet train, and had a lovely Arcade bouquet of Malmaison carnations and white orchids. Mrs. Cyril Cunard, in a toilette in which mauve and blue were skilfully combined, carried sprays of shaded lilac, matching the trimming on her train. Mrs. Arthur A'Beckett's beautiful yellow brocade, in a laburnum shade, was trimmed with a quantity of Honiton lace. Her bouquet was red roses mingled with Maréchal Niels. Mrs. Crompton Roberts' rose-pink dress, with pink velvet train, was sweetly pretty. The tulle skirt was strewn with pink petals, and the train bordered with them. Lady Brunner, in green and white brocade trimmed with very fine old point, had a green velvet train. Lady Wilson, of Archer Hall, Sheffield, had lovely steel embroideries on her steel-grey satin, and her point d'Alençon was worth a King's ransom. Sir Evelyn Wood's daughter was in a charming dress of cream-tinted satin and écru lace, the trimming of both dress and train consisting of ivy leaves and pink roses. Mrs. Paris Singer's pale blue train was lined with biscuit colour, and she carried a bouquet of red roses.

"MADGE'S" advice for smart and original Shirts, Blouses, Veils, Hosiery, Gloves, &c., "LEE, of Wigmore-street, has no equal."

OBESITY.—The happy knack of forming a symmetrical contour and a perfect foundation for a well-setting gown is the especial art of Mesdames SYKES, JOSEPHINE, & Co., Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, Oxford-circus, London, W.

"And what of the Royal ladies?" you will ask. "Are we to hear nothing about their frocks?" I must begin, of course, with that of the Queen herself. It was in quite the latest murmur of the fashion, being black ribbed silk trimmed with ruches and gatherings of chiffon. The skirt was embroidered with jet sequins and trimmed with lace. Her headdress and veil were Brussels point, and her diadem was of diamonds. The ornaments included amethysts. Her Majesty wore seven Orders, in addition to the Garter. The Princess of Wales was in cream colour, her satin dress being embroidered with lace and silver. Her velvet train was embroidered to correspond and trimmed with sprays of gardenia. At the second Drawing Room the most observed lady of the Royal Circle was the Duchess of York, whose first appearance it was since the death of the Duchess of Teck. The Duchess was dressed entirely in black, the material being English moire antique (all honour to her Royal Highness!) embroidered with jet and trimmed with plumes, also black. Her jewels were diamonds only. Princess Victoria was in pale green, and looked quite recovered from the terrible fright she had had the previous day when the carriage accident happened at Aldershot.

Are you not glad that the Duke of Manchester is going to marry an English girl? Everybody thought that he was going to marry an American. Charming as are the ladies of that nation, it seems slightly unfair that they should have a monopoly of our dukes—and it is really threatening to come to that.

The smartest concert of the season was given at Stafford House, in aid of the funds of the Charing Cross Hospital, on Wednesday afternoon. The odd thing about it was that so very many ladies wore black. The Duchess of York sat between Blanche Lady Rosslyn and the Duchess of Portland, both of whom wore black. Others who wore it were Lady Cynthia Graham, the Marchioness of Hastings, Lady Hartopp, and Mrs. Menzies. Almost all the rest of the ladies present wore grey, including Lady Rossmore, Lady Helen Vincent, Mrs. George Keppel, Lady Savile, Miss Chetwynd, and Miss Muriel Wilson. Miss Louie Freear was the success of the day.

London has been extremely full, as you may guess, with so much going on. And yet one hears little about the dinners, the dances, the balls, that used to be such a prominent feature of the London season at its very height. I wonder why it is?

To turn to utilitarian matters, have you seen that the Hackney Vestry has appointed Miss Alice Trebay a sanitary inspector? She was trained by the National Health Society.

Viscountess Duncannon held an exhibition on Saturday afternoon at 20, Brook-street, of the beautiful embroidered tablecloths, dinner napkins, d'oyleys, table-centres, tea-cloths, toilet-covers, quilts, handkerchiefs, and so on, worked by the girls and women of the Garry Hill Cottage Industry. There were some beautiful dress trimmings in spangle and jewel work, most attractive, and by no means dear. It is a capital place to go for useful and beautiful wedding presents.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—Only a poet could have yearningly sung, "Oh, that we two were Maying," and only because he was a poet, and had created a May out of his own poetic imagination. How widely and sadly different from the real one! Who, with any pretensions to average sanity, would have sighed to go a-Maying during this month so far as it has gone? Even the strongest constitutions, fortified by umbrellas and macintoshes, could not possibly have got, unscathed, through the ordeal. How the ideal would have been lost in the painful reality of influenza, rheumatism, and the innumerable ills inflicted on those who dare to fight against a weather of fierce and sullen mood. Perhaps the weather has not been so bad with you as with us in the more narrow limits of our sea-girt land. The sun has been keeping himself terribly aloof from us, just to show that we cannot get on without him. And it is difficult, don't you think so? One has so much more courage, hope, and pleasant feelings of all kinds in the glow and brightness of sunshine. The "May" has been so discouraged that it is not out yet, though it has long been trembling on the brink. So mild was the winter that we feared a blooming of the "May" before this month, a thing of evil omen according to one of our many superstitions. Whatever else may bring us ill-luck—at present it looks as if many things would, at all ends of the earth—the flowering hawthorns will have no share in the guilt this year.

The "season" in Dublin is definitely over, and those who remain—no inconsiderable number—in and about the town solace themselves, when the weather does not malignantly interfere, with polo, cricket, golf, cycling, and such like active forms of amusement. The Phœnix Park affords a great playground for all the sports but golf. Excellent "links," however, abound in many directions; for since the days of Mr. A. Balfour the game has been taken up with much enthusiasm in Ireland. Did he foresee the zealous way in which his lead would be followed, and hope that the sober, calm, game of his native land might have a soothing and moderating effect on our excitable temperaments? Lawn tennis has been a severe sufferer from golf and cycling. It has certainly gone the way of all the glories of the world; and if not absolutely fallen has had a terrible come down from its former high estate. Even croquet is taking away some of its votaries. As nothing succeeds like success, so nothing fails like failure, or even suspected failure; when falling away begins, every one hurries to desert. The Fitzwilliam Club in Dublin are nevertheless having their usual Lawn Tennis Tournament in Fitzwilliam-square next week, costly prizes are offered in the contests, and the Irish Championship will be fought for. The best players in the kingdom will no doubt, as usual, take part in the contests, though the excitement and enthusiasm which the Renshaws used to cause in the palmiest season of lawn tennis are never likely to be evoked by it again through any players, however skilful.

The review in the Phœnix Park and the Viceregal Birthday dinner will finish the duties of Viceroyalty for some time, and allow Lord and Lady Cadogan, if so minded, to repair as usual to London for the season. What a pity that we are not further apart from your seductive big capital, since we cannot be nearer which might be still better. How mixed are all things connected with Ireland! We are too far from England for Royalty and too near—most of us think—for Viceroyalty. Our Viceroys never seem to settle down in the country, as the Viceroys of the more distant India and Canada do in the lands which they respectively govern. It is generally not only a case of "can't be aisy" with an Irish Viceroy, he never even seems to "be as aisy as he can"; never at home in Ireland, though "reigning" over the country.

Mr. Henry Robinson has at last been appointed to succeed Sir G. Morris as Vice-President of the Local Government Board, Mr. Robinson's father having been Sir George's predecessor. The Robinson family seem marked for high official place in an unusual degree; as they show no very special brilliancy to the world in general, one supposes they must possess sound business capabilities and discretion. Sir Henry Robinson, the former head of the Local Government Board, was Lord Rosmead's brother, and the brothers were married to two sisters, the daughters of Lord Valentia. Mr. H. Robinson and his wife (a daughter of Sir H. and Lady Harriet Lynch-Blosse) are well known in Dublin Society, Mrs. Robinson being a lady of great personal attractions.—Yours ever,

Clare.

Just a few recipes. Fillets of beef with purée of horse-radish are excellent and a favourite dish with gentlemen:—

Cut the fillets into nice round pieces, half an inch thick, and lard on one side with strips of fat bacon. Dip the fillets in salad oil and grill them over a clear fire, placing the larded side to the fire first, and only turning them once. Arrange the fillets around the purée of horseradish, put a circle of very small slices of fried potato around the outside, and serve tomato sauce in a boat.

Frances Moore has now on view the latest Models from Paris in Hats, Bonnets, &c. Special and exclusive designs in Toques.—8, Maddox-street, Regent-street, W.

To make purée of horseradish.—Thicken half a gill of milk with a teaspoonful of potato flour, when boiling, add a gill of cream, a tablespoonful of vinegar, a squeeze of lemon juice, pepper and salt to taste, and a large, thick stick of grated horseradish. Make the purée quite hot, and if not thick enough add a few bread crumbs.

Have you a bombe mould? If so, try this lovely ice pudding:—

Make a teacupful of milk and the yolks of 3 eggs into a custard. When it is cold, blend it with a gill and a half of whipped cream, flavour it with essence of vanilla and freeze it in the ice machine. Put the ice cream into the bombe mould, and put on the cover with the sunk centre, which presses the cream to the sides. Embed it in ice and salt. Meanwhile, make and freeze a good chocolate cream. Take the bombe from the ice, remove the lid and fill the cavity with the chocolate ice, put on the plain cover and again embed the mould in ice and salt for an hour. Turn the bombe on to a dish and sprinkle the top with grated chocolate.

Have you tried purée of rhubarb leaves as a vegetable?:—

Wash the leaves, which must be young and delicate, and put them with a handful of salt into a saucepan of boiling water. Boil quickly for ten minutes, strain, and allow cold water to flow on them until cold. Squeeze dry in a cloth and rub through a wire sieve. Put the purée into a stewpan to warm, adding ½ oz. of butter, a small piece of glaze, and half a gill of cream; at intervals season with salt, pepper, and a pinch of castor sugar. Arrange the purée in the centre of the dish and garnish with crescent-shaped croutons of fried bread.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

DIAMONDS OR OLD SILVER
For PRESENTS.
SPINK & SON

SPOONS AND FORKS 2/11 oz. BELOW STORE PRICES.
17 & 18, Piccadilly, W.
AND AT
1 AND 2, GRACECHURCH STREET, CORNHILL, E.C. Est. 1772.

"SANITAS EMBROCATION."
For Aches, Pains, Sprains, Strains, Bruises, Stiffness, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, and for Veterinary purposes.

"I have little doubt that 'Sanitas Embrocation' will come into prominent favour as a table requisite and for various other purposes, human and veterinary." (Prof.) WOODROFFE HILL, F.R.C.V.S.

In Bottles, 8d., 1s., and 2s. 6d. Of all Chemists, Stores, and
THE SANITAS CO., LIMITED, BETHNAL GREEN, E.

THE MANUFACTURING
Goldsmiths' & Silversmiths' Company,
Show Rooms: 112 REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.,
Invite inspection of their magnificent Stock of
NOVELTIES IN SOLID SILVER,
specially suitable for Wedding and Complimentary Presents.
The Company's Stock is the finest in the World, and every article is marked in Plain Figures at most Moderate Prices.
The Company's large staff of Assistants are instructed to show Goods and answer any enquiries, but on no account to importune a visitor to purchase.
SOLID SILVER PRESENTS.
SOLID SILVER PRESENTS.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.
GOODS FORWARDED ON APPROVAL.
Goldsmiths' Company, 112 Regent Street, W.

"TRUTH"
CAN BE OBTAINED AT
THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY,
224, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL, Holloway.
VERY POOR and DEPENDENT ENTIRELY UPON VOLUNTARY SUPPORT.
PATIENTS ADMITTED FREE, sickness and poverty the only qualifications for relief.
£10,000 needed annually to support the work of relieving 1,500 in-patients and 25,000 out-patients.
LEWIS H. GLENTON KERR, Secretary.

THE ANCIENT WRITING PAPER OF THE PRIESTS.
NOTE PAPER, 5 Quires, 1s.
COURT ENVELOPES, 1s. per 100.
MOURNING ENVELOPES, 1s. 6d. per 100.
THIN, FOR FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, 5 Quires, 1s.
MOURNING NOTE, 5 Quires, 1s. 6d.
HIERATICA (Regd.)
Every Sheet and Envelope Watermarked HIERATICA. Reject Imitations. Any difficulty in obtaining, send stamps to Hieratica Works, 68, Upper Thames Street, London. Samples Free. Parcels Carriage Paid.

A Feature of the Metropolis. SPIERS & POND'S
CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly Circus, London, W.
EAST ROOM. Finest Cuisine, unsurpassed by the most renowned Parisian Restaurants. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, à la carte and prix fixe. Viennese Band.
GRAND HALL. Musical Dinner 3/6 per head. Accompanied by the Imperial Austrian Band.
WEST ROOM. Academy Luncheon 2/6 Diner Parisien 5/-, during both of which the renowned Mandolin Quartette performs.
BUFFET & GRILL ROOM. Quick service à la carte and moderate prices. Joints in each room fresh from the Spit every half-hour.
AMERICAN BAR. Service of special American Dishes, Grills, &c.
Splendid Suites of Rooms for Military and other Dinners.

TRELOAR'S ORIENTAL CARPETS

TURKEY, PERSIAN, & INDIAN CARPETS,
DAGHESTAN RUGS, &c.,
ANTIQUE CARPETS AND RUGS.

Illustrations of Turkey Carpets sent free on Application.

TURKEY CARPETS have lately been supplied by

TRELOAR & SONS

to the following Institutions, &c.:—

The CONSERVATIVE CLUB, St. James's Street.
The UNITED SERVICE CLUB, Pall Mall.
The ROYAL MARINES, Chatham.
The FRENCH HOSPITAL, Victoria Park.
The LAW SOCIETY CLUB, Chancery Lane.
The ROYAL MARINES, Devonport.
The 2nd ROYAL WALTS REGIMENT, Portsmouth.
The 4th BATTALION KING'S ROYAL RIFLES, Aldershot.
The ROYAL MARINE ARTILLERY, Eastney.
The ROYAL MARINES, Gosport.

If favoured with inquiries we will quote price and forward on approbation any Carpets or Rugs upon receipt of reference or remittance.

TRELOAR & SONS,
68, 69, & 70, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

"THE OLD FAVOURITE."

MAX GREGER'S CARLOWITZ.

SAFEST,
SOUNDEST,
DINNER WINE.

PURE
HUNGARIAN BURGUNDY.

"RICH IN PHOSPHATES."
Baron Liebig.

FROM 15s. PER DOZ.
OF ALL WINE MERCHANTS AND GROCERS.

See that every cork bears the brand
"MAX GREGER."
Without it the wine is not genuine.

RECOMMENDED BY THE MEDICAL PROFESSION FOR UPWARDS OF 35 YEARS.

THE HAIR, TEETH, AND SKIN,

Preserved and Beautified by using ROWLANDS' TOILET ARTICLES

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL

Is Nature's Real Restorer & Nourisher of the Hair. Without it the hair becomes dry and weak; it feeds the hair, removes scurf and harshness, and produces a strong and healthy growth; it is the best tonic and dressing for ladies' hair, and should always be used for children. Also sold in golden colour for fair and golden-haired ladies and children, and for those whose hair has become grey. Sizes, 3s. 6d., 7s., 10s. 6d.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO

is the finest dentifrice; removes all impurities from the teeth, imparts to them a brilliant polish, prevents and arrests decay, and gives a pleasing fragrance to the breath. 2s. 9d.

ROWLANDS' KALYDOR allays all irritability of the skin, removes sunburn, freckles, tan, redness, roughness, &c., cures and heals all cutaneous eruptions, imparts a matchless beauty to the complexion, and a softness and whiteness to the neck, hands, and arms unattainable by any other means. Sizes, 2s. 3d. and 4s. 6d.

Ask Stores and Chemists for Rowlands' Articles.

HAMPTON & SONS Ltd

Invite inspection of their unique collections of

Old Furniture. | Old Porcelain.
Old Tapestries. | Old Sheffield Plate.
Old Embroideries. | Old Silver.

The most extensive range of
GENUINE ANTIQUE FURNITURE
to be seen in London. All articles marked in plain figures at the lowest prices in London.

HAMPTON & SONS
PALL MALL EAST, TRAFALGAR SQUARE.

FOOT'S PATENT TRUNKS

THE TRAVELLERS' DELIGHT.

EVERYTHING AT HAND WHEN WANTED.

A perfected system of sliding drawers, which renders every part of Trunk equally accessible, and enables any article to be instantly removed without disturbing remainder of contents. Avoids confusion, saves time, prevents articles being crushed. Drawers divided and made any depth to suit requirements.

Made various sizes in Compressed Cane, Wood Fibre, &c.

Prices from 40s.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.

T. J. FOOT & SON, 171, New Bond St., London, W.

EDUCATIONAL.

AT MARGATE COLLEGE, MARGATE.
For FIRST-CLASS COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.
Most successful College. Beautiful grounds. Close to the sea. Moderate fees.
Every requisite for first-class school.
London Offices, Imperial-buildings, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS, Limited.
HOLLESLEY BAY, SUFFOLK.
On the fine seaside Estate of the College (1,800 acres), in a splendid climate, students have unique opportunities of receiving a training, practical and theoretical, which will fit them for a career abroad or at home.
Full information from the Director at above Address, or from the LONDON SECRETARY, 11, PALL MALL, S.W.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

Mrs. L. T. MEADE'S New Novel, ON THE BRINK OF A CHASM, is nearly ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

AMÉLIE RIVES'S new Novel, MERIEL: a Love Story, will be ready on May 23. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A LOWDEN SABBATH MORN. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. With 27 full-page Illustrations by A. S. Boyd. Feap. 4to, cloth, 6s.

THROUGH THE GOLD-FIELDS OF ALASKA TO BERING STRAITS. By HARRY DE WINDT. With 34 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

LIFE OF NAPOLEON III. By ARCHIBALD FORBES. With 37 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

THE HERITAGE OF EVE. By H. H. SPETTIGUE.

A WOMAN TEMPTED HIM. By WILLIAM WESTALL, Author of "With the Red Eagle," &c. Second Edition.

WAS SHE JUSTIFIED? By FRANK BARRETT, Author of "Folly Morrison," &c.

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST. By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Beyond the Pale," &c.

FORTUNE'S GATE By ALAN ST. AUBYN, Author of "A Fellow of Trinity."

A WOMAN WORTH WINNING. By G. MANVILLE FENN, Author of "The White Virgin."

COLONEL THORNDYKE'S SECRET. By G. A. HENTY, Author of "Rujub the Juggler."

NEW 3/6 NOVELS.

A RACE FOR MILLIONS. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.

A FOUNTAIN SEALED. By WALTER BESANT. With Frontispiece.

A MODERN DICK WHITTINGTON. By JAMES PAYN.

NULMA. By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED, Author of "Mrs. Tregaskiss."

LOVICE. By Mrs. HUNGERFORD, Author of "Lady Patty."

EVERY INCH A SOLDIER. By M. J. COLQUHOUN. [Shortly.

THE CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH. By CHARLES READE. With 4 Photogravure Frontispieces. A New Edition. Four vols., post 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 1s. 6d. each.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

MISS BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

Just Published, 1 vol., 6s.

ROUGH JUSTICE.

The World says: "Miss Braddon needed some courage to portray such a man, not driven into so dark a crime by a sudden impulse, but carefully nursing his purpose to commit it, and accomplishing that purpose with equal cunning and coolness, and yet to dispense him from visible punishment without shocking the moral sense of her readers. She possessed that courage, and has justified its manifestation."

SIMPKIN & CO., LTD., and all Booksellers.

JUST ISSUED.

THE TEMPLE (London), containing Twelve Artist's Proof Etchings by PERCY THOMAS, R.P.E., and Introductory Notes, &c., by the Master of the Temple (Rev. CANON AINGER).—FROST & REED, 47, Queen's-road, and 8, Clare-street, Bristol; or all Booksellers and Fine Art Dealers.

ON THE STŒCHIOLOGICAL CURE OF

CONSUMPTION,

ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, INFLUENZA, AND ALL THROAT AND LUNG COMPLAINTS.

By JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.

One Shilling, Post Free.

T. BURLEIGH, LATE DAVID STOTT, 370, OXFORD STREET.

DUCKWORTH & CO.'S LIST

NEW NOVELS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE UNKNOWN SEA.

By CLEMENCE HOUSMAN.

"Clemence Housman's story is one of the most remarkable that has been put into our hands for a considerable time."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"We own to a sense of admiration for the gallant effort of Clemence Housman."—Sunday Special.

A MONTE CARLO STORY.

JOCELYN. By JOHN SINJOHN.

"Two of the best comedy characters that we have encountered in recent fiction."—Outlook.

"The love as love is shown with such intensity that it sets the reader's heart athrob; and the Riviera setting is aglow with colour and life."—Daily Mail.

"This powerful piece of fiction should have a wide popularity. It has the strenuousness of life in it."—Dundee Advertiser.

THE FIRE OF LIFE.

By C. K. BURROW.

LITERARY STATESMEN AND OTHERS.

By NORMAN HAPGOOD.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

ESSAYS UPON LORD ROSEBERY, JOHN MORLEY, A. J. BALFOUR, &c.

"Careful pieces of work."—Daily Telegraph.

"The outcome of a clever and charitable thinker."—Manchester Courier.

CRICKET. By the Hon. R. H. LYTTELTON.

Author of "CRICKET" in the BADMINTON LIBRARY.

Sm. crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

"Much good advice. Plenty of instructive gossip."—Times.

"We heartily commend this interesting little manual of a notable cricketer."—Globe.

"Mr. Lyttelton's admirable chapters."—St. James's Gazette.

"A capital little book."—Outlook.

"All the hints and comments are capital."—Athenæum.

"There is not a dull page in the book, nor one from which useful information may not be derived."—Sporting Life.

"A capital cricket book. . . . It is a most admirable budget of experience and philosophy."—Birmingham Post.

PROSPECTUSES and LIST of ANNOUNCEMENTS sent on application.

3, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

NEW BOOKS.

Square Crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, price 6s.

A MIDDY'S RECOLLECTIONS,

1853 to 1860. By Rear-Admiral the Hon VICTOR A. MONTAGU.

"Full of interest as illustrating the life of a midshipman afloat in the last days of the Wooden Navy, and as recording a much larger and more varied share of war experience than has fallen to the lot of most young officers in these latter days."—The Times.

"His accounts of active warfare, of pirate hunting, and shipwreck, are exhilarating, and there are many enlightening pages in the book dealing with punishments in the Navy, the leisure hours of a middy's life on board ship, his duties, and companionships."—Daily Mail.

"The 'Recollections' are told in a free and easy style. There is no straining after effect . . . Whether engaged in work or recreation he is one of the cheeriest of companions; and though his earliest experiences were sometimes of the harshest, like a true and typical sailor he has nothing but admiration for the service."—The Scotsman.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

ARISTOCRACY AND EVOLUTION.

By W. H. MALLOCK.

"With the main idea of this work, which is quite the most important that Mr. Mallock has yet produced, we do not think there can be any dispute, though most of the active sociologists in England either ignore that idea or are openly hostile to it."—Spectator.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

HIS GRACE O' THE GUNNE.

By I. HOOPER.

"A really beautiful story, in which sentiment, romance, and adventure are delightfully mingled. . . . How the youth, being generous at heart, responds to the better influences among which he finds himself, and ends by giving his life to save the younger lady of the house, who is the exquisitely good and sweet heroine of the story, we will not tell. But it is all told admirably in the book. The relations between the child and the young man who has undertaken to be his murderer are indicated with perfect delicacy and pathos, and Mr. Hooper may be congratulated on having added one more to the gallery of ideal children of fiction. If this is, as we suppose, Mr. Hooper's first novel, he has made an excellent beginning, and we hope he will follow it up with equally good works of the same kind."—The Guardian.

In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

THE STORY OF GLADSTONE'S LIFE.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Containing 45 Illustrations, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods.

"This is a charmingly written sketch of Mr Gladstone's public career, with some interesting glimpses at the same time into his private life."—The Observer.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 864 pages, price 3s. 6d. net.

WHO'S WHO, 1898.

"This is undoubtedly the handiest biographical dictionary and compendium of information, referring to prominent persons and their doings, in existence."—Nature.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho-square, London.

New Edition of W. M. Thackeray's Works.

TO BE ISSUED IN THIRTEEN MONTHLY VOLUMES,
LARGE CROWN 8vo, CLOTH, GILT TOP, 6s. EACH.

THE BIOGRAPHICAL EDITION
OF
W. M. THACKERAY'S COMPLETE WORKS.

This New and Revised Edition comprises

Additional Material and hitherto Unpublished Letters, Sketches, and Drawings, Derived from the Author's Original Manuscripts and Note-Books.

AND EACH VOLUME WILL INCLUDE A MEMOIR IN THE FORM OF AN INTRODUCTION,

By Mrs. RICHMOND RITCHIE.

Volume 2, containing
PENDENNIS, with 20 Full-page Illustrations, and 10 Woodcuts.

WILL BE READY ON MAY 17th.

Volume already issued:—

VANITY FAIR, with 20 Full-page Illustrations, 11 Woodcuts, a Facsimile Letter, and a New Portrait.

From Truth:—"Mrs. Richmond Ritchie contributes to each volume of this edition a 'biographical introduction.' Judging from the first instalment, this series of introductions will be as interesting as any set biography could be, and it certainly adds a unique attraction to what is in all respects a handsome edition of Thackeray."

 A Prospectus of the Edition, with Specimen Pages, will be sent post free on application.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place, S.W.

Messrs. METHUEN have just published a New Romance of Spanish Warfare by L. COPE CORNFORD, entitled SONS OF ADVERSITY.

TEN POPULAR NOVELS.
SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

THE STANDARD BEARER. S. R. CROCKETT.
THE CROOK OF THE BOUGH. MENIE MURIEL DOWIE.
SONS OF ADVERSITY. L. COPE CORNFORD.
MISS ERIN. M. E. FRANCIS.
VAUSSORE. FRANCIS BRUNE.
THE PHILANTHROPIST. LUCY MAYNARD.
CROSS TRAILS. VICTOR WAITE.
BIJLI THE DANCER. JAMES BLYTHE PATTON.
ACROSS THE SALT SEAS. J. BLOUNDELLE-BURTON.
BETWEEN SUN AND SAND. W. C. SCULLY.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex-street, W.C.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S
NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

By FRANKFORT MOORE.
THE MILLIONAIRES.
With illustrations by Maurice Grieffenhagen.

The First Large Edition having been at once exhausted, a SECOND EDITION IS NOW READY.
By JOSEPH HATTON.
THE VICAR.
"It glows with life. The spirit of to-day is in it, the men and women of to-day are the actors in it. The Vicar himself is very cleverly drawn; he claims the reader's kindly feeling on his first introduction, and holds it to the end. The heroine, Susannah, is a charming figure. The book is the work of a man who knows the world, and writes about it as it is."—World.

THIS DAY.
NEW NOVEL by FLORENCE MARRYAT.
AN ANGEL OF PITY.

OVER 30,000 COPIES SOLD.
THE HON. PETER STIRLING.
By PAUL L. FORD.
"An excellent story, interesting, and distinctly clever, with a good deal of novel material. The portrait of Peter is charmingly drawn."—Bookman.

By G. E. MITTON.
A BACHELOR GIRL IN LONDON.
"A very fascinating novel. The story is very powerful."—Manchester Courier.
"The story is well told. It has vitality, directness, sincerity. Finely expressed."—Literature.

By S. DARLING BARKER.
MARS.
"This delightful story. Mars is a most lovable girl."—Aberdeen Press.
"There is no doubt as to its merit. 'Mars' is a fascinating study from first to last."—Dundee Advertiser.

London: HUTCHINSON & CO., Paternoster-row.

1/- (BY POST, 1/2½.) 1/-

QUEER STORIES
—FROM—
"TRUTH."
"TRUTH" PUBLISHING OFFICE
10, BOLT COURT, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Eighth Edition, Revised, Cloth 1s. 6d.; Paper, 1s.
THE DIETETIC CURE OF OBESITY (FOODS FOR THE FAT.) By N. E. YORKE DAVIES, L.R.Coll.Phys.Lond., &c. CONTENTS:—Part I.—What Constitutes Robust Health?: Dangerous Conditions due to Corpulency: Weak Heart and Congestive Diseases of the Corpulent: Diet—the only Safe and Permanent Cure: Diet—Safe at any age: Quack Medicines, Drugs and Purgatives, Permanently Injurious or Fatal for this purpose: Foods of Energy and of Heat—their use and ultimate elimination: Errors of Diet—Evils consequent on Food in its Relation to Work: Stimulants and Liquids in Obesity. Part II.—Dietetics of Obesity.
OPINIONS OF THE PRESS:—"This work deserves careful study."—Queen. "The only safe and permanent cure of obesity."—Western Gazette. "This is the very best book on Corpulence that has ever been written."—The Lady.
London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. An Illustrated Treatise based on the special practice and observation of the last 15 years. Price 3s. 6d.; post free, 3s. 8d.
London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

Post free, 1s. 1d.
EXHAUSTION AND PREMATURE DECLINE IN MAN.
A treatise on the restorative effects of Electrolysis.
HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand, London.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, & SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS NOW OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 PAGES) SENT GRATIS AND POST FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.

The List contains Popular Works in Travel, Sport, History, Biography, Science, and Fiction. Also New and Surplus Copies of French, German, Italian, and Spanish Books.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED,
30—34, NEW OXFORD ST.; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. LONDON; AND AT BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

BAEDEKER'S

TOURIST GUIDE - BOOKS.

Illustrated with numerous Maps, Plans, Panoramas, and Views.
12mo, cloth.

GREECE. 8s.
GREAT BRITAIN. 10s.
LONDON AND ITS ENVIRONS, 6s.
BELGIUM AND HOLLAND. 6s.
THE RHINE. 7s
NORTHERN GERMANY. 8s.
SOUTHERN GERMANY. 8s.
AUSTRIA. 7s.
THE EASTERN ALPS. 10s.
NORTHERN ITALY. 8s.
CENTRAL ITALY AND ROME. 7s. 6d.
SOUTHERN ITALY AND SICILY. 6s.
NORWAY AND SWEDEN. 10s.
NORTHERN FRANCE. 7s.
SOUTH-EASTERN FRANCE. 5s.
SOUTH-WESTERN FRANCE. 5s.
PARIS AND ITS ENVIRONS. 6s.
SPAIN AND PORTUGAL. 16s.
SWITZERLAND. 8s.
EGYPT. 15s.
PALESTINE AND SYRIA. 12s.
UNITED STATES. 12s.
CANADA. 5s.
THE TRAVELLER'S MANUAL OF CONVERSATION IN ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, AND ITALIAN. 3s.
CONVERSATION DICTIONARY IN FOUR LANGUAGES: English, French, German, and Italian. 3s.

THE THOROUGH GUIDE SERIES.

Illustrated with numerous Maps and Plans.

Edited by M. J. B. BADDELEY, B.A., and C. S. WARD, M.A.

THE ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT. Net 5s.
SCOTLAND. Part I The Highlands. Net 6s. 6d.
SCOTLAND. Part II. Northern Highlands. Net 3s. 6d.
SCOTLAND. Part III. The Lowlands. Net 4s.
NORTH DEVON and NORTH CORNWALL. Net 3s. 6d.
SOUTH DEVON and SOUTH CORNWALL. Net 4s.
THE PEAK DISTRICT. Net 3s.
THE EASTERN COUNTIES. Net 3s. 6d.
SOUTH WALES. Net 3s. 6d.
NORTH WALES. Net 5s. Part I., net 3s.; Part II., net 2s. 6d.
IRELAND. Part I. Northern Counties. Net 4s.
IRELAND. Part II. Southern Counties. Net 5s.
SURREY and SUSSEX, including TUNBRIDGE WELLS. Net 3s. 6d.
YORKSHIRE. Part I. (East). Net 2s. 6d.
YORKSHIRE. Part II. (West). Net 3s. The Two Parts in One Volume. Net 5s.
ORKNEY and SHETLAND. Net 1s.
THE ISLE OF WIGHT. Net 2s. 6d.

London: DULAU & CO., 87, Soho-square, W.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

HAMPSTEAD-HEATH.

The well-known Freehold Estate of the late Sir Spencer Wells, Bart.

One of the finest of the historical residential properties on the northern heights of London, occupying a truly grand position on the western side of the glorious heath of Hampstead, to which it has an absolutely unparalleled frontage.

A residence for a family of distinction, surrounded by gardens and grounds of remarkable beauty, famous for their luxuriant timber, having an area of 15a. 1r. 0p or 36a. 0r. 21p., embracing most extensive picturesque views, including Harrow and Windsor in the distance.

A perfect and almost matchless country seat, within five miles of Charing Cross; a portion of the land affording charming sites for the erection of other gentlemen's residences.

MESSRS. DEBENHAM, TEWSON, FARMER, & BRIDGEWATER are instructed by the Trustees under the will of the late Sir Spencer Wells, Bart., to SELL, at the MART, on TUESDAY, JUNE 28th, at TWO, in Two Lots, with possession, the very beautiful FREEHOLD RESIDENTIAL PROPERTY, known as Golders Hill, Hampstead Heath, for many years the favourite abode of the late owner.

Lot 1 will comprise the mansion, a picturesque structure with high gables, deep bays, and large outer porch, containing excellent accommodation, approached from the road by a carriage drive with entrance lodge, and enjoying most delightful landscape views; capital modern stabling for nine horses, carriage-houses, covered washing-shed, harness room, groom's room, and loft; well-fitted laundry with bed room, &c., over; dairy and bakehouse; lovely pleasure grounds with groups of fine old forest trees, choice shrubs and conifers, splendid lawns, ornamental sheets of water, summer houses, extensive shady walks, and beautifully undulating park-like meadow land; a large productive kitchen garden walled on three sides, a thriving orchard, ample glasshouses, gardener's cottage, model farmery, and other premises, in all about 15a 1r. 0p.

Lot 2, about 20a. 3r. 21p. of beautifully-timbered, undulating park-like land adjoining Lot 1, and having long frontages to the Heath as well as to West Heath-road, presenting unique sites for the erection of first-class houses. On this lot there is an ornamental entrance lodge next the Heath.

Further details will appear in future advertisements. Illustrated particulars, with plans and conditions of sale may shortly be had of Messrs. FRANCIS & JOHNSON, Solicitors, 26, Austin-friars, E.C.; and (with orders to view) of the Auctioneers, 80, Cheapside.

SOUTH HANTS.—In the attractive and favourite district of Bitterne, three miles from the important town and yachting station of Southampton, which is within two hours of the Metropolis.—The beautiful FREEHOLD PROPERTY known as the Moorlands Estate, formerly the seat of Sir Richard and Lady Glass, comprising a charming moderate-sized mansion, seated on an eminence, and commanding lovely views, with ornamental lodge entrance, first-class stabling, ranges of glasshouses, productive gardens, well-timbered pleasure grounds, and miniature park, together with the home farm adjoining, with its specially good and substantial buildings, cottages, &c., the whole embracing a total area of about 124 acres, and forming, without exception, one of the choicest and best residential properties in the above convenient and favourite part of Hampshire.

PERKINS & SONS (in conjunction with HAMPTON & SONS) are instructed to arrange for the SALE, by AUCTION, of this valuable PROPERTY on FRIDAY, JUNE 3rd, at Southampton (unless an acceptable offer is previously made), in consequence of the death of the late owner, Capt. H. Sholto Douglas. Detailed particulars, with plans and views, may be obtained of Messrs. BRIDGES, SAWTELL, & CO., Solicitors, 23, Red Lion-square, W.C.; of HAMPTON & SONS, 1, Cockspur-street, S.W.; and of PERKINS & SONS, Auctioneers and Surveyors, Southampton.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended.—Medical, &c.; Association, Ltd., 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 (Gerrard).

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

SALE ON ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OF THE LATE OWNER.

The HEAN CASTLE ESTATES, near Tenby.—The very valuable FREEHOLD MANORIAL and RESIDENTIAL ESTATE, known as "Hean Castle," extending to about 635 acres, one mile from Saundersfoot Station on the G.N.R., and within four miles of the fashionable seaside town of Tenby. It comprises a grand baronial, modern, castellated Mansion, occupying a charming position on an eminence backed by forest trees, seated in a beautifully undulating and well-timbered park, and possessing uninterrupted sea frontages to Carmarthen Bay. Several well-cultivated farms. The charming Residence known as "Netherwood" and numerous small accommodation holdings and building land adjoining the port of Saundersfoot. The Castle contains 5 handsome reception-rooms, 18 bed and dressing rooms, all commanding magnificent sea and landscape views. Stabling for 10 horses, and beautiful pleasure grounds and gardens well stocked and finely timbered with grand old specimen shrubs and trees. In the grounds immediately surrounding the Castle are golf links, cricket ground, training gallop, racquet court, and 5 tennis courts. Splendid yachting, sea fishing, and bathing can be enjoyed, the sands of Carmarthen Bay being some of the finest in the world. Good shooting over the Estate and hunting with two packs of foxhounds, also otter hounds. The Castle was erected by the late owner regardless of cost, and the reception rooms are handsomely panelled in oak, ash, and pitch pine. Also the charming FREEHOLD MARINE ESTATE known as "Trevayne," extending to about 310 acres, in the out-liberties of and overlooking the town of Tenby.

It comprises two excellent farms, known as "The Lodge" and "Trevayne." The estate has a very valuable sea frontage of over 1½ miles, and abounds in magnificent sea and landscape views. It affords unlimited facilities for development as a first-class Marine Building Estate, the sands adjoining the property being equal to those at Tenby. Included in the estate are the well-known Monkstone Rocks, forming a natural bay and shelter. Another very desirable and valuable property, known as the "Moreton Estate," extending to about 620 acres, situate near Tenby, with several well tenanted farms and numerous small accommodation holdings. The three estates extend to an area of about 1,560 acres, and produce an actual and fairly estimated income for the castle and park in hand of about £3,000 per annum. All the lands are well let, and offer one of the soundest investments.

MESSRS. HAMPTON & SONS, in conjunction with Messrs. COCKETT & HENDERSON, are instructed to offer the above by Auction, first as a whole, and if not sold in that manner, then in numerous convenient lots to suit all buyers, at the MART, Tokenhouse Yard, London, E.C., on TUESDAY, JUNE 28th, 1898, at TWO o'clock precisely.

Particulars, plans, views, and conditions of sale may be obtained of Messrs. E. F. & H. LANDON, Solicitors, 53, New Broad-street, London, E.C.; Messrs. FOX & WHITTUCK, Solicitors, 33, Corn-street, Bristol; Messrs. HAMPTON & SONS, Estate Agents, 1, Cockspur-street, Pall Mall, London, S.W.; and Messrs. COCKETT & HENDERSON, Estate Agents, 72, Bishopsgate-street, London, E.C.

A COMMANDING BUILDING, suitable for Club, Hotel, Restaurant, Theatre, Music Hall, Stores, Flats, Religious or Philanthropic Institution, or for Commercial Firms requiring large space. — OXFORD MANSION, Oxford Circus, London, W.—To be SOLD by TENDER, on 30th JUNE next, this well-known BUILDING, of striking elevation and fireproof construction, standing on nearly ¼ acre, with four frontages of 100 feet, each within a few yards of the new Oxford Circus Station of the Central London Railway. Six stories; floor space about 54,700 sup. feet; 153 rooms and large central hall and basement; artesian well. Portland lease 58 years.—For particulars and forms of Tender, apply to LEGGATT, RUBINSTEIN, & CO., Solicitors, 5, Raymond-buildings, Gray's Inn, London, W.C.

TATTERSALL'S THURSDAYS' SALES at ALBERT GATE.

Messrs. TATTERSALL beg to give notice that their THURSDAYS' SALES have commenced, and will be continued during the season.

SALES ON MONDAYS AND THURSDAYS.

ALDRIDGE'S.

20 KENTUCKY HORSES.

Mr. Eli Kindeg, of Philadelphia, who sold a consignment of valuable Kentucky HORSES, at Aldridge's, on March 16th, purposes shipping another lot, per s.s. "Victoria" (Wilsons & Furness-Leyland Line, Limited), to arrive May 18th, which will be SOLD by AUCTION, at ALDRIDGE'S, next SATURDAY, MAY 21st. They are all of the highest quality, from 15.2 to 16.2, five and six years old, with great weight, English looking, and shipped expressly to meet the London market; are thoroughly broken, and warranted quiet to ride, quiet in harness, sound in wind and eyes; suitable for landaus, broughams, victorias, and all high-class carriage work, have the grandest of all-round action, and are well worth the attention of gentlemen or the trade requiring something beyond the ordinary in style. On view Thursday, May 19th, until Sale.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide (259 pgs.), 3d., "How to open respectably £20 to £2,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., Euston-rd., Ldn. Hairdressers fitted.—H. MYERS.

AMUSEMENTS.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—The Greatest Combination of Talent in London.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINEE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station.—Gordon's Last Stand at Khartoum. Portrait Model of Emile Zola, &c.—Admission 1s. Children under Twelve, 6d. Extra rooms, 6d.

OPERA and THEATRE TICKETS.—Boxes, Stalls, Dress Circle, and Upper Circle in good positions for "The Opera," and every Theatre in London, can be had at any office of the DISTRICT MESSENGER AND THEATRE TICKET COMPANY. Branches City and West end. Letters and telegrams to 193, Piccadilly, next to Prince's Hall.

THE PATENT "RIGID-CURVE" STROP.

FOR THE HOLLOW GROUND RAZOR.

An indispensable addition to the dressing-bag of military men, clergymen, barristers, actors, men of business, and all whose professions render close, rapid, and repeated shaving a necessity. This Strop is quite different to all others. men to whom easy shaving is a boon are astonished at the solid comfort to be got out of shaving with a razor sharpened on the "Rigid-Curve," a Strop which invariably produces a keener edge than has hitherto been possible by any known means.

Price 3s. 6d., carriage paid. Money returned any time within a month if not approved.

A. HOWARTH, 53, Penn road, Wolverhampton.

AMUSEMENTS.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Sole Lessee, Mr. Frederick Harrison.
Managers, Mr. Frederick Harrison and Mr. Cyril Maude.
EVERY EVENING (except on Saturdays), at 8.30,
THE LITTLE MINISTER, by J. M. Barrie.
Miss WINIFRED EMERY and Mr. CYRIL MAUDE.
MATINEES EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.30.

QUEEN'S HALL.
SUNDAY AFTERNOON CONCERTS.
EVERY SUNDAY, at 3.30.
Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood.
The Queen's Hall Grand Orchestra.
Admission free. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 1s., and 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—THE FIREWORK SEASON has COMMENCED. Magnificent Display every THURSDAY by C. T. Brock & Co. Stupendous Set Piece an Eighth of a Mile long, depicting a Colossal Sea Fight, THE BATTLE OF MANILA BAY. Wonderful novelties in Living Fireworks. Mechanical Moving Devices and Aërial Displays.

"ECCE HOMO!" Munkacsy's Sacred Masterpiece. This famous Work, containing over 70 figures, is NOW ON VIEW for the first time in London at the DOWDESWELL GALLERIES, 160, New Bond-street. Admission One Shilling. 315,000 people inspected the Picture during its exhibition at Budapest, often at the rate of 7,000 daily.

THE ROYAL HORSE SHOW, RICHMOND.—Under the Management of THE RICHMOND (SURREY) HORSE SHOW SOCIETY, Ltd. SEVENTH ANNUAL HORSE SHOW, FRIDAY and SATURDAY, 10th and 11th JUNE, 1898. £1,100 IN PRIZES.
Classes for Hunters, Hacks, Harness Horses, Polo Ponies, Tandems, Four-in-Hands, and Jumpers.
Entries close Saturday, 28th May; or, with Double Fees, Monday, 30th May.
Schedules, &c., of the Secretary, 1, The Little Green, Richmond, Surrey.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

CONCERTS DAILY.
AFTERNOON CONCERTS, 4 p.m. to 6 p.m.
EVENING CONCERTS, 8.45 p.m. to 10.45 p.m.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—
The CONCERT ORCHESTRA FROM THE THEATRE LA SCALA, MILAN, CONSISTING OF SIXTY-EIGHT PERFORMERS. DIRECTOR, SIGNOR LEANDRO CAMPANARI.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—COLLECTIONS of PRODUCTS from ALL PARTS of the EMPIRE. Open free to the public from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.
Dinners (at 5s. and 7s. 6d., or à la Carte) from 6.30 p.m. Luncheons, &c. Orders addressed to Superintendent, Catering Syndicate, Imperial Institute. Telephone No. 623 Kensington.
Communication by Train and Omnibus to South Kensington throughout the day. Covered way communication with the South Kensington Subway.

International Universal Exhibition.

EARL'S COURT, S.W., 1898.
IMRE KIRALFY, Director-General.
Season Tickets, 10s. 6d.,
Can be obtained at the Exhibition and Libraries.
Admission Daily, 1s.
Open 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.
BAND of the 1st GRENADIER GUARDS.
BAND of the HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.
The LONDON EXHIBITIONS ORCHESTRAL BAND.
THE EMPRESS THEATRE.
GRAND PATRIOTIC NAVAL SPECTACLE.
Peace and War. Naval Manœuvres. The Fleet at Night.
Attack on the Enemy's Forts.
TWICE DAILY, at 3.30 and 9 p.m.
Thousands of Reserved Seats at 6d., 1s., and 2s.
THE FLORAL LOUNGE.
The Most Delightful Entertainment Hall in the World.
The Chamounix Minstrels and other Novel Attractions Daily, Free.
The Hungarian Minstrels. American Liliputian Troupe.
Grand Hungarian Feszty Panorama. Royal Javanese Troupe.
Hagenbeck's Zoological Kindergarten. Moorish Camp.
Bella Napoli Troupe. Electric Theatre. Captive Balloon.
THE GREAT WHEEL, 300 ft. HIGH.
South Sea Islanders, "Astarte." Belvedere Tower. Electrophone.
Switchback.

ROYAL MILITARY TOURNAMENT.
19th MAY to 2nd JUNE.
ROYAL AGRICULTURAL HALL.
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE
WILL OPEN the Tournament at 3 p.m. on 19th MAY.
Box Office open at the Hall, Barford-street Entrance, daily, hours 10 till 5.
GRAND HISTORICAL PAGEANT—
"SHOULDER TO SHOULDER."
"Cadiz," "Gibraltar," "Alexandria," "El-Teb."
Performances 19th MAY, at 3 and 8 p.m. Other days, 2 and 7 p.m.

ROYAL MILITARY TOURNAMENT.—Numbered and Reserved Seats—Mornings, 10s., 7s. 6d., and 6s.; or Evenings, 10s., 7s. 6d., 6s., 5s., and 4s., including admission to the Hall. Box Office now open, Barford street, Liverpool-road, N.; and at all Libraries.

AMUSEMENTS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing Director, ARTHUR COLLINS.—THE WHITE HEATHER, by Messrs. Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton. Every Evening, at 7.45. Mrs. John Wood, Miss Kate Rorke, and powerful Co. Original scenery and effects. Box Office now open.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.
Lessees, THE GRAND OPERA SYNDICATE, LTD.
GRAND OPERA EVERY EVENING.
For full particulars see daily papers. Box-office now open.

LYCEUM.—THE MEDICINE MAN.
EVERY NIGHT (except Next Saturday Night) at 8.
Dr. Tregenna.....HENRY IRVING.
Sylvia Wynford.....Miss ELLEN TERRY.
MATINEES Next Saturday and Saturday, May 28, at 2.
HENRY IRVING | Miss ELLEN TERRY.
Box-office (Mr. J. Hurst) open 10 to 5, and 7.30 to 10. Seats also booked by letter or telegram. LYCEUM.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, Mr. HERBERT BEERBOHM TREE.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8,
JULIUS CÆSAR.
MATINEES EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.
Box-office open 10 to 10. Seats booked from 2s. HER MAJESTY'S.

ADELPHI. A. & S. GATTI,
Sole Proprietors and Managers.
Business Manager, Mr. FRED. G. LATHAM.
EVERY EVENING at 8 o'clock.
A Drama in Four Acts, by David Belasco, entitled:
THE HEART OF MARYLAND,
Interpreted by Mr. Charles Frohman's entire New York Company.
Box Office open from 10 till 10.

SAVOY THEATRE.—Last Week of THE GONDOLIERS.—EVENINGS, at 8.30, SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at 2.30. At 7.45, OLD SARAH. On SATURDAY EVENING, May 28, will be produced THE BEAUTY STONE, a Romantic Musical Drama by A. W. Pinero, J. Comyns Carr, and Arthur Sullivan. Box-office 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.—R. D'OYLY CARTE, Manager.

COURT THEATRE, Sloane Square.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.—EVERY EVENING, at 8.30, TRELAWNY OF THE "WELLS," by A. W. Pinero. Doors 8. Commence 8.30. Box-office now open, 10 to 10. Telephone No. 3,031. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY.—EVERY EVENING, and SATURDAY MATINEE. Mr. George Edwardes's Company in THE GEISHA. The book by Owen Hall. Lyrics by Harry Greenbank. Music by Sydney Jones.

GARRICK.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. T. BRICKWELL.
EVERY EVENING, at 9,
TOO MUCH JOHNSON.
Doors open at 7.45. Carriages at 11.

ST. JAMES'S.—Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER,
Sole Lessee and Manager.
LAST NIGHTS OF THE CONQUERORS.
TO-NIGHT, and EVERY EVENING, at 8.15,
THE CONQUERORS,
A Drama, in Four Acts, by Paul M. Potter.
Box-office open 10 to 10. ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

COMEDY THEATRE, Panton-street, Haymarket.
Sole Manager, Mr. CHARLES HAWTREY.
TO-NIGHT, and EVERY EVENING, at 8.30,
LORD AND LADY ALGY,
an Original Light Comedy, in Three Acts, by R. C. Carton.
Mr. CHARLES HAWTREY and Company.
At 8, a Duologue, entitled CONSTANCY, by Cyril Hallward.
MATINEES SATURDAYS, May 21, 28, and June 18; and WEDNESDAYS, June 1, 8, 22, and 29, at 3. Box-office open 10 to 10.

VAUDEVILLE.
Sole Lessees and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
EVERY EVENING, at 8.20.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.30,
THE FRENCH MAID,
With New Songs, Dances, and Dresses.
The very successful Musical Comedy by Basil Hood and Walter Slaughter.
Box-office open 10 to 10.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Directors, WILLIAMSON and MUSGROVE, Limited.
EVERY EVENING, at 8, Casino Theatre Company, of New York, in
THE BELLE OF NEW YORK.
"The subject of all the town talk."
Box-office now open at the Theatre from 10 till 10.
MATINEE EACH WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.

CRITERION THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.—EVERY EVENING at 8.15, THE LIARS, by Henry Arthur Jones. Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING, New Ballet, THE PRESS, and Sporting Sketch, THE RACE. Grand VARIETIES. Doors open at 7.45.

LONDON PAVILION.—Dan Leno, Marguerite Cornille, Brothers Griffiths, Harriet Vernon, Harry Randall, Bessie Wentworth, Billie Barlow, G. W. Hunter, Rosa Glenn, Leslie's Dogs, and many others. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s.—Manager, Mr. FRANK GLENISTER.

PALACE, Shaftesbury-avenue.—The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Full Licence. Prices from 6d. Doors open 8.—Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BATH.—LANSDOWN GROVE HOTEL.—Desirable residence, in beautifully wooded grounds, 400 feet above sea level, facing south, and protected from north and east. Air dry and bracing. Assembly and Pump Rooms within easy distance. Omnibus free to and from Hot Mineral Baths. Billiards, Tennis Lawn

BONCHURCH HOTEL, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, one mile from Ventnor Station.
A comfortable, quiet, and most beautifully-situated Hotel. Pretty garden. Good sea view.
H. RIBBANDS, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—South aspect, 150 rooms, electric light throughout, passenger lift, first-class cuisine, winter garden and lounge, covered tennis court. Turkish, sea-water, and medicated Baths. The Hotel is within two minutes' walk of the Golf Links.—For tariff, address W. KNEESE, Manager.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HIGHCLIFFE HOTEL. Unrivalled position, West Cliff, full south. Splendid sea view. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Supplies from Alderney Dairy Farm. Telephone 27.—J. KILNER, Proprietor.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.—Centre of sea front. Electric Light throughout. Lift to all floors. Bicycle room. Inclusive terms if desired from 10s. 6d. to 15s. per day.—For particulars apply to A. D. HOOK, Manager.

CARBIS BAY HOTEL, Cornwall. The very spot to obtain rest and quietude. Overlooking the finest bay in England. Mild yet bracing climate. Within easy distance of London by G. W. R. Splendid Golf Links. "A more beautiful spot for residence could hardly be imagined."—Truth.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Lees. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor. Sanitation Certified.

FOLKESTONE.—The LEAS HOTEL.—Situated in private grounds. Adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Refurnished throughout. Passenger lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff. Good golf links and tennis court.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

JERSEY.—GRAND HOTEL.—The only first-class modern Hotel facing the sea, and full south, the largest, the best appointed, and the up-to-date Hotel in the Channel Islands. Liberal Management.
D. DE LEIDI, Manager.

MALVERN—The IMPERIAL HOTEL occupies the best position, and receives visitors en pension. The golf-links (18 holes) are one of the best in England. Capital stabling for hunters. Droitwich Brine, Turkish and large Swimming Bath in separate buildings.—For tariff, apply to the Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

SANDGATE.—ROYAL KENT HOTEL, a favourite resort of Ruskin. An ideal summer and winter residence, delightfully situated in its own grounds, facing the sea. Redecorated and refurnished. New Coffee-room, Smoking-room, and Conservatory have recently been added Fifteen minutes from Folkestone. Omnibus meets all trains Sandgate Station.—J. E. TANARE, Prop.

SOUTHSEA.—ROYAL BEACH MANSIONS HOTEL.—Largest in Southsea, splendidly situated on the beach; 300 yards nearer the sea than any other public hotel on the line of marine terraces. Passenger lift. Inclusive terms from £3. 13s. 6d. per week. Entirely under new management.—M. ECCLES, Manageress.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
F. FISCHER Manager.

All applications for spaces in this List should be made to the ADVERTISEMENT MANAGER,
"TRUTH" BUILDINGS, CARTERET STREET,
QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, S.W.

BUXTON

DERBYSHIRE.

Highest Town in England.
On the Mountain Limestone.
1,000 feet above sea level.

Centre of the picturesque Peak District. Pure Air. Charming Scenery.

HOT MINERAL-WATER BATHS FOR GOUT, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, &c.

NATURAL TEMPERATURE 82° FAHRENHEIT.

Finest Public Gardens at any Health Resort in Europe, with Pavilion, Theatre, Concert-Hall, Tennis, Bowls, etc. Golf Links (18 holes).

For ILLUSTRATED GUIDE, with Tariffs of the leading Hotels, Hydropathics, Boarding and Lodging Houses, send postage-stamp to THE CLERK, COUNCIL OFFICES, TOWN HALL, BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.

AVONDALE HOTEL & RESTAURANT

(Corner of Dover-street and Piccadilly).
MAGNIFICENT SUITES of ROOMS, including Ladies' Reception-room.
POLIAKIN'S renowned STRING BAND (three years at the Savoy) plays nightly during Dinner and Supper.
LUNCHEON, 4s.; DINNER, 10s. 6d.; SUPPER, 4s.
A SPECIAL ROYAL ACADEMY LUNCHEON at 2s. 6d. served daily.
The Wines have been most carefully selected by connoisseurs.
Manager: Mons. GARIN. } late of the Savoy Hotel.
Chef de Cuisine: Mons. DUTRU. }

AND

HATCHETT'S RESTAURANT.

UNDER AVONDALE HOTEL.

Under entirely new management. First-class Cuisine and Unrivalled Cellar of Wines. Moderate Prices. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, Table d'Hôte, Grill-room, and à la Carte. Arrangements are being made for a String Band to play nightly during Dinner and Supper.
Manager: Mons. EUGENE.

ILFRACOMBE.

ILFRACOMBE HOTEL.

Famous for its high-class Cuisine and general comfort.
The PRINCIPAL and ONLY HOTEL on the SEASHORE.
An ideal position. 250 rooms. Grounds five acres. Tennis, Croquet. Splendid Swimming Bath. Elegant Lounge Hall. Moderate tariff. Terms "en pension."
H. R. GROVER, Manager.

RAMSGATE.

THE GRANVILLE.

A FINE HOTEL] DOVER [IN DOVER BAY

Accommodates 400 guests. Is superbly appointed, with all the comforts of a well-arranged mansion, at moderate cost. Perfect cuisine. The Dover Golf Links for use of Hotel Burlington visitors. The finest coast hotel in England. Brochure and Tariff free.

Facing the Pleasure Pier and in centre of Dover Bay.

HOTEL BURLINGTON

HASTINGS. Due South, Facing Sea.

QUEEN'S HOTEL,

LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED.
Sunny, and most sheltered position in Hastings and St. Leonards.
ELECTRIC LIGHT. PASSENGER ELEVATOR.
Moderate Tariff. Hotel Flys attend the trains.
WILLIAM GLADE, Manager.

FOLKESTONE.

WEST CLIFF HOTEL.

(180 Apartments)

Now opened for the reception of Visitors.
Important Structural Alterations and Additions have been made since October last.
The Hotel is under the personal superintendence of the Proprietor, to whom all communications should be addressed.
Electric Light and Passenger Lift.

CLARENDON HOTEL, Princes-street, Edinburgh.—First-class Family Hotel. Opposite Castle, and overlooking the gardens. Kitchen lately fitted up on top of Hotel. Recommended to American visitors. Under the personal management of the new Proprietor.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.

THE PALACE HOTEL.

200 rooms. Finest position. Own grounds. American elevator. Tariff, with plan of rooms and sketch map of Buxton, on application. A. CROSS, Manager.

FURNESS ABBEY HOTEL

SPACIOUS COFFEE, DRAWING, AND SMOKE ROOMS. WELL-APPOINTED BILLIARD ROOM.

IN THE CENTRE OF LAKELAND.

SPIERS & POND, Ltd.

MARGATE.—WHITE HART HOTEL.
Sixty Bedrooms, many commanding magnificent sea views. Famous for its perfect English cooking and choice cellar. Most invigorating sea air in England. Under supervision of Proprietor—G. MARSHALL.

LOWESTOFT GRAND HOTEL.

Rooms may now be engaged for Whitsuntide. Special Terms for May, June, and July (Whitsuntide excepted).

SUFFOLK AGRICULTURAL SHOW, June 2nd and 3rd.

LONDON AND SOUTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

WHITSUNTIDE HOLIDAYS.

CHANNEL ISLANDS, HAVRE, St. MALO, and CHERBOURG (via Southampton).

DAYLIGHT TRIP TO THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.—CHEAP THIRD CLASS RETURN TICKETS will be issued to GUERNSEY and JERSEY, on SATURDAY, 28th of MAY, from Waterloo, Vauxhall, Kensington (Addison-road), and Clapham Junction, by the 8.55 a.m. and 9.45 p.m. Trains from Waterloo.

Also to ST. MALO, on FRIDAY, 27th MAY, and CHERBOURG, SATURDAY, 28th MAY, by the 6.0 p.m. Train from Waterloo, and to HAVRE on FRIDAY, 27th, and SATURDAY, 28th MAY, by the 9.45 p.m. Train from Waterloo.

SPECIAL EXTRA FAST TRAINS will leave WATERLOO as follows:—

ON FRIDAY, 27th, and SATURDAY, 28th MAY.

At 2.5 p.m. EXPRESS for CHRISTCHURCH and BOURNEMOUTH.

ON SATURDAY, 28th MAY.

At 3.0 p.m. for CAMELFORD, DELABOLE, WADEBRIDGE, and BODMIN.

At 5.50 p.m for BARNSTAPLE, ILFRACOMBE, BIDEFORD, and other NORTH DEVON STATIONS; also to stations on the SIDMOUTH and BUDLEIGH SALTERTON BRANCHES.

CHEAP PERIOD EXCURSIONS will run from Waterloo as under, calling at the principal Stations:—

ON THURSDAY, 26th MAY.

At 7.40 a.m. to PLYMOUTH, DEVONPORT, EXETER, TAVISTOCK, LAUNCESTON, CAMELFORD, WADEBRIDGE, BODMIN, OKEHAMPTON, HOLDSWORTHY, BARNSTAPLE, ILFRACOMBE, BIDEFORD, (for Clovelly), YEOVIL, EXMOUTH, TEMPLECOMBE, &c.

At 8.5 a.m. to ANDOVER, SALISBURY, AXMINSTER, HONITON, SEATON, SIDMOUTH, BUDLEIGH, SALTERTON, and all Stations between Salisbury and Exeter inclusive. also MARLBOROUGH, SWINDON, CIRENCESTER, CHELTENHAM, BATH, BURNHAM, BRIDGWATER, SHEPTON MALLET, RADSTOCK, WINCANTON, &c.

At 9.15 a.m. to LYNTON, GUNNISLAKE, CALLINGTON, and LISKEARD.

At 10.10 a.m. and 1.0 p.m. to WINCHESTER, SOUTHAMPTON (West), BROCKENHURST, CHRISTCHURCH, and BOURNEMOUTH.

At 11.0 a.m. to LYNTON, BUDE, PADSTOW, ST. COLUMB and NEWQUAY.

At 1.0 p.m. to WEYMOUTH, DORCHESTER, WIMBORNE, WAREHAM, CORFE CASTLE, SWANAGE, &c.

ON FRIDAY, 27th MAY.

At 10.35 p.m. for EXETER, OKEHAMPTON, DEVONPORT, PLYMOUTH, BARNSTAPLE, ILFRACOMBE, BIDEFORD, TORRINGTON, &c.

ON SATURDAY, 28th MAY.

FOUR DAYS' EXCURSIONS as follows:—

At 1.10 p.m. to WINCHESTER, SOUTHAMPTON, GOSPORT, ROMSEY, SALISBURY, LYMINGTON, NEWPORT, COWES, YARMOUTH, &c.

At 1.15 p.m. to PETERSFIELD, ROWLAND'S CASTLE and PORTSMOUTH and STATIONS in the ISLE of WIGHT.

Long period Tickets will also be issued to Stations in the Isle of Wight.

For additional accommodation to the Isle of Wight, Excursions on Whit-Sunday and Monday to Southampton, Portsmouth, Isle of Wight, Bournemouth, &c., see Handbills and Excursion Programmes, which can be obtained at any of the Company's Stations or London Receiving Houses, or from G. T. White, Superintendent of the Line, Waterloo Station, S.E.

CHAS. J. OWENS, General Manager.

LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

EPSOM SUMMER RACES.—THE SHORTEST ROUTE.
ON TUESDAY, MAY 24th, WEDNESDAY, 25th (Derby), THURSDAY, 26th, and FRIDAY, 27th (Oaks).

CHEAP TRAINS from WATERLOO, Vauxhall, Hammersmith, Kensington (Addison Road), West Brompton, Chelsea, Battersea, Clapham Junction, and Wimbledon Stations to EPSOM, on Tuesday and Thursday, up to 11.20 a.m., and SPECIAL FAST TRAINS from 11.30 a.m. to 1.35 p.m., CHEAP TRAINS on Wednesday (the Derby) and Friday (the Oaks) up to 9.5 a.m., and SPECIAL FAST TRAINS from 9.30 a.m. till 1.35 p.m.

A SPECIAL DIRECT TRAIN will leave WATERLOO, stopping at Vauxhall only, at 1.30 p.m. on each of the Race Days, arriving at EPSOM 2.0 p.m.

KENSINGTON LINE.—Trains leave Kensington for Clapham Junction (calling at West Brompton two and Chelsea five minutes later) at 6.58, 7.20, 8.29, 8.40, 9.12, 9.33, 10.13, 10.40, 11.10, 11.40 a.m., 12.9, 12.49, and 1.26 p.m.

For the convenience of Passengers from the Northern and Midland Counties, arrangements have been made with the various Railway Companies to issue Through Tickets to Epsom which will be available from Waterloo, Kensington, Ludgate Hill, Vauxhall, and Clapham Junction.

A SPECIAL FAST TRAIN (1st Class only) for WATERLOO will leave EPSOM at 4.0 p.m. each day, calling only at WIMBLEDON, CLAPHAM JUNCTION, and VAUXHALL.

The Company's West End Office, 30, Regent-street, Piccadilly Circus, and the Central Office, 9, Grand Hotel-buildings, Charing Cross, and Messrs. Lavington Bros., 69, Old Bailey, E.C., will remain open until 10.0 p.m. on May 23rd, 24th, 25th, and 26th, for the sale of Tickets and giving general information.

The Cheap Excursion Tickets from LONDON to Ewell, Epsom, Ashstead, and Leatherhead will not be issued on May 24th, 25th, 26th, and 27th.

NOTE.—Tickets taken by the Brighton Company's line to Epsom are not available to return by the London and South Western short quick route.

CHAS. J. OWENS, General Manager.

LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

COLLECTION, CONVEYANCE, AND DELIVERY OF PASSENGERS' LUGGAGE IN ADVANCE.

The Personal Luggage of Passengers will, on application, be COLLECTED, FORWARDED IN ADVANCE, AND DELIVERED at residence or hotel in North Wales, the English Lake District, Blackpool, Morecambe, and other Tourist Resorts at the

NOMINAL CHARGE OF 6d. PER PACKAGE,

which must be paid when the luggage is collected. No package must exceed 112 lbs. in weight.

Tickets dated beforehand to suit the convenience of passengers can be obtained at any of the Company's Stations and at the Receiving Offices, where also orders can be given for Collection of Luggage.

By availing themselves of this arrangement, passengers will be relieved of the trouble and inconvenience of looking after their luggage when travelling. In cases where apartments at destination have not been secured beforehand, the luggage can be addressed, "To be called for," at the Cloak Room of the arrival station.

FRED. HARRISON, General Manager.

SPA.—Grand Fêtes during the Summer Season. Return Fare, 42s. 2d. The Ardennes (Cheapest Continental Holiday), Brussels (for Waterloo), Spa, Switzerland, &c., viâ Harwich-Antwerp, every week-day.

ROYAL MAIL ROUTE TO HOLLAND.

HARWICH-HOOK Route to the CONTINENT daily (Sundays included) by the G.E.R. Co.'s twin-screw steamers. Cheapest route to Germany and quickest to Holland. To Amsterdam, 11 hours.

Passengers leave London (Liverpool Street Station) at 8.30 p.m. for the Hook of Holland, and at 8.40 p.m. for Antwerp. Direct service to Harwich from Scotland, the North, and Midlands. Restaurant car from York. HAMBURG by G.S.N. Co.'s steamers, Wednesdays and Saturdays. Cheap tickets and tours to all parts of the Continent. Read "Walks in Belgium," price 6d., post 8d. Particulars at the G.E.R. Co.'s American Rendezvous, 2, Cockspur-street, S.W.; or of the Continental Manager, Liverpool Street Station, E.C.

ORIENT COMPANY'S PLEASURE CRUISE

by their

Steamship "LUSITANIA," 3,912 tons register.

From London 15th June, Leith 17th June.
To the finest FIORDS in NORWAY
and the NORTH CAPE (for Midnight Sun),
arriving back in London 11th July.
Other Cruises to follow.

High-class Cuisine, String Band, Electric Light, &c.

Managers { F. GREEN & CO. / ANDERSON, ANDERSON, & CO. } Head Offices: Fenchurch-avenue.

For passage apply to the latter firm at 5, Fenchurch-avenue, London, E.C.; or to the West End Branch Office, 16, Cockspur-street, S.W.

JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, HONOLULU, FIJI, NEW ZEALAND, and ROUND THE WORLD.

CANADIAN PACIFIC ROUTE,

For berths or descriptive pamphlets, apply CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, or 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square, S.W.

SIX GUINEAS.—GENEVA TOUR, nine days, extensions to Chamounix (Mont Blanc), Zermatt (Matterhorn), St. Gothard, Oberland, &c. Lecturers, Sir Robert Ball, Mr. Edward Whymper, Dr. Lunn. Departures weekly from May 10.—Details from Secretary, 5, Endsleigh-gardens, Euston, N.W.; 32, Piccadilly, W.; 47, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.; 3, Charing-cross, S.W.

HOLIDAYS ABROAD.

DIEPPE.

AN IDEAL SEASIDE RESORT FOR ENGLISH VISITORS.

ONLY FIVE HOURS FROM LONDON.

Two English Churches. Superb cycling roads. Excellent Golf Links (Sunday play). Best Casino in Europe (June to October). Dancing, &c.

Information free from L. BRAU, 140, Grand Rue, Dieppe, France.

NORWAY AND BALTIC CRUISES.

The S.Y. VICTORIA sails JULY 2nd, for 25 days, to NORTH CAPE and NORWEGIAN FIORDS.

To be followed by other cruises on July 30th, and August 18th.

The only modern pleasure cruiser with large airy cabins.

For particulars, apply Manager, 4, Regent-street; GRINDLAY & CO., 55, Parliament-street; or any of THOS. COOK & SONS' Offices.

12 GUINEA NORWAY CRUISES from NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE—FORTNIGHTLY.

"MIDNIGHT SUN," 3,178 Tons, 3,500 H.P.

Finest YACHTING STEAMER afloat. NO UPPER BERTHS.

Sailings:—May 28; June 11, 25; July 9, 23; and August 6, 20.

Special Cruises, September 3rd and 17th.

Fares from 12 Guineas, including first-class table.

For itinerary, &c., apply to the PASSENGER AGENT, ALBION S.S. Co., Ltd., Mercantile Chambers, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

A REMARKABLE PIPE! Why? Because

The "MASTA" Pipe

Absolutely carries out what is claimed for it—viz., Simplicity of Construction, Perfect Freedom from Nicotine, No Choking, Cool, Dry, Sweet, Clean, & Healthful Smoking.

Prices from 1/6, 2/6, 3/6. Your Tobacconist will supply it. If any delay, write The "Masta" Patent Pipe Co., 153, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

What Smokers say:—C. A. HAYWARD, Melville House, Quarry-crescent, Hastings, writes—"I have hitherto tried nearly all the patent pipes introduced, but your 'Masta' Pipe eclipses them all."

A RECORD IN SAUCE.

OVER 8,000,000 BOTTLES SOLD IN ONE YEAR.

YORKSHIRE RELISH

THE MOST DELICIOUS SAUCE IN THE WORLD.

Makes the Plainest Viands Palatable, and the Daintiest Dishes more Delicious.

Enriches Soups, Stews, Chops, Steaks, Fish, etc.

Sold in Bottles, 6d., 1s., and 2s. each.

Sole Proprietors: GOODALL, BACKHOUSE, & CO., LEEDS.

A Cup of Chocolat Suchard

accurately prepared, contains all the delicious, soothing, and restorative properties known to exist in Cocoa. Cup for cup, "Chocolat Suchard" is noted for its superiority of flavour and aroma over all other like preparations.

Chocolat Suchard

owes these characteristics not only to the choice materials it is made of, but equally so, perhaps, to the clean and careful methods by which it is uniformly prepared. The recognition of these sterling qualities has led to a largely increased consumption of Chocolat Suchard all over the world.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

All Chocolates, Cocoas and Bonbons bearing the name of Suchard are of the highest quality only.

70 YEARS' REPUTATION.

For Longhand, Shorthand, Pen-and-Ink Drawing, Music-Writing, indeed, whenever a Pen is necessary, use only a "SWAN."

Adds immeasurably to Celerity and Comfort in writing. Of all Pens most famous.

Made in 3 sizes at

10s. 6d.

16s. 6d.

25s.

UP TO £18 18s.

POST FREE.

MABIE, TODD & BARD,

DEPT. C. I.

93, Cheapside, London, E.C.

95a, RECENT ST., W., and 3, EXCHANGE ST., MANCHESTER.

THE "PATTISSON" HYGIENIC CYCLE SADDLE.

REMOVES THE ONE GREAT DRAWBACK OF CYCLING—viz., PERINEAL PRESSURE, AND GIVES COMFORT, HEALTH, and EASE.

ADOPTED AS STANDARD BY HUMBER & CO., Ltd.
ELSWICK CYCLES CO., Ltd.
SWIFT CYCLES CO., Ltd.
JOHN GRIFFITHS CYCLE CORPORATION, Ltd.

"PATTISSON" HYGIENIC SADDLE.

FROM AN AGENT.—"The saddle suits splendidly; in fact, the gentleman WOULD HAVE HAD TO GIVE UP RIDING if he had not got it!"

FROM A LADY.—"The Saddle has enabled me to ride very much farther than I could on any other I have tried, and I have tried many."

ANATOMICALLY PERFECT.

THE BRITISH "PATTISSON" HYGIENIC CYCLE SADDLE CO., LTD.,

WEST-END AGENCY FOR

HUMBER & CO., LIMITED,

86, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

REPAIRING AND ENAMELLING WORKS, 8, BLENHEIM ST., BOND ST., W

Toilet "Lanoline" For Delicate and Sensitive Skins. 6d. and 1s.

"LANOLINE" Toilet Preparations "LANOLINE"

Dorting Brand. from all Chemists.

Wholesale Depôt:—67 HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON.

"Lanoline" Toilet Soap For Health and Beauty of the Skin. 6d. PER TABLET. 3 IN A BOX 1s. 6d.

HAVE YOU TRIED . . .

CEPHALIA

For HAY FEVER, NEURALGIC PAINS, & COLDS in the HEAD, &c.?

If not, send 13½d. for a Box to

REECE & CO., Medical Hall, Piccadilly, London.

EFFECT SIMPLY MIRACULOUS.

VINOLIA TOILET REQUISITES.

4d PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP
(For Family Use).

For Delicate, Sensitive, Irritable Skins.

The CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST reports:
"An ideal soap, delightfully perfumed."

1/- per box of 3 Tablets.

6d FLORAL VINOLIA SOAP
(For Private Use).

Keeps the Skin as soft as Velvet.

The MEDICAL NEWS reports:
"Beautifully emollient and softening to the skin."

1/6 per box of 3 Tablets.

10d TOILET VINOLIA SOAP
(OTTO)

Scented with Choice Otto of Rose Perfume.

Beautifies the Complexion.

The GENTLEWOMAN reports:
"Strongly recommended to keep the skin smooth and free from roughness."

2/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

6d BLONDEAU PERFUMES
Concentrated, Delicate, Pure.

*Vinolia Bouquet, *Marequil, *Jequilla, *Losaria, Wood Violet, White Heliotrope, Ess. Bouquet, Frangipanni, Jockey Club, Maréchal Niel, Millefleur, White Rose, Jasmin, Musk Rose, Honeysuckle, New Mown Hay, Lily of the Valley, Violet, | Rondeletia, Hyacinth, Ylang Ylang, Stephanotis, Opoponax, Patchouli, Musk, Ambergris, Amaryllis, White Lilac, Narcissus, Chypre, Violette de Parme, Mignonette, Clematis, Wallflower, *Rhine Violets, | Peau d'Espagne.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/-, and 5/- per bottle.
*These perfumes are not supplied in the 6d. quality.

1/- VINOLIA HAIR WASH

DRY. Freshens and cleanses the Hair, and preserves it free from any oily moist appearance.

MOIST. Imparts a natural gloss to the Hair

1/- per Bottle.

Each in 3 odours: Portugal, Rose, and Violet.

1/1½ VINOLIA CREAM

For Itching, Face Spots, Sunburn, &c.

The LANCET reports:
"An emollient cream for the skin in eczema, rash, eruptions, &c."

1/1½, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

1/- VINOLIA POWDER

For Redness, Roughness, Toilet Nursery, &c.

The LADY'S PICTORIAL reports:
"Superseding the old-fashioned toilet powders which are apt to cause acne spots on the face by blocking up the pores of the skin."

In White, Pink, and Cream Tints.
1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.
6d

(STICKS AND FLAT CAKES.)
Causes no Blotches.
STICKS: Premier 6d., Toilet 1/-, 1/6, 2/6, Vestal 2/-.
FLAT CAKES: Premier 1/-, Toilet 2/-, Vestal 2/6.

6d LYPSYL.

A Coralline Emollient for Dry, Rough, Cracked, or Pallid Lips.
In Rose-Red and White Tints, 6d. and 1/- a Tube

6d VINOLIA LAVENDER WATER.

Natural and Very Lasting.

Contains the finest Essential Oils, Concentrated, therefore the Most Economical.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, and 3/6.

2/- VINOLIA TOILET WATER.

This is prepared with delicate, refreshing perfumes, and is a most exquisite and delightful preparation to use either clear or in water for the Toilet or in the bath.

2s. per Bottle.

6d PREMIER VINOLIA DENTIFRICE

Aromatic, Tonic, Refreshing, Preservative.
Keeps the Teeth Ivory White.
Premier in Round Box and Glass Bottle, 6d.
English—2/6.
American—1/6.

6d VINOLIA TOOTH SOAP.

An exquisite preparation for the Teeth. Delightfully perfumed and free from any injurious ingredients.

In Round Metal Box, 6d.

6d VINOLIA TOOTH PASTE.

Delicately Perfumed.

Whitens and Cleanses the Teeth, without in any way injuriously affecting the dental structures.

In Collapsable Tube, 6d.

6d BLONDEAU Inexhaustible Lavender SMELLING SALTS.

These Smelling Salts are of exceptional Strength and most Refreshing. They are agreeably scented, the pleasant odour of Lavender being very pronounced.

6d. per Bottle.

6d VINOLIA EAU DE COLOGNE.

Fragrant. Refreshing.
As fine as can possibly be made.

The "Court Circular" reports:
"Vinolia Eau de Cologne we consider is absolutely unequalled for strength, purity, and delicacy of aroma."

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/3, and 5/6.

3d per 2-oz. Packet. VINOLIA VIOLET POWDER.

Sanitary. Antiseptic. Soothing.

Specially prepared for Toilet and Nursery use.

In 2-oz. and ¼-lb. Packets, 3d. & 6d.
In ¼-lb. Tins, 6d.
In ½-lb. Tins, 9d.

VINOLIA COMPANY, Ltd., MALDEN CRESCENT, LONDON, N.W.

POSITIVELY PRODUCES HAIR.

STOPS IT FALLING OUT.

KEEPS IT ITS NATURAL COLOUR.

PREVENTS IT GOING GREY.

BEST FOR BEARDS AND MOUSTACHES.

"TATCHO"

[THE "GEORGE R. SIMS" HAIR RESTORER.]

GROWS BEAUTIFUL BOUNTIFUL HAIR.

MAKES WOMEN'S TRESSES SOFT AND SILKEN.

A DELIGHTFUL HAIR WASH AND TONIC.

BEST FOR THE TOILET TABLE.

"TATCHO" is sold by all Chemists and Hairdressers throughout the World in Bottles, 2s. 9d. and 5s., or can be had post-free direct from the office, 11, Farringdon-avenue, E.C., on receipt of Postal Order for 3s. or 5s. 4d. Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "George R. Sims" Hair Restorer Company, and crossed Union Bank.

"GEORGE R. SIMS" HAIR RESTORER COMPANY, Ltd., 11, Farringdon-avenue, City, E.C.

The Purest and the Nicest.

Hovis Bread

Perfectly Self Digestive.

Hovis Bread is baked and delivered daily by all good class Bakers in the British Isles; Hovis Biscuits are sold by most Grocers and Bakers; or 6d. and 1s. Samples of Bread and Biscuits will be sent on receipt of stamps by THE HOVIS-BREAD FLOUR Co., Ltd., Millers, Macclesfield.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from falling off.
Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.
Being delicately perfumed it leaves no unpleasant odour.
IS NOT a dye, and therefore does not stain the skin or even white linen.
Should be in every house where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.
Ask your Chemist or Hairdresser for

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per large Bottle.

Prepared only by the

ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Ltd.,
33, FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

IS THE BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE IN THE WORLD.

Prevents the Decay of Teeth.
Renders the Teeth Pearly White.
Is perfectly Harmless and Delicious to the Taste.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER.

Put up in Glass Jars, price 1s.

Buy the 4711 Eau de Cologne

IT IS THE BEST, GENUINE, STRONGEST,
MOST LASTING,
MOST REFRESHING
AND INVIGORATING.

Insist upon the "4711" Brand.
REFUSE ALL SUBSTITUTES.

Of most Dealers in First-class Perfumes. Case of 6 Bottles, carriage paid, for 12/6; or Sample Bottle, 2/3 post free.

THE 4711 DEPOT, 62, NEW BOND ST., LONDON, W.

FARADAY & SON's

Electric Light Fittings

New Designs
(in Classic and Renaissance)
for Season '98

2 & 3 BERNERS ST. LONDON W

Lewis and Allenby

REGENT STREET and CONDUIT STREET,

Invite the honour of a visit to inspect an unrivalled collection of exclusive Novelties and Original Conceptions for the present season now on view in their Costume, Mantle, Millinery, Outfitting, Sunshade, Glove, and Lace Departments.

Silk Department.

A special display of English and Foreign Silks, Taffeta, Glacé Silks in Stripes, Checks, Bayadère, and fancy designs from 3s. per yard. Foulards and Satin Oriental in the newest colourings and exclusive designs from 2s. 9d. per yard. Rich Silks for Court Gowns and Evening wear, made specially for Lewis & Allenby, from 7s. 9d. per yard.

Dress Department.

All the newest fabrics and colourings from 1s. 11d. per yard.

Patterns and Estimates Post Free on Application.

LEWIS & ALLENBY, Ltd.
REGENT STREET and CONDUIT STREET, W.

MAPLE & CO
Direct Importers
FINEST
TURKEY CARPETS
TURKEY CARPETS
TURKEY CARPETS

From Five Pounds
The Largest Stock in the World
From Five Pounds

FINEST
TURKEY CARPETS
TURKEY CARPETS
TURKEY CARPETS

Direct Importers
LONDON PARIS SMYRNA
MAPLE & CO

MELLIN'S FOOD

is known

Throughout the World

as a perfect diet for children, but

MELLIN'S EMULSION

COD LIVER OIL

is unknown to

Hundreds of Thousands

who are troubled with Coughs, Colds, Loss of Flesh, and General Malnutrition, and who would benefit by using it.

MELLIN'S FOOD WORKS, PECKHAM, S.E.

COLEMAN'S

WINCARNIS

Is a delicious beverage and tonic made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat and Extract of Malt.

OVER FIVE THOUSAND

Unsolicited Testimonials have been received from Medical Men.

The following Important Testimonial has been received from Dr. FLETCHER.

Applecross, Rosshire, N.B., July 2nd, 1897.

Dear Sirs,—Please forward quarter of a dozen "Wincarnis" immediately as my patient's supply is about done.

I trust there will be no delay, as he takes no other nourishment, and has been sustained and gained strength by "Wincarnis" for twelve weeks. Yours faithfully, DUNCAN FLETCHER, L.R.C.P.

Sole Proprietors and Manufacturers of the above,

COLEMAN & CO., Ltd.,

NORWICH and LONDON.

Sample Bottle may be had, free of charge, on receipt of full postal address. Sold in Bottles, 2/9 and 4/6.

SANITARY & DECORATIVE

RYLAND'S

"THE OLD ORIGINAL"

IMITATES ELIZABETHAN OAK.

FLOOR VARNISH

AT ALL PRINCIPAL STORES.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO ARCHITECTS.

AN IMPORTANT INVENTION.

The HOMACOUSTIC APPARATUS (Cutmore's System).

A REVOLUTION IN SPEAKING TUBES.

Patented throughout the World. The Telephone superseded for Short Distances. The Homacoustic System is being universally adopted, and is a Leading Feature in all New Buildings.

THOUSANDS ARE IN USE.

The following are a few of the large establishments where the Homacoustic Speaking Tubes are in use:—

W. & A. GILBEY, Pantheon, Oxford-street.
JAMES WILLING, Junr., 125, Strand.
GAZE & SONS, Tourists' Bureau, Strand.
B. A. MOORE, "Cheshire Cheese," Fleet-st.
"TRUTH" Offices, Westminster.
SPIERS & POND, Limited, Head Offices.
ROBERTS & LEETE, 19 to 25, Bermondsey-street, S.E.
R. WAYGOOD & CO., Falmouth-road, S.E.
E. P. SAUNDERS & SON, 81 to 83, Cannon-street.
ALLIANCE ASSURANCE CO., Bartholomew-lane, E.C.
LONDON ASSURANCE, Royal Exchange.
OETZMANN & CO., 67 to 79, Hampstead-road, N.W.
LLOYD'S BANK, Limited, 189 Fleet-street.
— LITHGOE, Esq., 39a, Wimpole-street Oxford-street.
CAPITAL AND COUNTIES BANK, Threadneedle-street, E.C.
STRAITS INSURANCE, Change-alley, Cornhill.
KELLY & CO., London Directory. Holborn.
LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM AND SOUTH WALES BANK, Gracechurch-street, E.C.

TESTIMONIALS.

Atlas Assurance Company, Fire and Life,
92, Cheapside, London, E.C.

Dear Sir,—I have pleasure in stating that I have had one of your Homacoustic Speaking Tube Commutators and Instruments in my room, communicating with seven departments in this office, and that I find the same to work admirably. It is a vast improvement on the old method of a separate mouthpiece for each tube, and it is an invention which I think needs only to be known to command very wide adoption.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,

SAML. J. PIPKIN
Secretary.

The Central London Throat and Ear Hospital,
Gray's Inn-road, W.C.,
December 14, 1891.

I have much pleasure in testifying to the excellence of the principle of the Homacoustic Speaking Tube Instruments, as well as to the perfect workmanship of the tubes fitted at this Hospital.

Quite independently of sanitary reasons it is decidedly more agreeable to have a Speaking Tube by which all blowing and breathing into the face are avoided. There is no difficulty whatever in its employment.

LENNOX BROWNE, F.R.C.S.E.,
Senior Surgeon to the Hospital.

Beware of Fraudulent Imitations. Infringers will be prosecuted. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Price List Free by Post.

THE HOMACOUSTIC COMPANY, Head Offices and Showroom. 6, Bruton-street, New Bond-street, W.

Bulmer's Cider

Guaranteed Pure Juice of the Apple.

Price Lists and Testimonials from

H. P. BULMER & CO., Hereford

or of Wine Merchants Everywhere.

Madame Marie Mathieu,

Who has been privately patronised by the highest ladies in England and abroad, begs to state that BY THEIR DESIRE she has now taken additional rooms at

23, CONDUIT STREET, W.

She wishes it to be known that she is the SOLE OWNER and IMPORTER of the OIL which she uses in her treatment for the removal of wrinkles and in all her preparations for the skin.

Prices: Derma Paste, 10/6; Crême Roma, 5/-; Avoinine Powder, 3/6.
All these preparations are harmless, healthy, and most beneficial to the skin.

Hours: 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.

"COOPER" CYCLES.

From £5 10. Competition Defied.

Latest design Frame, large Weldless Steel Tubes, Ball Bearings, Tangent Wheels, Brake, and Mud-guards, Cushion Tyres, £5 10; Pneumatic, £7 10; Ladies', with Dress and Gear Guards, from £6. Twelve months' warranty. Lists free. AGENTS WANTED

Wm. Cooper, 753, Old Kent Rd., London, S.E.

USE ONLY

BLAISDELL PENCILS

SELF-POINTING.

ALL COLOURS. ALL GRADES.
NO WASTE. BEST LEADS.

Black Lead 1d. & 2d. Coloured Crayons 2d. & 3d.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Sample Box of 5 Pencils 1s., Free by Post in the U.K.

BLAISDELL PENCILS, Ltd., 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

WATER ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM DISEASE GERMS, BY USING THE

BERKEFELD FILTER.

Full Illustrated Price List and Testimonials free on application.

FILTER H. AS SKETCH, 42s.

SMALLER SIZE, 30s.

Extract from the Special Report to the British Medical Journal on "The Relative Efficiency of Water Filters," by Drs. Sims Woodhead and Cartwright Wood, Jan. 22nd, 1893. "Experiments were carried out with the Filter H., an exceedingly good model which seems to subserve the functions of a Filter better than any we have yet seen described. . . . The output is so large that there is no reason why such Filters should not supply sufficient water for all household requirements. These Berkefeld Filters afford complete protection against the communication of waterborne disease."—Offices and Showrooms:—

THE BERKEFELD FILTER CO., Ltd., 121, Oxford-street, London, W.

City Depot: W. SCHACHT & CO., 26, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.

Solid Silver, £4 4s.

Substantially made afternoon tea set on approval. If you decide within two weeks that you do not want it, the money will be returned. Every piece is the highest strength consistent with neatness, and will last a life-time. English Hall Marked.

Delivered safe and secure on receipt of

£4 4s.

WATCHMAKERS' ALLIANCE LTD.,
227, Regent-st., & 184, Oxford-st., London

CARTER 6A NEW CAVENDISH ST. PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON.

ONLY ADDRESS OF ORIGINAL CARTER

LITERARY MACHINE.

For holding book, lamp, meals, &c., in any position over an easychair, bed, or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. Prices from 17/6

INVALID FURNITURE.
ADJUSTABLE COUCHES and BEDS from £1. 10/-

Bed Lift £3. 10/- Reclining Boards, 25/- Walking Machines Portable W.C.'s. Electric Bells, Urinals, &c. Air & Water Beds.

Bed Rests 7/6 Leg Rests 10/- Crutches 10/6 Bed Baths 12 6 Commodes, £1. 5/-

Carrying Chairs from £1.
Breakfast in Bed Tables from 30/-

Self-Propelling Chairs from £2

BATH CHAIRS FROM £1. 5/-

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES POST FREE.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, NEW CAVENDISH ST. Portland-pl. London, W.

SERVANTS! SERVANTS!! SERVANTS!!!

FOR THOROUGHLY RELIABLE SERVANTS,

With personal characters for London or country, also foreign servants. Apply to the BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY.

SOLE OFFICES,
83, EBURY-STREET.

Also job servants with references taken up before recommendation can be had on the shortest notice.

MADAME M. ROWLEY'S

TOILET MASK.

(or FACE GLOVE)

Is a natural beautifier for bleaching and preserving the skin, and removing complexional imperfections.

It is soft and flexible in form, and can be easily applied and worn without discomfort or inconvenience.

It is recommended by eminent physicians and scientists as a substitute for injurious cosmetics.

COMPLEXION BLEMISHES

may be hidden imperfectly by cosmetics and powders, but can only be removed permanently by the Toilet Mask. By its use every kind of spots, impurities, roughness, &c., vanish from the skin, leaving it soft, clear, brilliant, and beautiful. It is harmless, costs little, and saves pounds uselessly expended for cosmetics, powders, lotions, &c. It prevents and removes wrinkles, and is both a complexion preserver and beautifier.

To be WORN THREE TIMES in the WEEK.

Illustrated Treatise for two stamps. Address, and kindly mention this paper,

Mrs. M. ROWLEY, THE TOILET MASK CO.,
Berwick House, 139, Oxford Street, London, W.

FOR UPWARDS OF FIFTY YEARS THE

PREMIER NURSERY LAMP.

FOR UPWARDS OF FORTY YEARS THE

PREMIER NIGHT LIGHT.

Single Wicks burn 9 hours each, in boxes containing 8 Lights.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Clarke's "Pyramid" & "Fairy" Light Co., Ltd., Cricklewood, London, N.W.

21/- Post Free The "Osoezi" Saddle 21/- Post Free

Is at once hygienic, anatomically correct, and pressure upon the perineum is avoided. No Saddle-Soreness, even after the hardest and most continuous riding.

Suitable for Ladies or Gentlemen. Easily adaptable to any Machine.

A. W. GAMAGE, LTD.,

126 to 129, Holborn, E.C.

Goddard's Plate Powder

SIX GOLD MEDALS.

Non-Mercurial.

THE BEST and SAFEST article for CLEANING SILVER and ELECTRO PLATE. Sold in Boxes, 1s., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. each, by Grocers, Oilmen, Chemists, &c., everywhere.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

All Pain, Swelling, and Inflammation disappear after two to three doses of Dr. LIND'S (M.D.) Specific

"LINDINE."

GUARANTEED HARMLESS. NEVER FAILS. Price 5s. per Bottle, with full directions and Advice, from the Sole Proprietor: O. E. HORN, D.Sc., Bournemouth.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up, £300,000. Total funds, over £1,500,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £30,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.

THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD

SUN FIRE OFFICE FOUNDED 1710.

SUM INSURED IN 1897 EXCEEDS £425,000,000.

BIRKBECK BANK (Estab. 1851), Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, London. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, on the minimum monthly balances when not below £100.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK with particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

H. HALFORD and COMPANY,

70 and 71, Palmerston Buildings, Old Broad Street, London.

ESTABLISHED 1869.

Business in Stocks and Shares at close prices.

Dealings reported by wire if required.

Prompt Settlements.

Thousands of Testimonials from Clients.

Americans and Canadians a Speciality. Also Westralians and Kaffirs.

Lists of Closing Prices gratis.

Telegrams: "Moniter, London."

NO CONNECTION WITH ANY OTHER FIRM.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No Member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.

A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN,

and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established over a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s., 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, LYNCH & CO., J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale Houses.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

CLARKE'S

WORLD-FAMED

BLOOD MIXTURE

Warranted to cleanse the blood from all impurities from whatever cause arising. For Scrofula, Scurvy, Eczema, Bad Legs, Skin and Blood Diseases, Pimples and Sores of all kinds, its effects are marvellous. It is the only real specific for Gout and Rheumatic Pains, for it removes the cause from the blood and bones. Thousands of Wonderful Cures have been effected by it. In bottles, 2s. 9d. and 11s. each, of Chemists everywhere.

BEWARE OF WORTHLESS IMITATIONS.

FOR COMPLAINTS of the STOMACH, LIVER, etc., DRIN

VICHY CELESTINS Sprin

Caution: See that each bottle has a neck label with VICHY-ÉTAT & the name of t

Sole Importers: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd, 26, Upper Thames Street, LONDON, E.C

SIXTY-FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT
OF THE

National Provincial Bank of England

12th MAY, 1898. LIMITED.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL - - £15,900,000.

CAPITAL—Paid	£3,000,000
Uncalled	2,300,000
Reserve Liability	10,600,000
	£15,900,000

RESERVE FUND (invested in English Government Securities), £2,000,000.

Number of Shareholders, 13,187.

DIRECTORS.

CHARLES BARCLAY, ESQ.
GEORGE HANBURY FIELD, ESQ.
MAURICE OTHO FITZGERALD, ESQ.
JOHN OLIVER HANSON, ESQ.
CLAUDE VILLIERS EMILIUS LAURIE, ESQ.
FRANCIS CHARLES LE MARCHANT, ESQ.
GEORGE FORBES MALCOLMSON, ESQ.
WILLIAM ROBERT MOBERLY, ESQ.
HENRY PAULL, ESQ.
ROBERT WIGRAM, ESQ.
THOMAS GEORGE ROBINSON, ESQ., Honorary Director.

JOINT GENERAL MANAGERS.

FREDERICK CHURCHWARD, ESQ., WILLIAM FIDGEON, ESQ., AND ROBERT THOMAS HAINES, ESQ.

SOLICITORS.

ERNEST JAMES WILDE, ESQ. WALTER EDWARD MOORE, ESQ.

HENRY PAULL, Esq., in the Chair.

The Directors have the pleasure to submit the Balance-Sheet for the year 1897, and to report that after making ample provision for all bad and doubtful debts, and for the rebate of discount on current bills, the profits, including £67,007 19s. 0d. brought forward, amount to £714,649 9s. 5d.

In addition to the dividends and bonus already paid, a further bonus of 7 per cent. will be paid, free of Income Tax, in July next (making 20 per cent. for the year), after payment of which, and the transfer of £40,000 to the Bank Premises Account, and £5,000 to the Provident Fund, there will remain a balance of £69,649 9s. 5d. to be carried to the profits of 1898.

The Directors report with deep regret the loss through death of two of their colleagues, viz.:—RICHARD BLANEY WADE, Esq., the senior member of the Board, and DUNCAN MACDONALD, Esq., who for 42 and 33 years respectively, rendered most important and valuable services to the Bank.

To fill the vacancies thus caused, the following duly qualified Candidates offer themselves for election, viz.:—

THOMAS GEORGE ROBINSON, Esq., of Woodford Green, Essex.
SELWYN ROBERT PRYOR, Esq., of 148, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

The Directors retiring by rotation are:—

HENRY PAULL, Esq.
FRANCIS CHARLES LE MARCHANT, Esq.

both of whom, being eligible, offer themselves for re-election.

Since the last Annual Meeting, Mr. Robinson has retired from the position of Joint General Manager, which he occupied for more than twenty years with great ability and zeal. On his retirement he was appointed an Honorary Member of the Board, and is now, as already mentioned, a Candidate for election as a Director. Mr. Robert Thomas Haines, who has had considerable experience as an Inspector of Branches, and for some years as manager of the Leeds Branch has been appointed a Joint General Manager.

New Branches will shortly be opened near Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, and at Brixton.

The Directors, after careful consideration, have prepared a scheme for the establishment of a Provident Fund, to be maintained by subscriptions from members of the Staff, for the purpose of securing Annuities for their widows and orphans, and to take the place of the Benevolent Fund which was founded in 1871. With the view of affording encouragement to the adoption of the scheme, the Directors have granted £5,000 as a contribution to the Fund.

In conformity with the Act of Parliament, the Shareholders are required to elect the Auditors and fix their remuneration. Mr. Edwin Waterhouse (of Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Co.), and Mr. William Barclay Peat (of Messrs. W. B. Peat & Co.), the retiring Auditors, offer themselves for re-election.

BALANCE-SHEET, 31st December, 1897.

LIABILITIES.

		£ s. d.
CAPITAL:—
40,000 Shares of £75 each, £10 10s. paid		420,000 0 0
215,000 ,, £60 ,, £12 ,, ...		2,580,000 0 0
		3,000,000 0 0
RESERVE FUND		2,000,000 0 0
AMOUNT due by Bank on DEPOSITS, &c.		48,810 556 3 11
ACCEPTANCES and ENDORSEMENTS of FOREIGN BILLS on Account of Customers		563,996 7 0
PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT:—
Balance of Profit and Loss Account including £67,007 19s. brought from year 1896	£714,649 9 5
ess Dividend and Bonus for half-year ending 30th June (9 per cent.)	£270,000 0 0
Do. for half-year ending 31st December (11 per cent.)	330,000 0 0
	600,000 0 0
ransferred to Bank Premises Account	40,000 0 0
Do. to Provident Fund ...	5,000 0 0
		645,000 0 0
		69,649 9 5
		£54,444,202 0 4

ASSETS.

		£ s. d.
CASH:—
At Bank of England and at Head Office and Branches		6,459,139 17 4
,, Call and Short Notice		4,482,272 3 2
		10,941,412 0 6
INVESTMENTS:—	£ s. d.
English Government Securities	8,132,103 17 8
Indian and Colonial Government, Railway Debenture, and other Securities	8,599,210 14 1
		16,731,314 11 9
CUSTOMERS for ACCEPTANCES and ENDORSEMENTS of FOREIGN BILLS per Contra		563,996 7 0
BILLS DISCOUNTED, LOANS, &c.		25,709,146 19 5
BANKING PREMISES in London and Country		498,332 1 8
		£54,444,202 0 4

CHAS. BARCLAY,
G. F. MALCOLMSON,
ROBT. WIGRAM, } Directors.

F. CHURCHWARD,
W. FIDGEON,
R. T. HAINES, } Joint General Managers.

We beg to report that we have ascertained the correctness of the Cash Balances and of the Money at Call and Short Notice as entered in the above Balance eet, and have inspected the securities representing the investments of the Bank, and found them in order. We have also examined the Balance Sheet in detail th the books at the Head Office and with the certified returns from each Branch, and in our opinion such Balance Sheet is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a e and correct view of the state of the Bank's affairs as shown by such books and returns.

EDWIN WATERHOUSE,
WILLIAM BARCLAY PEAT, } Auditors.

At the Annual General meeting the above Report was adopted, the retiring Directors were re-elected, Thomas George Robinson, Esq., and Selwyn Robert Pryor, q., were elected Directors in place of Richard Blaney Wade, Esq., and Duncan Macdonald, Esq, deceased, and Mr. Edwin Waterhouse, and Mr. William Barclay t, were re-appointed Auditors for the current year.

Regret was expressed at the loss the Bank had sustained by the death of Richard Blaney Wade, Esq., and Duncan Macdonald, Esq., the sincere sympathy of the pprietors being offered to the members of their respective families.

The best thanks of the proprietors were given to the Directors, General Managers, Branch Managers, and other Officers of the Bank, for their efficient services, d to the Chairman for his able conduct in the chair.

The National Provincial Bank of England, Limited, having numerous Branches in England and Wales, as well as Agents and Correspondents at home l abroad, affords great facilities to its customers, who may have money transmitted to the credit of their Accounts through any of the Branches free charge.

Current Accounts are conducted at the Head Office and Metropolitan Branches, and Deposits are received and interest allowed thereon at the rates ertised by the Bank in the London newspapers from time to time.

The Bank undertakes the Agency of Private and Joint Stock Banks, also the Purchase and Sale of all British and Foreign Stocks and Shares, and the ection of Dividends, Annuities, &c.

Circular Notes and Letters of Credit, payable at the principal towns abroad, are issued for the use of Travellers.

At the Country Branches Current Accounts are opened, Deposits received, and all other Banking business conducted.

The Officers of the Bank are bound to secrecy as regards the transactions of its customers.

Copies of the Annual Report of the Bank Lists of Branches, Agents, and Correspondents, may be had on application at the Head Office, and at any of Bank's Branches.

12th May, 1898.

By order of the Directors,
F. CHURCHWARD,
W. FIDGEON,
R. T. HAINES, } Joint General Managers.

STOP THAT WAR!

WHAT WE WANT IS PEACE AND PLENTY OF PATTISONS' WHISKY.

SINGER

MODÈLE DE LUXE

(Registered Trade Mark)

CYCLES

IMPORTANT NOVELTIES FOR 1898.

1898 Lists Free.

SINGER CYCLE CO. LTD. COVENTRY
LONDON: 17, HOLBORN VIADUCT.

PURE—WHOLESOME—DELICIOUS.

BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER

Is the unfailing resource of every Lady of the House and successful Housekeeper, affording a constant variation in the daily menu.

NO EGGS! NO RISK! NO TROUBLE!

A MASTER KEY of this SIZE

Can be made to open any number of Locks. Many Ladies and Gentlemen have the whole of their locks so arranged that a MASTER KEY, so small as to be worn in a finger-ring or locket, will open every lock they possess—from their Dressing Bags, Trunks, Jewel Cases, Despatch Boxes, &c., to the Front Door, Wine Cellar, Park Gates, &c. Just think of the Convenience! The locks are made in suites, each suite with its own key, so that the ladies' maid or valet can open the luggage, the butler the wine cellar, and so on, but the suite keys are of no use for any but their own series.

BRAMAH JEWEL SAFES,

BURGLAR AND FIRE RESISTING, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR BED AND DRESSING ROOMS.

Specialities in fitted Suite Cases and Dressing Bags, Jewel Cases, Despatch and Deed Boxes, Bramah Street Door Latches, with small keys, Bramah Padlocks for Bicycles, with Leather-covered Chains, &c. &c.

New Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

For Prices and Particulars apply to

NEEDS & CO. Late

Bramah & Co.

Sole Manufacturers of the real Bramah Locks,

100, NEW BOND STREET,
LONDON, W.

A Master Key Signet Ring (Open).

OUR PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,002.—THE SIX HANDSOMEST PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN LONDON.

JEMIMA (real name and address will be printed in due course) £2 2 0

'TRUTH" TOY AND DOLL SHOW, 1898.

I have received letters from a number of ladies in which they promise to avail themselves of the kind offer of the London Stereoscopic Company and engage to make scrap-books for the TRUTH Show that is to be held next Christmas. The supply of photographic scraps is by no means exhausted, however, and the Editor of TRUTH will be pleased to receive the names of other ladies who will be willing to make scrap-books with the photographs which the London Stereoscopic Company has so generously offered to supply.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,003.

The Prize in this competition has been divided between HARPSICHORD and SINGEON for the following stanzas containing rhymes to the words "Jonathan" and "Mexico":—

A Spaniard who sought a divorce in far Mexico,
Cried, as he seized his wife's paramour, "Ecce Co'!" *
The culprit was Yankee; and therefore the Don hath an Obvious grievance against Cousin Jonathan. Harpsichord.
* Behold the co-respondent!

A Scotchman who voyaged to Mexico
Cried, while lying one day on the deck, sick, "O
Gie me some whuskey if aiblens a mon hath an Ounce." It was furnished him by brother Jonathan.
Singeon.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,004.

The Prize in this competition has been awarded to MOS, whose Humorous Song, with the refrain "He was such a methodical man," was printed in TRUTH for May 12.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,008.

The usual Prize of Two Guineas is offered to the competitor who is most successful

IN NAMING THE SOURCES OF THE FOLLOWING QUOTATIONS, ALL OF WHICH ARE TO BE FOUND IN THE ROYAL ACADEMY CATALOGUE FOR THIS YEAR.

These are the Quotations:—

1. "Thou shalt not lack the flower that's like thy face, pale primrose."
2. "And here will sigh thine alder tree
   And here thine aspen shiver."
3. "How can a bird that is born for joy
   Sit in a cage and sing?"
4. "At sixteen years she had no care,
   How should she, sweet, and pure and fair?
   And there pursued her everywhere
   Butterflies all white."
5. "Its colours changing when from clouds and sun
   Shades after shades upon its surface run."
6. "Then blinded Death could steal about unheeded,
   For in those fields the scythe is never needed."
7. "Of Truth doth here this truth appeare
   Withouten al disgyse,
   How men do stryve wych are y-lyve
   To shutte her from thir eyes."
8. "He to the lowly soul doth still Himself impart."
9. "Page and monarch forth they went,
   Forth they went together,
   Through the rude wind's wild lament,
   And the bitter weather."
10. "For, though encircled round by winding coils of sin,
    The soul of innocence doth take no taint within."
11. "Man made me, and my will Is to my maker still,
    Whom now the currents con, the rollers steer—
    Lifting forlorn to spy Trailed smoke along the sky, Falling afraid lest any keel come near."
12. "Motus doceri gaudet Ionicos
    Matura virgo; et fingitur artibus
    Jam nunc."

Competitors should as far as possible name the authors of the above lines and also the poems or other compositions from which they are taken. Should a number of competitors prove equally successful in sending in the required particulars, a special competition of a similar character will be given in order to decide to whom the Prize shall be awarded. All answers for this competition must reach me by the morning of Monday May 30, at the latest.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

WAYNFLETE.—There is a trite piece of advice to the effect that one should always verify one's quotations. Had you done so, you would have found that I did not, in giving Puzzle No. 928, state that words rhyming with the words "syringe" and "pick-axe" had to be supplied. Your conclusion that my award of Prize No. 928 was not in accordance with the conditions is, accordingly, based on a false premiss. For your criticisms on the answers to Puzzle No. 1,003, I am obliged to you.

PYRAMID.—Strictly speaking, you are quite correct. I feel sure, however, that my meaning will be generally understood. Many thanks to you for writing.

BACH.—On several occasions such a puzzle as you suggest has been given in TRUTH. I am none the less obliged to you for your letter.

EBORACUM.—The "o" in the word lexicographers being pronounced short, I do not think it permissible to make it long in "lexico." I, therefore, do not consider "lexicò" a good rhyme for Mexico.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,005.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

HUMOROUS DEFINITIONS OF A GENTLEMAN.

'E s a genelman, 'e is. A bloke as 'as a bloomin Bank 'Oliday all to iself, whenever 'e wants one.—Alpha.

A first-class misdemeanant.—R. F.

A man as never says "no" to nobody.—Aunt Isa.

1. Well tubbed, well scrubbed, well rubbed. 2. A man is a gentleman who does not try to be one.—Bad Luck.

One who would scorn to leave a gambling debt unpaid for an hour after it was due, but who would not hesitate to contract it with money which he has owed his tailor for years.—Knarf.

A freak of nature.—Echo.

One who strolls about with his hands in his pockets, with nothing to do but find fault with everything he sees.—Necky.

1. A man who can wear a diamond without looking a cad. 2. A man who never seems to wear new clothes, yet always looks neat. 3. A man who can come out of a pawnshop without being embarrassed.—Red Rat.

Such as 'im does 'ave luck. Folks don't go marchin' into 'is 'ouse with tracts and sermons.—Mos.

1. Does nothing sees everything, goes everywhere. 2. Gentleness and manliness blended into one harmonious whole.—Tan Tun.

The best waltzer at a ball.—Ibrox.

A refined mind, blessed by unlimited tact.—Crosspatch.

The man who can put studs in a clean shirt without swearing.—Poppæa.

A fashionable jockey's under footman.—C. F. Reid.

One who can wear a fur-trimmed overcoat without looking like a music-hall proprietor.—Leaf Rule.

A gentleman is one who does not wear his hat on one side and who reads and speaks the Truth.—Bons.

1. A man that has ideas that he is other than a man. 2. The title most adult 'males' claim for themselves, yet few comprehend its meaning.—Beginner.

A man who politely replies "granted," should you have occasion to beg his pardon.—La Plata.

One who wears his "best Sunday clothes" and his "best Sunday manners" every day in the week.—Hounsnitch.

1. A man who has no business in the world. 2. A man who does nothing nicely.—Bridge.

If one may borrow from Charles Dickens, his remarks on Mrs. Pocket seem to me to describe a gentleman: "Highly ornamental, but perfectly helpless and useless."—Spup.

1. A man who could spend ten thousand a year, if he had it, without making himself ridiculous. 2. A man who can without ostentation wear a top hat on week days.—Almaviva.

1. One who flings his money about freely, and is not above treating an old pal when he is down on his luck. 2. A man who has a fine haughty way with him, and makes people fly around when he shows himself.—Excelsior.

1. One who, fairly polite to his equals, thinks it befits his dignity to treat with insolence all women of an inferior (?) rank to himself. 2. An individual made by his tailor, whose claims to consideration depend mainly on his exterior advantages.—Esperanza.

One who does a bare little, whose father has done less, and whose grandfather never did anything at all.—Edgcome.

Call yoosef a genalhum? Yah! A genalhum 'e don't sneak a ipeny bloater for a farden from a pore lone widder.—Pyramid.

Ever courteous and considerate, he says and does the right thing at the right time and in the right way.—Maia.

1. Aspiration without an aspirate. 2. The man who gets outside to oblige a lady. 3. First favourite in the human race. 4. The man who does not pick up the penny he drops. 5. He who says, "Never mind the change."—Cestrian.

One who would ignore the equality of man.—Blackest Rose.

The true gentleman is he who can stand the longest time upon one leg unsupported, and without shifting his position.—Quantock.

1. One who will (can) refrain from taking a snapshot of a lady in her bathing costume. 2. The Hidalgo, in contradistinction to the Yankee. 3. A man who is ready to serve a lady in every way consistent with his own honour—and hers.—Pax Vobiscum.

One who loves truth, speaks truth, and takes in TRUTH.—Ludwig B.

A man who has nothing to do, and does it well.—W. Nevermore.

One who can wear a top-hat without looking like a commercial.—Max Murphy.

1. One whose morals are as spotless as his linen. 2. One who can (but does not) boast of his ancestors coming over with the Conqueror. 3. One who presses his mother-in-law to prolong her visit. 4. One who likes paying his wife's milliner's bills.—Twickenham Ferry.

1. One who can do what a cad tries to do, without looking like one. 2. Masculine gender, singular number, possessing a plurality of trowsers.—Georgina.

A man who is careful to ignore all debts, except those incurred by gambling.—Briony.

He who can afford to clean his own boots without loss of dignity.—Chee Foo.

A man who can wear a dirty collar and make it look incongruous.—Scissors.

1. A gentleman is a man who thinks he has a right to patronise everybody, and no one has a right to patronise him.
2. A gentleman is a man who no man dares offend,
While to his pride and villainy no man can find an end.
3. A gentleman is a man who can get almost everything, and pay for nothing.—E. S. C.

1. A man who condescends to borrow money from you and forget it. 2. A man who can always wear a pot hat without attracting notice. 3. A man who never raises his voice. 4. A man who is never in a hurry. 5. A man who can do dirty work without soiling his hands. 6. A man who always allows you to pay for drinks.—Mona.

1. A triumph of repressed (or masked) nature. 2. The unattainable ideal, to which even women now aspire. 3. The Laodicean product of civilisation; neither cold nor hot. 4. An orchid; splendid but parasitic.—Robert Martin.

1. A gentleman is a man who, though he may not own a manor, must have manners. 2. A gentleman is a man who is highly polished; he mirrors class-reflections, which are often untrue and distorted.—Ooloo.

1. One whose name invariably figures in at least one of the following courts:—The Breach of Promise, the Divorce, the Bankruptcy. 2. A servant girl's definition of a gentleman is worthy of note. After the departure from the house of a friend of her master's who had been there on a few days' visit, she remarked to the cook that Mr. —— was a real gentleman. "How can you tell that?" queried the cook. "Because when he said good-bye he kissed me," replied the girl, blushing.—Phyllis.

1. A juryman, until discharged. 2. A courtesy title bestowed on a man who dresses well and has nothing to do. 3. A man who is never seen in a public-house except in the compartment where no liquors are sold under 3d. a glass. 4. A man for whom a judgment summons has no terrors.—Merle.

No Jew—a Jew cannot be a Gentile-man.—Ransch.

A rational animal who does not feel it necessary to parade his rationality by assuming "too much Johnson."—Rabelais.

Oftentimes a misnomer, and applicable in many cases when, like the Old Gentleman, he has the full equipage of horns, hoof, and tail.—Go-ahead.

A brutal father, for he "hates creation."—Eblana.

As a judge of good liquor and books that can't bore you,
He keeps a selection of both on each shelf;
He invitingly points to the samples before you,
And looks out on the street when you're helping yourself. Eblana.

1. One who looks well and smart, living on his friends. 2. One who does nothing to earn the title. Irma Lee.

1. A man in words, in acts, in style, far above the poor, the low, the vile. 2. An actor that represents on the stage of life the well-born, the well-bred, the well-to-do. 3. A man with his coat turned inside out, showing outwardly what (he) must be within. 4. A man having all the qualities of a sweep, a scamp, and a beggar. Take his negative. Colonicusis.

A gentleman is easily recognised; his clothes seldom fit, and he never demands change for a bob. Scorpio.

One who can read his name as a magistrate in TRUTH'S "Legal Pillory," read, mark, and learn, and inwardly digest remarks, and for future act up to same. Experto Crede.

A fellow that hath had losses; and one that hath two gowns, and everything handsome about him.—Nurse.

1. An interesting specimen of a bygone age. 2. Head up; hands clean; heart right.

3. He does the good that nearest,
Though it's dull at whiles;
Helping, when he meets them,
Lame dogs over stiles. Mat.

1. A man who has nothing to do, and knows how to do it. 2. One who looks it.—Homnis.

1. A man who preserves his equanimity when a shirt-button comes off. 2. A man who gives chase to a runaway hat without appearing ridiculous. 3. A man who does not explode when you tread on his particular corn. 4. A man who pays his bills with composure. 5. A man who presents a good appearance without constraint. 6. A man who succeeds best in doing nothing. 7. A man who exists only in imagination. 8. A man who feels at ease under conventionality.—A. E. L.

1. One who keeps his own boots clean, and does not make other's dirty by treading on their toes. 2. One who shuns dirty water like poison. 3. A clean man—inside and out.—M. Janson.

A note of admiration; an honourable addition granted to any man of whose manners or social behaviour the speaker is pleased to approve.—Yorick.

One with a clean shirt on, who can appear in public, not only as if he felt comfortable, but able to make those about him at ease in his company.—Allspice.

A superior person. He obtains an article of superior quality to that which is his due. Similarly, certain other superior persons get credit (from the casual observer) for being first-class statesmen, when they are only second or even third-class politicians.—Hyle.

A gentleman is one who will loan you a large sum of money and not expect you to pay it back again.—Finnart.

A man with manners. People's ideas as to what constitutes a gentleman vary vastly. To some, a gentleman is a man with money.—Cubra.

DEFINITION OF A GENTLEMAN—BY ONE WHOSE SPIRIT HAS BEEN "BROKEN ON THE WHEEL."

Any man who can ride a bicycle without looking like a cad.—Henry IX.

Take a large quantity of cleanliness and its weight in godliness, hospitality, and honesty. Add equal quantities of refinement and courtesy. Mix all well together. Turn out and serve. Seasonable at any time.—Tracy Tupman.

1. The most perfect gentleman is he whose expenditure of time and money is most remarked by others and least by himself. 2. One who wears a new tie every day.—Hyle.

1. One who never bows too low. 2. One who, unlike a servant, is never out of place. 3. One who can cough, sneeze, or blow his nose in apparent unconsciousness anywhere.—Crcran.

One who spends his life in riotous living.—Nika.

1. Alphabetically considered: A man who can afford to dispense with H provided he has acquired sufficient £ s. d. 2. A man who is able to wear large checks without looking as if unable to write small ones.—Quilp.

A gentleman is a man who cannot be ranked as noble, and yet who scorns the idea of anything common; and who likes to be described as of no occupation, barring, perhaps, that which the capital letters J.P. are supposed to embrace, and is not a bit ashamed to admit that he lives entirely on the fruit of some other body's labour.—Commoner.

1. A man who can take a lady in to dinner without the lady feeling she has got him. When witty, each one must rejoice. When wise, the wisest has no choice.—Josephine.

A Satyr up to date.—Molly Bawn.

Mars, Apollo, Cupid, Dandy Dan,
In one—behold! my gentleman.
Molly Bawn.

He just is a gentleman! Why, when we meet and he asks me to come and have a drink, he always says, he has nothing less than a "tenner," and so I pay!—La Plata.

What a savage would be if outwardly clothed in silk hat and frock coat; what some grumbling and disappointed competitors think a prize editor is not; and what a lord of creation who will lift his hat to a female inferior undoubtedly is.—Aldbarn.

1. A gentleman is described as a man of good birth, the good berth being obtained for him by the influence of his friends. 2. Gentlemen are the well-considered rests in life's resounding music, without them the multitudinous human hymn would be too overpowering and oppressive. 3. The term especially applied to a gentleman is "high bred"; to-day bakers are very gentlemanly on account of their close connection with the same, viz., "high bread." 4. A gentleman is a man who is highly polished, hence he is apt to mirror class opinions, often fantastical and absurd.—Ooloo.

1. John Dorey ("Johnnie" doré, "fin" de siecle). 2. One who can indulge in ancient ports—tire and side-on (Tyre and Sidon). 3. Society's weed—dandelion. 4. Like a ship who trusses "stays"—grounds at the "bar" and heels over to "port." 5. He of studied appearance (studded). 6. A mass of conceit, "mas" (latin.) 7. The bastard product of Herald's College, with its inevitable "bar" sinister. 8. He who has an hereditary call to the bar.—Bredon.

1. One who has taken the bird after another has beaten the bush. 2. One who endeavours to live on 90 per cent. of profits earned by another. 3. One who is dressed in England but not Dresden China. 4. One who is independent of everyone except the working man. 5. One who lives on his men(lal)s, (means). 6. One who partakes of that which he dislikes—hates labour yet cannot live without. 7. Labour's foe and luxury's friend. 8. The new woman. 9. A luxurious labourer. 10. Luxury's slave. 11. One who loves exertion so long as it is not called work. 12. Not the one who beats the bush but the one who takes the bird. 13. One who looks after No. 1. 14. One who is never satisfied—the more he gets the more he wants. 15. One who spends another person's money in a good cause. 16. One who is charitable with another's money, but miserly with his own. 17. One who fools others more often than he fools himself. 18. One whose "liabilities" are more than his "assets."—Felixicus.

* What is a gentleman? One who hath yearnings
To live without work on other men's earnings,
Who in dress, taste, and fashion, attempts to excel
This notorious prototype gay Beau Brummell.

* The above verse is in the same metre as "What is a Communist?" and bears a similarity thereto. f

Briefly a gentleman may be defined as the idol o the ignorant, the envy of the foolish, and the abhorred of the wise.—Neptune.

He should be gentle, courteous, refined
To woman, and all helpless creatures kind.
Not one who loves blood-sports, and thinks it joy
To hurt, shoot, angle, mangle, maim, destroy;
Consorts with jockeys, touts, raffs, blacklegs, grooms;
In gambling his inheritance consumes;
Betrays too-trusting woman, swindles friends;
Whose wasted life has worthless, wicked ends.
This "gentleman" 's sought after by the town,
Match-making mothers, misses hunt him down
If rich or noble—though the worst of rakes—
Of modest merit he precedence takes!
J. McGrigor Allan.

"A BLOATED ARISTOCRAT."

How suggestive is this slang phrase! A gentleman should be fat. In Central Africa this is, or was, the outward and visible sign of the highest rank. At the Court of Bornou "a huge abdomen is considered the primary requisite of a fine gentleman, or of one fit to wait on the Sultan; and where feeding and cramming will not produce this elegant feature, the part is cushioned and stuffed out till it appears to possess the required dimensions. The honour attached to this form must arise, seemingly, from its being considered a type of abundance and luxury" (Edin. Review, vol. xliv., p. 187). The Sultan of Bornou liked plump courtiers; so did Julius Cæsar:—

"Let me have men about me that are fat."

Fat men are harmless; lean men mischievous. The idea is philosophical, and agrees with popular prejudice. A gentleman's duties are eating, drinking, sleeping, and pleasure; no work, but elegant leisure, vulgarly called idleness. This gentlemanly life is summed up in three Italian words, Dolce far niente, and in three Latin words, Fruges consumere nati. He is orthodox, too fat to work, an emblem of man's sinless state, before woman's curiosity imposed the curse of labour. The Bornou courtier, not satisfied with a private reputation, claimed public recognition as a gentleman by displaying a protuberant proof that he passed his life in eating, drinking, sleeping, and idleness. At the same time, George IV., similarly occupied, weighed 20 st., and was "the first gentleman in Europe," while the Sultan of Bornou was the first gentleman in Africa.—J. McGrigor Allan.

A man who needn't do anything and has plenty of time to do it in.—Comp.

The irreducible minimum of human nature in man.—Robert Martin.

1. Manners and man. 2. What everybody thinks himself but nobody thinks his neighbour. 3. Man, transformed by cultivation from a necessity to a luxury.—Cushion.

1. A gentleman may be defined as the unfortunate victim of a false system of economics combined with a false system of education, who makes an instinctive effort to atone for the sinful parsimoniousness of ancestors or friends, and generally has his revenge upon society by the pernicious ways afforded for the distribution of wealth, and who not unfrequently sacrifices such health and reputation as he may have inherited, and finally confers a benefit upon an ungrateful world by an early exit. 2. A gentleman is a man whose respectability is wholly personal and inherent, not dependent on birth, purse, or even genius, and who, by his just and gentle conduct, is worthily entitled to the esteem and admiration of all rational beings.—Commoner.

EPSOM RACES, May 24th, 25th, 26th, and 27th.
The only route to the Epsom Downs Race Course Station, and the quickest route to the Races, is by the BRIGHTON RAILWAY from London Bridge, Victoria, Kensington (Addison-road), West Brompton, Chelsea, Clapham Junction, New Cross, &c.

EPSOM DOWNS STATION.—This spacious and convenient Station, within a few minutes' walk of the Grand Stand, has been specially prepared for the Race Traffic, and additional First Class Ladies' Waiting Rooms provided.

FREQUENT DIRECT SPECIAL EXPRESS AND CHEAP TRAINS between the above Stations on all four days of the Races, also Extra First Class Special Express Trains on the "Derby" and "Oaks" days.

THROUGH BOOKINGS.—Arrangements have been made with the London and North Western, Great Western, Great Northern and Midland Railways, to issue Through Tickets from all their principal Stations.

The Trains of the above Railway Companies all run either to the Victoria or Kensington (Addison Road) Stations in connection with the above Special Trains to the Epsom Downs Station.

EPSOM TOWN STATION.—Express and Cheap Trains to Epsom Town Station will also run as required from London Bridge, Victoria, Kensington (Addison Road), and Clapham Junction.

SPECIAL EXPRESS TICKETS may be obtained on and from Saturday, May 21st, at the Company's Offices, 28, Regent-street, 8, Grand Hotel-buildings, and 6, Arthur-street East, which offices will remain open until 10.0 p.m., May 23rd, 24th, 25th, and 26th.

These Tickets may also be obtained at Hays', 26, Old Bond-street and Cornhill; Cook's, Ludgate Circus, and Gaze, 142, Strand.

For full Particulars, Times, Fares, &c., see Handbills, or address Superintendent of the Line, L.B. & S.C. Ry., London Bridge, S.E.

FRANZ JOSEF
APERIENT WATER
Highly appreciated all over the World for Twenty Years past.
Is the Only Palatable Natural Aperient Water. SOLD EVERYWHERE. HEAD OFFICE: BUDAPEST.

Genuine Old Welch Dressers

(Inlaid and Carved Oak), from £6. 10s.

ILLUSTRATED PRICED CATALOGUES POST FREE.
ALL GOODS CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY STATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

HEWETSONS,

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD, London, W.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

Is absolutely the finest made.

More fragrant, more lasting, and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ONLY ATKINSON'S!

ONCE USED, ALWAYS USED.

Single Bottle 2/3 post free,
Case of 6 Bottles 11s. Carriage Paid.
OF ALL DEALERS.

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London,

INVENTORS OF THE CELEBRATED

"WHITE ROSE" PERFUME.

"A Charming Scent."—H.R.H. The Duchess of York.

JUNO CYCLES ARE THE VERY BEST

Any JUNO Twelve Monthly Payments.
JUNO Lady's or Gent's Safety, £12 12s., 21/- monthly; £14 14s., 24/6 monthly. JUNOS from £10, 16/8 monthly. Write for New Season's List of JUNO Cycles & Accessories, sent post free. Junos shipped to all parts of the world. Large discount.

METROPOLITAN MACHINISTS CO., LTD.
75, 76, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.; & at Piccadilly Circus, London W

LIQUEURS OF THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE.

These delicious Liqueurs, which have come so much into public favour on account of their wonderful properties of aiding Digestion and preventing Dyspepsia, can now be had of all the principal Wine and Spirit Merchants, and all good Hotels and Restaurants throughout the Kingdom.
Sole Consignee: W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

Enormous Demand.

There can be no surer sign of popularity than the enormous demand all over the country for

LIPTONS' DELICIOUS TEAS

They are appreciated everywhere for their delicate flavour and exquisite aroma, and undoubtedly have attained the pinnacle of fame.

LIPTONS' DELICIOUS TEAS. Millions drink them daily.

Millions of people are daily drinking and enjoying these delicious Teas, fresh from the sweet-scented island of Ceylon. Liptons own some of the most famous estates in Ceylon, which cover thousands of acres of the best tea-growing land, including such well-known gardens as Dambattenne, Laymastotte, Monerakande, Mahadambatenne, Mousakelle, Pooprassie, Hanagalla, Gigranella, Karandagalla, Daminatenne, Oakfield, and Nahakettia, in connection with which several thousand natives are constantly employed.

LIPTONS CONTROL THE TEA MARKET.

LIPTONS' TEAS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD

ROYAL APPOINTMENT
LIPTON,
Tea Merchant by Special Appointment To Her Majesty The Queen.

BUY FROM THE GROWERS.
The Finest Tea the World can produce.
PER 1/7 LB.
NO HIGHER PRICE.
RICH, PURE, AND FRAGRANT.
PER 1/- AND 1/4 LB.

LIPTON LTD.,

TEA, COFFEE, AND COCOA PLANTERS, CEYLON,
THE LARGEST TEA, COFFEE, AND PROVISION DEALERS IN THE WORLD.

Chief Offices: CITY ROAD, LONDON. Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

Ceylon Offices and Tea and Coffee Shipping Warehouses: PRINCE STREET, and MADDEMA MILLS, CINNAMON GARDENS, COLOMBO. Indian Offices and Shipping Warehouses: HARE STREET, CALCUTTA.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

RICHARD A. McCURDY, President.

Policy-holders in the "Mutual" enjoy the advantages of

SECURITY.—

Assets, 1897, exceed £52,000,000
Surplus, 1897, exceeds 7,250,000

ADAPTABILITY.—

LIFE INSURANCE.
INVESTMENT.
INCOME.

PROMPTITUDE.—

Claims paid in London immediately on receipt of satisfactory proof.

LIBERALITY.—

Bonuses have, in many cases, trebled the original sum.
Surrender values of unique liberality paid.

Detailed information supplied on application.

Head Office for the United Kingdom:

17 & 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

D. C. HALDEMAN, General Manager.

FIRST SPECTACLES.—When these are required the advice of a very skilful optician should be taken, as, unless the spectacles used in the first instance are exactly suited to the eyes, mischief is soon done which cannot afterwards be remedied.

BROWNING'S SYSTEM OF SUITING THE SIGHT
IS ALWAYS SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. JOHN BROWNING, President of The British Optical Association, and Author of "Our Eyes," now in its 17th Edition, price 1s., 63, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. May be consulted personally free of charge.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS COCOA.

EPPS'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

COCOA

FOR BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

"WORTH A GUINEA A BOX."

BEECHAM'S PILLS.

FOR ALL
BILIOUS & NERVOUS DISORDERS,
SUCH AS
Sick Headache, Constipation,
Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion.
Disordered Liver & Female Ailments.

SALE NOW OVER SIX MILLION BOXES YEARLY.
In boxes, 1/1½ and 2/9 each, with full directions.
Prepared only by the Proprietor.
THOMAS BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire.
Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Dealers everywhere.

W. & F. THORN, 19, Gt. Portland-st. W.

LONDON AGENTS.

THE STEREOSCOPIC COMPANY, 106, 108, Regent-st. W.

THE

ELSWICK

LADY'S ELSWICK.

1898

Elswicks are, if possible, superior to those previously made and are as perfect as money and skill can make them.

GENTLEMAN'S ELSWICK.

ELSWICK CYCLES are fitted with the PATTISSON HYGIENIC SADDLE.

CITY AGENTS—
BENETFINK & CO.
107, 108, Cheapside, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & WYMAN, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1117. Vol. XLIII. Thursday, May 26, 1898. Price Sixpence.

In Memoriam.

WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE. Born, December 29, 1809. Died, May 19, 1898.

QUENCHED is the beacon-fire that flamed so clearly on the hill;
The strong, the strenuous heart that beat so steadfastly is still:
The golden light had lingered long—the sky is radiant yet,
But down behind the purple hills at last the sun has set.

The fight is done; the fighter's sword no foe could break or bend,
Has been surrendered but to Death—so oft the brave man's friend;
And from the home he loved so well the lightning flash has sped
To tell the world that watched so long—to weep, for Gladstone's dead!

All we have lost full time will show when grief has grown less keen,
'Tis but a vision, blurred and marred, that can through tears be seen;
But even now, whilst sorrow's mist still gathers round the tomb,
Like beams of sunlight, memories flash to dissipate the gloom.

Even whilst mourning we recall how true he was, how great,
How earnest in the cause of Right, how zealous for the State;
How pure his aims, how strong his arm, how grand the deeds he wrought,
As, bravest of Knights-errant, he for Freedom fiercely fought.

We see him struggling for the truth, we watch him in the fray—
Each morning an encounter new, a triumph new each day.
We see him towering high above his comrades and his foes;
We see him as "from strength to strength" exultingly he goes.

And then we see him leave the field where long his flag has flown,
Where his high courage found its match in his good faith alone;
We see him turn t'wards home and rest, and all the world draws nigh,
That he who taught it how to live may teach it how to die.

And what a lesson it has been to watch beside his bed,
To see in his bright, trustful eyes no sign of mortal dread;
To hear from those poor fevered lips that murmur for release
No word that does not breathe of love, no message but of peace!

So is he conqueror to the end, this friend for whom we mourn;
This Christian Statesman by the stress of life so overborne;
When weakest he has strongest proved, for he has overcome
The rabid hosts of Prejudice, and Rancour has made dumb.

When he came back to his own roof, stricken by Fate's fell darts,
'Twas then our splendid countryman came home to all our hearts;
Censors and critics then forgot their censure and their spleen;
All they remembered was how great an Englishman he'd been!

The winds of Controversy dropped that had around him rushed,
To a great silence all the cries of party strife were hushed;
The smoke of battle disappeared, the mists dispersed afar,
And from its firmament of faith his soul shone like a star.

And so the close came slowly on till, at the dawn of day,
His spirit, faithful unto death, passed peacefully away;
And he, whom some had feared and some had hated in the past,
Died, as became so pure a soul, beloved by all at last.

Died, as became the people's guide and champion and friend,
A plain, untitled Englishman, unchanging to the end;
Assured of this proud epitaph—what nobler can we pen?—
"He only lived to labour for and help his fellow-men."

ENTRE NOUS.

THE first State Ball, which the Queen commanded the Lord Chamberlain to postpone, in consequence of the death of Mr. Gladstone, will probably take place on Friday, June 10, or else it will be put off until after Ascot race-week, when the first concert is to be given at Buckingham Palace.

Some of my contemporaries certainly do contrive to publish the most hopelessly idiotic nonsense about Court affairs. I read in one journal that the Lord Chamberlain was last week to submit to the Queen the invitation list for the first State Ball. Now, inasmuch as the ball was to have been given on Monday night, and as the invitations were issued three weeks ago, these statements are obviously sheer inventions. The fact is, that the Buckingham Palace invitation list was looked over by the Queen when she was at Cimiez. The delusion that attendance at a Drawing Room will bring forth its reward, in the shape of an invitation to a State function still prevails among many infatuated simpletons. The fact is that, you may attend Drawing Rooms with praiseworthy regularity for a score of years, and yet be no nearer to receiving the coveted invitation to the Palace than you were at the beginning of your "Society" career.

The same journal stated that Princess Henry of Prussia would be present at the State Ball, which was another piece of romance, as it was all along settled that she would accompany the Queen to Balmoral. The presence of Princess Henry at a State Ball in London, her husband being away, would be a breach of the very strict etiquette of the Court of Berlin.

The Princess of Wales will probably stay at Richmond with the Duke and Duchess of Fife over Whitsuntide, unless H.R.H. goes down to Scotland to spend a few days with the Queen at Balmoral, where Princess Victoria of Wales is on a visit to her Majesty. The Prince remains in town, and it is unlikely that he will go again to Sandringham (except for a mere flying visit) until the beginning of November. H.R.H. is to pay Saturday-till-Monday visits shortly to Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild at Waddesdon Manor, and to Lord Curzon and Lady Georgiana Curzon at Woodlands, near Uxbridge.

The Duke of Coburg has been ordered to the baths of Kissingen, and his intended visit to London is abandoned. The Duke will spend the summer at Reinhardsbrunn, his hunting seat in the Thuringian Forest, where the Prince of Wales is to pay him a visit in August. It is now very unlikely that the Duchess of Coburg, or any member of her family, will come to England this year.

Whenever the Queen holds a Council some of the papers invariably print a lot of trash of the most insane kind about the function. Last week the St. James's Gazette announced that the Council, which was held at Windsor Castle on Thursday, would be "of more than usual importance," and that "one of the most important matters will be the final signature of the Birthday Honours." These crass fictions are founded on the most intense ignorance. A Council is the most purely formal function that can possibly be imagined. The Sovereign simply signs the papers which are put before her by the Clerk, or reads, "like a parrot" (as Mr. Greville said), any declaration which is placed in her hands. The idea of the list of Birthday Honours being signed by the Queen at a Council is extravagantly silly and absurd. I wonder we were not told that each name which that list contained would be discussed by the Queen and the Privy Councillors present!

It seems to be generally supposed that members of the Cabinet attend a Council ipso facto, but, as a matter of fact, only those Privy Councillors go to Court who have been specially summoned; and it would be troublesome and inconvenient if the hard-working chief of one of the great departments were obliged to waste half a day in going to Windsor for absolutely routine business which could be perfectly well transacted in his absence. The St. James's also blunders in stating that the Privy Councillors would lunch with the Queen. They lunch at the Castle, and usually with the members of the Household-in-Waiting; for it is a part of the etiquette of the Court that only Royal personages ever sit at the Queen's own luncheon table.

There is a perplexing circumstance in connection with the Birthday honours list which admits of either of two interpretations, and the difficulty is to determine which is likely to be the correct one. Either the more junior officers of the Royal Navy are so averse to being distinguished by honours and distinctions that, in consideration for their feelings, their names are carefully left out of the awards, or the persons whose duty it is to call to her Majesty's notice the names of deserving recipients shamefully neglect their duty, with the result that the Navy portion of the C.B.s and D.S.O.s gets transferred to the sister Service. Upon the present occasion the extent to which the Royal Navy has been left out in the cold is accentuated by the honours list for the Tirah campaign, published almost at the same time. As regards this latter I have tried to calculate what the honours list would be if this country were to be again so unfortunate as to have to fight a battle of the magnitude of Waterloo; but the problem is so vast that I have not yet worked it out.

For the TRUTH HOTEL LIST, see page 1334 in the present issue.
For HOSPITALS and APPEALS, see page 1328.
For AMUSEMENTS, see pages 1331-3.
For OUR PUZZLES, see page 1349.

Sir Arthur Fremantle, who appears in the Birthday honours, has been for some years the popular and amiable Governor of Malta. He and Lady Fremantle have made the Palace a great social centre. The season at Malta is now definitely ended, though many visitors yet remain owing to the crowded state of the homeward-bound ships at this season when all the winter resorts empty themselves. Admiral Sir John Hopkins and the Mediterranean Squadron have not yet left the island on their summer cruise.

During June the Lords-in-Waiting on the Queen will be Lords Lawrence, Kintore, and Bridport, while Captain Drummond of Megginch, Colonel Browne, and Sir Edmund Commerell are to be the Grooms-in-Waiting; and Colonel Davidson and Lieutenant Ponsonby (taking the place of Lord Strafford) the Equerries on duty. The Ladies-in-Waiting are to be the Dowager Lady Ampthill, Dowager Lady Erroll, and Dowager Lady Churchill. Mr. J. S. Egerton and Mr. T. J. L. Hay will be the Pages-of-Honour on duty, and they are to be in attendance in the Throne Room at the Drawing Room (the last of the season) which the Princess of Wales intends to hold at Buckingham Palace on June 8.

One of the papers gives reasons why Captain Malcolm Drummond was selected to represent the Queen at the funeral of the late Duke of St. Albans, which reasons are purely imaginative. Captain Drummond is a Groom-in-Waiting to the Queen, and, as the Groom then on duty could not himself go to the funeral, because he was in attendance on her Majesty at Windsor Castle, the duty fell to Captain Drummond, as the Groom-next-in-Waiting. Some years ago there was a tiresome difficulty upon more than one occasion in obtaining the services of any member of the Household duly qualified to represent the Queen at funerals, so her Majesty made a new regulation, which applies to the lords, grooms, and equerries: that in the event of any extra duty arising which cannot be taken by the functionary in waiting, it will devolve on the official of the same class who is next in waiting.

The Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz will spend the holidays at Kew, where the Duke of Cambridge is to entertain a small family party at Cambridge Cottage.

Lord and Lady Cadogan devoted last week to various Viceregal duties, of the kind that are always in season, whatever the season may be. Lord Cadogan opened a new wing at St. Columba's School, honouring the occasion with a speech. Lady Cadogan did the same thing for a bazaar, but without the speech. In Ireland the display of oratorical powers is not looked for—to put it mildly—from women, no matter how highly placed. In a land supposed to have a special gift of eloquence, men retain in their own hands the monopoly of practising the art "of deceiving wherein men find pleasure to be deceived." The pity of it is, not that they gag the women, but that they stop there. And the grievance is not only an Irish one.

The wet and windy May which is supposed to suit the farmers, but decidedly disturbs the pastimes and arrangements of Society, has persistently held its course in Ireland. Nevertheless, the Irish Lawn Tennis week has been fixed as usual, and is being held this week in Dublin, in Fitzwilliam-square. The Birthday Review and Lord Cadogan's State dinner at the Viceregal Lodge finished the duties of the Viceroy for the season. The end of the month will see the shutters put up at the Viceregal Lodge, and Lord and Lady Cadogan will leave Ireland for what may be called the Viceregal long vacation. This year there is no Royal visit to look forward to; the annual visits of Royalty are not for Ireland as they are for Scotland, and the more distant Riviera. The idea of the Royal residence so prominently brought forward before the visit of the Duke and Duchess of York to Ireland is never mentioned now.

Lord Ardilaun's refusal to accept the Lieutenancy of the County of Dublin—then given to Lord Meath—was based on peculiar views, which, if true, would make the acceptance of all honours dishonourable and degrading. Surely an official place or title can be accepted without forfeiting freedom of opinion and the right to call one's soul one's own. If a Party chooses to treat as bribes all the honours it bestows, an independent man should make it his business to accept—if he gets the chance—a place, and then show that he has not taken it as a bribe. Public spirit should dictate this course, too, as it would be hard on the public that only those who take bribes should be placed in high positions.

A paragraph in the Ross-shire Journal of last week reports that Mr. Meyrick Bankes of Balconie entertained on the Castle policies a party of local shots, who, after being regaled with cake and wine, killed several hundreds of black game. This statement has somewhat perturbed one of my sporting readers, who points out that the close time for black game lasts from December 11 to August 19, inclusive. I do not think he need worry himself, however. The statement is probably the outcome of an artless reporter's notion that rooks are game.

None of the papers has referred to Mr. Gladstone's keen interest in the affairs of the British Museum, where he spent a great deal of his spare time. He was appointed an elected trustee of the Museum in 1856, mainly through the influence of Lord Palmerston, and he held his place on the Board until 1881, when he resigned, in order to make way for his friend the late Dean Liddell. Mr. Gladstone's resignation did not remove him from the Governing Body, as he was then an official trustee, being Prime Minister. He took a most active part in the management of the Museum, and it has been said that no other Prime Minister has done such good administrative work there, with the exception of Sir Robert Peel, who may have communicated his own zeal for the institution to his friend.

Scott Adie, 115, Regent-street, London, for Shooting Gowns, Cawdor Capes, Travelling Ulsters, Jackets, Racing Coats, Carriage Rugs from 10/9, Shawls, and Scotch Tweeds. Catalogue post free.

A Beautiful Hotel at Bournemouth.—The "Royal Bath." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Only Hotel on East Cliff. Moderate fixed tariff.

The most remarkable transaction during the Ashburnham sale was the running up of an uncut copy of the first edition of "Waverley" to the astounding price of £78! What would this copy have fetched if it had been produced in its original boards? The highest price hitherto obtained for an uncut copy of the 1814 edition was ten guineas, which was realised about twenty years ago at the Gibson Cray sale. When the greater part of the MS. of "Waverley" was sold in London, about a year before Sir Walter's death, it fetched only £18! The early editions of the "Waverley" series are mere literary curiosities, as they do not contain the very interesting notes with which Scott afterwards enriched each of the novels.

The new volume of Sir M. E. Grant-Duff's diary, to which I referred recently, contains a number of very good House of Commons stories; such as the anecdote of Joseph Hume saying during a debate: "The right hon. gentleman alleges such and such, but I can tell the right hon. allegator. . . ." Quite as good was Sir George Balfour's observation in more recent days: "The pale face of the British soldier is the backbone of the Indian Army."

There is a surprising statement by Mr. Oswald Crawfurd—surprising to me at least—in the current number of the London Review, the bright and interesting paper which he has just successfully launched. Humorously discussing the business side of literature in the language of commerce, he observes that novels are depressed, except in the case of five or six special favourite brands; that travel books are at a discount, and biographies dull in more senses than one; but that, on the other hand, "there is a firm market for poetry, minor as well as major." It is the latter part of the report, strengthened as it is by the additional information that the versifiers make considerable profits, that has astonished me. I had supposed the minor poets' wares to be an absolute drug in the book market. Considering the quality of most of these goods, it seems, indeed, an unkind reflection upon the taste of the public to suppose that they have a sale. However, Mr. Crawfurd speaks with the knowledge of an expert. It is too bad of him, though, not to have kept his knowledge to himself. The disclosure of it will infallibly bring limping into the public arena many a Pegasus who has hitherto been content to be put through his paces in the modest obscurity of a private edition. Surely there are enough already.

The Ruston sale at Christie's last week bids fair to claim pre-eminence, so far as the present season is concerned, inasmuch as the collection realised no less a sum than £43,000. Towards this large total the works of Sir Edward Burne-Jones and Messrs. G. F. Watts and Rossetti mainly contributed; the former master's "Mirror of Venus" fetching the record price of 5,450 gs.—a noticeable advance upon 3,400 gs., for which it changed hands in 1892. This was not only a record price for any picture painted by this artist, but exceeds any previous bid at Messrs. Christie's for a work disposed of during the lifetime of the painter, with one exception—that being the 6,300 gs. paid for the "Babylonian Marriage Market," the work of Edwin Long. The three Rossettis went for 1,550 gs., 3,000 gs., and 3,000 gs. respectively, each of the two latter realising 2,000 gs. more than the previous prices paid for them, and establishing a Rossetti record. The three pictures by Watts were also knocked down at prices considerably in excess of those paid for them in 1887.

"Perhaps it was right to dissemble your love,
But—why did you kick me downstairs?"

asked J. P. Kemble nearly a century ago. I can imagine the rejected artists addressing the Royal Academy in a paraphrase of the above well-known couplet, and exclaiming "Perhaps you were right to our pictures reject, But—why did you ruin our frames?" For I am assured that the damage done to the often valuable gold frames of pictures which are not hung at Burlington House is getting more extensive every year. Aggrieved artists have even been known to protest that the servants of the Academy must be in the pay of the frame-makers. Of course, it is not really so; but it is easy to see what an annoying, and often serious, matter it must be for a struggling artist to find the water-gilt mat-gold frame of his picture defaced by the marks of dirty and perspiring fingers, even if it is not actually mutilated by rough usage.

The use of care and soft leather gloves by the porters would do much perhaps to mitigate the evil; though I think that a better way of preventing the mischief complained of would be to rescind the rule which requires all pictures intended for the Academy to be submitted in gilt frames. Why, indeed, insist on anything but the roughest and cheapest sort of frame, seeing, that after all, the picture is the thing. But this would probably bring about something like a revolution at Burlington House, for, so far as my casual observations go, it must be for the sake of their frames that many of the pictures seen upon the walls there year after year are hung.

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

H. L. Savory & Co.'s Cigarettes.—By Special Warrants of Appointments to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, H.S.H. the Duke of Teck, and the Houses of Lords and Commons. To be obtained of all the leading Houses in the trade.—Sole address, 59, Piccadilly, London, W. Specimen case of samples, containing all sizes, 2s. 6d., with price list.

The University of Oxford has done well to reject the crazy proposal to establish a Final Honours School of Agricultural Science. It was well said by one of the opponents of this absurd and foolish scheme that the University might just as well start a Final Honours School of Brewing. There is just now a mania at both the Universities for all kinds of fads, most of them of the most eccentric description, and the ignominious failure at Cambridge of many such experiments ought to have taught Oxford a lesson. It is no part of the business of such a University as Oxford to examine upon subjects which it does not teach, and there is quite enough of legitimate work to be done there without introducing atuities of this kind. The Dean of Christ Church is espectable as an ecclesiastic, but as the head of a great ducational foundation he has proved a dreary disappointment, and his support of this silly scheme is not likely to nprove his position in the University.

It seems incredible that in these enlightened days a roposal to close the Glasgow University grounds on nday should be extensively supported in that city. irely even the most austere of Presbyterian fanatics nnot be so stupidly bigoted as to object to these ounds being opened simply for walking to many who are ad to find in them a quiet retreat on Sunday afternoons. nder an ancient charter, the University grounds are a peculiar," the Civic authorities having no jurisdiction natever within their boundaries. Of late, however, the nators have foolishly abandoned their exclusive power of vernment by requesting the Civic authorities to provide em with two policemen, instead of establishing a stodian of their own. The effort to stop "Sabbath secration" by closing the grounds meets with the approval of all rational Glaswegians, and it may be ped that it will be vigorously opposed.

The Lord Chancellor has presented the Rev. Robert nes, curate of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, to the rectory Barham, Norfolk, vacant by the death of Canon rnier, who had held this benefice for only a few years. rham was until recently one of the richest livings in the t of the Chancellor, but agricultural depression has cut wn the net stipend from over twelve hundred a year to ween three and four hundred, with a good house and den, which, indeed, are on somewhat too extensive a le for the reduced income, unless the Rector is possessed adequate private means.

The rectory of Wrotham, Kent, which is believed to be best piece of preferment in the gift of the Primate, been given by Dr. Temple to the Rev. Leslie Goodwin, a son of the late Bishop of Carlisle, who has been beneficed in Kent for many years, and he has earned preferment by really good work in the diocese. Mr. Goodwin was for a long time rector of St. Martin's, and vicar of St. Paul's, Canterbury, and Archbishop Benson gave him the living of Aldington, near Hythe, which he is now leaving. The net income at Wrotham is over £800 a year, with a capital residence, while Aldington is worth about £350, reduced by agricultural depression from upwards of £700 a year.

Canon Ainger, Master of the Temple, is to be the special preacher at Westminster Abbey next Sunday evening.

The ladies of a Yorkshire parish are, I am given to understand, much exercised in mind at the change that the new Vicar has unaccountably wrought in his personal appearance. Before the Archbishop of York appointed him to the living he rejoiced in the possession of a luxuriant moustache. On his appointment, this becoming adornment mysteriously disappeared, and he no longer looks the same man. Strange to say, a similar phenomenon was noticed when his predecessor was presented to the living three or four years ago, only in that case a beard as well as a moustache vanished. The coincidence has given rise to a suspicion that the reverend gentlemen were impelled to offer up their moustaches as a sacrifice to the prejudices of a superior ecclesiastical authority concerning such hirsute appendages for the clergy. It is a singular coincidence, but I feel sure it can be nothing more. If a shaving ordinance were in force in the diocese, we should have heard about it from the lady friends of the clergy, if not from the latter, long before this.

It seems necessary to remind the overseers and churchwardens of the parish of Lillington, near Leamington, that ecclesiastical rates were abolished some years ago. At present the overseers permit the churchwardens' demand note for a church rate at twopence in the pound to be delivered with the demand note for the half-yearly poor rate, and both documents bear the name and address of the same collector. There is nothing whatever to indicate that payment of the Church rate is purely optional, and even if there were, its collection in conjunction with the poor rate would still be improper and objectionable. It is quite conceivable that ignorant persons are deluded into the belief that payment in the one case is as obligatory as in the other, and now that the attention of the Local Government Board is drawn to the matter they will doubtless put a stop to the practice.

---

Given Away.—A high-grade New Hudson Gent's Cycle, fitted with "Ixion Tyres," for the best two or four lines of verse on the "Ixion Tyre." A Lady's Cycle also given for lady competitors only. Five consolation prizes given in each competition. Further details of competition and "All about Ixion Tyres" sent, on application, free. Competition verses must be sent in before the 31st July, with this advertisement or voucher attached, and must be marked "Competition" in corner of envelope.—The New Ixion Tyre & Cycle Co., Ltd., 144, Holborn, London.

Nearly a year ago I referred approvingly to the appeal of the London Playing Fields Committee for funds for the purchase of Prince George's ground, near Raynes Park Station. Owing to the many demands upon the purses of the public during the Jubilee, the contributions received fell a long way short of the amount required, but I am glad to find that the movement has not been dropped, and I hope that this year it will be carried to a successful conclusion. The ground, which contains about twenty-five acres and provides twenty-four cricket pitches and seven football grounds, is at present rented by the committee, and the option for the purchase of the freehold, at the price of £10,000 remains open only till Christmas next. Unless the money can be raised by that date, the land will fall into the maw of the all-devouring builder, and the youthful population of London will be deprived of another place of healthy recreation—places already sadly too few. I may add that donations to the fund can be sent to the Hon. Chandos Leigh, Q.C., 45, Upper Grosvenor-street, W.

A friend of mine in Athens writes:—

Karditz was executed to-day for his attempt on the King's life. He was justly punished. But he left two sisters. They are orphans, and the one relative they have in Athens has declared his intention to turn them out of his house to save himself from the disgrace of sheltering the sisters of a would-be regicide. One of the girls has been a teacher in a Government school, and she has been dismissed; the other is scarcely more than a child. No one here would be likely to give either of them employment, or to take up the case of these orphans, owing to the black cloud that rests over them, although they bear the best of characters, and knew no more of the intentions of their brother than any two girls in England. Can you start a subscription for them in your newspaper, or do anything else which you think would be to their advantage?

I will readily transmit any money that any one may be desirous to send to Athens for their benefit. Their lot must be a very sad one.

Lady Jeune once more appeals to the public to provide her with the means to secure to London children a holiday in the country. Last year she received £1,107 and sent 1,041 children to the country, besides repaying an overdraft of £220, due to the subscriptions having fallen short of outlay in 1896. Each pound subscribed enables her to send a child into the country for three weeks, and provides for its journey, as well as clothes when needed. The money, therefore, confided to her is well and economically used. The readers of TRUTH have always enabled me to hand her over a considerable sum. I trust that they will do this again. A pound is not much to give, if it ensures to some little child a change from slum life in a town to a country holiday of three weeks.

FAIR AND GOLDEN TRESSES.—To nourish and beautify your hair use ROWLAND'S GOLDEN MACASSAR OIL, which has the same stimulating properties as the red, and does not stain or darken the hair or linen, 3/6, 7/-, 10/6. Sold by Stores and Chemists.

Reference was recently made in TRUTH to the enormous and ever-increasing bulk of the Indian Army Regulations. The matter was specially referred to by one of my military correspondents in connection with the corresponding volume of clerical work thrown upon commanding officers and adjutants. The evil, however, does not end with these authorities. A quartermaster-sergeant in an Infantry battalion sends the following interesting particulars of the regulations under which he has to work, and I presume that all battalions are alike in this respect. It will be seen that there are at least four volumes of the Indian Army Regulations omitted from this list, and I presume that my correspondent has only given those volumes which concern his own office work:—

Vol.	Subject.	Paragraphs.	Pages.	Pages of Appendix.	Total.	Date of Printing.
1 pt. 1 ..	Pay and Allowances ..	1,610	383	24	407	'93
1 ,, 2 ..	Do. do.	639	189	—	189	'93
2 pts. 1 & 2	Discipline	2,880	738	—	738	'87
3	Equipment	933	192	276	468	'92
5	Commissariat	2,176	489	239	728	'91
7	Dress	—	176	—	176	'91
10 pt. 1 } 10 ,, 2 }	Passages by Sea and Land.. ..	567 720	125 316	37 99	162 415	'89 '89
11	Clothing, Provisional Issue	—	144	124	268	'94
1	Bengal Barrack Reg...	819	138	101	239	'78
1 pt. VIII.	Field Service Table ..	—	86	—	86	'97
1	Field Service Manual..	—	411	—	411	'95
1	Equipment Tables ..	—	41	—	41	'96
1	Price List of Stores ..	—	475	—	475	'96
1	Instructions for Pay, &c.	536	258	—	258	'92
1	Commission Voucher and Store Accounts	—	144	—	144	'91
1	Encampments	—	70	—	70	'72
1	Transport and Loading	—	100	—	100	'86
		10,880	4,475	900	5,375

It may be added that this list is by no means exhaustive, as there are other volumes relating to Ordnance, Hospitals, and Volunteers, not to mention the Queen's Regulations and Royal Warrants bearing on daily regimental work. And over and above all this there are circulars and Army Orders issued, as my correspondent says, "by cartloads."

Now, every administrative system must, of course, have a definite code of regulations to work by, but the best system ever devised would be strangled under such measure less lengths of red tape as the above. It will be noted that one or two of the volumes specified date back upwards of twenty years. Many of them are said to be utterly out of date, and it stands to reason that they must be so. I would seriously suggest to the Indian military authorities whether the time has not come for them to overhaul and condense this preposterous mass of literature. Red tape is not unknown at the War Office but that Department manages to embody all the more important of its standing ordinances in a twentieth part of the space occupied by the various Indian military regulations. A comprehensive code in a couple of volumes brought up to date and re-issued every year, would probably serve every practical administrative purpose.

CHALLIS'S ROYAL HOTEL, Rupert-street, Piccadilly-circus.—The new Louis XV. Dining-room now open for Luncheons and Dinners. Table d'Hôte Luncheon, 2/-, from 12.30 to 3 p.m.; Table d'Hôte Dinner, 3/6, from 6.30 to 9 p.m., served at separate tables. Open to non-residents.

In the May number of the Practitioner attention is called to the impossibility of providing medical officers for the two Army Corps which Lord Wolseley insists are ready for foreign service. In a battle there is a loss in wounded of about 20 per cent., taking the average of wounded in the German and French Armies in each of the great battles fought. The regulations lay down that 118 medical officers are required in the front or fighting line of an Army Corps; about fifty on the line of communications, with ten per cent. added to the total for casualties. Thus 400 medical men would be needed for the two Corps. There are 800 medical officers on the active list, or thereabouts. Of these 550 are serving in India and foreign stations, leaving only 250 available for service with Lord Wolseley's two Army Corps. In addition to these 250 there are about 120 retired medical officers under fifty-five years of age liable to recall to service, but of these one third are estimated to be unfit for foreign service. Therefore, even if all the military hospital establishments in the United Kingdom were denuded, the number of medical officers that could be obtained for service with the two Army Corps abroad would not be more than 330. There is, it is true, the Army Medical Reserve of Officers. It consists of about 200 medical men, most of them officers of Volunteer Regiments, and in the event of some great war, involving an expedition abroad consisting of two Army Corps, they would have to stay at home. The Practitioner enjoys a high reputation as a medical journal. Its figures are remarkable. They may be correct, or the reverse, but, in any case, they need consideration.

I do not quite understand why there should be any objection on the part of pensioners to payment of their pensions at shorter intervals, but some objection there certainly seems to be, and I have received two or three letters giving expression to it. For instance, one pensioner writes from Dublin :—

> In your issue of last week you state that pensioners cannot get credit, and have to go to the workhouse. Allow me to inform you that such is not the case. There are a number of houses here who give them three months' credit, and weekly money according to the rate of pension. Other houses give them lodgings, and money weekly to buy food. Instead of doing that, they fly to the public-house, then go begging, and from that they go to the unions, and in a number of cases do that under false pretences.

I confess I do not follow the argument. If a man has a tendency to intemperance and improvidence, the best plan would seem to be to let him have his money in the smallest possible quantities at the most frequent intervals, and the worst possible plan that of giving him his money in large lumps at long intervals. I quite understand that when such a man gets paid once a quarter he spends all his money in riotous living during the first week, and is then reduced to begging and the workhouse, and this fact is so well-known to all the Guardians in the country that they are agitating for a change in the system. How such a change would hurt a provident and temperate man, I confess I fail altogether to see.

After listening to so many Jeremiads on the condition of the Home Army, I found my mind immensely relieved by a visit to the Military Tournament. I expected, after studying Mr. Arnold Forster and other authorities, to see squads of sickly schoolboys making pitiful attempts to go through military drill and evolutions; and I was prepared to see bearer companies busily at work carrying out of the arena those whose strength failed them under their arduous exertions. Nothing of the sort. Somehow or other, we seem to have plenty of regiments left in the country who can supply a good show of stalwart, smart, and well-trained soldiers. Though the Army is going to the dogs, the display at the Agricultural Hall shows not the slightest falling-off in quality or in public interest. And I doubt very much whether any Army in the world could give a better exhibition of its kind—to say nothing of the admirable contribution which is made to the show by the Navy and the Reserve Forces.

Only last week I hazarded the remark that "of all the changes that have been made in uniform since the days of Marlborough, nine-tenths have been mere useless waste of money." An interesting opportunity of testing this assertion is afforded at the Military Tournament, for the "pageant" this year gives samples of uniforms in the Army and the Navy during the last three centuries. Looking critically at the procession, it struck me that, while the changes are sometimes for the worse, and sometimes for the better, on the whole we have advanced a little. Comparing the soldier of the present day with his predecessor under the Stuarts and the Restoration, I should say that trousers and Northampton boots are an advance on shoes and knee-breeches; and that our own "Tommy's" natural head of hair—cut however short and plastered however greasily over the forehead—would suit the exigencies of campaigning better than any wig. From Marlborough's time to Wellington's all the changes made seem to have been in the wrong direction; and the whole idea of the rulers of the Army down to the time of the Crimean War seems to have been to encase a soldier in the stiffest, hardest, awkwardest, and ugliest garments that ingenuity could devise. During the last forty years there has certainly been a change for the better.

The most rational and certainly not the least picturesque dress in the whole of her Majesty's Service is unquestionably the British Tar's of the present day. Here the Agricultural Hall pageant shows a real advance—more especially as compared with the era of pigtails and glazed hats. A more businesslike fighting dress was never devised, I imagine, than that of "Jack" landed for shore work, with his brown belt, boots, and gaiters. Among Military uniforms, the one which impresses me as most serviceable and sensible is the khaki clothing, whether for Infantry or Cavalry. I am told that you must have a showy uniform for recruiting purposes. Then I would have one uniform for show and recruiting purposes, and a totally different one for active service, designed solely with an eye to business.

---

Charing Cross Hospital, W.C., entirely dependent on voluntary support, urgently requires help. Liabilities, £11,000. No investments.

Since the last reference in TRUTH to the alleged mutinous disturbance on board the Borneo on her last passage out, I have received a further communication on the subject from a non-commissioned officer who travelled by the ship. His statements entirely bear out the explanation already given in TRUTH as to the alleged robbery of bread, and he entirely denies that anything in the nature of a riot took place. If it be really true, as the bulk of the evidence seems to suggest, that the cook made an unfounded charge against the troops of robbing the bread locker, in order to conceal deficiencies in his own stores, arising from causes for which he was responsible, it would certainly seem that there ought to be some further inquiry into this cook's conduct. In the meantime, I would recommend my correspondents in Lancashire who sent me the letter from a soldier which first called attention to this matter, to be a little circumspect in future in accepting the statements of their young friend. A certain amount of foundation for his story he no doubt had, but he seems to have reared upon that foundation a decidedly fanciful superstructure.

What on earth is the meaning of the following question, set in the mathematical paper at the last March examination for the Britannia?—

Mr. Gladstone was born in the year A.D. 1809. In the year A.D. x he was $x-3$ years old. Find x.

If in the year A.D. x Mr. Gladstone was $x-3$ years old, Mr. Gladstone must have been born in the year A.D. 3. One would think that there must have been some misprint in the question, but no notice to that effect was given to the candidates. It would be interesting to know how many boys came to grief in the examination through wasting their time in puzzling over this nonsensical problem.

In alluding recently to Mr. H. B. Röhss' incongruous combination of the business of an advertising usurer with the position of an assessor of income-tax at Southampton, I incidentally mentioned the unsuccessful charge of fraud which he brought against one Simmons. There was an interesting sequel to this case at Bournemouth County Court last week, when Simmons sued Röhss for damages for malicious prosecution. It transpired that Röhss, who calls himself the Southampton Loan and Advance Company, lent Simmons £10 on terms which made the interest work out at from 40 to 50 per cent.; and that he only put the criminal law in motion when he had failed to recover his money by civil process. Judge Philbrick stigmatised the usurer's conduct as odious and monstrous, wrongful and malicious, and awarded Simmons eighty guineas damages.

I do not know whether the Income Tax Commissioners at Southampton have yet dispensed with Mr. Röhss's services as an assessor. If they have not done so, the observations of the Judge at this trial make it imperative upon the Board of Inland Revenue to take steps at once for terminating the scandal.

It will probably interest—possibly it will amuse—the experts of sanitary science to hear, on the authority of the Bristol Medical Officer, that the ventilation of sewers is a mistake. At Bristol the sewers are unventilated, and in a discussion last week the Medical Officer admitted that in this respect the city is an exception to the general rule. The Local Government Board advocates, and sometimes insists upon, the ventilation of sewers, and the system is adopted in London and in almost every other town throughout the country. In the opinion, however, of the Bristol Medical Officer the wise men of Whitehall and all the rest of them are utterly wrong. He considers that the ventilation of the public sewers is unnecessary and dangerous, and he is strongly opposed to any interference with the present state of things in Bristol. This worthy Doctor shows a good deal of courage in setting up his own views in opposition to those of the great majority of sanitarians both here and on the Continent. Perhaps he is right, after all; but in the face of what is done everywhere else, the people of Bristol would be rash to accept his ipse dixit on a question of such importance to the health of the city.

During the last week I have been receiving from the offices of all the railways running out of London particulars of the train arrangements for the Whitsuntide holidays, from which I gather that every possible facility will be offered to the weary Londoner of spending his Whitsuntide in any other part of the kingdom for which he has a fancy. It is really astonishing to see the opportunities of travel which are offered to holiday-makers nowadays. One thing only is still needful—that the railway managers should be able to control the weather.

By the way, I mentioned the other day that the North-Western management have made arrangements for collecting in advance the luggage of passengers leaving town, and forwarding it to its destination at a merely nominal charge independently of the travellers themselves. I have since been asked to mention that the Great Western have made similar arrangements, and I dare say that other companies have done the same. If any company has not done so, I should recommend it to hurry up.

If you want to entirely Furnish your House or select any article of Furniture or Carpet, &c., send for HEWETSONS' Illustrated Priced Catalogue.—HEWETSONS, Tottenham Court-road, London.

The many readers and correspondents of TRUTH who are suffering under the newsboy nuisance will rejoice to hear that a society is in process of incubation for combating street nuisances of all sorts and sizes. I wish it every success; but surely if there is one matter more than another which ought to be dealt with by public authority, rather than voluntary agency, it is this. The law on this subject is no doubt in an unsatisfactory state, and requires some amendment; but, on the other hand, some of the local authorities of the metropolis seem to possess powers which are not at present fully used. Of this, the following letter from the London County Council affords clear proof:—

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.

Spring-gardens, S.W., January 14, 1898.

SIR,—With reference to your letter of the 12th inst. as to street noises, I have to inform you that by-laws for the good rule and government of the County, under section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, have been drafted and will shortly be submitted to the Council for approval. Among the subjects dealt with by the by-laws is that of street shouting.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

C. J. STEWART,
Clerk of the Council.

Doubtless the dissolution of the Council since this date and the election of a new one accounts in some measure for the fact that these promised by-laws have not yet been passed. The time seems to have arrived, however, when the new Council may be reasonably asked to pick up the threads dropped by its predecessor.

From the Naval and Military Club, of all places in the world, I have had an anonymous letter reproving me for my attitude in this matter. The writer asks how London could get on without the yelling of newspaper vendors, more particularly on Sundays, and reproves generally those who object to street noises as selfish and inconsiderate curmudgeons, who would make life intolerable if they had their way. He even anticipates that if repressive measures are adopted, the eventual result will be a Revolution and a Reign of Terror. Heaven forbid that I should do or say anything which might check the growth of a struggling sprig of democratic feeling in such unpromising soil as the Naval and Military Club. But as one not devoid of democratic sympathies, and decidedly in favour of the sale of newspapers, I feel bound to tell my anonymous friend that his sentiments and misgivings are a trifle extravagant. Everybody who wants a newspaper could easily have his wants supplied without a horde of urchins yelling from morning to night throughout the principal thoroughfares; and the worst nuisance of all, the gangs of blatant roughs who invade quiet neighbourhoods at 9, 10, or 11 p.m., bawling items of generally fictitious news, ministers to the needs of no human being but themselves. There are other necessities of life besides newspapers, and they are for the most part sold without causing annoyance to those who do not want them. No alarm need be felt, therefore, about the consequences of placing this particular industry under reasonable restrictions.

I am not myself afflicted with nerves. Piano organs do not vex my soul, nor impede the flow of my ideas. The street in which I perform my editorial labours (being what is known as a "quiet thoroughfare") is the playground of a large section of the juvenile population of Westminster, whose voices cease not between breakfast and bed-time; but I manage to put up with the noise, and if a misprint occasionally mars the literary perfection of these columns, I don't think it is the fault of the children. At the same time, I prefer quiet to noise—at any rate needless and discordant noise; and I doubt not that for an overwhelming majority of people the multiplication of irritating noises—whether noticed or not—adds appreciably to the wear and tear of town life.

The liberty of the subject does not require that one individual should have the right to shout in the ears of a hundred who don't want to hear him; on the contrary, the liberty of the subject is invaded when a hundred are thus tyrannised over by one. Neither does social progress necessarily involve the multiplication of noises—rather the reverse. The machine that works most quietly is usually the machine that works best. As far as I have had an opportunity of judging, the same thing is true of men and nations. Depend upon it, my Naval and Military friend, as civilisation advances noise must diminish. You have been brought up amid the blare of trumpets and the thunder of cannon, and, as usually happens, they have warped your judgment.

People who object to the registration of midwives should read the report of an inquest held at Northwich last week. It was on the body of a woman whose life had been lost—"frittered away" as the coroner put it—solely through the want of care and skill on the part of a midwife. The case is typical of dozens in which poor creatures are either killed outright or else subjected to horrible suffering and perhaps maimed for life through the bungling administrations of unqualified attendants. I have had some strong testimony on this point from a lady whose association with the work of a large women's hospital brings her into contact with many such victims of negligence and ignorance; but the mischief still being done every day by descendants of Mrs. Gamp is too well known to require demonstration. At present any woman is at liberty to practise as a midwife, no matter how unfitted she may be for the work. The law should surely make it illegal for any one to pursue this calling without proper training and without a certificate of competence.

DUYSEN PIANOS are the most superb of all modern Instruments. They stand absolutely unrivalled for beauty of tone, touch, & finish. Consummate success in small grands.—LLOYD'S, 24, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

The luxury of a bath is incomplete without the addition of SCRUBB'S CLOUDY FLUID AMMONIA, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, but avoid injurious imitations.

Some interesting particulars as to the profits on the "area-gate touting" business came out last week in the course of an action before Judge Addison at Southwark. The action was brought by one Todd, trading at Twickenham as "Lester & Co.," under a guarantee which had been given for the honesty of one of his touts. The said tout had been employed to sell watches, chains, Bibles, and sewing-machines among domestic servants and others, and, like others of his class, he had sent in bogus orders and drawn commission on them, not to mention having handed over eight of his watches to the landlady with whom he lodged in settlement of his account. The delinquent was called as a witness, and it appeared from his evidence that he sold watches which cost from 10s. to 15s. at 40s. and 50s., "or as much more as he could get," and sewing-machines which cost 37s. 6d. at £5. Evidence was also given as to his having sent in a bogus order to his principal, which he had obtained by inducing a servant-girl, after she had refused to give an order, to write down her name and address so that his firm might send her their next catalogue. Judge Addison nonsuited the worthy employer of this rascal, and no one will regret it. The trade is a fraudulent one from beginning to end, and the principals in it are far more to blame than the agents.

The following statement, published in Monday's Daily Chronicle, is not only amusing in itself, but supplies a convincing justification of much of my criticism of Petty Sessions justice. It is given on the authority of a clergyman who has been conducting a prison mission, and who took this statement from an elderly prisoner. With such sentences as these is the TRUTH "Pillory" filled, and this man's experience shows well the folly and cruelty of them:—

I have been locked up three times. As long as I was in work I was never in trouble; then I got out of work, and everybody preferred putting on younger men. I was hungry—did you ever know, sir, what it was to be downright hungry? Well, I begged at a door. I knew it was wrong; but I begged, and I got locked up for it. When I came out, I said, "I won't do that again." So I got some leather, and cut out a pair of boot laces, and tried to sell them. Then I got run in again for hawking without a licence. When I came out, I said, "I won't do that again." And I walked, and I walked, and could get no work, nor find food either. I was dead beat, and I lay down under a hedge—then I got locked up for sleeping out of doors.

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

Among all the aberrations of judgment in my Legal Pillory this week the performance of the Dewsbury Borough J.P.s stands out as the most grotesque and lamentable. No doubt this failure of justice was simply due to sheer stupid incapacity to fit the punishment to the crime. But though the shallow-pates responsible for it were doubtless innocent of any intention to encourage cruelty to children, the infliction of a trumpery fine for barbarous and unnatural brutality such as was proved against the man Garside is only too likely to have that result. The decision treats this ruffian's offence as about equal in enormity to the offence of permitting an unmuzzled puppy to wander into the street, and I am not surprised to hear that it has excited a storm of indignation among the local public. The other cases in the following list scarcely call for any special comment. It will be seen, however, that the magistracy generally continue to display their customary leniency in dealing with acts of violence and cruelty, while at the same time coming down heavily on the vagrant, the poacher, and the petty thief:—

Abergavenny Police-court. Before Major C. Morgan and Dr. S. H. Steel. Evan Powell, charged with assaulting his wife. They had only been married a couple of months, and defendant began to ill-treat her two days after the wedding. On the occasion for which he was summoned he held her by the shoulder with one hand and beat her with the other, giving her a black eye and badly bruising her face. Fined £1 and bound over.

Plymouth Police-court. Samuel Gibbons, charged with assaulting a police constable by kicking him. He had been previously convicted of a similar offence. Fined 40s.

Derby Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor and Mr. W. Legge. Frederick Lewis Busher, brewer's traveller, charged with assaulting his wife, who said he kicked her, knocked her down, and struck her across the face and on the head. Several of her teeth were knocked out, her eyes blackened and lumps caused on her head. This was the fourth pair of black eyes she had had since Christmas, and the Bench granted a separation order. For the assault defendant was fined £3 and costs.

Dewsbury Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. R. Spedding, G. Day, E. Kilburn, and J. J. Barstow. Edward Garside, charged with assaulting his son, aged five years. On going home, defendant, who was drunk, found the child on the doorstep, and without a word he seized him by the hair and flung him from him. He then called the child back and struck him on the face with his fist, making both eyes black. In the house defendant again beat the child, in spite of the protests of the mother, whom he also assaulted, and he was only made to desist by the arrival of some neighbours. Defendant was "cautioned," and fined 5s. and costs.

Abergavenny Police-court. Before the same magistrates. John Taylor, charged with poaching. One month.

Steyning Police-court. Before Colonel Ingram. Jane Carcass, charged with sleeping out and having no visible means of subsistence. Seven days.

Colchester Police-court. Before Messrs. W. Buck and L. J. Watts. James Hurrell, charged with sleeping out and having no visible means of subsistence. Seven days.

Blackburn Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. Henry Higson and R. Leeming. John McLeavy, aged seventy-six, charged with stealing a pair of boots from a shop. Fourteen days.

Downham Market Petty Sessions. Before Sir Alfred Bagge, Messrs. E. Hawkins, N. Booth and F. Wood. Charles Vincent, charged with sleeping out and having no visible means of subsistence. Fourteen days.

East Harling Petty Sessions. Before Sir E. C. Nugent, and other Magistrates. Edward Perfitt, charged with taking three game eggs, and Fred Allen, charged with aiding and abetting him. Fined £1 2s. 6d. each.

Birmingham Quarter Sessions. Before the Recorder. Wm. Kennedy, charged with stealing 3 lb. of mutton. Prisoner, who was drunk at the time, took the meat from a shop window, carried it a dozen yards, and then threw it down. Two months.

Subscriptions greatly needed by THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—2,876 convictions this year; 7,545 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

Church Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. W. Appleby, W. Lee, L. Wilkinson, and other magistrates. James Lomax, charged with assaulting his wife. He kicked her with his clogs. Fined 10s. and costs.

Bootle Police-court. Before Mr. C. Wells and Alderman Webster. William Bertrand, charged with being drunk and disorderly, and also with assaulting Stephen Charles Andrews and a policeman. Without the slightest provocation, defendant committed a brutal assault on Andrews, and he also struck the policeman, who asked him for his name and address. Fined £3 for the assault on Andrews, and 10s. for the other offences.

Rushall Police-court. Before Messrs. F. James, J. Clare, R. H. Holden, and A. W. Greatrex. William Bates charged with assaulting George Stokes by striking him on the arm with a red-hot file. The complainant received injuries which kept him away from his work for some time. Fined 20s. and costs.

Northallerton Police-court. Before Messrs. W. Brown, C. Palliser, M. H. Horsfall, and . Hird. Alfred Heselwood, charged with cruelty to a mare by working her whilst in an unfit state. The animal had four large wounds on her shoulders, all raw, and discharging blood and matter. Fined £1 6s. 6d. and costs.

Hadleigh Police-court. Before Mr. J. F. T. Dipnall and other magistrates. David Elmer, charged with taking three partridges' eggs. Fined £1, including costs.

Birmingham Police-court. Before Mr. T. M. Colmore and other magistrates. Jacob Weston, charged with stealing a pair of boots. Six weeks.

Southampton Police-court. Before Mr. G. P. Perkins and other magistrates. Wm. Watson, charged with vagrancy by sleeping on the Phœnix Wharf. Four days.

Wellingborough Police-court. Before Messrs. C. J. K. Woolston, W. Brown, E. Sharman, and O. Parker. Herbert Freeman, John Tebbutt, George Perkins, and George Stephenson charged with trespassing in pursuit of game. Fined £1 10s. each.

Grimsby Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. E. Bannister and J. C. Wright. Laura Butcher, charged with absconding from the workhouse. Seven days.

Prescot Police-court. George Griffiths, charged with using a dog for taking game. Fined £2 and costs.

Although the usurer Woolfe Jackson, of Crewe, pursues his nefarious calling in a comparatively obscure and humble way, he is evidently the equal in rapacity of the most notorious members of his pestilent tribe. Here is an example of his extortion which eclipses the case I gave the other week, and that was bad enough in all conscience. This wolf, in the sheep's clothing of the Crewe and District Loan Company, lent £20 to a poor working man, received back £50, and then alleged that a further £75 was still owing. The interest charged was at the rate of 1000 per cent. per annum, which, I believe, almost beats Isaac Gordon's fine record. To bring the matter within the jurisdiction of the County Court, Jackson reduced his claim to £50, and I am sorry to say that he last week obtained judgment for this amount, payable by instalments of 4s. a month. It is a shameful thing that the law should help the bloodsucker to squeeze more money from his unfortunate victim even in these homœopathic doses.

I hear that Chubb Jackson at present has a canvasser at work in the neighbourhood of Winchfield, Hants. I mention this fact not only as a warning to residents in that neighbourhood who may receive calls, but also to the police, who should keep an eye on the lady in question. The police need not be discouraged by the recent failure of the prosecution of Chubb Jackson at Shaftesbury. All magistrates do not take similar views upon cases of this kind, and even if a conviction is not recorded, it would do much to stop Chubb Jackson's little game if he were systematically arrested and brought before the nearest J.P. at every town where he shows a collecting book. By the way, I see that Jackson has now changed the name of his concern, and calls it "The United Gospel Army Homes, Country and Seaside." This new name is another indication of his fraudulent intentions; for, needless to say, even if there is such an organisation as the Gospel Army in existence, which I doubt, it has certainly nothing to do with Chubb Jackson's homes—unless, of course, Chubb Jackson is the Gospel Army.

From a remote corner of County Tipperary a lady sends me a delectable booklet, forwarded to her daughter aged thirteen, by a London dealer in penny dreadfuls and other literary garbage. The book is nothing very bad in itself, though not the sort of reading that a judicious parent would select for a girl of thirteen, but it contains all sorts of advertisements of a worse complexion, and is presumably forwarded for advertising purposes. Now, how did this dealer—one March, of St. James's-walk, E.C.—get hold of the name of a little girl living with her parents in Co. Tipperary? Probably through its publication in some newspaper in connection with a prize competition or something of that kind. If parents take my advice, they will keep their children from participating in any game of this description when it involves the publication of names and addresses.

Any number of circulars have reached me during the last week or two issued by "The South Kensington Fine Art Association," 8, Exhibition-road. The circulars afford an amusing example of the tricks resorted to in these days for unloading shoddy goods upon the public. The shoddy goods in this case are, of course, pictures. They are described as "by various artists, including, among others, Adams, Horton, C. Hunt, Herbert, Cook, Hill, . . . Turner," the initials of the artists being discreetly omitted. The reader is informed that at the close of a very successful season the S.K.F.A. Association have decided to give their patrons the opportunity of participating in a special distribution of "genuine original oil paintings" by these artists, and each recipient of a circular is told that his name has been selected for this favour, and that a certificate entitling him to participate is enclosed. The certificate is in itself a wondrous work of art—whether by Adams, Horton, C. Hunt, Herbert, Cook, Hill, . . . Turner, is not stated; but it is headed by a striking picture of the National Gallery, with two artists, male and female, for supporters. The certificate certifies that the holder will receive one of the genuine oil paintings above referred to on payment of 9s. 6d. for one and 18s. 6d. for a couple; and in order to encourage him in incurring this outlay, a guarantee is offered that every picture is "hand painted." If any patron is unable to call and select his nine-and-sixpenny masterpiece for himself, the managing director undertakes to make a selection for him, if he will state the class of subject which he prefers. The South Kensington Fine Art Association is a little shop on a first floor in Exhibition-road, and I suppose that if the proprietor offered a valuable collection of oil paintings at 9s. 6d. each in the ordinary way he would have to wait long for customers. If he finds that he can dispose of his rubbish by sending out these certificates, he is certainly entitled to all credit for his discovery.

The Oldest Glass and China Shop in London (Established 1760), provides Outfits for Palace or Cottage.—Alfred B. Pearce, 39, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C.

Surplice Shirts for evening wear, with pique fronts, 9/6, 10/6 each, made to measure.—Sampson & Co., Shirt Tailors, 268, 270, Oxford-street, London, W. Price lists forwarded.

This last remark applies equally to the various advertising dodges of Ernest Goode, who is facile princeps in this particular line. Goode's latest dodge is to induce people to start a snowball advertisement for him by offering them cheques for £10, £20, or £60 according to their choice. The party who wants a £10 cheque must first order 10s. worth of goods from the Watchmakers' Alliance, Limited, and he must then start a snowball or chain letter to try and induce other people to purchase their ten-shillings-worth in turn. He will then receive his £10 cheque, but he cannot cash it until a thousand customers have likewise paid 10s. as the result of his snowball. To put it plainly, Goode offers a commission of 2 per cent. on every £500 of business done through the medium of the snowball. People have lately been sending me in his circulars by dozens, but I do not know what more there is to be said about them than that they show Mr. Goode to be a very intelligent gentleman, and the public generally to be unmitigated fools.

The old trick for disposing of shoddy plated goods and other articles by means of advertisements purporting to emanate from private individuals compelled to make an alarming sacrifice for immediate cash must be very successful in Glasgow, judging from the long array of such advertisements in the local papers. There may be a genuine offer now and then, but the inquiries I made when dealing with the dodge three or four years ago showed that ninety-nine times out of a hundred these seductive announcements come from parties who carry on the business systematically. In the papers they assume scores of different characters—that of a clergyman's wife or widow is, though, the favourite—and by professing that urgent necessity obliges them to sell at a great reduction they manage to unload vast quantities of rubbish upon a credulous public. To warn people against these so-called bargains is more or less futile. Newspapers might, however, do something for the protection of their readers by refusing to insert advertisements of this kind which are manifestly mendacious.

Is it not about time that the law interfered to stop the practice of leading performing bears about the public thoroughfares? At a recent inquest it was elicited that a horse attached to a carriage took fright at a bear being led along the Marylebone-road, with the result that the vehicle came into collision with a waggon, and a little boy of four years old was killed. That highly sensitive animal the horse is only too apt to develop a sudden madness at the smell of wild beasts; and for every reason, the streets of London at the present day are not the place for performing animals.

Apropos of a paragraph in last week's TRUTH, I have been asked what difference there is between the conduct of an old woman who tells fortunes in the old-fashioned way and the conduct of the editor of Pearson's Weekly, who offers an interpretation of dreams by a professor of "the laws of oneirology," on payment of a fee of sixpence per dream. There is no moral or practical difference, so far as I can see, for Mr. Pearson's oneirologist makes a special feature of "dreams of a prophetic character," which, with her valuable assistance, will enable one for the sum of sixpence "to avoid events." Perhaps, however, there is some subtle legal distinction between the two cases, which saves the professional diviner of dreams from being dealt with under the Vagrancy Act as a rogue and a vagabond.

In whatever light the eye of the law may look upon this new departure in journalism, it does not strike me as very creditable to a respectable journal. But nowadays respectable papers do very queer things. Perhaps I have been dreaming, but I have an impression that only a short time since a weekly contemporary, for the respectability of which Mr. Pearson will vouch, was beguiling its readers by specious puffs into the payment of 7s. 6d. each for "exquisitely coloured miniatures (hand painted)," which turned out to be not miniatures at all in the ordinary acceptation of the term, but mere tinted photographs which would have been dear at half the price. Mr. Pearson's Sibyl can, presumably, look backward as well as forward. Will she say whether this was a dream or reality, and in any event expound the meaning of such trickery on the part of the paper in question?

The office of public chimney-sweeper at a town in the Grisons district of Switzerland is now vacant, with a salary of 800 francs a year. Among the candidates are three highly-educated Italian schoolmasters. One of the Italian papers, commenting on this fact, bewails the melancholy condition of affairs in that country, and declares that matters have now come to such a pass that it is more lucrative to be a sweep in Switzerland than a schoolmaster in Italy, where nobody cares a snap about either education or any other good or useful subject.

For Truth, and all other Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals, send your Subscriptions to Wm. Dawson & Sons, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's-bldngs., London. (Estab. 1809.) Catalogue gratis.

I wonder greatly that Lord Wemyss and his fellow enthusiasts for the rights of property have never taken up the cudgels on behalf of the lodging-house keeper and the small owner of weekly house-property. Probably it is because large property, not small, is what appeals most to the Liberty and Property Defence Leaguers. As a rule, my sympathies are rather on the side of tenants than of landlords, but undoubtedly the law as it stands is all in favour of the lodger and the weekly tenant as against the landlord, and the tendency of the law seems to be aggravated by a bias on the part of many magistrates in the same direction.

Here is a case in point, which I give because I am quite sure it is typical of many hundreds :—

> I am a clerk, and having, after many years of hard work, scraped together a few hundred pounds, I unfortunately invested the sum in a "weekly" house property.
>
> On coming into possession I found that I was quite unable to get any rent from one of the tenants. At the end of three weeks I offered to forgive him his rent if he would go out, but he refused. I then served him with a notice to leave, and I was informed that after this I must not accept or distrain for any rent.
>
> The tenant simply ignored my notice and stopped on, and as a last resource I took out a summons for ejectment. This had no effect on him. He told another of my tenants that he did not care for ejectment summonses, as Judge French always gave the tenant as long as he wanted. Long experience had no doubt enabled him to form a correct estimate of that learned judge. On the summons coming on for hearing before Judge French, he, although informed of all the circumstances of the case, and knowing that I had received no rent for over nine weeks past, and had vainly been endeavouring to get rid of my tenant, actually made an order giving the tenant one month more to vacate the premises. I am therefore condemned to allow this man the use of my house for another four weeks, and during that time I am absolutely forbidden to collect any rent whatever, otherwise the proceedings fall through and I lose my right to eject him. The order of the judge, therefore, comes to this, that, having already lost nine weeks' rent, I must submit to lose four weeks' more before I am able to resume possession of my house.

If I were to ask the author of the above statement why he did not distrain in the first instance, he would probably answer that he did not wish to appropriate the whole of his tenant's goods and turn him penniless into the street. There are, at any rate, many landlords who have a sentimental weakness of that kind; and, besides, even after the tenant's goods have been sold up, there still remains the same difficulty about getting rid of him. It would be better for all parties if the right of distraint were taken away altogether, and a short and sharp ejectment process substituted; and I certainly think that magistrates should be deprived of the power to give time at discretion to tenants whose inability to pay any rent is absolutely proved. Why on earth should a magistrate be empowered to confer on a man, as Judge French did in the above case, the right to inhabit another man's house rent free for the space of four weeks? If the magistrate feels charitably disposed towards the tenant, let him pay the four weeks' rent himself. This kind of vicarious tender-heartedness is not a thing to be encouraged.

Frances Moore has now on view the latest Models from Paris in Hats, Bonnets, &c. Special and exclusive designs in Toques.—8, Maddox-street, Regent-street, W.

There are, as I have said, hundreds of small owners of weekly property who will endorse the complaint published above—all of them men or women of limited means, who can as ill afford to lose their rent as the tenant can to pay it. There are, moreover, thousands of lodging-house keepers in all parts of London, but especially in the working-class quarters, who have a similar grievance. It is not only that the tenants do not pay their rent, but they are very often dirty or destructive in their habits, or they pack a family of half a dozen children into a couple of rooms, after having taken possession, on the representation that they had no families. I have heard innumerable stories of this kind from people familiar with the management of the smaller class of house property. I am not without sympathy for the tenants in such cases. Their position is often hard enough. But, as I have said, in the case of the magistrate, sympathy with the tenant does not justify us in compelling landlords to provide them with accommodation gratis.

I am sorry to hear that Mr. Balfour will probably have to take at least a month's holiday, if he is to thoroughly recover his health. It is to be hoped, therefore, that he will not attempt to over-tax his strength by coming back to the House of Commons before he is fit for the work. The duties thrown on him during the absence of Lord Salisbury from England, added to those of the Leadership of the House, must have tried any man's constitution. Mr. Balfour is a man of far too good a kind—politics apart—for him to sacrifice his entire recovery to any abridgment of his holiday. The best thing would be for him to take a cruise in some ship for a month, so as to be away from all business.

To imitate the Primrose League, with its Knights and its Dames, and its Habitations, would not be a proper course on the part of Liberals. But it has been suggested that the death of Mr. Gladstone should be commemorated by the establishment of a Gladstone League, in order to perpetuate the principles that he championed. If this be deemed desirable, a thoroughly representative Committee of Liberals should be formed to knock the idea into practical shape. There might be meetings held annually all over the country on the anniversary of Mr. Gladstone's funeral. The white hawthorn might be the floral emblem, for he died in the month of May. Qualification for membership should be that the members are pledged to peace, economy, and reform, for these words are the best epitome of Gladstone's public labours. Subscription on the part of members should be so small that the poorest could join the League. Each member might receive a medal, with Mr. Gladstone and the watchwords of the League on one side, and the date of membership on the other. Such an organisation could be made most useful as a rallying centre for Liberals, and as an organisation for electoral purposes, provided that it be taken up by the rank and file, and be independent of all cliques and coteries.

SCRUTATOR.

MR. GLADSTONE:

A RADICAL APPRECIATION.

I DO not think that any one who was not in the House of Commons when Mr. Gladstone withdrew from public life can realise the void that was created in that assembly. It did not seem the same place, so all-pervading was his personality. This was not the case when Mr. Disraeli left the Commons for the Peers. As a Parliamentary tactician Mr. Disraeli was singularly able. He seldom spoke in debate, but rarely was absent. When he rose to wind up a debate he rarely did more than indulge in a few taunts and a little magniloquent clap-trap. Mr. Gladstone, on the other hand, could be drawn at any moment, and in winding up a debate he was often too diffuse. Nevertheless, he was a better Parliamentary leader than Mr. Disraeli. He never failed to raise the tone of a debate; Mr. Disraeli never succeeded. No one felt certain that the Tory Leader was in earnest; no one ever doubted that Mr. Gladstone was.

And how Mr. Gladstone fought! When he had to pass some great measure his tenacity of purpose was astounding as was his fertility of resource. He never lost sight of the goal, but, like a skilful general, was always ready to alter the line of attack and defence to counter the moves of his opponents. Never did he hesitate to attack an obstacle when once he had convinced himself that it blocked the way of progress. When, at the end, his strength beginning to fail, he perceived that the Liberal Party must succumb so long as the Tories could fall back on their permanent majority in the Lords when beaten at the poll, his last speech was a trumpet call to Liberals to unite in sweeping aside the obstacle in its path. Had his bold advice been followed, the result of the last General Election would have been very different.

I have sometimes heard it said that he was not fair in debate, drawing distinctions where there was no difference, falling back on the subtleties of rhetoric when logic would not avail him, and involving himself in a cloud of lofty language when he wished to evade the consequences of some previous admission. This is hardly correct. Undoubtedly he had all the resources of rhetoric at his fingers' ends, and he did not disdain to use them. But in his distinctions there always was a difference, and, although I have seen hundreds of attempts to convict him of a contradiction, I never saw one that succeeded, so accurate was his memory, and so guarded was he in his language, even when it appeared to the superficial listener the most unguarded. And how patiently did he himself listen! I have sometimes been in an almost empty house, with some speaker droning on without facility of expression, argumentative power, or knowledge of his subject. All except one man would be dozing or talking to his neighbour. That one man was Mr. Gladstone. But why did he listen? That I often asked myself, but never ventured to ask him. If he was not pleased with the speaker, he had a habit of taking up a pad, and beginning to write a letter. But even then he never missed a word of what was being said, as he often showed by some interjection.

Mr. Gladstone rather gave voice and expression to the aspirations for the reforms with which his name was connected, than was the source of these aspirations. The natural tendency of his mind was conservative, but when he had convinced himself that the demand for a Liberal reform was legitimate, duty got the better inclination, and he became its exponent. Thus he kept pace with the development of the Liberal Party into a Radical Party. With the old Party watchwords, peace, economy, and reform, he was thoroughly in accord, and he detested that policy of foreign adventure and foreign aggrandisement which is the craze of the hour, and which militates against everything implied in these watchwords. In the jargon of Jingoism, he was termed when alive a Little Englander. Now that he is dead he is admitted by all to have been a great Englishman. He had a sincere sympathy with all who were oppressed, but although heartily sympathising with all peoples struggling to be free, he never forgot that his first duty was towards his countrymen, and that an English statesman should make the welfare of England his primary aim. An impractical statesman he was called! Never was there a more practical one. No one can imagine him with a Parliamentary majority at his back ploughing the sands of the seashore. Ambitious he was. But it was not the ambition for office. Office was with him but the means to give effect to his convictions, and place, power, and popularity he was always ready to risk for the attainment of his high aims. Grateful as we Radicals are that those who honestly opposed him when alive now join us in doing honour to his memory, we must not forget that for long years he devoted the great gifts vouchsafed to him to the triumph of our principles, and that if he did promote the welfare of the country, it was because he again and again led the Liberals to victory. Thanks mainly to him, the Government is no longer the appanage of the aristocracy; the middle classes have increased in wealth and intelligence; the working classes can command more of the comforts for decent existence, and are no longer political pariahs. If we are to-day able to bear the taxation that is imposed upon us, to provide means for excessive armaments and doles to the classes, it is because of his far-reaching economic reforms. Had he not given practical effect to what were mere inarticulate aspirations, England would have been a very different country from what it is. Never did we fully realise what we owed to him until he withdrew from the Leadership of our Party. Since then there seems to be no fight left in us. The sheep are without a shepherd. Reforms, we are told, are no longer needed. Economy is sneered at as contemptible parsimony. Abroad we bluster and we cringe, at one moment eager for war, at another trembling at the consequences that might result from war. Patriotism with some is but a cloak to cover sordid greed; with others, a pedestal for egotism; with others, a paltry ambition for the spoils of office.

Gillow & Company.—The largest Stock of Furniture, of exclusively the best quality, although widely varying in cost. Designs and estimates free of cost.—406, Oxford-street, London, W.

High aims are replaced by petty intrigues. Vainly the Radicals protest, and would march forward on the path that Mr. Gladstone firmly trod. They have lost their champion, the man whom they trusted, and who trusted them.

It is difficult to draw the line that divides genius from ability of the highest order. Although many have sought to define genius, no one has succeeded. I can only explain where the distinction comes in by citing two men—Lord Chatham was a genius, Sir Robert Peel was not. In this sense, Mr. Gladstone was rather a man of the greatest mental capacity than a genius. This probably will be the verdict of history. It will be impossible to convey to future generations the personality that raised him above all his contemporaries, and invested him with a Royalty, by the side of which kings and such like accidents of birth were mere pigmies. The good that he did was accomplished by persistent effort, and covered a world-wide field. Such effort does not so much appeal to the popular imagination of posterity, as does some one great and heroic action, or a devotion to one single aim to the exclusion of all others.

But what is the value of posthumous fame? This planet is but an insignificant spot in the universe—so small, indeed, that it cannot even be seen by the inhabitants of the millions on millions of globes that environ it. Its very existence counts but a second in the eternity of time. We know that, as it had a beginning, it is destined to have an end, and then the human race will be a thing of the past. What the French preacher said when pronouncing an oration over the dead "Grand Monarque," is applicable to the greatest and the noblest of all that ever have lived or ever will live: "God alone is great, my brothers."

A FRIENDLY WORD TO AMERICA.

Have the Americans temporarily taken leave of that acuteness that is one of their characteristics? The correspondent of the Times in America tells us that they are in a state of ecstatic admiration of our Conservatives, because Mr. Chamberlain has advocated an alliance between us and them, and indignant with the Radicals for venturing to object to the speech in which he made this suggestion.

Is the past entirely blotted out? The Radicals have always been for the warmest and most cordial amity between America and Great Britain. The Conservatives have not. Only the other day the present Conservative Government wanted to drag us into a war with the United States, rather than admit that the Americans had any right to insist on our frontier dispute with Venezuela being submitted to arbitration.

What we Radicals complain of in Mr. Chamberlain's speech is, that his suggestion for an Anglo-American alliance was merely used as a means to gain the end that he has in view. That end is a war with France or Russia, or with both. We do not believe that America would ever agree to be used as a catspaw to extract the chestnuts from the fire for us; nor do we hold that the interests of either country would be served by the American and English flags waving on the same battlefield, in defence of a "great and noble cause." This, to our minds, is much like a proposal to establish friendship between two men by a joint attack upon a third. We know of no "great and noble cause" for which we are to join in a crusade; and, knowing Mr. Chamberlain, we do not regard him as a Peter the Hermit, but rather as a business man, ready to use us and all others for his personal advancement.

What is really the position of things? In the Far East Lord Salisbury admitted that Russia had a perfect right to a commercial and naval basis in Manchuria, and that that territory must fall under Russian influence. Having admitted this, he proceeded to nag at Russia for doing what he had admitted she had a right to do. Then Mr. Chamberlain appeared on the scene. He told us that, unless we can induce some great military Power to join us, our interests in China must go to the wall. By our interests he means, presumably, the China market, which he insists Russia will close to us and others. Even if Russia could do this, there is no evidence of the intention. It is a pure assumption.

The great military Power which Mr. Chamberlain had in his eye was not the United States, but Germany. That Power would not be likely to incur the risk of an invasion by France and Russia, to please us, and she has met the proposal with contemptuous ridicule. Not content, however, with this invitation to a crusade against Russia, Mr. Chamberlain went out of his way to accuse the Russian Government of bad faith in her recent negotiations, and compared its ruler to the devil. Although no friends of the Russian scheme of government, English Radicals do not approve of such insults being levelled against a Power with which we are at peace, and with which we are desirous to remain at peace.

The United States are at war with Spain. As friends of peace we regret any war; but we fully recognise that, if the United States put an end to Spanish misrule in Cuba, this will be a gain to humanity, and we heartily wish the United States success. Neither we, nor any other European Power, have the remotest intention to interfere on behalf of Spain.

I have always had a special and particular admiration for the United States. If I might venture to tender a word of advice to them, it would be this: (1) Do not annex any territory that does not form part of the North American Continent, and rest satisfied with the vast territory that you have on that Continent. Colonies are hostages that a country gives to fortune. Take warning by us. We are two small islands, and we have been obliged to spread ourselves elsewhere. Not satisfied with colonies, we have taken upon our shoulders the destinies of above four hundred millions of black and yellow men. This is a source of weakness rather than of strength to us. But instead of recognising this, we seem only desirous to rule over more and more black and yellow men. Sixty-four millions per annum is the cost of the armaments that we and our Indian subjects have to maintain, and each year this expenditure goes up by leaps and bounds. (2) Keep friends so far as possible with all European Powers; ally yourself with none, for an alliance with one is an alliance against others. You have become great and prosperous by keeping your breath to cool your own porridge. This has been your traditional policy; allow no one to induce you to alter it in favour of a belligerent Imperialism embracing the entire globe. (3) Recognise that sufficient for the day are the dangers thereof. Your job on hand is to vanquish Spain; when you have done this, and when her colonies are at your disposal, no one is likely to hinder you from keeping them if you be so minded. Why I advise you not to do so, is because I do not believe that it would be to your interest. Once reverse your wise policy of no foreign annexation outside the American Continent, and you are certain to go from annexation to annexation, until you will finish by proclaiming, with Mr. Chamberlain, that no Empire can maintain itself that does not eternally expand its area. (4) Do not waste money on needless armaments. Have a reasonable number of warships for defence, and distrust all who urge you to increase beyond absolute requirements your Regular Army. Otherwise you will find that your Army will, sooner or later, be used against your own liberties.

MR. HARTSHORNE'S EXECUTORSHIP.

Circumstances have made it necessary for me to trouble my readers somewhat more in detail with the affairs of Mr. Bertram Fulke Hartshorne, of Chelsea, to which allusion was made in TRUTH of May 12. The facts alleged on that occasion were, briefly, these: (1) that Mr. Hartshorne had been left executor of a lady, deceased several years ago, who had, among other bequests, left a sum of £1,000 to pay her personal debts, erect a monument over her grave, and place a stained-glass window in memory of herself and a sister in the church of Stoke Damerel, Devonport; (2) that, although the debts amounted to less than £340, Mr. Hartshorne had failed to erect the window as directed; (3) that all attempts to compel him to expend or account for the residue of the legacy, which, allowing about £50 for the monument, I estimated at about £600, had failed. I called attention to the facts as illustrating a case in which there appeared to be no legal remedy for a wrong, the Attorney-General, who had been officially moved in the matter, having declined to take action against Mr. Hartshorne.

These statements appeared on Wednesday, May 11. On the following Tuesday, May 17, Mr. Hartshorne appeared in person at this office, between 12 and 1 o'clock, made statements to the effect that all that had been said about him was erroneous, and requested that a correction should be published in the forthcoming issue of TRUTH. He was informed that the paper for the current week had already gone to press, and that nothing further could be inserted; but I made arrangements to see him and discuss his case later in the day.

I saw him. He then informed me that every portion of the statements in TRUTH that reflected on his conduct was false. He asserted that he had expended the whole of the £1,000 in accordance with the terms of the will, and gave the items of expenditure thus:—(1) Personal debts, £339; (2) paid on account of dilapidations of testatrix's house, £206 11s.; (3) paid to contractor for erection of monument and stained-glass window, £400; total, £945 11s.; and he added that there were other items chargeable against the legacy, and that in point of fact he had expended more than the £1,000, and was considerably out of pocket over the transaction. He explained that the stained-glass window had not been erected because the vicar of the parish objected to its being placed in the church, which was about to be pulled down, and desired it to be placed in the new church, which he (Hartshorne) declined to do; but he added that the window was not only designed and paid for, but was actually lying on the contractor's premises waiting to be put up. Incidentally, he also denied other statements which appeared in TRUTH, as to his having been dismissed from the Local Government Board (where he was formerly an auditor) in consequence of charges having been made against him of presenting fictitious accounts; as to his having failed to hand over to his clerk payments to the amount of £156 which he had drawn from the Local Government Board on his clerk's account; and as to his clerk having failed to recover all that was due to him even when he had sued Hartshorne and obtained judgment. Every material portion of this statement (except the fact of his clerk having sued him) he categorically denied.

Having told the original story on what appeared unimpeachable evidence, supported by legal documents and evidence given in court, I naturally received these assertions with some incredulity, and asked Mr. Hartshorne what evidence he had to support what he said. He replied that he had then in his pocket the actual cheques for the £400 which he had paid for the monument and the stained-glass window. He produced them, and read out the dates of each. I asked to be allowed to inspect them. He declined, and replaced them in his pocket. A few minutes later, however, in consequence of a remark which fell from me, he altered his mind and handed over the documents. There were four cheques for a total amount of £300, drawn in favour of a Mr. Belch, carrying on business near Uxbridge, and a bill of exchange for £100. The cheques bore Belch's endorsement and had been duly paid. The bill of exchange, having come back into Hartshorne's possession, had presumably been paid also.

Seldom have I been more taken aback than I was by the production of these documents, which, if representing payments to Belch, established Hartshorne's contention up to the hilt. I asked Mr. Hartshorne—putting it as a matter of form—whether he had ever received back any cash from Mr. Belch on account of those instruments, and he replied firmly that he had received nothing. I asked him whether the bill of exchange had been honoured at maturity, and he replied that it had been once renewed and then paid. I told him that I must make some further inquiries, and that if I found no reason to doubt that he had been wrongfully accused of a breach of trust, he might rely on the fullest justice being done to him in TRUTH.

Well, I have made all possible inquiries, and, having done so, I have no hesitation in saying that, with two exceptions in regard to the amounts actually paid by him, every statement originally made in TRUTH respecting Mr. Hartshorne was substantially accurate, and that the explanations offered to me by this gentleman on May 17 were a tissue of impudent falsehoods. The first exception is the item of £206 for dilapidations. In regard to this, it appears that Mr. Hartshorne originally endeavoured to charge the amount against the residuary legatees. They objected to this and various other items, and it was then agreed that the amount should be divided, the bulk (£175) being charged as personal debts against the £1,000 bequest, and the balance against the residuary legatees. To the extent of this £175, therefore, Mr. Hartshorne is entitled to credit. He is also entitled to credit for a sum of £140, which appears to be the actual amount charged for the monument over the testatrix's grave. This item was estimated in my previous calculation at £50, so that Mr. Hartshorne gets a further credit of £90 here. For the rest, the simple truth is that out of every one of the cheques handed to him by Hartshorne, Mr. Belch returned to that gentleman substantial sums, and that on the bill of exchange for £100 he actually paid Hartshorne £50, and never received one penny, the bill being eventually dishonoured, and Belch having to make good the whole amount to his bankers, who had discounted it. The net amount which Mr. Belch received on all the documents which Mr. Hartshorne handed to me with so much assurance was, not £400, but £140, this being the amount of his charge for the monument erected over the testatrix's grave. The stained glass window is not, as Mr. Hartshorne told me, lying ready to be put up, and I take it that Mr. Belch has no intention of putting it up until Hartshorne pays for it. The story about a difference of opinion with the Vicar as to the erection of the window in the existing church may possibly have had at one time some slender foundation of fact; but I have letters before me written by the present Vicar of Stoke Damerel in January and February, 1896, which show conclusively that that gentleman was at that time strongly desirous of having the window erected, and had personally interested himself in the plans and the choice of the glass; and although I have not communicated with him personally, I feel confident that he will repudiate absolutely the suggestion that he has vetoed the erection of the window in the present church.

I would add that after the further inquiries that I have made during the last week, I absolutely maintain the accuracy of every statement made in TRUTH of May 12 respecting Hartshorne's relations with his clerk, and the reasons for his retirement from the Local Government Board. On the trial of the action brought by the clerk for the sum of £156, it was conclusively proved that the money was due, and Hartshorne's defence was virtually abandoned before the case was concluded. He subsequently paid into Court the amount of the claim, but he has never to this day paid the plaintiff's costs, which were included in the judgment. An execution was accordingly put in to Mr. Hartshorne's house, when the goods seized were claimed by Mrs. Hartshorne, and an interpleader issue to determine the ownership of the goods is now in process of trial at Brompton County Court.

On Monday evening last Mr. Hartshorne paid me another visit. Not having yet fully taken the measure of his audacity, I asked him if he adhered to his statement that Mr. Belch had received from him the full amount represented by the cheques and bill for £400, and he replied that he did. I asked him what he would say if Mr. Belch alleged that he had never received a penny for the bill, and was actually £50 out of pocket on it, and had handed back to him (Hartshorne) the larger half of the amount represented by the four cheques. Mr. Hartshorne replied that if Mr. Belch said that, it was false. I then told him that I did not believe him, and that I intended to accuse him in TRUTH of endeavouring to impose on me, and through me upon the public, with an utterly false story concerning this payment of £400 to Mr. Belch. I now make my accusation accordingly.

I accuse him, not only of endeavouring to impose upon me, but of imposing upon others by similar falsehoods. In the West London Press of Friday last appeared a letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Josselyn, purporting to vindicate Mr. Hartshorne from the reflections contained in the TRUTH paragraphs. The letter has been reprinted—I presume by Mr. Hartshorne—and he has furnished me with a copy of it. After stating that Mr. Hartshorne has submitted various documents to him, Lieutenant-Colonel Josselyn writes:—

> From these documents it is proved to my satisfaction that of the outstanding debts the rent amounted to £153 or thereabouts, dilapidations to £206 11s., and that £300 at least has been paid to the contractor employed by Mr. Hartshorne to erect the monument and window. Adding the £340 which TRUTH states to have been paid for other debts—and Mr. Hartshorne tells me that this is a correct statement—the sum of £999 11s. is accounted for, and I have Mr. Hartshorne's assurance that the sums I have mentioned have been actually paid out of the amount in question, and that so far from £600 being left in his hands unexpended (as stated in TRUTH), he has spent a considerable sum for personal expenses out of his own pocket, which might fairly have been charged against this specific legacy.—Yours truly,
>
> FREDK. JOSSELYN.

It may be noted incidentally that this account differs materially from that which Mr. Hartshorne had given me a few days earlier. The £400 alleged to have been paid to Mr. Belch has here become "£300 at least." On the other hand, a new item makes its appearance in the shape of £153 for rent, respecting which Mr. Hartshorne had said not a word when I saw him. From this I conclude either that he is so imperfectly versed in his own story that he gives two different versions of it within two or three days; or else that after his interview with me, he perceived the risk of representing as a payment made by himself, a dishonoured bill of exchange on which he had himself received £50 in cash; and that, accordingly, he dropped this item in his account to Colonel Josselyn, and substituted for it an entirely new one in the shape of £153 paid by him for rent. With regard to this new item, I find on further inquiry, that the testatrix died in April, 1893, and that all rent due up to date was paid on March 28. Any rent which accrued after her death could not possibly be included in her personal debts, but would be chargeable against the estate generally; and I am told that, as a matter of fact, the payment of £206 to the landlord under the head of "dilapidations" included the outstanding rent and all other matters. The point, however, is of no great consequence, for, apart from this item for rent, Colonel Josselyn is still crediting Hartshorne with £300 paid to the contractor, £160 of which is a pure fiction. So much for this letter of Colonel Josselyn's. This gentleman is well-known and highly-respected in Chelsea, and is connected with Mr. Hartshorne in politics. His motives in thus coming forward to whitewash his friend are entitled to all praise; and the fact that he has been imposed upon by Hartshorne by means of the same misleading documents which were offered to me, only makes Hartshorne's conduct the more despicable.

AMERICAN SHOES of every description. Large consignment of newest designs and make of Summer goods just to hand. A visit solicited.—AMERICAN SHOE CO., 169, Regent-street, W.

There are other matters in regard to Hartshorne's conduct in this executorship, which show him to have been utterly reckless and unscrupulous in his dealings with the estate; and he appears to have been only saved from disaster at an earlier date by the intervention of relatives. But I have said enough for the present purpose. Except in regard to the points which I put forward in my previous reference to him, Mr. Hartshorne's affairs are of no public interest, unless to his immediate neighbours and acquaintance; and it is purely by his own impudent action that I have been compelled to devote to him so much of my time and space. But the point which I previously raised is, undoubtedly, accentuated by what has happened since. It is absolutely certain that Mr. Hartshorne has not erected the memorial window, and that there is no immediate likelihood of his doing so. He has received the money for the purpose, and several hundred pounds—whether it is a hundred more or less is utterly immaterial—remain unaccounted for by him, although in view of what is passing at Brompton at the present time, it seems doubtful whether the money can actually be said to remain "in his possession." I understand that this is a matter in which the Attorney-General has a jurisdiction to interfere; and in the case of a charitable bequest of this kind some explanation ought to be given why that jurisdiction is not exercised. But, perhaps, now that I have more fully informed him about Hartshorne's proceedings, the Attorney-General may change his mind.

VAN BUREN OF BRUSSELS.

Those who have followed the exposure of the innumerable tricks and changes of character of Leigh, or Levi, Sampson—one of the most versatile and accomplished swindlers that have ever been before the public—will remember the latest phase of his operations, described in TRUTH of May 5. Having made Boulogne too hot to hold him, Sampson had betaken himself to Brussels, and from an address in the suburbs of that city was writing, in the name of Charles Van Buren and the character of a Belgian physician, to announce his own decease. The letter was written to a former purchaser of one of Sampson's (alleged) pictures—as I have already shown, he has never himself painted a picture in his life—and stated that this "young Scottish painter" had died of phthisis, and had left a widow and orphan in a destitute condition. In order to provide them with the means of returning home, the benevolent Dr. Van Buren forwarded the very last picture which the deceased artist had left behind him, and begged the recipient to purchase it out of charity at the price of £10.

As was to be expected, many people have been favoured by Sampson Van Buren with similar appeals, each appeal accompanied by the very last work of the departed—a different picture in each case. Here is a specimen appeal, sent to me by one of our Ambassadors on the Continent. It is virtually in the same terms as the letter already published in TRUTH, but as he is in this case writing to an Englishman, the deceased artist becomes this time, not a Scottish, but an English painter. Even in the grave, Leigh Sampson retains his gift of changing his birth-place and nationality at will. The Ambassador describes the accompanying picture as "a miserable aquarelle, worth about thirty shillings at the outside," and he adds that "the Brussels Police should certainly look up Charles van Buren." This is the letter:—

Consultations
de midi à
2 heures.

35, Rue de la Tourelle, 35
Etterbeck,
Bruxelles,
La Belgique.
6 Mai, 1898.

MONSEIGNEUR,—I write your Excellency to say that I am doing so on the behalf of the widow and child of a young English artist, a Monsieur Travers.

He came to this city some months ago from Boulogne-sur-Mer, and I found him in an advanced state of phthisis.

His case was quite hopeless from the first, and he died here a fortnight ago, and was buried by some charitable persons.

His widow has asked me to write to your Excellency respecting these facts, and has begged me to ask you, Monseigneur, to purchase the last aquarelle this unfortunate young English painter possessed, and which is now all the widow and her child have to depend upon.

She is quite penniless and is almost destitute. She has asked me (and I could not refuse her request) to write to your Excellency, and to ask you to purchase the aquarelle, which is a view of Windsor Castle from the "Great Park," for 250 francs—the equivalent of £10.

Your Excellency, I understand, once before patronised this painter, and the widow would be sincerely thankful did you kindly consent to retain the present aquarelle.

I tender you a humble apology for the intrusion of which I feel I am guilty.—Receive, Monseigneur, the assurance of my profound consideration, CHARLES VAN BUREN.

The Consular as well as the Diplomatic Service is being treated to Sampson Van Buren's favours. One of the choicest specimens of this individual's impudence that I have yet come across was addressed a few weeks back to the Consul-General for Algeria. In this case the Consul himself was not expected to buy the deceased artist's last work; but he was requested to kindly forward it to an English gentleman, who was at the moment staying in Algeria. The English gentleman in question had previously purchased no less than four of Leigh Sampson's pretended paintings—a fact which indicates the extent to which confiding art patrons have been victimised by this rascal. Happily he was prevented from purchasing a fifth. The Consul-General had read his TRUTH, and, in complying with Dr. Van Buren's request, he took the opportunity of enlightening the patron as to the artist's record. The warning had the desired effect. It is interesting to note that, while in the first letters written in the name of Van Buren, Sampson made some attempt to disguise his handwriting, that pretence seems to have now been entirely abandoned. Van Buren's letter to Algeria is in the familiar hand of Leigh Sampson, plain and undisguised.

MERRYWEATHERS' HIGH-CLASS GARDEN HOSE is the Hose of the day. Write for samples and Lists. "Hoses bought ten years ago still in use."—MERRYWEATHERS, 63, Long-acre, London, W.C.

I invite the attention of the Brussels police to these plain facts. The two letters published in TRUTH are in themselves sufficient to show that the alleged Van Buren is a swindler, for not only do they tell two different tales —the one representing the deceased as a Scottish and the other as an English artist—but there is, as the Brussels authorities can at once ascertain for themselves, no physician of the name of Van Buren residing at 35, Rue de la Tourelle. The man who is passing by that name has been carrying on in England for years past a fraudulent trade in pictures, and, having migrated, for greater safety, to the Continent, has been turned out of Boulogne by the French police on various grounds. He is not a painter, and has never produced a picture of his own in his life, and he has no means of livelihood except obtaining money by false pretences. Unless Brussels is to be regarded as a haven of refuge for such characters, the police there should follow the example of their confrères at Boulogne.

"A MODERN DON QUIXOTE."

A Russian peasant was once asked which of the two he considered the greater: God or the Czar? "God is great and the Czar is great," was his reply, "and, then, the Czar is so young." This anecdote was recalled to my mind by the performance at the Lyric Theatre on Saturday evening. To make clear the connection between the story and the play, it will not be necessary to dwell upon the complications of the intrigue; suffice it to touch lightly upon the more salient points, in the spirit and style of the conscientious critic.

First, then, I will say that Messrs. Dance and Crook are to be congratulated on an able interpretation of their musical drama. A stronger cast, or one displaying greater unity, it would be difficult to imagine. We are introduced at an early period to Don Quixote, impersonated by Mr. Arthur Roberts. He renders this part, so exactly suited to his romantic, Castilian temperament, with that gentle dignity and affectionate simplicity which have always distinguished him in similar creations. In the great windmill scene, for instance, where the knight, wearing the helmet of Mambrino, makes his famous assault upon those wooden Saracens, the pathos and dignity of his gestures in the hopeless contest go straight to the heart of the audience. I must not omit to mention that the windmills (may their airy vanity be pleased with this slender meed of praise!) were ably represented by Mr. Arthur Roberts. Throughout the play, the knight is accompanied by his devoted attendant, Sancho Panza, and the author is to be congratulated upon the able manner in which he has preserved the spirit of his great original in the homely humour of the knight's obese attendant. True, he is at times a trifle coarse in his language, but allowance must be made for the period at which Cervantes wrote, so lacking in our present refinement; and Mr. Arthur Roberts must not be blamed for the indiscretions of the character he so ably represents. The feminine interest is well sustained, that combination of great dignity and love of amusement which characterises the behaviour of the Duchess being rendered with tact and precision by Mr. Arthur Roberts. The same gentleman also scored a legitimate success as Dulcinea del Toboso, mistress of the moon-struck knight. The chorus went through their fantastic evolutions with ease and grace. Were a fault of any kind to be found with this branch of the entertainment, it would be the striking resemblance that these ladies bore, each to another, and all to a certain well-known artist. (But no, it could never be worth his while to play the chorus.)

At the conclusion of the performance, I asked for my coat. This was handed to me by the attendant, with the mysterious inquiry: Did I play spoof? Could it be he? Here also? I seized the garment and fled, for God is great, and the Czar is great—and then, Mr. Arthur Roberts is comparatively young.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

A FRENCH APPRECIATION OF MR. GLADSTONE.

VICTOR HUGO educated France up to the worship of Grand Old Men. When he died there was no Frenchman to replace him, and France for a few weeks idolised General Boulanger—who was young. It was a case of, Welcome trumpery for the sake of company. One might have said, "Ca-y-est!" when Gladstone appeared at the Universal Exhibition of 1889. He was just the sort of Grand Old Man the French wanted. Nominally, he was an Englishman. But he had written to a French author who wanted some information about him: "I am of Scotch race, and the son of Scotch parents, but born and brought up by them in England; among, however, Scotch relatives and friends. My education otherwise was English. A branch of my family emigrated to England. Its head served under Gustavus Adolphus in the Thirty Years' War."

This, getting-out, put a new face on Gladstone's nationality. Scotland was the ancient ally of France. Whenever a Valois attacked England, a Stuart helped him by invading her. Gustavus Adolphus was Richelieu's ally. And so Gladstone came to be regarded as an old friend. Still, there was an old grudge against him. He had not helped France in 1870. Granville, who under him held the seals of Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, formed the League of Neutrals against the French. Idolaters asked whether there was not something to be said on the other side. Gladstone thought the Orleans family and Guizot better than they were, and the Coup d'État worse than it was. The Prussian invasion seemed to him a scourge sent by Providence to chastise the perjured Emperor. This view coincided with the Queen's maternal anxiety for the future of the Prussian monarchy. The Queen went further than Gladstone. She had forgiven the Emperor his Coup d'État perjury and other crimes, but accepted Dr. MacLeod's opinion that Paris was a modern Babylon. Granville was a courtier. He was glad to take advantage of the resonant phrase uttered at Ferrières by Jules Favre. If not a stone of the French fortresses, nor an inch of French territory would be surrendered, where could mediation come in?

This was the excuse for forming the League of Neutrals. Gladstone gave Granville a free hand in his Department, to which he was also new.

Another grudge was due to the fact that Alexandria was bombarded when Gladstone was Prime Minister. M. Clémenceau harbours it to this hour. The bombardment may be entirely due to Lord Charles Beresford's initiative. I believe he claims the honour. But it took place so soon after the Bulgarian atrocities agitation as to expose the Gladstone Government to the charge of inconsistency. The only discordant note in the concert of praise has been in reference to Alexandria. However, M. Clémenceau is one of the few who now remember. He has a good reason for doing so, since it was he who prevented France "for the benefit of cent. per cent. usurers," joining in the bombardment. The fact that he did so has left him stranded as a political man. It brought on him the charge of being sold to England, though he only wanted to prevent atrocities at the mouth of the Nile.

Gladstone enjoyed the amiable cult of which he found himself the object in France. He felt that he was valued for his best qualities and highest faculties. He had so often reason to see in England that there was a gross element in the Gladstonian worship: he was the "Grand Old Man" of his Party because he won so many seats in Parliament for mediocrities.

Gladstone studied French under the tutelage of an early governess of his children. She was the daughter of a sub-Prefect of Louis Philippe. Though nominally a Catholic, she was brought up with the ambition of entering the household of the Duchesse d'Orléans, who was a Protestant. Nothing bored her more than to have to go on Sundays five miles' distance to a Catholic chapel. Gladstone insisted on her setting an example of religious observance. She read with him the French edition of the "De Imitatione," Pascal's "Pensées" and "Lettres Provinciales," Ste. Beuve's "Port Royal," Bossuet's "Sermons," and the "Histoire Universelle." He had not learned much French in youth, but he was an apt pupil, and became a master of the language. Few persons had any idea of his proficiency until he was entertained at a public dinner at the Hôtel Continental. I was at that banquet. Gladstone did me the honour of asking me in what language—French or English—he ought to speak. I said it would be more flattering to the company if he spoke in the former, but the French were so artistic that those at all understanding English would prefer to hear him in the tongue he most thoroughly possessed. "But," he asked, "who among the principal guests know English? Does M. Jules Simon?" "No." "Well, that settles the matter," said Gladstone, with a wave of the hand and a wheel round of the body towards a group who were waiting to be presented. He was on the verge of eighty, but did not look it. The conditions of age seemed to drop from him as he was speaking. But though in his French speech he never hesitated for a word, and was well inspired from first to last, the countenance was of terrible earnestness and severity. Not harshness, mind. He was often severe, but, I should imagine, never harsh. Certainly not then. The severe aspect was due, no doubt, to the mental strain of making a grand speech in a strange tongue. He managed not to mix the genders, or commit other solecisms allowable in a foreigner. The astonishment of the company enhanced their delight. Of course he was applauded; of course tears rushed to eyes; of course there was general attendrissement and admiration without end. But nobody rushed to stand near his chair while he was speaking, a thing that often happens in France. Nobody ran up to embrace him, or to wring his hand. He was too reverend, too venerable, too majestic for that. Truly, he was a kind of intellectual and sovereign Pontiff.

But Mr. Gladstone was not without a spice of coquetry, such as ladies are supposed to feel. It was an amiable trait. Did he remember what I had said about the artistic sensibilities of the French? After he sat down the American Consul proposed "a sentiment." It conveyed a compliment to the guest of the evening. Gladstone's face beamed. Here was the opportunity to speak in the tongue in which he was quite at home. Taking the ball on the hop, he at once—and out of the programme—rose and delivered a gracefully-turned and entrancing speech. He meant it to be an artistic treat. He was like a pianist who possesses his keyboard, and wakes it up from end to end. The face enhanced what the tongue uttered. One was equal to the other in eloquence. In speaking French the eyes seemed bent inwards. Concentration of thought or close attention to his genders made the facial lines rigid. But in speaking English his eyes met the eyes of all. What man ever had more splendid eyes? The sweetest courtesy tempered his majesty. The bloodless face was lighted up from within, and the wish to please gave it charming radiance.

This French banquet was given in 1889. Gladstone had come over to see the Universal Exhibition, held to celebrate the centenary of the Revolution. The British Government then in office had rather looked down on that show. It sent no Royal Commission. Gladstone as the representative Englishman eclipsed the regal visitors. Not that he gave himself airs. He was above that. But he was a Grand Old Man, far and away more beautifully picturesque than Victor Hugo. His head was one to tempt the pencil of a great painter. His air was noble, and because his whole life, public and private, was a great and good life. There was no wrong side to Mr. Gladstone. People felt this. The Philemon and Baucis companionship of Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone went to the hearts of all the decent people. He walked fast from point to point of interest. She managed to keep pace with him. It did not strike any one that she was nearly as old as he was, so active was she in looking after him. They had come to Paris late in October. Mr. Gladstone hated to be burdened with the weight of heavy clothes. If the weather threatened, Mrs. Gladstone slyly took an overcoat on her arm and carried it about. When it was fine she had an extra wrap or pelerine that she slipped on his shoulders when the afternoon chill came on. Influenza was raging. But Mr. Gladstone, thanks perhaps to her good care, did not catch it. Was there ever such a good wife as Mrs. Gladstone? His guileless simplicity and true greatness enabled her to play well the wifely part. A conceited man, sensitive to petty sneers or smart remarks, would not have allowed her.

WALKING, CYCLING, SHOOTING, YACHTING DRESSES, &c.—JOHN BUSVINE & Co., Tailors and Riding Habit Makers to H.R.H. the Princess of Wales, the Princess Victoria of Wales, the Duchess of Fife, the Princess Charles of Denmark, the Marchioness of Lorne, the Princess Henry of Battenberg, the Duchess of Connaught, the Duchess of Albany, the Empress of Austria, the Empress of Russia, the Empress of Germany, the Princess Henry of Prussia, the Princess Victoria of Prussia, the Infanta Eulalia of Spain, the Countess de Paris, the Duchess d'Aosta.—4, Brook-street, London, W.

M. Filon speaks of Gladstone as looking like a lay monk. He looked like a monk, but of some noble fighting order, such as Colatrava. The monks of Colatrava headed the secular fight of Spaniards against Moors.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

"THE Duke of Wellington has left to this country a great legacy, a greater even than his fame; he has left to his fellow-countrymen the contemplation of his character." Those words, dear Lady Betty, were spoken by Benjamin Disraeli in the House of Commons on the occasion of the funeral of the Duke of Wellington; they may be repeated on the occasion of the funeral of Mr. Gladstone.

The last English classic is dead! We deplore to-day the death of the Monarch of the House, whose dignity of mind, of motive, of manner, and of diction were the admiration of mankind. Born to be Primate, he became Premier.

His influence survives; it has moulded not only that which is best in Great Britain, but that which is best throughout the civilised world; it has cast it in the mould of righteousness, of temperance, of duty, of dignity, and of humanity. He was a loyal and a royal man.

"Reform or Revolution" is the watchword of the century. In England revolutions never grow upward; they grow downward, for, in this country, when a revolutionary movement attains importance, prominent and responsible politicians assume the leadership of that movement and make it constitutional. Mr. Gladstone met Freedom at the dividing line at which she ceased to be treasonable and commenced to be constitutional, and, taking her hand, led her peaceably, prudently, and perseveringly towards her destiny. Goethe has said that "Men are to be regarded as organs of their century, whose movements are mostly automatic." Mr. Gladstone was pre-eminently the "Organ" of his century. Progress was irresistible—and is irresistible—but it was mainly owing to him that the advance of progress in Great Britain has been peaceable. Time is a Radical.

* * *

From the four quarters of the globe there come pouring in expressions of admiration for the character and career of the dead statesman, but it would be dishonest to pretend that his political achievements are regarded with equal favour in the West End. Mr. Gladstone was essentially "The People's William." His control over, and direction of, the progressive movement may have saved the titled and proprietary class from many evils, but as the outward and visible leader of the Constitutional Revolution, it is inevitable that he should bear the blame for some of its consequences. Some of these have been disastrous to the class in question. Until Mr. Gladstone introduced the system of competitive examinations for official appointments, the younger sons of well-connected families could generally be provided for out of the public funds. They could be—and generally were—appointed to some office in the Army or Navy, or in the Civil Service, in which, if they conducted themselves reasonably, they had the prospect of rising, and of eventually retiring with a pension. When Mr. Gladstone opened the public service to competition, this method of providing for younger sons was practically closed, and, as the alteration came with scarcely any warning, it has done incalculable mischief to many. They soon turned their attention to the City, where, in the majority of cases, they have not only completed their own ruin, but have caused the ruin of many of their connections and friends. When the transitionary period has been passed, things will no doubt become equalised; but, until they are, it would be unreasonable to expect those who have suffered by the change to honour him who has directed the change.

* * * * *

On all sides astonishment is being expressed at the universality and the magnitude of the outburst to do honour to the memory of the late Mr. Gladstone. It has arisen like a monstrous tidal wave, sweeping everything before it; even the Conservative Press, not to be overwhelmed, has ridden on the very crest. Conservative politicians will soon realise that the events of the past week have materially altered the condition of things. The people are educated, and they will inevitably observe and compare. They will say, for instance: "This man, you told us, was ruining his country. You said that he was not to be relied upon; that he was unscrupulous; that he was 'An old Parliamentary hand;' that he was immeasurably inferior to his former rival, Benjamin Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield. Some of you even hinted that he exerted a pernicious influence over his countrymen. Were all these assertions false? If they were not, how are we to account for the praises of his character and career which come pouring in from every land; from most of the Royal rulers and statesmen; which are sounded by you yourselves, and are published in your own newspapers? Have you been deceiving us for your own purposes, or are you deceiving us now? Did not Mr. Disraeli once say in the House of Commons: 'For me there remains this at least—the opportunity of expressing thus publicly my belief that a Conservative Government is an organised hypocrisy'? Did he then, when he assumed the leadership of the Conservative Party, assist this 'organised hypocrisy' to our detriment? And if all the works of the Radicals are evil, how does it come about that it is true to say that the Radicals agitate and the Conservatives legislate?—in other words, how is it that whenever a Conservative Government is in power, it adopts the principles which it denounced when in Opposition? We had only eyes and ears before; now we have education, which enables us to read between the lines. Besides, you told us that the management of foreign affairs by Mr. Gladstone was perilously weak. Is yours firmer?" When Lord Beaconsfield died, his name was used to conjure with; immeasurably more potent to conjure with must now be the name of Mr. Gladstone. How will the Primrose League contend against the Popular League?

* * * * *

The late Mr. Gladstone has especially directed that no flowers should be laid upon his coffin—a direction which has frequently been advocated in these columns. It is the more remarkable that Mr. Gladstone should have done this, as he was notoriously fond of flowers. As a matter of fact, the abuse of an admirable custom is leading to the inevitable reaction. Nothing can be more charming than that a few cut flowers should be laid on the grave of one we liked, but the abuse of this custom is as ridiculous as it is wasteful. Over a thousand pounds' worth of flowers was recently deposited by the coffin of one who, when alive, was generally and rightly esteemed, and numerous pretentious nonentities seized the occasion to advertise themselves by presenting expensive wreaths. The little anonymous bunch of flowers is sure to rest upon the grave of the late Mr. Gladstone in Westminster Abbey, notwithstanding his most stringent directions to the contrary; and its presence there will not be objected to by any, even by those who most desire that the wishes of the deceased statesman should be respected to the letter.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

It is now stated that Galtee More is not to start for the Ascot Cup if there is the slightest risk of his being beaten, which practically signifies that he will not run again. How anybody in possession of reason can suppose that the victory of Galtee More can be predicted with absolute certainty, it is impossible to understand; but there has lately been a great deal too much of delirious gasconading about this horse, and that of a fatefully dubious description. No sane person can seriously expect such a state of affairs at Ascot that the trainer would be justified in assuring the persons who have the management of the horse that "defeat is out of the question." We have yet to learn that Galtee More can stay the course, and there is no line whatever between this horse and Cyllene, Newhaven II., and Winkfield's Pride. If Galtee More ran and were beaten, it would be a terrible crash for the individuals who are responsible for his purchase. His market value would be infinitely diminished, and his screeching admirers would have no futher pretext of eulogising him as being a really good horse. There is evidently no real intention to run the horse at Ascot, and all the hare-brained talk on the subject is mere moonshine and fiddle-faddle. The sooner Galtee More goes off to Russia the better, and a better sold horse has never left England. By the way, how awkward it would have been if Galtee More had run for and won the Gold Cup, and then been objected to, and this tragical issue was on the cards, as the horse is now the property of the Emperor of Russia, but he would not have run in his name.

A writer in one of the morning papers of Saturday wasted space in discussing the prospects of Sandringham for the Woodcote Stakes, being ignorant of the fact that the Prince of Wales's colt was withdrawn from that race on March 29, when the minor forfeit was declared. It has always been the Prince's intention to start the brother to Persimmon for the Coventry Stakes at Ascot, but if Sandringham should not be quite ready for racing so early in the season, he will be reserved for the £5,000 stake at Sandown Park on July 16, and will afterwards "go for" the Prince of Wales's Post Sweepstakes of £2,610 at Goodwood. The entry for this rich race includes Musa, who won one of the principal events at the Newmarket Second Spring Meeting, and Boniface. There are no penalties for previous winners in this race.

Considering that the Royal Hunt Cup is run over the most popular distance, and that it is the most richly endowed handicap of the year, having £1,500 added money and a piece of plate worth £500, with all the sweepstakes going also to the winner, it is strange that there should not be a much larger number of entries than fifty-five, which compares with sixty-one last year, and with sixty-five in 1896. The best of the older horses in the list are St. Cloud II. (a very likely animal to win this race), Bridegroom, Eager, Knight of the Thistle (who won last year), Chelandry, Crestfallen, Prince Barcaldine, Goletta, Sandia, Berzak, Diakka, Minstrel, and Kilcock. There are an unusually large number of three-year-olds, including Dunlop, Succoth, Heir Male, Yester Year, Ayah, Bridegroom II., Needlecase, Archduke II. (the American candidate for the Derby), Jeddah, King's Messenger, Hermiston, and Calveley.

The Wokingham Stakes, with only £500 added, has obtained sixty-nine entries, a significant token of the preference of owners and trainers for short courses, the distance here being six furlongs, instead of a mile. Most of the horses engaged in the Hunt Cup are in this race as well, the only notable additions being The Convict, Ameer, Lucknow, Titare, Suppliant, St. Ia, Red Heart, Galashiels, Wishard, Florio Rubattino, Clwyd, Voter, Northern Farmer, and King Hampton, who will probably win if he is favourably handicapped.

There are twenty-two entries for the Fernhill Stakes, including eleven three-year-olds, of which the best known are Orzil, Elfin, The Convict, Lucknow, Archduke II., Galashiels, and Gay Lothair. The fact of Archduke II. being engaged in this race may lead some people to fancy that he is deficient in stamina. The best of the two-year-olds are Blackwing and Amurath, and if they both start this will be one of the most interesting races of the week, and particularly if they are opposed by Orzil.

Entries close next Tuesday for several races at Ascot, including the Queen's Stand Plate of £800 and the Gold Vase.

I see it is stated that Mr. Cassel has purchased Love Wisely with the object of winning the Prix du Conseil Municipal of £4,000, which is run at Longchamps on the Sunday before the Cesarewitch. It so happens that this stake has just closed, and the name of Love Wisely does not appear in the list, for the excellent reason that the entries were made before the sale of Mr. Bass' stud. There is a very large entry, including a considerable number of English horses, the best of them being Disraeli, Winkfield's Pride, Merman, The Baker, and Dinna Forget. Alt Mark and Knight of the Thistle have been engaged, but neither animal has any pretensions to stay this course. Newhaven II. is the only American horse in the list.

Entries close next Tuesday for the Goodwood Plate of £800, a handicap which will, I suppose, take the place of the old Goodwood Stakes, the distance being two miles and a half.

The folly and absurdity of throwing away £2,000 on the Ascot Stakes has often been pointed out, but I don't know how a greater number than thirty-five could reasonably be expected, considering that not one horse in fifty can really stay two miles with a fast pace throughout. There are only seven three-year-olds in this handicap, Jeddah being the best known of them. By the way, Limasol figures in the entry as a three-year-old.

The Northumberland Plate of only £1,000 has done nearly as well as the Ascot Stakes, having obtained thirty-one entries, including The Rush, Piety, Carlton Grange, and Bradwardine. Mr. Perkin's colt by Bend Or out of Jenny Howlet has been engaged. This animal will not run for the Derby, but he must not be lost sight of, for if he goes on all right he is sure to win a big handicap in the course of the season.

A writer in an evening paper laments that Kilcock should be set tasks that are beyond his power, and thinks the horse's owner would be well advised to confine his efforts to weight-for-age races of six furlongs or under, such as the Fernhill Stakes at Ascot. This advice is founded on a zeal which is certainly not according to knowledge, for Kilcock, being six years old, is not qualified for the Fernhill Stakes, a race which is confined to twos and threes. We shall hear next that, as Ninus lacks stamina, Prince Soltykoff will be well advised to reserve him for the Middle Park Plate.

Winkfield's Pride is reported to be very well indeed, and quite fit, so he ought to be able to win the Epsom Cup this afternoon if he runs, but it may be decided to reserve him for the Ascot Cup.

I hear that Mr. Arthur James has a very nice filly in Needlecase, by Common out of Needles, and it is believed that she could have been near winning the One Thousand and Oaks if she had been engaged in those stakes. Needlecase never was entered for the One Thousand, and she was unluckily withdrawn from the Oaks when the minor forfeit was declared in January, 1897. The filly is being prepared for the Coronation Stakes at Ascot, and she will very likely win that race if she is fit and well. She ran only twice last year. At the Manchester Whitsuntide Meeting she finished second to M.D. for the Whitsuntide Plate, having started favourite for that race. At Liverpool, in July, Needlecase beat Bittern (with 8 lb. the best of the weights) for the £2,000 stake, for which race, in the previous year, Galtee More had been defeated by Brigg.

Mr. Gubbins has sustained a great loss by the death of St. Florian, a horse whose young stock are remarkably promising, and he bid fair to make a most successful sire. St. Florian, by St. Simon out of Palmflower (dam of Musa and many other winners), was bred by Mr. Douglas Baird in 1891, and his best race was the Duke of York Handicap in 1894. He was a difficult animal to train during the early part of his career. Mr. Gubbins paid 3,500 gs. for this horse.

There was the usual plethora of racing last week, but the sport was everywhere most uninteresting, and the only event worth notice was the Doncaster Spring Handicap, which was regarded as a certainty for Minstrel, but the Duke of Devonshire's horse ran very badly indeed, and I fancy he must be something of a rogue. Sardis, who won cleverly at the finish from Clipstone, has over and over again been heavily backed for more important handicaps, and now, when at last he wins a race, all the public money is on something else. How often, moreover, has Lord Hervey been backed? A lot of money must have been lost over this horse at Doncaster.

The most valuable two-year-old stake at Epsom is the Great Surrey Breeders' Foal Plate of £1,200, which is run to-morrow, and forty animals are left in, out of an original entry of 138. The best representative of public form is the Duke of Devonshire's colt Roundel, by Donovan out of Ronaldina, winner of the Zetland Plate at Doncaster; but although he had no difficulty in securing that event, there is no reason to believe that he is particularly smart. I dare say that Boniface will win if he runs.

Thirty-six fillies are left in for the Acorn Stakes on Friday, including the Prince of Wales's Eventail, winner of the Royal Plate at Kempton Park, but I shall be surprised if she can give 5 lb. to No Trumps, who ought to win this race for Mr. Combe.

There should be a large field for the Oaks. Every one admits that this year's colts are a bad lot, but the fillies are very much worse, and the Keeper of the Match Book estimates Nun Nicer to be 12 lb. behind Cyllene, and 8 lb. worse than Disraeli. Nun Nicer won the One Thousand easily enough, and I gave her a plumper for that race, but there was very little merit about her performance, judging from the running in that race of Airs and Graces and Alt Mark. The fact is that Nun Nicer was very well and quite fit, and some of her opponents were so palpably backward that they might just as well have remained at home. Royal Footstep has been doing very little work, and is not likely to run. Airs and Graces is touched in her wind, and will not show to advantage over the Epsom Course, besides which she is held quite safe by Nun Nicer on the Newmarket running. Ayah and St. Ia were proved by the One Thousand running to be deficient in stamina. Alt Mark and Simylla do not seem to have much chance of winning. Wildfowler, who is half-sister, by Gallinule, to Galtee More, may represent the Beckhampton stable, unless Darling has a better filly in La Fortune, whom he purchased last autumn at the sale of Lord Zetland's stud. Petty France, by St. Simon out of Dart, who was praised in the most glowing terms by some of the reporters of the sporting papers when Mr. Cresswell was so infatuated as to pay the monstrous price of 5,100 gs. for her in July, 1896, has never yet won a race, and she is not likely to compensate her owner for past disappointments on Friday. Another dismal failure in the high-priced line is the 3,100 gs. filly by Morion out of La Flèche. Lord Rosebery will run Manchine, and this filly has come on very much during the last month, and she went uncommonly well on Thursday in a gallop with Velasquez over the Oaks distance. Airosa, Mousme, and Elf have no chance of winning on public form. A great tip is Mr. Chaplin's Yester Year, who has not run for nearly a year. This filly, who is by Melanion out of Yesterling, ran Champ de Mars to a head for last year's First Spring Stakes at Newmaket, but she had 11 lb. the best of the weights. A week later Yester Year cantered away for the Mostyn Plate at Chester, and at Manchester, in June, she finished behind Nun Nicer and Longtown. Nun Nicer has been tipped in large type by every paper I have seen, just as was Chelandry last year, and Thais in 1896. I know nothing as to the present form of Yester Year, but if she has any pretensions to be really smart she must have an excellent chance.

There will be racing next week at Hurst Park, Redcar, Wolverhampton, Kempton Park, and Manchester. Three of these meetings are holiday orgies, and the only place at which there is likely to be any sport of general interest is Manchester, but it is simply preposterous that this fixture should continue to be dragged over four days, when there is no justification for allowing it to extend over even three days.

It must be remembered that this year there is an interval of a fortnight between Epsom and Ascot, instead of only a week as usual. It would be a good thing if this arrangement was to be made permanent.

The Summer Breeders' Foal Plate of £1,000 is the principal two-year-old event at Manchester, now that the Whitsuntide Plate has fallen into contempt, owing to the unpardonably stupid parsimony of the leather-headed managers of the meeting. No fewer than seventy-two horses are left in, and this will not be an expensive event for the fund, inasmuch as the owners' entrances amount to £808. Desmond may very likely win this race for Lord Dunraven. Fascination has also accepted. The John o' Gaunt Plate of £500 may fall to Morgante, by Bend Or out of Molly Morgan, if this race is thought to be good enough for him. I believe the colt has been well galloped. Fascination is also in this race. Lord Durham may win the Whitsuntide Plate with St. Vaast, and for this race Eventail is also left in, but the Prince of Wales's filly will probably be stopped by her 10 lb. penalty. Of course, I should expect the Duke of Portland's Manners to win this race if he runs.

The Derby Plate of £500 is a race for three-year-olds and upwards (one mile), for which thirty horses are left in, out of an original entry of forty-six. Berzak ought to win this race if he goes for it. The acceptance also includes Neish, Fosco, Alt Mark, and Maluma.

There are very poor entries for all the handicaps at Manchester. Only twenty-five horses have been engaged in the Salford Borough Handicap of £1,000, and a miserable entry of forty-one for the Manchester Cup of £2,000 has resulted in an acceptance of fifteen! The Rush seems to me to be overweighted with 9 st. 7 lb., and I do not believe he would beat the best from Kingsclere, which will probably be Labrador (8 st. 5 lb.), who has to give 2 lb. to St. Bris. Telescope ran badly at Chester. The Australian mare, Acmena, is well in, but it is probable that she will not be at her best for some time yet. Tyro, who ran well for a long way in the Chester Cup, is thrown in. Northallerton is not overweighted with 8 st. 5. lb., and this horse is best over a distance of ground. I am inclined to think that the Manchester Cup will prove a good thing for the Prince of Wales's Nunsuch, who was not really fit when she ran for the City and Suburban, and she has come on fast since the Epsom Spring Meeting.

The other week I ventured to point out, in answer to an attack by the Lord Bishop of Oxford on Sunday cyclists, that if Sunday cycling was bad Sunday sermons were worse. I also suggested that if the City churches were to make provision for cyclists it would not be long before a ride to church on Sunday along the wooden and asphalte streets would be welcomed by many. The Rev. W. Carlile has now arranged for a cycling service at nine a.m. on Sundays. There is to be a sermon of five minutes only, and all will be over by a quarter to ten. This service is held at St. Mary-at-Hill, a minute from the Bank and Mansion House. I hope this admirable innovation will meet with the support it deserves. A good many people would ride out on Sundays to church if they felt they would be certain of being able to put up their machines. Clergy in country places round provincial towns would do well to take note of what is being done in the City.

At the meeting of the Football League the other day, there was some very plain speaking on the part of more than one of the chief officials. The improvement that the South has made in the game is not viewed with complacency. One gentleman is reported to have remarked that they welcomed the development of the game in the South, but this development must not be allowed to interfere with the League's position. Of course, it is not very nice for a clique that has run a game for its own benefit to find its superiority being threatened. These persons have dominated all sorts of matches, whether friendly, League, or Cup ties. They allocate to themselves the privilege of not playing in the earlier rounds of the Cup Tie. And the South is not to interfere with this position. Unless I am much mistaken not only the South, but a good many other clubs as well, will unite to force the League to abandon its "boss" position in the councils of those who control Association football. Now the League has been extended, and there will be practically no dates for friendly games. Only the richest clubs will be able to stand the wear and tear of such a heavy season. The competition of the South for players will tend to raise wages, and the rise will not be hindered by the fact that the players have to play a lot more League matches. There will be no holiday jaunts for friendly games with Southern clubs. It will be all stern business. The South will have to advance by itself, and as it has done so in the past there is no doubt it will do so in the future.

Cricketers are very conservative. It takes a long time for the cricketing public to realise that a new county is really any good. The success of Essex last season, although it was most consistent, was yet regarded by many people as being something in the nature of a flash in the pan. That idea has been knocked on the head by the brilliant start the Essex men made against Surrey. Turner's batting was admirable. He was slow for his first fifty, but afterwards he and Mead made fours as frequently as there have been April showers in May. On the losing side Hayward played two most consistent innings. It was very satisfactory to find Lockwood back in the Surrey team, and taking wickets, too. Rhodes has already done well for Yorkshire this season as a bowler. Against Somerset, who were completely outclassed, he did better than he has ever done before, and he quite makes up for the loss of Peel. Profiting by the lessons of the Australian tour, Derbyshire are using Storer to some effect as a bowler. He scored a century against Notts, who looked like being beaten, only rain stopped the play. Notts practically owed its score to Shrewsbury and Dench. Leicestershire made an excellent start against Lancashire, Tomlin and Woodcock both scoring heavily, while Ward also batted admirably for the champions. At Cambridge, Coode followed up a faultless century for the first twelve against the next sixteen with some very steady play on a difficult wicket against Middlesex, the county team losing three wickets "run out."

Bacon, the ex-amateur mile champion, has certainly met a runner better than himself in Tincler, who recently beat him in fast time over a mile. The second of the series of matches was over two miles. The wretched weather had made the track at Ashton-under-Lyme anything but fast. Tincler jumped off with the lead, and held it all through. Bacon gave up three hundred yards from home. The winner's time was a fifth less than nine minutes twenty seconds. There was an interesting amateur six-mile race at Northampton between Robinson, the ten miles champion, a local man, and Harrison of the Manchester Harriers. The track was heavy. The local man cut out the running, and won a grand race by twenty yards. It is said that the loser has won a thousand pounds worth of prizes in the last seven years. This shows not merely that he is a fine runner, but also that it is desirable that the A.A.A. should cut down the prize value limit. The majority of runners are of a class to whom the prize is of very great moment. They have but little money of their own. The articles that are offered as prizes are utterly unsuited for persons in their class of life. That the prizes remain long in the possession of winners is improbable. No doubt there is a difficulty in legislating for this class of runners; but when a man can amass a small fortune in seven years from amateur running, it shows that there is an opportunity for many to run, not for the sake of the sport, but with an eye on the pot. The greater the value of the prize the less will be the love of the sport for its own sake. It would be as well if the Amateur Athletic Association started by reducing the ten pounds limit to five pounds, and making this value the limit, both in handicap and scratch races.

At the London Athletic Club Sports Lutyens was in splendid form. He had no difficulty in winning the 600 Yards Challenge Cup, and in the Half-Mile he did very fair time from scratch, but he could only get second to Kirby (65 yards), who finished strongly. For the Three Miles Walking Challenge Cup there was a splendid race. Two yards always covered the two competitors, and in the end Baker beat Watson by inches. Munro ran admirably in the Mile-and-a-Half Handicap, but he could not catch Sawyer (190 yards) or the aged Dixon, who had the ridiculously long start of 340 yards, and was second. If middle-aged men run they are entitled, I suppose, to a long start; but the spectacle is not exhilarating, and although no one would grudge such a good sportsman as Dixon his success, it is to be hoped that no other ancient athlete will follow his example. At this meeting the two visitors from South Africa, Blignaut and Mockel, were competing. They were not successful in the sprint handicap. In the 300 yards the former was at scratch, but he was beaten by a yard by Mayne (8 yards). He will no doubt improve, but one can scarcely credit the times he has done in South Africa. Mockel is really a hurdler, and now that he has learnt how to fly he will do some remarkably good performances, as he is just the right build. There was an interesting walking handicap at the Polytechnic Sports, which was won by Kennedy after an excellent finish with Butler; Sturgess, the champion, was a long way behind.

The question of the hammer and the weight and the half-mile in the Inter-University programme is not yet settled. An old weight-putter says its all nonsense to think the hammer is the only thing for stomachic ills. So long as he sticks to the weight his liver is never out of order. The exercise takes less room than the hammer and is not so dangerous to the spectators. I can see no reason why both events should not be kept and the half be added. True, there will be ten events and the sports might be drawn. But if the athletic abilities of the two Universities as fairly represented by these ten standard events are equal, why should not there be a draw? The half-miler is as much a distinct class of athlete as the sprinter or the long-distance man. Not many years ago, just before the era of Lutyens, there was a singular dearth of milers at the University, and yet both Wilson and Roughton, who ran in the mile and were no class, could do a half inside two minutes. Whatever happens it is to be hoped that the rules of the Inter-University sports for the weight and hammer will be made to conform to those of the A.A.A.

For the Lowe Double Sculls at Cambridge there was a race almost equal in excitement to that between the same two pairs of oarsmen for the Magdalene pairs. The only difference was the fifteen yards by which Etherington Smith and Goldie beat Howell and Bell. Both for the pairs and sculls record time was done. Those who are interested in the relative value for the purposes of pace between sculls and oars will gather what information they can from the fact that the time for the sculls was twenty-three seconds faster than that done by the oars.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—For once the pessimists have to take a back-seat, as recent developments—both political and monetary—point to a more general recovery on the Stock Exchange, notwithstanding the series of dismal utterances which has fallen to our lot of late. The past week has been one of slow improvement. Gradually it dawned upon professional operators that political speech-making has been very much overdone, while on the other hand, the public—although prevented from doing any fresh business—have wisely refrained from throwing overboard their holdings.

The Political Sky Clearing.

Far be it from me to assert that all the political clouds have now disappeared, and that adverse rumours will no longer trouble the markets. That state of felicity is altogether impossible, as we have to reckon with panic-mongers and "Bear" manipulators. But it is permitted to say that the outlook has greatly improved. Lord Salisbury's statements in the House of Lords on the Chinese question created a very favourable impression in the City, as it defined the Cabinet's policy, and was free from all alarmist tendencies. The City is gradually getting over Mr. Chamberlain's sensational remarks, and, although they are partly regarded as having been specially designed as a ballon d'essai concerning a possible American alliance, business men generally begin to look upon the Colonial Secretary more than ever as the enfant terrible of the Cabinet. In fact, after his previous West African speech the public will probably, in the absence of his dismal predictions being fulfilled, attach little value to any future lucubrations emanating from him. Another adverse rumour has, moreover, now been explained away by the statement made by Sir John Lubbock, the chairman at the recent bankers' dinner, at which Lord Salisbury was the guest, to a representative of the Manchester Evening News. Sir John expressed himself to the effect that the alarmist rumours current give an entirely wrong impression of the tenour of the speech. He feels satisfied that Lord Salisbury had not the slightest intention of making an alarmist speech, or hinting at the existence of any immediate difficulty threatening this country, which involved a prospect of war. His remarks appear to have turned chiefly on the increasing naval and military estimates and money matters, and no reference whatever was made to any difficulties with France in West Africa or elsewhere. Sir John Lubbock's objections to the latter-day sensationalism, as practised by a portion of the Press, are certainly fully justified. I have, by the way, been told in a usually well-informed quarter that Lord Salisbury also referred to the efforts of Russia in endeavouring to float another loan of £20,000,000, but this was certainly quite a legitimate subject to discuss at a bankers' dinner. In the meantime, persistent reports are coming from Paris that the relations between this country and France have improved, while the concession for the construction of a railway in the Yang-tze Valley to an English syndicate is undoubtedly a hopeful development, likely to militate against future Russian encroachments in China, while going a long way to open up the latter country. The recovery in the Stock Markets has been greatly assisted by the growing ease of the Money Market, which has in fact led to quite a drastic change within the last day or two. The depression fostered by the adverse rumours has caused a considerable "Bear" account to be piled up in every department, which may be expected to give considerable support to quotations. The rise in Consols, the improvement in Home Rails, and the much stronger tendency of the Mining Markets, furnish indications of this movement. The war between Spain and the United States is almost disregarded in the other departments, and American Rails have maintained a firm tone, as there is a strong backing in Wall-street, which would step in should an American reverse occur, while, of course, a Yankee victory would put prices up sky-high. A favourable circumstance is the growing probability of a settlement of the Pacific rate-war. The Industrial section has more than any felt the effect of the alarmist rumours, but should now to respond freely to the improved condition of affairs, and I shall be much surprised if Welsbach stocks do not as leaders in the near future.

Money and Gilt-Edged Investments.—A Disappointment for Pessimists and "Bears."

A fortnight ago I spoke very strongly against the view of the pessimists, who were then predicting dear money, and I stated that I rather held the contrary opinion, as also expressed by the Sunday Special, which had been particularly correct in its forecast of the gold movements. One of the points I made was that Japan would certainly let out some of the money transferred to her by China in payment of ships and war material, in this country, while I also took the view that Japan would lend out some of her millions in the market, a rate of from 3 to 3½ per cent. being tempting enough. Most other financial writers expressed the opinion that Japan would bottle the money up, and in this they were disappointed; while, on the other hand, the golden current is still flowing to the Bank of England, and something like £6,500,000 sterling in gold has now reached the Central institution, thus placing the same in a very strong position—stronger, indeed, than it was a year ago, when money rates were quite nominal. A fortnight back, when I ventured to predict that money would ease off, the rate of discount for three months' bank bills was 4 per cent. It has now dropped to 3-3⅛ per cent., while short money is to be had at 2 per cent. No wonder that Consols have advanced from 110¼ (to which the political rumours knocked them down), to 111⅜ for the account! The fact is, there has been a good deal of selling of our premier security as a hedge against other commitments, and some large French operators gave for the "put" of important blocks, against which the option dealers sold. Thus it is quite on the cards that, barring accidents, there will be a further advance in Consols. In the meantime other high-class investments are also improving, and there has been a rise in British Corporation stocks and in Home Railway prior charges. The Chinese loans, too, are firmer, especially the new Four and a Half per Cent. Loan, which has risen to 88. Japanese scrip has also recovered to 103½, and India stock is better. The new Greek loan has rallied to par.

Home Rails—An Incipient Improvement.

Considering the surrounding circumstances, and the steady downpour during the last few days, it is really surprising that the Home Railway department has kept up as well as it did, especially as it had to stand the shock of an unexpected announcement by the Great Western of a new capital issue to the amount of £2,500,000. This Company used to place its new stock through the market, and did not offer it to the existing shareholders, and this new departure has, therefore, not proved very popular, especially as it was taken at a very unpropitious moment. It put down Great Western stock to 165, a fall of 3½ points, from which there has been a moderate improvement to 166½, but the other stocks remain firm, and there has since been a hardening movement in other Heavies, notably Midland and North-Western. Even the stocks of the passenger lines did not give way on the execrable weather, and the "Bulls" of Dover "A" were courageous enough to take the price up again to 111, while Brighton "A" are firm at 176. Both these stocks, by the way, are tempting purchases in this department. Great Centrals have also well maintained their quotations, the 1894 Ordinary at 41½, the Preferred Ordinary at 66. A correspondent of the Railway News indulges in a somewhat sanguine forecast of the probable results of the London extension. He reminds us that when the Bill for the extension was under the consideration of Parliament, the general manager expressed the opinion that when completed the whole system of the Great Central Company would earn sufficient to pay 4¾ per cent. dividend on the whole of the Ordinary stock of the Company, including, of course, the cost of the extension, which would then stand at £8,592,000. The general manager's estimate was that the new line would give net earnings of £525,000 per annum, as compared with £127,000 on the existing line on a previous average of five years. The correspondent in question draws attention to the fact that a very large proportion of the Great Central capital has proved to be all but unremunerative, as over £4,000,000 has been expended upon the Grimsby Docks, which provided last year only £20,000 of net revenue. What is in favour of the Ordinary stock is also that the capital of the extension will be charged with Four and a Half per Cent. debentures, and that, contrary to former capitalisation, there will be equal proportions of Preference and Ordinary. My contemporary's correspondent concludes that "it would be strange indeed if a line of railway traversing some of the most prosperous portions of the country between London and the North should not be able to provide at least some substantial addition for its Ordinary stock, allowing for the additional capital." Without wishing to indulge in sanguine predictions, I think that the present values of the 1894 Ordinary and Preferred Ordinary are so low that the new extension need do only moderately well to justify a rise of ten points, and these stocks should therefore be very suitable for a lock-up. Metropolitans have shown great strength at 133, in anticipation of the benefits to accrue from the Great Central extension, and Metropolitan Districts have improved to 27⅞, and as other stocks are recovering fom the effects of the slump, Districts should also further advance. At a special general meeting held on Tuesday the clauses affecting the District Railway in the Bill for the adoption of electricity by the Metropolitan were authorised. The District, of course, has already power to adopt electric traction, but the present Bill empowers the Metropolitan and District Companies to enter into agreements with regard to working by, and the supply of, electric power. Mr. J. S. Forbes, the Chairman, stated that they were instructed by very eminent authorities that the financial burden cast upon the two Companies would be extremely moderate in comparison with the advantages to be secured, not only by getting rid of many of the offensive qualities of the air in the tunnels, but also in the saving of cost of traction, which they were advised would be considerable. The Scotch Deferred stocks, after declining, are also firming up again, and Great Northern Deferred have recovered, although the approach of the Great Central competition must necessarily prove an unfavourable factor in the future of that line.

China and Glass. — Messrs. Goode, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

YANKEE RAILS—ADMIRAL CERVERA DODGES THE MARKET.

Although latest developments point to the protraction of the Spanish-American war beyond the period originally contemplated by our Yankee cousins, Wall-street has held up prices pretty well, and it has undoubtedly some grounds for its sanguine views, considering the remarkable manner in which trade is still improving, the railroads benefiting to a great extent. Thus, the Financial Chronicle reports the earnings of sixty-three railroads in the second week of May as $6,557,366, an increase of $896,197, and of eight roads in the first week of May as $7,339,065, an increase of $747,027. These figures are remarkable as showing that the war is not as yet interfering with the expansion of trade, although obviously the great rise in wheat has a good deal to do with the large traffic returns, as enormous quantities are being hurried forward by the farmers. On the other hand, the farmers are getting very prosperous by obtaining big prices for their produce, and thus are able to purchase large supplies of necessaries and luxuries. Nor is the appreciation confined to wheat, for maize has also had an immense rise, which represents an enormous amount of money for the railroads, merchants, and farmers in the maize-growing sections of the United States. The Wall-street Daily News reminds its readers that July maize, selling at 37·8 cents, is about 13 cents higher than what was obtained a year ago. Considering the fact that the maize crop is, according to my contemporary, about four times larger than that of wheat, the advance in price would on that basis work out to 52 cents a bushel. Owners of maize are naturally hurrying forward their stocks, and, as with wheat and maize, so it is with flour and oats, the quantities carried being very largely in excess of last year. This is shown by the following statement of grain receipts at Chicago for the week ending May 7 and the corresponding week last year, as published by the Wall-street Daily News:—

		Flour, bbls.	Wheat, bush.	Corn, bush.	Oats, bush.
North-Western,	1898...	27,912	43,600	687,200	555,650
,,	1897...	12,250	14,000	53,200	345,400
Rock Island,	1898...	10,050	14,000	621,600	382,875
,,	1897...	4,900	3,500	54,600	190,300
Bur. & Quincey,	1898...	3,100	79,800	769,300	417,400
,,	1897...	875	1,400	143,900	172,700
St. Paul,	1898...	22,750	14,700	250,600	397,100
,,	1897...	16,450	2,800	18,900	314,600
Atchison,	1898...	900	22,400	102,900	93,500
,,	1897...	.....	700	47,600	117,700

It is not unnatural under these circumstances that New York operators should be encouraged to maintain values, as after all the war must sooner or later come to an end. At present Admiral Cervera, with his phantom fleet, is causing the American squadrons a good deal of vexation. He has so far succeeded in dodging the American fleet very cleverly, and the Yankee market does not obviously like this dodging; but it looks, after all, as if the Spanish Admiral had realised that he is not strong enough to fight a naval battle. The United States authorities, on the other hand, are evidently making sure that they will gain a victory in case they can only catch the Spaniards. Future naval developments must to a great extent guide operations in Wall-street; but there can hardly be any prospect of a great disaster to the Yankees, and any minor incident would probably not prevent manipulators in Wall-street from supporting their market. Americans have certainly shown remarkable confidence in their own future by mopping up large quantities of stock on this side. London and the provinces have been selling heavily during the last fortnight, and all the stock has been taken in New York. This has been more particularly the case with Milwaukee, and I should think that a great change has come about in the respective holdings in this Company of European and American capitalists, as by far the larger proportion must be in American hands. In fact, a good deal of "Bear" selling has been indulged in on this side, the comparatively high price of 99⅞ being tempting, although in times of peace 99⅞ for a stock likely to pay a dividend of 5½ per cent. would hardly be considered excessive. Louisville have with Milwaukee shown the greatest activity. The road is doing well, and dividends will doubtless be resumed as soon as the prospect becomes more peaceful. Under the circumstances the quotation of about 55 is moderate, especially as the road is benefiting very considerably by the transport of troops and warlike material. This being a London favourite, any development foreshadowing early peace will lead to heavy purchases on this side. At last there seems to be a prospect of the rate war being settled between the Pacific roads and the Grand Trunk. Whenever that desirable event comes about we shall see an improvement not only in the Canadian stocks, but also in Union Pacifics and Northern Pacifics. In Union Pacifics there has been a good deal of realising of late, and it is said that a line of $2,000,000 of Four per Cent. Mortgage bonds has just been liquidated in New York. The stocks appear, however, to be well taken, and now that a settlement of the ill-advised struggle with the Grand Trunk is in sight, they are likely to further rally. Several of my Wall-street contemporaries are indulging in the most sanguine forecasts with regard to the Union Pacific. It will be of interest to quote the following paragraph from the New York Journal of Commerce:—

> The first quarter's business for 1898 under the new management gives evidence of a great future for Union Pacific, the earnings for that period showing a comparative increase of $471,000, which averages $157,000 a month for the three months ending March 31. The operating expenses have been much reduced, so that even if gross earnings do not amount to more than the gross of last year, the net must be much larger. If only an increase of $150,000 a month in net earnings should result for the present year, the grand total of net increases in earnings would amount to $1,800,000. The newly acquired branch lines are expected to show at least $600,000 above taxes, and increase from other sources will at least equal that of last year, namely $500,000, so that the total net income for the new system will equal $8,500,000.

LONDON AND PARIS EXCHANGE, LTD., 24, Throgmorton-street, London, E.C. This Corporation is prepared to make Advances on Mining Shares, at 6 per cent. per annum, subject to a deposit of 20 per cent. Clients by this system save the heavy contangoes usually charged.

sufficient to pay charges and dividends on Preferred stock with a balance of about 3 per cent. applicable to the common stock. We see no reason to doubt the expectations of Preferred stockholders, who claim that the Preferred stock will sell nearly up to the present market price of the 4 per cent. bonds.

The Northern Pacific has already commenced to pay dividends on its Preferred stock, and as the management is very progressive, there is little doubt but that the road will do exceedingly well. One of its latest acquisitions appears to be very promising, to judge from the following extract from the Wall-street Journal:—

In acquiring ownership of Montana Union, Seattle and International, and Washington and Columbia River—nearly 385 miles altogether—Northern Pacific has greatly improved its strategic locations, besides adding to its mileage tracks that penetrate some of the richest territory available, and control most of the local traffic therefrom. Great Northern officials' hearts were broken to see the W. & C. R. get away from them without a struggle, but Hill said he did not want it, and that settled it. He was advised by Newman to get it, but would not listen. It would seem that these lines were as valuable to a through line as well-built forts, completely equipped, would be to the enemy in war; but Hill either did not see it that way or did not care.

Whenever the progress of the war justifies it, the rise will, however, no doubt, be general, and also extend to Norfolk, Atchison, and Denver stocks, while even Wabash are entering upon a brighter future. Special attention has been directed during the last few days to Canadian Pacifics, which, after touching 84⅜, have improved to 86¼, and seem well on the road to their recent price of 87 again. In fact, the road is doing so remarkably well that an improved dividend is in sight, and there is no reason why the stock should not stand at the same quotation as Milwaukee. The last weekly traffic increase amounted to $55,000, a total gain of $1,576,000 from January 1 up to the present—truly an excellent showing. The Grand Trunk, too, has had an excellent traffic, showing an increase of £16,807, and the First Prefs. have recovered to 69⅝, the Guaranteed to 75⅞. On the settlement of the rate war both Canadian Pacifics and Grand Trunks will probably take a jump. By the way, I have received a copy of "King's Views of the New York Stock Exchange," which contains 1,061 portraits and illustrations, and is presented with the compliments of Messrs. Clark, Ward, and Co., bankers and brokers, of New York and Boston. This book contains a very interesting history of the New York Stock Exchange, and any one who is fond of character study may be able to gather plenty of interest from the faces of some of the cute Yankee brokers and others connected with the Exchange, which appear in this compilation. Wall-street has so often got the better of London in previous transactions in American Rails, that the lights of the New York Stock Exchange ought decidedly to be of a different kind from our own brokers and jobbers.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS—THE BOURSES RALLY—AN EX-PRESIDENT ON ARGENTINE FINANCE—NEW COURT TO THE RESCUE OF BRAZIL.

I have already explained in my introductory remarks how Lord Salisbury's speech to the bankers had been distorted by sensational newspaper paragraphs. It is now shown that he made absolutely no reference to any trouble with France, and latest advices from Paris state that a settlement of the West African question has practically been arrived at. Under the circumstances, the Continental Bourses look upon Mr. Chamberlain with much suspicion, and they seem to consider him a kind of firebrand who wants to bring about a general European war. I suppose, however, that it was really the mysterious manner of the Colonial Secretary which caused all these apprehensions, and now that no bad effects are apparent, the Bourses are rallying again. Paris has put up all its specialities, such as Rio Tintos and Turks, and last, but not least, Spanish. I do not suppose that the recovery in Spanish Fours is due to Admiral Cervera's success in dodging the American Fleet, as really nothing more favourable for Spanish finance could happen than that the war were brought to a speedy close. But it seems that there is now a rumour that the next coupon will be paid less a tax of 20 per cent. I dare say, however, that we shall have a good many more rumours before the time arrives for the final decision concerning that much talked-of coupon. Yet it would pay the Paris haute finance best to facilitate the payment of the coupon again. Matters in Italy have fortunately taken a more favourable turn, but the sooner Italy reduces her army and her expenditure generally, the better will it be for its much-taxed population, and for the future stability of the State. The severe spasms which have of late occurred in the Foreign market, however, fully corroborate my often-repeated warning to leave the old-world government securities alone. South Americans, after a period of depression, have shown greater strength, and there has been more particularly a sharp advance in Brazilians, the 1889 Loan having recovered to 51, Western of Minas to 53½. Negotiations are reported to have taken a favourable turn with New Court for the funding of the coupons for a few years, thus giving time for the exchange to right itself. While in some quarters the Central Railway was stated to be the basis of the new loan which will be required, others anticipate that the latter will be secured on the Customs. At all events, it is quite time that the Rio exchange should in some way be steadied. With reference to Argentine affairs we have now the report of an interview with Dr. Pelligrini, ex-President of Argentina, by a representative of the Financial Times. Dr. Pelligrini is at present in England, it appears, chiefly for the benefit of his health, and he obviously would speak in an optimistic manner of the finances of his country. With reference to the Chilian war scare his utterance is reassuring. Concerning the provincial debts he says that the British and French railways have not yet been settled with, and that this causes a difficulty with regard to the Santa Fé debt. Respecting Cordoba he considers a settlement difficult, as it is a very poor province. The chief interest, however, centres in his remarks on the consolidation of the national debt, and Dr. Pelligrini appears to be of opinion that as long as the market price of the present Four per Cent. (Rescission) bonds is so much lower than that of the Five and Six per Cents., there is no possibility of the Consolidation on a basis of Four per Cent. bonds. In fact, Dr. Pelligrini waxed quite excited on the difference in the Four per Cent. at 56, and the Five per Cents. at nearly 90, but he leaves altogether out of calculation the special security which both the 1886 and Funding Loans have on the Customs revenue. I suppose he now considers that Argentine finance is so safe that it does not require any special hypothecation, but this is not the view of investors and bankers on this side. Respecting the resumption of the payment of the full interest on the National Debt, Dr. Pelligrini appears to have no misgivings, although he seems to blame Dr. Escalante—the Minister of Finance—for want of foresight in not preparing for this event. Argentine railway stocks have been steady, and a rise of 5 points is shown in Buenos Ayres Great Southern Ordinary at 140, while Buenos Ayres and Rosario have improved to 73½, Central Argentine to 79. Cordoba Central First Prefs. stand at 83, and the Central Northern Section Income Debenture stock at 54. Buenos Ayres and Pacific Railway Four and a Half per Cent. Second Debenture stock at 92, including a half-year's interest, is a distinctly good investment, giving a return of about 5 per cent. upon a well covered security. Owing to the almost complete failure of last year's wheat and maize crops there has been a set-back in the Company's traffic returns for 1897-8, but that is only a temporary matter, and already a turn in the tide has taken place, the last few weeks' traffics having shown considerable improvement. The excellent maize crop just coming in, and the sharp rise in the price of wheat, must give an impetus to the grain trade generally, and greatly benefit the districts served by the Pacific Company, and cause increased areas to be sown for the ensuing season. The Pacific Railway is a property capable of immense developments with very encouraging prospects, and the market price of its Four and a Half per Cent. Second Debenture stock ought to be at, or over par, at which it was quoted last year. Bondholders of the Western Railway of Santa Fé will be pleased to learn that the traffics are at last beginning to show remarkable increases as compared with last year. The aggregate receipts for nineteen weeks to May 14, 1898, were $789,707 (£59,724), while for the nineteen weeks to May 15, 1897, they amounted to $479,650 (£31,930), an increase of £27,786. Urugnay bonds have been steady at 44⅝, and the fact that no political news is coming to hand by cable from that country seems to indicate that there is no political trouble. Chilians are steady, and Mexican Sixes, although no higher, have shown a firm front. Peruvian Corporation stocks have maintained previous quotations, while Nitrate Rails are but a dull market, and all the gambling spirit seems to have left Mexican Rails, the First Prefs. being quoted 72.

THE KAFFIR CIRCUS.—"BEAR" RE-PURCHASES AND A WATER DISCOVERY CAUSE A RISE.

It cannot be said that the South African department was affected to a very marked extent by the political scare, but in these days of impressionable markets, the fear that a European conflagration was at hand—during which President Kruger might throw up the suzerainty and generally disport himself in an objectionable manner—naturally had some influence on quotations. There are always a number of operators in the Kaffir Circus ready to sell "Bears" on the slightest provocation, and they select Rand Mines, East Rands, and Consolidated Goldfields as most easily dealable. They succeeded at one time in putting down Rand Mines below 28, while East Rands were sold down to 4⅛, Consolidated Goldfields to 3$\frac{15}{16}$. From these figures there has already come about a very considerable rally, Rand Mines being up at 29$\frac{11}{16}$, East Rands at 4$\frac{11}{16}$, Consolidated Goldfields at 4$\frac{5}{16}$. The remarkable change in the Money Market, and the practical disappearance of all the political rumours, are likely to still further affect this market, and I have good reason for saying that when Rand Mines dropped to 28 a great many "Bear" sales were effected, which have not yet been covered. To sell Rand Mines at that figure is distinctly giving hostages to fortune, as the leading firm connected with the Company could easily put up the price three or four points. Another favourable influence has been the discovery of a huge cavern, 40 ft. deep, full of water, while sinking the second well by the Zuurbekom Water Company. According to the Standard and Diggers' News, the estimate of the yield of water is between eight and fifteen million gallons per day, and it is stated that this discovery will solve the water problem both for the town of Johannesburg and for the mines, when the huge plant ample for all purposes shall have been laid down. It is calculated that it will be possible to supply the mines with water up to 15,000,000 gallons per day. In view of the ever-recurring scarcity of water in the Witwatersrand district, this is a most important announcement which is fraught with favourable results for the whole of the mines, while the Barnato group, with which the Zuurbekom Company is connected, should naturally benefit. The rest of the market has strengthened, as a result of the more favourable outlook. Randfontein have recovered to 1$\frac{9}{16}$, Barnato Consols are again quoted 1¾, New Primrose 3½, Langlaagte Estate 3⅛, and the various Deep Level shares are higher all round, the prices being as follows:—Crown Deep 11, Goldfields Deep 8$\frac{7}{16}$, Robinson Deep 9⅜, Geldenhuis Deep 7⅜, Rose Deep 6⅛, Henry Nourse Deep 5, Durban Roodepoort Deep 3⅜, Knight's Deep 1⅞, Roodepoort Central Deep 1$\frac{5}{16}$, Nigel Deep 1. With reference to the projected Transvaal loan, all the rumours that President Kruger has succeeded in obtaining this are obviously false, and it is quite clear that he will not get any such advance in Europe unless suitable reductions are made to the mining industry. It is reported from the Niekerk that development has been resumed, and the management have secured a plant comprising two Gates' crushers, eight cyanide tanks, and other machinery. De Beers have been strong on French purchases, a rise having taken place to 26⅞. Just as Paris was chiefly the cause of the recent large sales, so it is now assisting in putting the value up again. New Jagersfontein have been firm at 7½.

For the DECORATING and FURNISHING in best modern manner, or in any of the traditional styles, of a single room or an entire house, HAMPTON & SONS, LTD., prepare, free of charge, suggestive schemes and competitive estimates.—Pall Mall East, S.W.

GOLDEN WEST AUSTRALIA—A GENERAL RECOVERY.

The number of crushings this week is not large, but some of those which are announced are distinctly favourable, more especially that of the Associated Gold Mines of Western Australia, 700 tons of telluride ore having yielded 3,000 oz. of gold. This is in addition to a crushing of 1,700 tons for 1,325 oz. of gold. The cablegram adds that the average assay of ore is 6 oz., and that the extension plant is making good progress. The other crushings will be gathered from the following list:—

	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Oz. of Gold.	Assay of Tailings Per Ton.
Associated Gold Mines (Telluride)	700	3,000	—
,, ,,	1,700	1,325	—
Queensland Menzies	227	673	—
North Boulder	343	363	—
Lady Evelyn	127	125	—
Rose Hill United	65	37	5 dwt.
Bayley's United (Arsenical Pyrites)	2	770	—
Weld-Hercules	258	260	4 dwt.
Golden Ridge	6¾	129	—
Great Boulder Proprietary	1,070	2,385	—

A very favourable result is again shown by the Queensland Menzies, the ore going 3 oz. to the ton, which is, curiously enough, about the same yield as has of late been obtained by the adjoining Lady Shenton Mine. By the way, warrants for the fifth dividend (one shilling per share) were posted to the shareholders on Friday, and the shares have rallied to 2⅜. A favourable cablegram is also to hand from the Florence, which adjoins the Lady Shenton, from which it is evident that the Florence Mine will prove nearly equal in value to the latter. The following is the cablegram:—"Rayfield (Mine Manager reports): 'Winze has been sunk on reef, our own property; in workings from the No. 3 level Lady Shenton has reached a depth of 18 ft.; the width of reef is 2 ft.; making more solid; gold can be seen as far as we have gone down.'" From the Hannan's Excelsior a cablegram is to hand stating that the assay results are very satisfactory, those of the green lode being 5 oz. 18 dwt., and of the main lode 2 oz. 15 dwt. From the Mount Charlotte it is stated that the battery has been started, and that the supply of water has been arranged for. On the Hannan's Star the vein appears to have been cut at a depth of 259 ft., containing visible gold, and from the Golden Ridge an improvement in the quality of the ore on the 165 ft. level is reported. It is not surprising that the excellent results from the Associated Gold Mines have caused a rise in these shares which are now quoted 3½, but this recovery has by no means been singular, the improvement having extended over all the better-class mines. Thus, Ivanhoe have risen to 5¾. From this mine it is understood that the developments are very satisfactory, and when the remaining twenty stamps are at work the yield will be greatly increased. Golden Horseshoe have been put up in sympathy with Ivanhoe to 8¼, and Lake View Consols have been a strong market at 8¾. The May crushing of the last-mentioned mine is expected to show a further important increase. Great Boulder Proprietary have given way to 17s. 3d. xd. With reference to the West Australian Market Trust the report has now been issued by the committee to the shareholders. They state that after very careful inquiry, they have arrived at the conclusion that reconstruction is desirable in the interests of the shareholders. "They have been agreeably surprised at the present position of the Company's assets, with regard to the principal of which they have satisfied themselves that they are of intrinsic value, and likely, if carefully conserved, to yield considerable profits to the Trust." This is what they say with regard to the Northern Territories Goldfields:—

In particular, your committee attaches great importance to the holding of the Trust in the Northern Territories Goldfields of Australia, Limited, the committee being satisfied, by personal inquiry and independent expert advice, that the properties owned by the Northern Territories Company, judged by results already obtained and present developments, are of great value.

The committee propose an assessment of 5s. per share, and also that a proportion of the new capital of the Company should consist of Preference shares to be handed over to the creditors as a substantial portion of their claims. The fact that arrangements have been made for the convenience of smaller shareholders to take no steps to enforce the payment of more than 2s. 6d. per share before October 1 next will no doubt facilitate an arrangement, and a meeting has now been called for the shareholders to pass the reconstruction scheme, which will probably be carried. W.A. Market Trust shares are now quoted 2s. to 2s. 6d., and Northern Territories at $\frac{13}{16}$ to $\frac{7}{8}$. London and Globes have shown unaccountable weakness, and when it is considered that most of the shares of the subsidiary enterprises have improved in value, it is quite clear that eventually the "Bears," who have raided this Company, will have to buy back at considerably higher quotations. I am informed on the best authority, moreover, that the Corporation has £500,000 invested in Consols, which it is stated are to be credited to the reserve fund, thus placing the Company into a very strong position. The news from the Paddington Consols is much more favourable, and it appears that after all there is plenty of pay ore there. Hannan's Brownhill have fluctuated within narrow limits, and finally are quoted $7\frac{9}{16}$. But there is a growing impression that these shares are likely to experience a very important advance in view of the progress which is being made with the new plant. In fact, the London and Hamburg Gold Recovery—who are in charge of the machinery—have received a cablegram to the effect that the shafting is running well. Important results are, therefore, now in sight. West Australian Goldfields have been a dull market at $1\frac{1}{4}$, while Hampton Plains have been steady at $\frac{11}{16}$. A public meeting of the West Australian Chamber of Mines has been called for the purpose of urging upon the Government of Western Australia the necessity of protecting the interests of holders of gold-mining leases against the unjust demands of alluvial diggers. The following resolution is to be submitted:—"This meeting is of opinion that a dual title to one lease is most undesirable, and requests the Government to so amend the mining laws that a leaseholder shall have exclusive right to all minerals existing within the boundaries of his lease." This is an important movement, which is fully justified, and I trust that the mining industry will back up the Chamber in every respect.

Indian, Australasian, and British Columbian Mines.—Sharp Recovery in British America Corporation.

Indian gold mining shares have moved irregularly, but most of the changes have been adverse, more particularly in Ooregum and Nundydroog. Coromandel and Mysore Wynaad are also lower; but Mysore Gold and Road Block have improved, the latter on a cablegram from the mine stating that the average width of the lode in No. 2 shaft is 5 ft., assaying 2 oz. to the ton. In Australian mines, other than Westralian, the chief feature has been a break in Mount Lyell to $10\frac{5}{8}$, on the unfavourable nature of the report, sales being pressed from the colony. The various other Mount Lyell shares are also down, and Mount Morgan have reacted to $4\frac{5}{16}$ x.d. Broken Hill Proprietary are quoted $2\frac{3}{16}$, British Broken Hill 10s. 6d. In New Zealand mines very little business has been transacted, and Woodstock, Waihi, Waitekauri, and Waitekauri Extended are all lower. Hauraki Associated, on the other hand, are firmer at 9d. to 1s. 3d. In British Columbian mines business has been restricted. The feature in this section has been a sharp advance in British America Corporation, which had been sold down by "Bears" to 17s., and have recovered to 19s. 6d. The following circular confirms the statement which I have already made with regard to the purchase of the rich Le Roi Mine:—

> I have pleasure in informing you that this Corporation, after prolonged negotiation, has now purchased for cash the famous Le Roi Mine, situate at Rossland, in British Columbia, upon much more favourable terms than were demanded when the option was originally acquired. I may also state that since that date we are informed that the mine has greatly improved in value by reason of recent developments at a depth of 700 ft. It is also gratifying to announce that we are advised by our experts and others that the acquisition of the Le Roi Mine, together with the other properties already purchased, ensure that this Corporation will be a dividend-paying concern for many years to come, without taking into consideration the profits that may accrue from our transportation arrangements, trading posts, and mining operations in the Yukon.

I should think that shareholders would do well to stick tight to their holdings, and those who may have been frightened out by the recent "Bear" clamour should hasten to buy back again, as, once the special settlement is completed, a further important improvement is looked for.

"Of Particular Importance."

Under this heading I published some remarks in Truth of the 12th inst. upon a circular which was being sent out by Mr. Charles Turner, hailing from the Outer Temple, 222, Strand, W.C., in which he offers loans to all kinds of persons, notably those in receipt of private incomes, annuities from land, house, or shop property of any description, &c. I was more particularly induced to pass this comment owing to the fact that the name of Truth had been used in these circulars, which commenced in the following manner:—"Doubtless you have perused the many articles published in Truth regarding money-lenders, with their extortionate rates of interest?" I protested that my articles on this subject could not be construed into a recommendation of the system of Mr. Charles Turner. I also drew attention to the fact that while Mr. Turner's circulars were headed with the notice "Agency for the New York Life Insurance Company" in very small type, the circulars which were being sent out some six months ago by Mr. John T. Higgins were headed "New York Life Company, the Outer Temple, 222, Strand." To the last-mentioned circulars I referred in Truth of September 23, 1897, and with regard to both I came to the conclusion that, while there is a good deal of competition in insurance business, so that agents for life offices have to offer all sorts of inducements to attract business, these two gentlemen were going a little too far in their anxiety to obtain clients. My last paragraph brought me two letters, one from Mr. John T. Higgins, informing me that he is conducting the business for Mr. Charles Turner, and expressing the view that as most of our Insurance Companies are actively competing for loans and purchases of reversions and life interests, he failed to see why I should become so excited in (sic) his attempt to do the same. He informs me at the same time that he is not only an agent for the New York Life Office, but also acts in a similar capacity for some of the English offices, and fully maintains the terms which were mentioned in both Mr. Charles Turner's and his own touting letters. The paper on which this communication is written is headed "Mr. Charles Turner," without any reference whatever to the New York Life Company, while Mr. Higgins' first circular was printed on paper headed "New York Life Company, the Outer Temple, 222, Strand." The second letter that I have received is from Mr. Charles Turner, written on his own note-paper, the same as that used by Mr. Higgins in his last letter, and in this communication Mr. Turner states that, as apparently I feel deeply interested in his business, he sends me a copy of a circular letter which he is sending to the "nobility," and he suggests that I should favour him by devoting a leader to it, as he has no doubt that there are many amongst subscribers to Truth who would be glad of a channel through which they could re-arrange their financial transactions on the terms named in the circular letter. I cannot exactly compliment Mr. Charles Turner on his circular letter, addressed to the "nobility, landed gentry, and others," for the chief reason that it is drawn up precisely in the same style as an ordinary money-lender's touting circular, and of these Mr. Turner will allow that I have had very considerable experience. Mr. Turner, in his circular, offers to arrange loans at, say, 3½ to 3¾ per cent. per annum, according to amount and security. What I cannot quite understand is the relationship existing between Mr. Charles Turner and Mr. John T. Higgins and the New York Life Insurance Company. In the first instance Mr. Higgins wrote on the note-paper headed "New York Life Insurance Company." Then he writes to me stating that he is conducting the business for Mr. Charles Turner, who, I gather from the name painted on the door of his office at 222, Strand, is connected with the Life Interest and Reversionary Securities Corporation? What, then, is the connection of both these gentlemen with the New York Life Insurance Company?

Hotel Albemarle, Piccadilly, London. Private Suite, Bath, Electric Light, Lift. Vermersch, Proprietor. Paris: Imperial Hotel, Champs Elysées. Boulogne S/M: Imperial Pavilion Hotel.

NEW ENTERPRISES AND ISSUES.

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

Kalantaroff (Baku) Oil Company, Limited.—With a capital of £50,000, in £1 shares this Company is formed to acquire and work a leasehold property in the district of Sabunchi, in the oilfields of Baku, Russia.

The British Hydraulic Jointing Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring the letters patent and provisional or other protection for the United Kingdom and Ireland, France and Belgium, in or relating to improvements in tubular joints and frame joints, jointing of tubular frames, wheel hubs, &c., granted to the inventor, Charles Thomas Crowden, of Beeston, Notts, and other subsidiary patents subsequently acquired by the Hydraulic Syndicate, Limited. The Company will be entitled to the benefit of all future inventions, improvements, &c., relating to the above processes made or to be made by the inventor, and by Messrs. Johnson & Phillips. The capital is fixed at £1,200,000 in Ordinary shares of £1 each, the present issue being of 800,000 shares.

J. Tylor & Sons, Limited, is a Company formed to acquire the business of J. Tylor & Sons, Limited, hydraulic and sanitary engineers, of 2, Newgate-street, London, and elsewhere. The capital is fixed at £200,000, in Preference and Ordinary shares of £10 each.

As in the case of many of the recent conversions, this Company is over-capitalised, and the business does not appear to have made much progress during the past few years.

The Electric Railway and Tramway Carriage Works, Limited.—This Company is formed with a capital of £150,000 in shares of £5 each, for the purpose of manufacturing all classes of cars, railway carriages, and tramway cars for horse, electric and cable roads, and vehicles for light railways.

There is an undoubted scope for a concern of this description, but it must not be forgotten that there are already established English and American Companies competing for this class of work, and there seems to be no special advantages in this venture.

Australia Hardwoods (Jarrah), Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring a government licence to fell and remove timber over 47,000 acres of the Jarrah Forest in the Murray District, Western Australia. The capital is fixed at £250,000, in Ordinary and Preference shares.

We are getting too many of these Timber Companies. The pioneers enterprises have been very successful, and have occupied the most valuable part of the field. I understand there is another half dozen more to be issued, and the above seems the least desirable.

Chance & Hunt, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire the businesses of the Oldbury Alkali Company, Limited (formerly Messrs. Chance Brothers), chemical and cement manufacturers, of Oldbury, near Birmingham; and of Messrs. Hunt & Sons, chemical manufacturers, Leabrook, Wednesbury. The share capital is £280,000 in shares of £10 each, and the present is an issue of £120,000 Four per Cent. Debentures of £100 each, at £102 per £100.

The United Alkali Company has not been a success, and it is doubtful whether this one will be. The debentures are not a desirable investment, especially as such Companies are always subject to competition from new processes.

The British Dyewood and Chemical Company, Limited.—With a capital of £570,000 in shares of £10 each, this Company has been formed for the purpose of amalgamating the businesses of E. D. Milnes Bros., Lumn Mills, Bury; Mucklow & Co., of Bury and Glasgow; John Dawson & Co., Eglinton Dyewood Mills, Alloa; and W. R. Scott, Carntyne Dyewood Mills, Parkhead, Glasgow, importers of dyewood and tanning materials, manufacturers, and general drysalters.

This is an amalgamation on the model of the recent cotton combinations, with this difference, that the four firms cannot in any way monopolise the trade.

George Hodgson, Limited—This Company has been formed to acquire and carry on the business of George Hodgson of Bradford, power loom maker, general engineer, and ironfounder. The share capital is fixed at £90,000 and a 4 per cent. debenture issue of £50,000.

The profit given is for the last two and a half years, only; it would have been as well if they had been given separately for the past five years, say, so that it could be seen whether any progress has been made. There is nothing to recommend in this issue.

Volenite, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire the patent for the United Kingdom of Mr. Frederick Lamplough, in respect of a method and apparatus for saturating, vulcanising, and oxydising fibrous materials in the production of material to be used for insulating and other purposes, and which has been designated Volenite. The Company also acquire a non-exclusive licence for Great Britain, to manufacture fish oil in accordance with Mr. Stanley's patents, and the improvements in the treatment of fish and fish offal, the factory and works of the Fish Oil and Guano Company at Gorleston, near Great Yarmouth, and the plant and machinery lately erected at Myddelton-street, London. The capital is fixed at £80,000, in shares of £1 each. As the whole of the capital has been subscribed this announcement is made for public information only.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

GOVERNMENT, &C., BONDS.

Ivor.—There seems to be no fear of any serious trouble between Chili and Argentina, and Argentine Government bonds are under the circumstances a fair investment. Briton.—Uruguay bonds have now shown steadiness for some time, but everything must depend upon the political outlook in Urugnay.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

G.—What you require has been forwarded in your envelope as an exceptional matter. Constant Reader, Montrose.—I cannot possibly answer your question as regards commission without your giving me full particulars of the amounts and of the stocks bought. P. Q. P.—This is really a question for a solicitor, whom I should advise you to consult. Caveat Emptor.—I really cannot answer this question. You can easily gather the information you require by reading my letter. E. J. B.—I cannot answer by post, and with regard to the £350 you wish to invest you must tell me whether you would place the same in gilt-edged securities—such as British Corporation stocks—to yield about 3 per cent., or whether you would run a little more risk and place the money in debentures of sound and prosperous industrial companies, which yield from 4 to 5 per cent. When you have answered these questions I will further advise you.

HOME RAILS.

Hero.—I see no particular reason for selling this Scotch railway stock at present, although Canadian Pacifics will probably move sooner. Mammon.—1. I should not for a moment like to predict that Home Railway Prior Charges will fall further, all this must depend upon the course of the Money Market. 2 That is a question which you must decide for yourself. 3. Probably not, as these were exceptionally high. I would answer with a hackneyed phrase, "Never, or hardly ever."

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN RAILS.

Katharine.—I strongly advise you to hold your Union Pacifics for an important improvement. As you have taken up the shares you can afford to await developments. As soon as the war is over, and perhaps before, there will be a general advance. D. J. W.—After the heavy fall I should advise you to hold. I cannot reply by letter. Ravenscourt.—I certainly advise you to hold all your Baltimore and Ohio stocks and bonds, as a reorganisation is now being arranged for.

MAJOR HOWE & CO., LTD.—Fashionable BOOTS and SHOES.—16, Coventry-st., W.; 60, Strand, W.C.; 81, Gracechurch-st.; and 13, Queen Victoria st., London. "Note Addresses." (Repairs.)

SAVOY HOTEL, Savoy Restaurant, London. Large reception-rooms for fashionable réunions. Orchestra plays daily during dinner and opera supper.

MINING SHARES.

A Subscriber.—No option but to hold and join the reconstruction. Gnoll.—I am afraid that there is no option for you but to take up the allotment. Enquirer, Birmingham.—1. These shares stand at ¾ discount, and I really know nothing in their favour. 2. I think it would be better to await the chance of a recovery, although that seems to be remote. The South Africans Nos. 3 and 4 should be held on the chance of an improvement, and this applies also to No. 5. I have the worst possible opinion of No. 6, and there seems to be no option but to hold Nos. 7 and 8. Carlos.—1. Yes, Ivanhoe, Hannan's Brownhill, Lady Shenton, and Florence would make a promising trust of West Australian Mining shares. You should certainly hold British America Corporation for a further important improvement. Torrington.—There is no market at present, and all will depend upon developments at the mine. T. T., Rhonda Valley.—Subject to certain arrangements now being completed, these South African shares will improve shortly. The mine is most promising, and can be worked very cheaply. Irex.—1. Yes, the present time is favourable. As to terms, see remarks under "Golden West Australia." 2. These shares declined with the rest of the group, and should improve again. Rollo.—Yes, West Australian Joint Stock Founders' shares are at a very low price now, and should improve again. Prince.—No reason why you should not invest in Village Main Reefs or Henry Nourse. You might add Rand Mines, Randfontein, New Primrose, Glencairn, and Langlaagte Estate. Coston.—Some settlement about the Londonderry is still pending. The Lagunas Nitrate litigation has ended in favour of the Lagunas Nitrate Syndicate, and therefore in favour of the North estate. Nervous.—London and Globe will doubtless recover again. Homo.—As far as I can learn, there is no reason for the depreciation in London and Globe beyond the recent political rumours, and the general weakness of the American market. Perplexed, I. of W.—I do not see how you can refuse to pay future calls, but I will inquire into the position. A Friend.—If you wish to invest in British Columbian Mines, you will do best to buy British America Corporation, which holds some of the best mines, including the high dividend payer, Le Roi. There is no market for the shares named by you. York House.—I quite agree with you that London and Globe should stand at a very different price, and there is no reason for the decline. S. S. L. B.—The Company is being reconstructed, and you had better buy after reconstruction than before. 1. New Zealand. 2. Yes. 3. No dividend has ever been paid. Ceres.—I am afraid that prospects are not very favourable; but it may be worth while joining the reconstruction.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

Verax.—No; I advise you to hold Humber shares now, the interim dividend having just been declared. Plymouthian.—I will make inquiries, and refer again to the matter. Rover.—Notwithstanding the set-back, Welsbach Ordinary and Prefs. are very promising, and a rise is expected after the carry over. J. R. X.—Quite high enough. Bucks.—No, I do not like this concern as an investment. You can do better nearer home. J. P. B.—Far too speculative. C. O.—You will have to go into industrial stocks to obtain the yield you want. I have of late given several lists of industrial debentures, from which you might have made a selection. You might, for instance, spread the money over A. & S. Henry Four and a Quarter per Cent. (£50) Debentures at 53, J. W. Benson Four per Cent. Perpetual Mortgage Debenture stock at 101, J. Lyons & Co.'s Four and a Half per Cent. Debenture stock at 111½, and add Welsbach Prefs., which have no debentures before them, and such Brewery Prefs. as Yardley Five and a Half per Cent. at 5 to 5¼ to improve the yield.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

B. A. W.—1. I do not think this is a very promising electric company, but I cannot verify the statements. 2. I do not think much of this company. Alexander.—I really cannot tell you anything with regard to Nos. 1 and 2. Everything depends upon the arrangement going through, in which case, there will no doubt be a considerable improvement. Nos. 3 and 4 should be held. A Golfer.—Your mining shares are for the time under a cloud. It would, therefore, be advisable to sell No. 7 in preference. Briton.—There is no option but to hold the Brewery shares No. 1-4 until the end of the war. No reason to sell No. 5-9 now. Sell No. 10 if you can. I am afraid prospects of No. 11 are not favourable. S. D.—Yes, May's Consolidated and the other South African shares are fair value at present price. The Industrial shares mentioned are very speculative. C.—No reason to sell Grand Trunk Debentures; but the exchange may be useful in your case. 2. No. 3. The liability on these Insurance shares is £4 10s. per £5 share. Kynance.—No, you cannot get 4 per cent. with safety elsewhere, and these deposits are not absolutely safe. You can get 3 per cent. in British Corporation stock. The Drapery shares seem too speculative in your case. Neophyte.—A. London and Globe should improve considerably again, and now is your time to average. B. No reason to sell Block B. C. Somewhat too speculative. This stock is altogether dependent upon the movements of American Rails.

WHITEHALL COURT, S.W.—To Let. Bachelor and other Suites. Electric Light. Service. Bath-rooms. Meals in public or tenants' own rooms. Apply, Manager.

THE LONDON CO-OPERATIVE CAB COMPANY.

I have repeatedly commented upon the attempts of the London Cab Co-operative Company, of 4, Bloomsbury-street, W.C., to obtain money from the public for the purpose of carrying on a cab proprietor's business. As I stated some time ago, the circulars issued by this concern are headed, "An absolutely safe investment. Capital withdrawable on demand. No risk or liability"; and after extolling the huge profits continually being made by cab proprietors, the circulars go on to invite subscriptions from the investing public in sums of £10 and upwards, upon which the Company is prepared to pay interest at the rate of 52 per cent. per annum, the regular payment of interest being promised every week, while repayment of the full amount can be had on demand. It is difficult to see how any company or enterprise can carry on business for any length of time in a satisfactory manner on such conditions, and even the estimate given of the weekly revenue and expenditure on every £120 expended on a hansom cab, horse, harness, &c., is not convincing. The average weekly amount received from a cab driver for hire of horse and cab is stated as £4 4s., and after deducting forage, stabling, company's commission for management, &c., a balance of £1 4s. is set out as depositor's interest on £120, at the rate of 52 per cent. per annum. I see that at the top of the circular R. F. Hardinge, 4, Bloomsbury-street, W.C., figures as secretary and general manager, while Parr's Bank, Limited, Bloomsbury Branch, are stated to be the bankers. I am also told that the Company was started some time ago by a man named Stanley Evans. What I should more especially like to know is the exact location of the Company's stables, how many horses and cabs they are controlling, and where these are kept? From a reply received from the Acting Chief-Clerk at New Scotland Yard by a reader of TRUTH, dated April 11, 1898, it appears that the London Cab Co-operative Company was not then registered in the books of the Public Carriage Office. Will Mr. Hardinge explain this omission, unless it has been remedied since, and will he also inform me as to where the Company's stock-in-trade is to be found? Recent circulars issued by the Company also contain the statement that the subscription list will be closed to the general public on the subscribed capital amounting to £12,000, when they will have the control of 100 cabs. I should also much like to know what amount of capital has been subscribed up to the present, and how many cabs they are running?

WHO IS F. CHARLES, STOCK AND SHARE DEALER?

Who is F. Charles, stock and share dealer, 89, London Wall, London, E.C.? I have been asked this question by several readers of TRUTH, in view of a host of typewritten letters which this person is sending about, and which he begins with the sentence, "I have not written you for some time because I have not had any good information to impart," although my readers do not appear to have heard of him before. He goes on to say that he has now some good information, and that it is in fact so good that he will guarantee people against any loss whatever. It is quite refreshing to read on "Send me £5, £10, or £20, and per return of post I will forward you contract not only giving full particulars, but also bearing my signed guarantee." He adds that the shares "will" rise, and that on that point he is confident, or otherwise he would not give a guarantee. To emphasise his recommendation F. Charles states that every £5 sent will procure about £32 10s. profit, and "you cannot lose your money." Under the circumstances it becomes more particularly important to know who F. Charles really is, and what is the value of his guarantee. Is he a philanthropist, and why does he not make these splendid profits for himself instead of inviting strangers to participate in the same with him? What, finally, is the particular share which will yield so handsome a profit? Until these questions are answered, I should advise my readers to give F. Charles a wide berth.

My Chapter on Industrial Stocks.

The Industrial department has suffered quite as much as any other from the crop of political rumours which have been so much in evidence of late. There has, in fact, been a considerable shake-out in speculative securities, and now that the "Bull" account has been considerably reduced, there should be every prospect of a sharp recovery. There are indications that Welsbach Incandescent Gas stocks will lead the improvement. The Ordinary, after declining, is up again to 109, and the Preference stock has been largely dealt in at 97, the Deferred at 19s. 6d. The demand for the Preferred was, perhaps, partly due to the advantages which they possess as a trustee investment, having no debentures before them; but the more important advance will doubtless take place in the Ordinary—which some time ago touched 122—so that there is ample room for a further upward movement. The new burner, it appears, will be on sale in June, and large orders have already been booked. As the special settlement, on June 2, approaches, English Sewing Cottons ("Threads") are giving way, the price now having dropped to $\frac{5}{16}$ premium. "Fine Spinners" have never yet reached a decent premium, although attempts are made to establish one of $\frac{1}{16}$. A relapse in Coats to 58 has to be recorded. Lipton shares, on the other hand, are not so much affected by the impending special settlement on June 2, and the quotation is $\frac{7}{8}$ premium, while the Preference shares stand at $\frac{1}{4}$ premium. One of the "Bull" points which is being mentioned is that the list of shareholders is larger than that of any other Company. Electric lighting shares were very flat at one time, and although they are rallying slightly, previous quotations have not been recovered. City of London stand at $2\frac{1}{2}$, South London at $2\frac{1}{4}$, Charing Cross at $12\frac{1}{2}$. It is expected that the new Welsbach burner will bring great competition to the electric lighting companies, as many instances are being named in which electric light is to be replaced by Welsbach gas. In cycle shares more activity has prevailed, and it looks as if more business may be expected in the near future. Dunlop Deferred have not, however, fully maintained the recent improvement, being now quoted 6s. 9d. Dunlop Ordinary have hardened to 13s. 6d., the Debentures, however, still showing weakness at 70. In Trent Cycles a fair business appears to have been transacted at 5s. Humbers have recovered, the Ordinary to 10s., the Extensions to 5s., on the announcement of an interim dividend of 5 per cent., which was altogether contrary to market expectations. Starley Bros. have improved to 5s. 6d., while Swifts are quoted 9s. 6d., Singers 8s. 6d. Amalgamated Tyres stand at 3s. 6d., and Cycle Components at $1\frac{1}{8}$ are slightly easier. The accounts just issued by J. W. Benson, Limited, fully confirm the favourable opinion I expressed of the Company on its formation. In its first year the Company has earned a net profit of £56,139. After providing for debenture interest, and the dividend on the Five per Cent. Preference shares, a dividend of 10 per cent. is paid on the Ordinary shares, including the interim dividend already distributed, and £4,959 is placed to the general reserve account. This brings the general reserve and the reserve up to £27,325. The interest per annum on Preference and Debentures amounts to £22,500, so that there is over a year's interest in reserve for both. Septimus Parsonage & Co., Limited, are now issuing the balance of their capital, viz., 31,436 Preference and 34,297 Ordinary shares of £1 each. The Preference shares are cumulative, and carry a dividend of 6 per cent., and the net profits up to December 31 are stated to have been £14,840, which is an increase of nearly £1,000 over the previous year. The Ordinary shares (which have been largely dealt in at 1 to $1\frac{1}{4}$) are in receipt of an 8 per cent. dividend, and the small premium of 2s. 6d. per share, at which the new shares are offered, is not excessive. Allsopp Ordinary have shown weakness, but are again recovering, while other Home Breweries suitable for investment are steady. West Australian timber shares have been dull, Millars' Karri and Jarrah being quoted $2\frac{7}{8}$, while Davies are lower at $1\frac{1}{4}$. The latter shares are dull, partly owing to the hopes of an amalgamation with Millars having fizzled out, but also on the impending issue of half-a-dozen similar enterprises, the prospectuses of which should be scanned with the greatest care, as some are absolutely unripe for flotation, and are likely to prove traps for the unwary. Oil shares have been quiet, Russian Petroleum being quoted $21\frac{3}{4}$, while Schiebaieff at $\frac{1}{16}$ to $\frac{3}{16}$ premium have received very little attention. More new oil companies are on the tapis. Natal Steam Coal shares are firm at $1\frac{1}{4}$. Salmon & Gluckstein are steady at 31s. 6d., while Lyons are quoted $4\frac{1}{4}$. There is a talk of a $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. dividend on Lyons. The Anglo "A" market, after the shake-out, seems now pretty clear of stock. Fish Oil and Guano, after improving to $5\frac{1}{4}$, are dull at $4\frac{7}{8}$ on a line of shares coming on a small market, but with the flotation of Volenite, Limited, these shares are promising, as they carry the rights of Volenite equal to one Volenite share in every ten Fish Oil and Guano Company shares. Volenites are quoted at 5 to $5\frac{1}{2}$ premium per £1 share. The invention is, doubtless, a valuable one, especially as the uses of the preparation are so numerous. Although quite in its infancy, I hear of some very good applications by large firms for its use. By the way, Coward's Directory of Secretaries for 1898 has just been published, and will be found a most useful booklet for all connected with public companies. It is compiled by the genial editor of the Rialto, Mr. Edward Coward.—Your affectionate Uncle,

MOSES.

P.S., Tuesday Morning.—The mining settlement yesterday has shown but a small speculative account to be in existence, and rates have eased off all round. There is thus the prospect of a considerable advance in South African and West Australian mining shares. The political news continues satisfactory, and it is evident that the Anglo-French commission in Paris has practically arrived at a settlement of the West African difficulty. American Rails have again been put up in Wall-street under the lead of Milwaukee, and there are ever-recurring peace rumours about. It would not be at all surprising if well-informed politicians were already buying in anticipation of some settlement, for our Yankee cousins are getting heartily tired of the war. With the growing ease of money, and in the absence of any further political complications, the markets look like experiencing an important advance.

All Rights Reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

THE DERBY DEVILS.

THOSE who can carry their minds back a couple of decades, and were familiar with the sights and sounds of the Epsom Road on Derby Day in the middle seventies, will not fail to remember those notorious individuals, the Derby Devils. They made their début (so far as I recollect, but dates were never my strong point) in the year 1876, and created quite a sensation by their startling appearance and ribald conduct; a circumstance which, in days when fantastic disguises and uproarious behaviour on the road were common features, implied something unusually sensational in that line.

This was, in fact, the case. The Derby Devils, ten in number, drove down to Epsom on the top of a coach painted red and orange, to represent forked and fiery flames. They themselves were all got up as fiends, of the stagey type, with long ears, leering faces, tails, and cloven hoofs. And ever and anon, all the way there and back, they set themselves by their songs, their shouted repartees, their ribald chaff, to eclipse all previous records in what may be euphemistically styled the "language of the road."

Disguised as they were, it was impossible to recognise any of them. But rumour (which afterwards proved to have been correct) said that they were all young men of good family, some of them actually peers of high rank, who were already conspicuous in the faster walks of fast London Society, and who made it the constant aim of their existence to live up to, aye and as far beyond as might be, the reputation for rowdiness which they had already achieved.

The Hotel Cecil Restaurant.—Orchestra daily during Luncheon, Dinner, and Supper. M. François, Chef de Restaurant, from the Grand Hotel, Monte Carlo.

It was, as I have said, on Derby Day, 1876—to the best of my recollection—that this coachful of Devils made its first appearance on the Epsom Road. But the episode which I wish now to relate is an occurrence that befell them on their way to the Derby the following year (1877). On this occasion, their behaviour was even more profane than it had been in the previous year. It really seemed as if they must have spent a great part of the intervening twelve months in concocting special efforts in the way of ribaldry. And many of their songs were such as caused shocks in the breasts of hearers by no means easily shocked.

But to come to the particular occurrence which I wish to relate. About half-way to Epsom—measuring the distance from Charing Cross—lies the little village of Morden; and in the middle of Morden, hard by the church and just on the top of the hill, stands, and has stood for many years, a wayside public, known as the George Inn. This "George" has always been a favourite house of call for drouthy Derby-goers. Even nowadays, when fewer people go by road to Epsom than formerly, you will always find a great stoppage of vehicles there, morning and evening, during Epsom races. But twenty years ago the stoppage was still greater. And when, about twelve noon on Derby Day, 1877, the fiery coach of Devils drew up here on their way down, they found, and were pleased to find, themselves attracting the attention of a large and noisy crowd of bibulous Britons. A spirited exchange of phrases ensued. The crowd chaffed the Devils; the Devils replied with salvoes of rowdy repartee, some of which, by their sheer outrageousness, took away the breath even of a contingent of costers from Camberwell, whose powers of respiration then, as now, were not easily affected by anything in the shape of profane expression.

While this edifying little scene was in progress, there happened to come along, on foot, one who seemed peculiarly out of place amid such surroundings; a quiet, prim-looking old fellow, of serious aspect, evidently, by his dress, a clergyman of the Established Church. It was clear that he did not realise, at first, that anything worse was occurring than a bout of harmless chaff; for he stopped, with an indulgent smile, as of one who, "while all his serious thoughts were fixed on Heaven," yet wished to show that he saw no sin in a little innocent uproariousness on Derby Day. But when, adjusting his glasses on his clerical old nose, he saw the Devils in all the profanity of their get-up, still more when he heard the blasphemous language in which they were indulging, his whole expression underwent a sudden and complete change, and he showed unmistakably by his looks the horror with which he regarded them.

For a few seconds, he seemed uncertain whether to hurry away, as quickly as possible, from this scene of profanity, or whether boldly to reprove the ribald men for their wicked behaviour. His mind was soon made up. The brave old minister took three steps forward, lifted his hand, and, in a voice of stern rebuke, cried:

"Stop!"

The Devils, who had not till now observed him, were momentarily taken aback; perhaps some of them had sufficient grace to feel a trifle ashamed and disconcerted. But one of them, their coachman, the most reckless spirit of them all, whom they had styled Beelzebub, recovered his effrontery in an instant:

"Hilloa, Jeremiah?" he retorted, with a string of profanities not to be reproduced. "What's up with you, old cock?"

"I charge you—I command you in my Master's name—to desist from this wickedness!" said the old clergyman, in solemn, denunciatory tones.

"We can't help it; it is our nature to!" was the mocking retort. "We're all Devils, don't you know."

"O wicked, reckless fools! How do you dare to make these awful matters a subject for your sport and jest? Surely you shall be punished for it!"

"Shall we, my prophetic Jerry? Shall we, indeed?"

"Ah! you may scoff; you may——"

"Dry up. Life's too short to be wasted in listening to your Jeremiads," cried one.

"Hark to him. Just hark to him," cried another.

"Hold thy peace, Jerry!" added a third.

"Sinner!" cried out the old man, with flashing eye. "I will NOT hold my peace. As long as you are within hearing, so long——"

"Well, look here, old cock," retorted Beelzebub, mounting the box and gathering up the reins, "if you have any more to say, you'll have to follow us to Epsom, for we're just off."

"It would be rather a joke, sir, to take him with us to Epsom," suggested one of the grooms on the Devils' coach. "Then he could preach to us all the way."

The idea tickled Beelzebub. He laid down his whip and burst out laughing.

"By ——," he exclaimed. "A —— fine suggestion. Saul was among the prophets. Why not Jeremiah among the Devils? Fellow Devils, what do you say?"

The other Devils took up the suggestion with loud shouts of approval.

"Here you are, old cock," cried one; "jump up behind."

"Shall I give the gentleman a leg-up?" exclaimed the groom, swinging himself down from the coach, and seizing the old clergyman by the arm.

"Unhand me, minion—let me go!" protested the old fellow, indignantly, trying in vain to shake his arm free. "How dare you, I say?"

"Come, don't be coy, old sky-pilot—make haste!" cried Beelzebub. "These wheelers 'll be kicking over the traces if we keep 'em waiting. Hi! Another of you, lend a hand with his Reverence!"

A second groom jumped down and seized the helpless old man by the other arm. He exclaimed, protested, looked appealingly round. Some of the crowd declared that it was a shame to treat him so, but none showed any disposition to render him active assistance.

"Let me go, you flunkeys!" cried the old fellow, angrily.

"Up with him!" laughed Beelzebub, from the box. "Now then—one—two—three—away!"

Nothing loth, the two young fellows responded to their master's command, and in almost less time than it takes to describe, they had hoisted the parson up behind, being assisted by two or three of the Devils who hauled at him vigorously from above. A moment later, Beelzebub whipped up the horses and away they went down the hill at a hard gallop.

It was some while before their victim, breathless and exhausted by the struggle, was able to speak.

Then he burst out in tones of panting indignation:—

"You—you—you cowards; you shall answer for this!"

"Shall we, your prophetship?" laughed one of the Devils.

"I can promise you, you shall," was the response.

"Bah!" laughed another. "We'll risk that—won't we, fellow Devils?"

"Preach us a sermon, Jeremiah!" said one.

"Prophesy us a prophecy!" said another.

"Sing us a hymn, old 'un," added another. "Come! tootle up!"

And in this manner they contrived to "roast" their unwilling passenger all the way to Epsom. The old fellow bore it, however, without seeming to mind it so much as might have been expected. Doubtless, he had sufficient sense to see the uselessness of further protest, and to realise that the less he betrayed his annoyance and indignation, the sooner they would cease their obnoxious chaff. And by the time they reached the Downs his demeanour towards the Devils had changed from an open and indignant hostility to a mild and martyr-like resignation.

"Guess this is your reverence's début at this sort of thing!" remarked Beelzebub to the parson, as they drove on to the course.

"Your surmise is correct," was the cold response.

"Ah! well! You'll see some life to-day!"

"It seems probable," replied the minister, looking round

For Mosquito Bites nothing allays the irritation so quickly as Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia, and it is an immediate remedy for Wasp or Bee Stings.

with unwilling interest, as it were, upon the vast, seething crowd of humanity that surged all around them. And then he added spontaneously, with an air of mild surprise:—

"They don't all look such villains!"

Beelzebub laughed.

"A mixed lot," he said. "Much like your Sunday congregations."

The old clergyman made no reply to that. He was thinking of something else. "Sir," he said, suddenly, to Beelzebub, "I have had occasion, in the exercise of my duty, to say some hard things to you and to your friends. Perhaps I scarcely took into sufficient account the thoughtlessness of youth, and spoke more severely than—than——"

"Pray don't mention it. We liked it, I assure you!"

"But I may say I believe you to be a gentleman."

"Sir, you do me proud!" laughed Beelzebub, with an exaggerated bow.

"And I appeal to you as such," continued the old clergyman, "to save me from the gibes and insults to which I shall be subjected if my clerical attire remains exposed to view. I am in your hands, sir. You have brought me here against my will. I rely upon you to see me safely through the experience into which you have dragged me."

"I have no wish, I can assure you," replied Beelzebub, "that you should be subjected to contumely at the hands of race-course roughs" (for, in spite of his levity and recklessness, this Devil was at heart a gentleman) "and, perhaps, it was rather too bad of us to bring you here, as we did. But how am I to conceal your clerical attire for you?"

"I saw an Inverness cape on the coach," answered the other (they had by this time alighted, and were waiting while the servants got out the luncheon). "Might I borrow that?"

"It belongs to one of the others, but I'm sure he'll lend it to you with pleasure. Hi, you there!" (addressing a groom), "bring us that Inverness off the coach, will you?"

The man touched his hat and fetched the cape. Beelzebub handed it to the old parson, who slipped into it with alacrity and evident relief. When he had turned up the collar, his clerical dress was effectually concealed; all the more so as the Inverness was of a loudish check and distinctly sporting pattern.

"There is still my hat," said the old parson. "I'm afraid it is very obviously clerical. But if there was a spare cloth cap about now——"

Fortunately there was a spare cloth cap, which was duly produced and placed at the clergyman's disposal. He quickly put it on his venerable head, bundling up his wide-awake and stuffing it into an inside pocket. The cap, also, was of a sporting pattern. And altogether the parson's transformation was complete.

By this time luncheon was ready, and they sat down to it. A very good luncheon it was, too. The champagne particularly was unexceptionable—Bollinger '84. The old parson's eye twinkled when he caught sight of the label on the bottles. Like many another righteous and God-fearing minister, he liked his liquor good. He had evidently now quite made up his mind to put the best possible face on his position; and you may be sure that a glass or two of the Bollinger did not serve to render it any the more intolerable to him.

"Gentlemen," he said to the Devils, as the waiter filled his glass for the fourth time, his face beginning to beam with Christian forgiveness and tolerance, "I was hasty in denouncing you quite so severely as I did."

"Of no consequence."

"Not at all."

"Don't mention it, old boy."

"I was hasty, I say," repeated the old clergyman. "I should have made more allowance for the levity of youth. And while I cannot, of course, do otherwise than condemn your behaviour, I am disposed to take a less uncompromising view than I did at first. At any rate, you have behaved as gentlemen in doing your best to save me from the most unpleasant consequences of this, your practical joke at my expense, and for that, my friends, I return you my hearty thanks."

"Quite welcome."

"Glad to oblige you, Jerry."

Then Beelzebub arose. He had already imbibed quite as much Bollinger as was good for him, and his speech was not free from a suspicion of thickness.

"Mr. the Prophet Jeremiah," he said, "and fellow Devils. I can't but regard this as a most 'spicious 'casion. Seems to me must be beginning of the m'lennium, when the forces of light and darkness meet together like this at the conviv'l board—when the lion and the lamb, to quote Scripture, thus lie down together. Gen'l'men—Devils, I should say—they talk of the milk of human kindness. Milk of human kindness. There's no milk of human kindness like this" (he held up his brimming glass of Bollinger as he spoke)—"and I propose, devlemen—genvils, I mean—that we all drink his Rev'rence's health in it. Gen'l'men, the Prophet Jeremiah's health in Bollinger's patent milk of human kindness, and no heeltaps."

Hear, hear! and loud shouts of applause. Then, "The Prophet Jeremiah," "The Prophet Jeremiah," and so on, all round, followed by the complete emptying of all glasses.

That ceremony concluded, one of the Devils—a waggish spirit—shouted:—

"Let's drink our own health."

The suggestion met with uproarious approval. And another round of glasses was emptied, with musical honours: "For we are jolly good devils, &c." Jeremiah looked on, positively beaming. Perchance, he too, like the others, was thoroughly permeated with Bollinger's patent milk of human kindness.

A hilarious lunch was followed by a hilarious afternoon. When the time came for the return journey, every one of the Devils was obviously fuddled; Beelzebub, indeed, so much so that he insisted on taking off his boots and holding the reins between his toes. Failing thereat, he fell, in a limp heap, off the box, and was finally picked up and deposited on the back seat between Jeremiah and a more or less sober groom. The other groom took Beelzebub's place and the ribbons, and off they went.

The coach pulled up at the "George" at Morden to set his Reverence down. When he bade the Devils good-bye, several of them insisted on embracing him, and Beelzebub, falling on his neck in an ecstasy of drunken fondness, exclaimed:

"G'd bless yer, Jerry! G'd dam yer, mean. Yer best pars'n ever met."

* * * * *

In the course of the evening, when the effects of Bollinger's patent milk had partially worn off, the Devils, first one and then another, made some unpleasant discoveries. Seven out of the ten had been entirely relieved of their cash. There were also three gold watches and two diamond pins missing. Nor were they left in any doubt as to the humiliating truth about the loss of these articles. The thief was clearly a man of waggish temperament; for, in the place of the stolen property, in each pocket from which it had been abstracted, he had deposited a fragment of pasteboard bearing this inscription: "With the Prophet Jeremiah's compliments and thanks!"

There is a further little fact to record, which may help to explain the working of the plant. One of the grooms—a new hand, the man who had suggested taking Jeremiah to Epsom—did not return to his work on the following day, and was never seen by any of the Derby Devils again.

MORTLOCK'S (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "MORTLOCK'S" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

ART NOTES.

INTERNATIONAL ART AT KNIGHTSBRIDGE.

I TAKE off my hat to Miss Cecilia Beaux. So little do I know of this clever lady that I am not at all sure that I am correct in writing of her as "Miss." Even her nationality is unknown to me. Possibly she is not a Miss but a Matron. She may be Mademoiselle or Madame, Signora or Senorita; French, American, Italian, Spanish, who can say? But this I do know, that she is a remarkably fine portrait-painter. If the Exhibition of International Art at Knightsbridge does nothing else, it has served to introduce to us a new artist of exceptional cleverness. The three pictures exhibited by Miss Beaux are all to be found in the North Gallery, and the finest of them is undoubtedly "Sita and Sarita" (No. 60). Sarita, I take it, is the black cat on the shoulder of the lady whose portrait is presented with such masterful force. The picture should be closely studied, for it is full of excellent work. Note, for instance, the way the blue and white cushion is painted, and the effective manner in which the face of the sitter is put upon the canvas. It was indeed a pleasant surprise to come upon this admirable portrait amongst the many nebulous conceptions and morbid experiments that are to be seen in other parts of the show. Two other portraits by Miss Beaux (Nos. 28 and 32) serve to accentuate one's hope that much more of her work will now be seen in London.

And now, what of the Exhibition generally? To begin with, I have nothing but praise for the way in which it has been arranged. Prince's Rink makes an admirable picture gallery. It has been divided into three spacious rooms, the walls of which have been covered with rough green canvas, whilst the light that comes from the glazed roof filters, so to speak, through the white sheets that are stretched overhead. The Exhibition itself recalls the earlier exhibitions of the New English Art Club. It contains some very good pictures and some very bad ones; but inasmuch as it is representative of all the curious by-ways into which modern art has strayed, it is decidedly interesting. There are, of course, those who will not have it at any price. I heard it spoken of as a pictorial Pandemonium, whilst one censor of strong Academic instincts described it as a Galerie Wiertz tempered by Whistler. It is certainly a curious collection of artistic jetsam and flotsam which has been brought together; and pleasing originality is, unfortunately, not so common as eccentric new-fangledness. But, if variety be charming, there is charm indeed at Prince's Rink, where, amongst the wildest efforts of the "Instinctives" and the "Primitives," the "Symbolists" and the "Hallucinatists," the "Malignants" and the "Mystics," the "Decadents" and the "Degenerates," one comes upon lucid intervals in the shape of delightfully suave and ingratiating canvases from the brushes of such artists as Mr. Robert Brough and Mr. Fritz Thaulow, Mr. George Henry and Mr. Bertram Priestman, Mr. Sauter and Mr. Furse. But if you want to sound at once the depths of the eclecticism of the Executive Council, you need only pass from an inspection of the cryptic extravagances of Van Toorop (puzzles in paint as bewildering as the prose problems of Mallarmé or the poetic enigmas of Verlaine) to such a landscape as the "Hawthorn in Brecknockshire" (No. 80), of Mr. H. W. B. Davis, the Royal Academician. The catholicity of the Council which includes the works of both these artists in the same exhibition is unquestionable.

It is to be wished, however, that the Executive Members of the Council, on whose shoulders the burden of selection rested, had resolutely excluded two pastels by M. F. Toulouse de Lautrec, which are in the North Room. The real truth about the relations of art with morality lies probably about halfway between the almost Puritanic principles just laid down by M. Brunetière in his lecture, and the baneful heresies of the "Art for Art" doctrine which has been so sedulously preached of late in certain quarters. But one need be no purist to apply the term disgusting to M. de Lautrec's vulgar scenes from Parisian low life, which are coarse blots on an exhibition which, with all its faults, must be regarded as entertaining and stimulating, and which is certainly well worth a visit from those who are interested in what I may call the development of artistic modernity.

Messrs. Cassell & Co.'s Black and White Exhibition has now attained to the position of a hardy annual. This is the sixteenth year it has been held, and it will be open to the public daily, until June 7, at the Cutlers' Hall, in Warwick-lane, Newgate-street. The drawings exhibited are by well-known artists in black and white, and a number from the pencil of the late Fred Barnard, make the present show exceptionally interesting. The Hall will not be open on Whit Monday.

MUSIC.

A HALF-GUINEA "DIPLOMA" EXAMINER.

OWING, no doubt, to the fact that the demand has created a less limited supply, the fees of examiners for Limited Liability "Diplomas" seem to have fallen almost to starvation point. Formerly your examiner wanted a share of the "swag," in the form of a pecuniary interest in the company. Now, however, although an enterprising tradesman (the so-called "College of Pianists" was started by a plumber) may run the show, and sell his "Associateships" and "Fellowships" at various rates to suit all purses; yet the pay of the qualified examiner seems to have dropped to ten and sixpence. Last week I dealt with a discussion in progress in Derbyshire in regard to the "College of Violinists, Limited," and their "diplomas." I promised then shortly to say something else concerning the examinations, and I think I can now fulfil that engagement. In his communication to the High Peak News, dated May 2, Mr. Foucher, who combines the duties of secretary, and practical "boss" of the "College of Violinists, Limited," with the sale of music and "old violins from £3 3s. upwards," declared that his examinations were not, "like many others, whether chartered or limited liability companies, held behind closed doors, not even the teachers of the candidates being allowed to be present, possibly owing to a too prominent display of the utter want of capacity and knowledge of some of their examiners as regards the instruments for which they examine." Capacity or not, the "College" of Violinists, with its cash paid-up capital of £17 10s., at any rate does not appear to be too reckless with its money, for the remuneration of its examiners. The following letter, written to an eminent English violinist, speaks for itself:—

College of Violinists, Limited,
34, Mortimer-street, Cavendish-square,
London, W., April 19, 1898.

DEAR SIR,—It has been decided to hold the London examinations of this college at this address on June 20, 21, 22, and 23, beginning at 10 a.m each day. I should be glad to know whether we could have your services for one hour from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m. on June 23. Should you be able to do so, I should esteem it a great favour if you would let me know at your earliest convenience.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, G. FOUCHER,
Hon. Sec.

P.S.—The fee placed at my disposal by the Board is half-a-guinea for the hour.

I need hardly say that the violinist in question, whose name will, of course, be known to Mr. Foucher, as that gentleman evidently does not throw about indiscriminately half-guineas out of the £17 10s. cash paid-up capital of his "Board," refused this tempting offer. Indeed, if I may judge from the very lengthy, and I am bound to say extremely indignant, letter he has sent me, his refusal was not prompted solely by pecuniary considerations. He writes, inter alia:—

The one exam. I did attend the previous season taught me quite sufficient of their methods to satisfy me that it was no place for a conscientious musician to have his name mixed up with. There were others present besides myself who looked on at the farcical proceedings

The English violinist in question certainly does not speak too severely of this nonsense. It is pretty clear that the "College," Limited, chiefly wanted his name. To offer to engage an eminent man for one hour out of a four days' examination, is an expedient which will be perfectly obvious to the public at large. Indeed, it seems that the "College" did not even wait for a reply, but in their haste advertised in their official organ: "The following gentlemen have been asked to attend the London examinations," the name of the violinist, who has definitely refused being included—with that of Wilhelmj and various others—in the list. This sort of thing is quite on a par with the announcement in the current official "Prospectus and Syllabus of Examinations" of this "College," in which a large number of distinguished names are lumped together as "Patrons, Presidents, Vice-presidents, and Examiners since the Foundation of the College," although several of these gentlemen are dead, or have withdrawn from the speculation.

There is, I think, no need to enter again at length into the proceedings of this "College of Violinists" and its examinations. On June 10 last and on other dates I gave a pretty full account of how the "College" was worked. On August 26 again, when the "College" appealed to the public for debenture subscriptions, I again dealt with the matter at length. At that date it will be recollected although eighty-seven shares of £5 each had been allotted, yet the "total amount of calls received, including payments on application and allotment," was only £17 10s. Of these paid-up shares Mr. Foucher, the violin dealer (who also is hon. sec.), held one, besides sixty "agreed to be considered" as paid, while one more was held by his wife, one each by his two unmarried daughters, and one by his son, a "law student." A gentleman, formerly described as a "commercial clerk" but now a "journalist," held another, and Mr. Polonaski, editor of a monthly violin paper, another, while the balance of the shares "agreed to be considered as paid," fell to him and to Mr. Lavender, a newspaper manager. At that time Mr. Foucher, the honorary secretary, in a circular letter appealed for debentures, "£1 deposit upon application and the balance by four half-yearly instalments," adding in the type-written circular then issued to the public:—

> As soon as may be deemed advisable after the subscription to these debentures has been completed, we shall ask the debenture holders to sign a petition to the Queen's Privy Council praying for a Royal Charter.

I then ventured to express the opinion that however ardently Mr., Mrs., the Misses, and Master Foucher might "pray" to that hard-hearted body, the "Queen's Privy Council," yet the College of Violinists, Limited, had no more chance of obtaining a Royal Charter than I had of becoming Pope of Rome. My prophecy has been fulfilled, although in this matter the rôle of prophet was, I freely confess, not a particularly risky one.

I have no doubt that the College of Violinists is neither better nor worse than many other limited liability speculations of its sort. As I have frequently pointed out, there is, unfortunately, no law against the conferring of diplomas (with or without examination) by any limited liability institution or individual. The crossing sweeper round the corner, or the potman at the nearest public-house, has precisely the same rights as, and no more than, Mr. Foucher and his "College." It is true that Mr. Foucher's limited liability company charges a guinea to "graduates," one and a half to two guineas for the privilege of writing "A.C.V." after the name, and two to two and a half guineas to licentiates ("L.C.V."), while full-blown "Fellows" (F.C.V.) pay two and a half to three and a half guineas for the honour thus conferred upon them. It is possible that the diploma "F.C.S." or "Friend of the Crossing Sweeper" might come a little cheaper. The two are, at any rate, equally legal.

About a year ago in TRUTH there was an interesting correspondence respecting the value of violins, which stood so much higher in the catalogues of experts than at sales in the auction-room. We occasionally still hear of a violin being worth—at any rate, in the estimation of its possessor—£3,000 or £4,000. From this to 2s. 9d. is a big drop. Nevertheless, Mr. Lowenthal, the well-known manufacturer of Berlin, claims to make playable instruments at this latter figure, and rejoices in the fact that he does so. Indeed, recently in Berlin he defended a law case in which the artistic value of these implements of music was called into question, and he subpœnaed Dr. Joachim as a witness. That eminent performer could not conscientiously I fear pretend that he did not prefer a "Strad," but, at any rate, he proved conclusively to the satisfaction of the Berlin judges that the two-and-ninepenny article was a playable instrument, for, to the immense delight of the Court, he performed upon one of the fiddles the well-known "Deutschland, Deutschland, über Alles." Mr. Lowenthal admits that 2s. 9d. is the trade price for these violins, the bows being 9d. extra, making 3s. 6d. for the lot. But personally I should like to know what the public are expected to pay for them. He, indeed, declares, and is proud of the fact, that he has sold "hundreds of dozens of this class of violin in England and the United States," and he claims that he has "never received any complaints about them from his numerous customers." He does not pretend that they are suitable for Monday Popular Concerts, but he avers that they are quite up to the mark for amateurs and pupils. It would be interesting to know how these things are distributed to the general public. We constantly read in the newspapers, advertisements of violins and bows to be sent "on appro." at 15s. and upwards, and it is shrewdly suspected that some of them are the trade fiddles of Berlin. After all, perhaps, it is only a matter of taste. Any violin must inevitably be an ear-torture in the hands of the amateur, whether the fiddle be valued at two-and-ninepence or a couple of thousand pounds.

They are still hovering about Wagner at the Opera. Subscribers may grumble, and perhaps not altogether without reason, but while the management have a succession of full (or fairly full) houses, no serious complaints are likely. The representations of "Tannhäuser" on Friday, and "Die Meistersinger" on Saturday were both well attended, although these, with "Die Walküre" on Monday and "Tristan" on Tuesday, and with three whole cycles of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" to come, form a pretty good dose. The French version of "Tannhäuser" was employed on Friday, and Madame Pacary, who hitherto played Venus, now sang Elizabeth, the more showy character falling to Mdlle. Ganne, a tremulous but pretty French lady. M. Jean de Reszke appeared, of course, in "Die Meistersinger" and "Tristan," and also on the previous Wednesday in "Lohengrin." In the last he was quite the star of the cast, for Mme. Nordica, who sang Elsa, was fatigued of voice, although she acted the character with great dramatic force. In "Die Meistersinger" M. Edouard de Reszke made his reappearance as Hans Sachs. He sings the music better than M. Lassalle, although he makes the good-natured mastersinger a very dull dog. It, indeed, seems a pity that the rôle is not yet to be undertaken by Herr Van Rooy, whose voice it ought to suit splendidly.

M. Jean de Reszke, by the way, has now officially stated his intention of singing the part of Parsifal at Bayreuth next summer. Whether this will interfere with his engagement at Covent Garden remains, of course, to be seen. It probably will depend upon whether the war will put a stop to the proposed American season, and whether the Opera Syndicate will next summer direct the house. The appearance of the De Reszkes at Bayreuth will, of course, draw crowds to the Bavarian Mountain Theatre.

Advertisements are now appearing in the daily papers asking ten to twelve guineas for stalls for the first cycle of "Der Ring des Nibelungen." If this be an expedient it is not a new one, for as Mr. Mapleson has candidly explained, he adopted it originally in order to popularise "Faust." But there is reason to believe the present advertisements are genuine, and, if so, this, at any rate, shows that there is a big demand for seats, so that the "dashed tomfoolery every night from four to twelve" is not without its commercial side.

Lord Dysart, by the way, will now have his wish. For the "Ring" cycles the stipulation as to gentlemen's evening dress will not be insisted upon. Accordingly, Lord Dysart can come clad either in knee breeches and frilled shirt front, or in the Sunday clothes of a bricklayer, as he chooses. Indeed, it is pretended that it is mainly owing to the extraordinary costumes that are likely to be seen that the theatre is to be plunged into the blackest of possible darkness. Mme. Wagner is humorously credited with the saying that the reason why Richard Wagner insisted upon the darkening of the Bayreuth Theatre was his artistic horror of the extraordinary parti-coloured costumes adopted by the average English and American lady enthusiast on a Continental tour. The Elect, even now, dress no better.

There must always be a good deal of make-believe in operatic matters. But why the Herald in summoning Elsa should have appealed to the upper row of boxes instead of the path from which it was known that Mme. Nordica would arrive is a mystery. Also eminent tenors have a tendency to fleshiness, accumulating as their days are prolonged in the land. M. Jean de Reszke is not physically so robust as some of his contemporaries, but a time will certainly arrive when the S.P.C.A. should insist upon a team, instead of a single swan, to draw him in the magic boat along the waters of the Scheldt. Recently, I believe, in Germany a manager with realism on the brain insisted upon the employment of a real swan, which flapped about a mimic pond, constructed at the back of the stage. All went well until the appearance of Obesity in silver armour (in the person of a well-known German tenor as Lohengrin) frightened the bird, which pecked so viciously at the understandings of the gallant knight, that he fled incontinently from the scene. In "Tannhäuser" again M. Van Dyck on emerging from the Venusberg at Covent Garden, and shuddering at the chorus of the pilgrims, deliberately turned his back upon the crucifix, and spoke his touching prayer to the musical critics seated in the first row of stalls: while afterwards, Mme. Pacary as Elizabeth, addressed her greeting to the Halls of Song to the same noble army. Both artists, possibly, had in view a sense of favours to come.

I am asked to direct attention to the afternoon concert announced at Bridgewater House, on Thursday, by the Hon. Margaret Henniker. The bénéficiare, who is, I believe, a daughter of the Governor of the Isle of Man, is one of the very few lady members of titled families who have entered the profession under their own name.

Concerning the "Bogus Registered Teachers," about whom I published an article last week, I have received several letters which I hope to deal with next week.

The concerts of the week must again be dismissed briefly. They were upwards of sixty, although at this time of the year recital givers and others can hardly expect adequate notice. There was, however, on Saturday a big audience for M. Lamoureux, who returned from Paris to direct an extra concert with a strong programme. On the other hand, on Monday, at St. James's Hall, owing, doubtless, to the fact that this year Wagner is almost banished from the enterprise, the stalls were by no means well attended at the first of the Richter Concerts, when the programme included the "Meistersinger" and "Egmont" overtures, Brahms' first symphony, and that curious piece of "programme" music "Scheherazade," by Rimsky Korsakoff, which Mr. Wood has already conducted at the Promenade Concerts. M. Slivinski has reappeared, his programme, however, being a familiar one. Mme. Carreño had, on Monday, a large attendance at St. James's Hall for an interesting concert, and Mr. Otto Hegner has likewise given a recital, whilst amongst the new comers have been Miss Agnes Miles, a young American pupil of Moszkowski, who needs some further study; the Cerasoli's, who once came out as "prodigies," but who are now almost finished pianists, Miss Irene Fletcher, a promising young Australian pupil of Miss Fanny Davies and Miss Maud MacCarthy, a young violinist still in her teens, but who, since she was exploited as a prodigy, has vastly improved both in tone and technique.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—"The Cream of Old Irish Whiskies." Kinahan's LL Whisky. Gold Medal Paris Exhibition, 1878. Kinahan's Glenisle Whisky. The Finest Scotch Whisky sold.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM.—I remember years ago being struck by the suggestiveness of a disclosure made in the papers of the passion of Marwood, the hangman, for flowers. All the time he could spare from the painless extinction of man he gave to the cultivation of flowers. Could you have suspected the co-existence of two such consuming passions? And does not their co-existence suggest to you that novelists by, as Tennyson says, "mimicking this raw fool, the world, in painting us all either black or white," are false to nature? In truth we are all different shades of grey, and the novelist who recognises this as Mr. E. W. Hornung recognises it in his fine story, "Young Blood" (1), deserves no little praise. Indeed, his portrait of Gordon Lowndes is nothing less than masterly. It is the best thing of its kind that I have come upon for many a day. Lowndes is a company-promoting rascal of an altogether lovable sort. Jack Falstaff himself was not more genial, jovial, alert, unscrupulous, and natural. But the plot of the book is quite as interesting as its characters, and I can warmly recommend it to you as one of the cleverest novels of the season. Exceedingly clever also is Mr. William O'Brien's historical novel, "A Queen of Men" (2), a story of the wars of Graun'ya Uaile, and of the loves of Ca'hal and the Lady Nu'ala. If Mr. O'Brien's incidents, personages, and speeches are all rather melodramatically coloured, at least he atones for the liberties he takes with history and with English by a singularly stirring romance of love and war, most eloquently told. From the Homeric figure of Graun'ya Uaile to a mild nineteenth century Irish heroine, "Miss Erin" (3) is a wide leap over centuries, and from sublime heights to a modern and a lowly level; but it is the same old battle that is fought between wrong and robbery and loyalty and righteousness. Miss Erin is a young lady who is moved by a sense of pity and a horror of injustice to take with passionate enthusiasm the tenants' side in a desperate Irish agrarian quarrel, and she sacrifices her love for her sweetheart to her love for her country. When, however, her lover is badly beaten in his political battle, the same divine pity which had estranged her from him draws her towards him, and they agree to differ in politics, but to be one in all else. "Miss Erin" is as pretty and Irish as its title, and all its scenes, incidents, and characters are so life-like as to seem drawn direct from life. The author of "Bijli the Dancer" (4) is far, indeed, from being as much at home in India as "M. E. Francis" is in Ireland; and, indeed, and in a word, this Indian novel is as silly and dull as "Miss Erin" is bright and interesting. Having with difficulty got through "Bijli the Dancer," I renounced novels with disgust and turned to my favourite reading, biography, and to a fair specimen of the species, Sir Herbert Maxwell's memoir of "Sir Charles Murray, K.C.B." (5). It covers, or, rather, skims, an immense field, beginning with letters (not, by the way, very clever, witty, amusing, or interesting), of Sam Rogers written in 1807. Here is an amusing and suggestive story from it:—

Emile de Girardin, having written a story in the style of Rousseau which failed, was trudging off to the banks of the Seine, when he met Latou-Mezerai. "Où allez-vous?" asked

(1) "Young Blood." By E. W. Hornung. (London: Cassell & Co., Limited. Price 6s.)
(2) "A Queen of Men." By William O'Brien. (London: T. Fisher Unwin. Price 6s.).
(3) "Miss Erin." By M. E. Francis. (Mrs. Francis Blundell.) (London: Methuen & Co. Price 6s.)
(4) "Bijli the Dancer." By James Blythe Patton. (London: Methuen & Co. Price 6s.)
(5) "The Honourable Sir Charles Murray, K.C.B." A Memoir. By the Right Honourable Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P., F.R.S. (London: William Blackwood & Sons. Price 18s.)
(6) "A Mingled Yarn." The Autobiography of Edward Spencer Mott. (Nathaniel Gubbins.) (London: Edward Arnold. Price 12s. 6d.).

Mezerai. "Me noyer," replied Emile. "Sérieusement?" "Oui; très sérieusement." "Tiens! Nous allons fonder un journal." "Avec quoi?" asked Girardin. "Avec rien." "Sans le sou?" "Oui, sans le sou." "Qui l'écrira?" "Personne et tout le monde." "Et comment s'appellera-t-il?" "Le Voleur!" And thus with sharp wits and scissors did this audacious couple hunt up and cut out extracts from recent publications of every kind, and republish them in a cheap journal bearing the above name, which became a great success, and Girardin, following it up by others of a better stamp, became the greatest journalist in France.

Even more interesting is the bright Bohemian autobiography of Mr. Edward Spencer Mott ("Nathaniel Gubbins"), "A Mingled Yarn" (6), which is far from justifying its author's severe criticism:—"The story of a wasted life, of neglected duties and opportunities, of dissipation, self-indulgence, sordid ambition, and unmitigated folly." Anyway, it is most interesting reading, and gives you glimpses of many strange by-ways of life, and of all sorts and conditions of men. Of course, the sporting scenes and stories are the best, but all are good, and are told with admirable gusto.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—I have often wondered, as you know, whether continuous rain is more endurable in town or country. I speculated on the same subject at intervals during the two consecutive days' rain that we had last week, and came to the conclusion that it must be better in the country, because it could not possibly be worse than it is in town. Is this logic, or sophistry? I wish I knew. Do you ever come to a turning in your thoughts where you long for a sign-post to show you where you are? It is frequently my case. Perhaps, if I had had a man's education, I should never be at a loss in this way.

And yet, when one talks to some men, one feels that even their education occasionally leaves something lacking. Perhaps we grow more critical as we grow older; but however that may be, I often find myself wondering if men are really superior to women in intellect. I suppose they must be; and the reason they do not appear so is that they carefully veil away their superiority, lest they might hurt our feelings by displaying it. It is exquisitely courteous, if so. But we shall never be raised very much towards their heights if they always talk down to us, shall we?

Take, for instance, the men one meets at dinner parties. After the first few words they say, one gives them up, as a rule, as perfectly hopeless, knowing that it is vain to expect anything sensible from them. If they are amusing, one is thankful for small mercies, and laughs through the courses contentedly enough. If a solemn sort of idiot happen to take one into dinner, then there is an hour or so of stoical endurance to be gone through, for the very solemn man is nearly sure to be a conceited man. Have you not found it so? Now and then, however, one comes across a man who is neither solemn, conceited, nor silly, and half an hour of his company restores one's faith in male humanity. But how often does that experience occur? I fear that men are greatly over-rated. A terrible confession, is it not? And women are so foolish! That is what they say of us, and it is often true enough.

Have you seen the new willow-pattern blouse? It would be quite sweet if it did not suggest a dish so very strongly. The tone of blue in some of them is most becoming. There are some really delicious blues about. One of my nicest friends came to see me the other day in a cornflower hat wreathed round with tulle in two tones of the colour, and when I complimented her upon her appearance, she breathed the enigmatical words:—"Three and elevenpence three-farthings." I will not tell you who she is, lest she should lose your respect for ever for wearing anything so cheap, for the sum named was the price she gave for the hat! It was a lovely blue and she had trimmed it with a few yards of tulle in two tones of the same key of blue. It was a most successful achievement, I assure you, and one might do worse than millinerise at home if one had the right sort of fingers. But home millinery is generally a wretched business, loudly advertising itself to be non-professional. I remember a Royal Duchess of the German persuasion once wearing a palpably home-made bonnet at a wedding. It was not so successful as my friend's hat!

By the way, dear, the prettiest hat I have seen for a long time was one I immediately christened "The basket of roses." I saw it at Hancock & James', 42, New Bond-street, and found that its price is only a guinea, the firm making a specialty of a hat at that humble price. It was of a round shape, in rose-pink satin straw, the crown surrounded by a tiny rampart consisting of a single row of straw, thus forming a flat basket for roses shaded pink and damask. The brim had two rows of the straw turned up, and here again the roses lay, nestling around the crown. The rest of the trimming consisted of two great loops of glacé silk in the tints of the roses, standing erect, and a couple of jetted black quills. A few folds of the silk formed a cache-peigne. The passion for grey still continues. It is a sweet colour. We saw a hat made of grey satin straw, with a high trimming surrounding the crown, and consisting of drawn chiffon in a slightly paler tone of grey. Along the brim lay soft cloudy folds of white tulle, mixed with grey. These were continued in a sort of ascent at the left side, meeting two lovely ostrich feathers shaded from white to silver grey. The ends of the feathers fell over the brim at the back. Very up-to date was a hat made of mauve chip and trimmed with large loop bows of glacé silk shot pale blue and periwinkle. Long garlands of forget-me-nots, exquisitely imitated from nature, with their foliage, lay over these loops, and in front there was a little bunch of forget-me-nots and heartsease, the tiny little pansy that grows in cottage gardens.

We were also shown a sweet gown of the summery kind that no one has yet had a chance to wear. It will come in delightfully soon, when a little sunshine with real warmth shines out. The material is ganze, in a wistaria tone of mauve, crossed by checks of satin in the same shade. The skirt was trimmed with ruchings of satin ribbon, exactly matched to the tint of the ganze, carried up from the front in the orthodox fashion. The bodice was very sweet, being all soft in the front, but not floppy, in chiffon of the mauve colour relieved with bands of creamy guipure. The collar and epaulettes were edged with similar ruches, and the sleeves were finished to match them. There was a high collar of the guipure arranged in folds edged with chiffon, and at the waist was a cream-coloured ribbon tied in a bow at the back, and matching the guipure in tone. They had, too, the prettiest blouse I have ever seen, and that is saying something, for I have seen many very covetable ones. It was in pink glacé silk, veiled with black net sewn with silver, steel, and jet, in a light and graceful design. A short basque of the same ended at the sides, leaving the front plain, with a black satin ribbon for waistband. The collar was black lace edged with pink chiffon, lightly ruched, and there was a stand-up ruffle of the chiffon at the back. The whole front consisted of ruffles of the pink chiffon. You cannot think how pretty it was, so soft and full without being loose. The sleeves were veiled with black lace, striped with black satin ribbon bordered with black chiffon. Part of the charm of this blouse lay in the fact of the underlying pink not being choked over with too much black. We admired, too, a bright coral surah blouse with such quantities of work in it, Amy dear! The whole body of it was tucked perpendicularly in groups of five a-piece, the groups being separated by an open lace stitch, also wrought by hand. A double frill of the surah trimmed the centre of the front, and the belt consisted of nine tucks, horizontal this time. The sleeves were tucked at regular intervals the whole way down, and the neck was finished with folds of surah and a little upstanding frill of the same.

WALKING, CYCLING, SHOOTING, YACHTING DRESSES, &c.—JOHN BUSVINE & Co., Tailors and Riding Habit Makers to H.R.H. the Princess of Wales, the Princess Victoria of Wales, the Duchess of Fife, the Princess Charles of Denmark, the Marchioness of Lorne, the Princess Henry of Battenberg, the Duchess of Connaught, the Duchess of Albany, the Empress of Austria, the Empress of Russia, the Empress of Germany, the Princess Henry of Prussia, the Princess Victoria of Prussia, the Infanta Eulalia of Spain, the Countess de Paris, the Duchess d'Aosta.—4, Brook-street, London, W.

GOWNS FOR ASCOT.—Messrs. REDFERN are now making a Special Show of Ascot Gowns in their new Conduit-street Salon. The Exhibition contains a number of exquisite Toilettes, to which a visit of inspection is cordially invited.—REDFERN, 26, Conduit-street, W.

Blouses, you see, have by no means disappeared from the scene. They are much too useful to be dispensed with, and so long as the fashion of coat and skirt endures, so long will blouses be worn. And the fashion of coat and skirt will last as long as cycling attracts the crowd.

Are you still philanthropic, now that having married a clergyman makes it a part of the business of your life? It makes such a difference in your liking for things when they are part of one's duty. One likes them still, of course, but it is the liking of married life, not the glamour of early love. You are probably still philanthropic, but with a difference. Clergymen reduce philanthropy to a science, and their wives soon learn that it is a mistake, as Talleyrand taught, to show too much zeal. There is a philanthropic exhibition being held now, and for an indefinite period, at Liberty's East India House, Regent-street, consisting of the embroideries of Greek refugees at the Thessalian School of Embroidery established in Athens by Lady Egerton, wife of her Majesty's Minister at the British Legation at Athens. This lady was deeply touched by the distress caused by the war between Greece and Turkey, and, finding that the women and girls had some skill in needlework, she adopted the most practical means of getting them employment. The results have already been excellent, over 200 of the refugees having been provided with permanent employment. The embroideries are done on coarse, handwoven linen, and they are practically everlasting, so conscientious is the stitchery. The colours are well chosen, and are, in some instances, of great beauty. The piece bought by the Queen of Greece is all soft, pale old rose, and another piece is worked in the most delightfully dreamy tones of soft sea-blue. The articles to which the work is adapted consist of chair and cushion covers, sideboard cloths, boot-bags, table-centres, mantel-borders, sofa-covers, and cases for music and large books.

We have been laughing over some brightly-written passages in Fashion, the new magazine edited by "Beau Brummel, jun.," for the edification of men on the subject of their dress. I see that in one article complaint is made that men "have in these days so few garments to choose from." Save the mark! When have they ever had so many in the whole history of the world? A capital portrait of Mr. Maurice Farkoa illustrates the Actors' page, and I am sending you the magazine that you may read about Sir Henry Irving as a tailor! By this it is only meant that he shows his individuality and his originality in the coats he wears in his different parts. I believe the same could be said of his dramatic partner, Miss Ellen Terry.

The new American hat is described as a pork-pie felt with a brim round it like a roof-gutter! This is strong language, is it not? And so is that in connection with the trimming. Listen! "Stuck in the band in front is a thing that looks like, and might in an emergency be used as, a shaving brush." To crown the whole, the colour is green, and the Americans have christened it "The Prince of Wales!"

Richard has just read out an account of the Coaching Club's annual meeting. This is what it says, being headed "A Melancholy Meet":—

A row of elderly and young persons lined the sides of the road to see twenty-eight coaches file solemnly on. It was a damp, dull affair, attended by a damp, dull crowd.

Maud, when she heard this read, declared her belief that the middle-aged people had wisely stayed at home, knowing that "restored" complexions would not stand the weather.

If you want a lovely yellowish-green palm that looks like sunshine on a dull day, get the Latania aurea. We saw it at Goodyear's, and dearly loved it all in a moment. By the way, the dinner and dance given at the Savoy last Wednesday quite dazzled London with their brilliancy. Each of the tables at the dinner was done in a different colour. The table at which the Duchess of Devonshire and Lord Rosebery sat was decorated with red roses. Two more Duchesses, their Graces (Lily) of Marlborough and Manchester, sat at the pink table, all roses and sweet peas; and at the green table, orchids and foliage, sat the Duchess of Leeds, Lady Hartopp, and Lord Granby. I enclose the menu.

Christabel writes from Paris:—

The Chantilly races are now going on, and some very pretty dresses have been made for the occasion. A rich American wore a back and white striped silk, the skirt trimmed with flounces of black silk muslin; the bodice fastened quite under the arm, and was finished in front with a jabot of black silk muslin, veiled with white lace, and a large white satin bow on one side. With this was worn a small black lace hat or toque, with white aigrette and just a few shaded roses at the side.

A charming gown worn by a young girl was of sky-blue alpaca, with three graduated bands of Irish guipure round the skirt, each band finished with a narrow beading of crosscut taffetas. The bodice was covered with guipure, with bands of alpaca going round it, each edged with similar silk frilling. The hat was white straw with blue feathers.

Countesse de Divonne wore a black taffetas embroidered with small white spots, on the bodice a little silver embroidery edging galons put on crossways.

Mlle. Sorel, the well-known actress, who is always well-dressed, wore a pale beige cloth, made with a boléro bodice and double Louis XVI. pelerine. On the skirt were small flounces, and the waistband was white leather with gold buckle and monogram. Her black tulle hat was veiled with white tulle and black feathers.

A most lovely ball-dress has just been made up by a large firm in the Rue de la Paix; it is of white moire hand-painted with pink and yellow roses and dark and pale green foliage. The design is exquisite, consequently the skirt is quite plain, there being no frilling or nonsense to hide the painting. The bodice is of pink silk muslin plissé cut open heart-shaped, with a transparent yoke of fine Irish guipure. Similar lace is used as epaulettes over the short sleeves. At the side of the bodice are sprays of sweet little pompon roses, with a jabot of lace falling from them, the whole finished with a pink satin sash and long ends, with roses on the side.

A dinner dress for a middle-aged lady was of green velvet broché with flowers in a paler shade. The front of the skirt had a half long tablier of Irish guipure, and the high bodice, slightly open in front, was filled in with Irish guipure; the long sleeves had points of similar lace going up the arm.

From this you will see that Irish lace is very much to the fore here at this moment. Very pretty cravats are much worn, either in plain tulle or spotted with muslin, the latter edged with two frills bordered with black velvet or a very narrow coloured ribbon. These are tied in immense bows, and are very becoming, but very fragile.

After chiffons plats for you. These "Cheese Balls" make a nice savoury. They must be quite small:—

Mix 2 oz. of butter with 2 oz. of bread crumbs and 2 oz. of grated cheese; add a pinch of cayenne pepper, a little salt, and the yolks of 2 eggs. Form the mixture into balls, dip them in egg and bread crumbs, and fry them in hot lard. Arrange the balls in a pyramid, sprinkle them with grated Parmesan cheese, and pour round them some good tomato sauce, to which is added a spoonful of grated cheese.

"Fruit Soups" are not very popular in England, but Invalid Corsets.—Ladies in search of that gentle support, so essential at this period, should have a Surgical Corset Belt shaped by the experts, Mesdames Sykes, Josephine, & Co., The Celebrated Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, Oxford-circus, London, W.

"Madge's advice—The "most up-to-date shop" for original Specialities in Shirts, Veils, Gloves, &c., is Lee, 100, Wigmore-st.

once the taste for them is acquired, they make an agreeable change in our menu. I should like you to try "Strawberry Soup":—

Take 2 punnets of ripe strawberries, pick about 2 dozen of the best into a basin, sprinkle them with pounded sugar, and place them aside. Mash and boil the remainder, and while they are warm add 3 or 4 rusks, sugar to taste, and a pint of light wine. Bring the soup to the boil and rub it through the tammy, if necessary thicken it with a little potato flour. Make the soup hot and add the picked strawberries at the moment of serving.

Cold asparagus makes an excellent salad for second course:—

Cut it into inch-long pieces, mix the points with good mayonnaise sauce, made with lemon juice instead of vinegar, and with a little cream added. Pile the asparagus in the centre of a silver dish, put a few points on the top, and garnish the base with tiny, Julienne-shaped pieces of cold, cooked, young carrots, which must also be dressed with oil, vinegar, salt, and pepper.

Try this "Strawberry Kalteschale." It is a modified German dish and quite delicious:—

Take two punnets of ripe strawberries, pick a third of the best into a basin, sprinkle them with 2 oz. of pounded sugar and put them away in a cool place. Mash the remainder of the strawberries with a large glass of light claret, the juice of a lemon and 8 oz. of pounded sugar. Allow the fruit to stand for an hour then rub it through a hair sieve. Mix the purée with the whole strawberries and three-parts fill half-a-dozen tall syllabub glasses. Put a little whipped and sweetened cream on the top of each and serve them with sponge fingers or wafers on a separate plate.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

CIGARES DE JOY
(JOY'S CIGARETTES)
Immediately Relieve
ASTHMA, WHEEZING, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS
Chemists & Stores, box of 35, 2/6, or Post Free from WILCOX & Co., 83, Mortimer Street, London, W.
TRIAL SAMPLE FREE.

WHY DRINK INFERIOR TEA?
UNITED KINGDOM TEA COMPANY'S TEAS
DIRECT FROM THE GROWERS.
1/-, 1/3, 1/4, 1/6, 1/7, 1/9, & 2/- per lb., DELIVERED CARRIAGE PAID.
Write for Samples, sent free, taste them, and judge for yourselves. Amazing superiority in Quality! Great Economy in prices.
Offices: 21, MINCING LANE, LONDON, E.C.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.
Liability under this Act is underwritten by the
RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE CO.,
Established 1849. Capital £1,000,000.
ACCIDENT ASSURANCE. FIDELITY GUARANTEE.
64, CORNHILL, LONDON. A. VIAN, Secretary.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL, Holloway.
VERY POOR and DEPENDENT ENTIRELY UPON VOLUNTARY SUPPORT.
PATIENTS ADMITTED FREE, sickness and poverty the only qualifications for relief.
£10,000 needed annually to support the work of relieving 1,500 in-patients and 25,000 out-patients.
LEWIS H. GLENTON KERR, Secretary.

GIVEN AWAY with every 6d. & 1/- Bottle of
John Bond's Crystal Palace Marking Ink
Awarded. Forty-four Gold Medals, Diplomas and Royal Appointments.
GOLD MEDAL
A voucher entitling purchasers to their Name or Monogram Rubber Stamp for marking linen or stamping paper. The name is elegantly mounted on a Nickel Silver Pen and Pencil Case, with enlarged 1s. size.
Works: 75, Southgate-road, London, N.

RARE CHINA.
Old Chimney Pieces in Carved Wood & Marble
STATUARY CLEANED AND REPAIRED.
The Sinclair Galleries,
55, 57, 59, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, LONDON, W.
FREDERICK LITCHFIELD, Proprietor.

NATIONAL For Mutual Life Assurance. PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.
Claims Paid exceed...£10,000,000
Invested Funds exceed £5,000,000
Profits divided..... £5,400,000
ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE POLICIES ARE ISSUED COMBINING LIFE ASSURANCE AT MINIMUM COST, WITH PROVISION FOR OLD AGE. The practical effect of these Policies in the National Provident Institution is that the Member's life is assured until he reaches the age agreed upon, and on his reaching that age the whole of the Premiums paid are returned to him, and a considerable sum in addition, representing a by no means insignifiant rate of interest on his payments.
48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C. Applications for Agencies invited

A Feature of the Metropolis. SPIERS & POND'S
CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly Circus, London, W.
EAST ROOM. Finest Cuisine, unsurpassed by the most renowned Parisian Restaurants. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, à la carte and prix fixe. Viennese Band.
GRAND HALL. Musical Dinner 3/6 per head. Accompanied by the Imperial Austrian Band.
WEST ROOM. Academy Luncheon 2/6 Diner Parisien 5/-, during both of which the renowned Mandolin Quartette performs.
BUFFET & GRILL ROOM. Quick service à la carte and moderate prices. Joints in each room fresh from the Spit every half-hour.
AMERICAN BAR. Service of special American Dishes, Grills, &c.
Splendid Suites of Rooms for Military and other Dinners.

CURES

SLEEPLESSNESS, NEURALGIA, ANÆMIA, INFLUENZA, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PHYSICAL BREAKDOWN, WHOOPING COUGH WEAKNESS FOLLOWING ILLNESS.

In fact, it is the most wonderful Tonic of the Age: it contains sustaining properties which are truly marvellous. None should ever be without it. All that is claimed for it has been abundantly proved, as thousands can testify.

☞ A trial is solicited, and we will forward to any address on receipt of Six penny stamps, to defray cost of postage and packing, a TASTING SAMPLE which will prove its wonderful value.

To be obtained of licensed grocers, etc., or post free from the proprietors:

STEPHEN SMITH & CO., Ltd.,
BOW, LONDON, E.

FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

MELLIN'S FOOD

When prepared is similar to Breast Milk.

SAMPLES POST FREE FROM

MELLIN'S FOOD WORKS, PECKHAM, S.E.

Fashionable Mourning:

Priestley's

High-Class

Dress Fabrics

Trimmed with

Courtauld's

Waterproof

Crape.

Kept by the Leading Drapers of the World.

J.W. BENSON, LTD.

25, Old Bond Street, W.

LATEST NOVELTY,
TURQUOISE, PAVÉ JEWELLERY.
initiated by
J. W. BENSON, Ltd.

Pearls and Turquoise, £2 11s.

"It is quaint, pretty, and extremely inexpensive."—Queen, May 7th, 1898.

Turquoise and Pearls, £2 18s.

Turquoise and Pearls, £1 11s.

Catalogues Free.
Selections on Approval.

Steam Factory. 62 & 64, LUDGATE HILL, & 28, ROYAL EXCHANGE, E.C.

MADE BY
POPE MANUFACTURING Co
HARTFORD, Conn., U.S.A.

Illustrated Catalogues, showing both CHAIN and CHAINLESS Models, free from European Representatives:

MARKT & CO.,
25 & 26, Shoe-lane, E.C.

West End Depot:
21, Baker-street, W.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

Mrs. L. T. MEADE'S New Novel, ON THE BRINK OF A CHASM, is now ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

AMÉLIE RIVES'S new Novel, MERIEL: a Love Story, is now ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Bret Harte's New Book, SOME LATER VERSES, is just ready. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

THE HERITAGE OF EVE. By H. H. SPETTIGUE.
A WOMAN TEMPTED HIM. By WILLIAM WESTALL.
WAS SHE JUSTIFIED? By FRANK BARRETT.
MISS BALMAINE'S PAST. By B. M. CROKER.
FORTUNE'S GATE. By ALAN ST. AUBYN.
A WOMAN WORTH WINNING. By G. MANVILLE FENN.
COLONEL THORNDYKE'S SECRET. By G. A. HENTY.

NEW 3/6 NOVELS.

A RACE FOR MILLIONS. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.
A FOUNTAIN SEALED. By WALTER BESANT.
A MODERN DICK WHITTINGTON. By JAMES PAYN.
EVERY INCH A SOLDIER. By M. J. COLQUHOUN.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD'S NEW NOVEL.

ON JUNE 10TH. CROWN 8VO, 6s.

HELBECK OF BANNISDALE.

By MRS. HUMPHRY WARD.

Author of "Robert Elsmere," "Marcella," "Sir George Tressady," &c.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place.

CORNHILL MAGAZINE

FOR JUNE. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS:—

FIGHTS FOR THE FLAG. VI. LORD HOWE AND THE FIRST OF JUNE. By the Rev. W. H. FITCHETT.
CHARLES LAMB & ROBERT LLOYD: SOME UNPUBLISHED LETTERS. II. By E. V. LUCAS.
A VISIT TO CHÂTEAU D'EU. By ANDRÉE HOPE (the late Mrs. Harvey of Ickwell-Bury).
PANICS AND PRICES. By GEORGE YARD.
THE LADY ON THE HILLSIDE. By Miss M. E. COLERIDGE.
SIXTY PHASES OF FASHION. By Mrs. SIMPSON.
A RELIC OF WILLIAM OLDYS. By CHARLES I. ELTON, Q.C.
"MURDHER IN IRISH." By Miss ALICE L. MILLIGAN.
A THEORY OF TALK.
HUMOURS OF THE THEATRE. By ROBERT M. SILLARD.
THE CASTLE INN. Chapters XXI.-XXIII. By STANLEY WEYMAN.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place.

ON THE STŒCHIOLOGICAL CURE OF

CONSUMPTION,

ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, INFLUENZA, AND ALL THROAT AND LUNG COMPLAINTS.

By JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.

One Shilling, Post Free.

Y. BURLEIGH, LATE DAVID STOTT, 370, OXFORD STREET.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NOVELS.

THE MINISTER OF STATE.

By J. A. STEUART, Author of "In the Day of Battle." 1 vol. 6s.

The World.—"Far above the novels we are accustomed to, even of the higher class. It is dramatic, romantic, and realistic."

THE LONDONERS: AN ABSURDITY

By ROBERT HICHENS, Author of "The Green Carnation." 1 vol. 6s.

The Pall Mall Gazette.—"It is really screamingly funny, and does great credit to Mr. Hichens's luxuriant imagination."

THE OPEN BOAT.

By STEPHEN CRANE, Author of "The Red Badge of Courage." 1 vol. 6s.

The Athenæum.—"Shows evident signs of that extraordinary ability, amounting to genius, which distinguishes all the prose of Mr. Crane."

DREAMERS OF THE GHETTO.

By I. ZANGWILL. 1 vol. 6s.

The Sketch.—"One and all form central figures in soul-stirring pictures portrayed by a man with the double gifts of the poet and the philosopher. They make a wonderful portrait gallery."

THE LAKE OF WINE.

By BERNARD CAPES. 1 vol. 6s.

The Daily Chronicle.—"A story of constant and breathless incident, but a story of characterisation also. All the people are individualised; the dialogues are always bright."

A CHAMPION IN THE SEVENTIES.

By EDITH A. BARNETT. 1 vol. 6s.

The Daily Mail.—"One of the best novels that we have encountered for a long while."

THE DULL MISS ARCHINARD.

By ANNE D. SEDGWICK. 1 vol. 6s.

The Athenæum.—"Many readers are glad to hear of a wholesome story for girls; and if it happens that the book is agreeable and is carefully written, popularity may be readily achieved. 'The Dull Miss Archinard' is just such a volume."

HER LADYSHIP'S ELEPHANT.

By D. D. WELLS. 1 vol. 3s. 6d.

The Scotsman.—"A delightful comedy. The incidents are cleverly contrived, and the fun is capital."

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford-street, W.C.

NEW BOOKS.

Square Crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, price 6s.

A MIDDY'S RECOLLECTIONS,

1853 to 1860. By Rear-Admiral the Hon. VICTOR A. MONTAGU.

"Full of interest as illustrating the life of a midshipman afloat in the last days of the Wooden Navy, and as recording a much larger and more varied share of war experience than has fallen to the lot of most young officers in these latter days."—The Times.

"A volume of surpassing fascination.—Dundee Advertiser.

"A very pleasant and informing volume."—The Globe.

"His accounts of active warfare, of pirate hunting, and shipwreck, are exhilarating, and there are many enlightening pages in the book dealing with punishments in the Navy, the leisure hours of a middy's life on board ship, his duties, and companionships."—Daily Mail.

"We can hardly imagine how his story could have been more fitly told."—Manchester Guardian.

"The 'Recollections' are told in a free and easy style. There is no straining after effect. . . . Whether engaged in work or recreation he is one of the cheeriest of companions; and though his earliest experiences were sometimes of the harshest, like a true and typical sailor he has nothing but admiration for the service."—The Scotsman.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

ARISTOCRACY AND EVOLUTION.

By W. H. MALLOCK.

"With the main idea of this work, which is quite the most important that Mr. Mallock has yet produced, we do not think there can be any dispute, though most of the active sociologists in England either ignore that idea or are openly hostile to it."—Spectator.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

HIS GRACE O' THE GUNNE.

By I. HOOPER.

"Well told and full of excitement."—Academy.

"Really a clever, entertaining volume. . . . . No common piece of work.'—The Athenæum.

In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

THE STORY OF GLADSTONE'S

LIFE. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Containing 45 Illustrations, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods.

"This is a charmingly written sketch of Mr. Gladstone's public career, with some interesting glimpses at the same time into his private life."—The Observer.

In crown 8vo, 864 pages, price 3s. 6d. net.

WHO'S WHO, 1898.

"This is undoubtedly the handiest biographical dictionary and compendium of information, referring to prominent persons and their doings, in existence."—Nature.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho-square, London.

The JUNE NUMBER of the

PALL MALL MAGAZINE,

Edited by LORD FREDERIC HAMILTON,

Is NOW READY.

Finely Illustrated.

Price ONE SHILLING NET.

CONTENTS.

Canaletto, San Trevaso. FRONTISPIECE
Original Etching by Fred. V. Burridge.

The Death of Childhood. EDITH RUTTER
Illustrated by Abbey Altson.

She Danced Before Him. MIMOLI C. FRASER
With Illustrations by Frank Craig.

The Evolution of Comfort in Railway Travelling. II. In America. Part I. ANGUS SINCLAIR
Illustrated from Photographs.

Noel's Princess. E. NESBIT
With Illustrations by Gordon Browne,

Capitals of Greater Britain: Ottawa. McLEOD STEWART
Illustrated from Photographs.

The Summer Breeze. M. M. J.
Illustrated by J. Williamson.

British Army Types: XIII. A Captain East Sussex Regiment.
Drawn from Life by Arthur Jule Goodman.

Old Memories: Afghanistan. II. General Sir HUGH GOUGH, G.C.B., V.C.
With Portrait and Illustrative Sketches.

Prince Rupert the Buccaneer. Part III. C. J. CUTCLIFFE HYNE
With Illustrations by G. Grenville Manton.

South London: Part V. A Forgotten Worthy. Sir WALTER BESANT
With Illustrative Sketches by Percy Wadham.

Crime. Part I. J. HOLT SCHOOLING
With Diagrams and Facsimiles.

Rupert of Hentzau. Chapters XVI.—XVIII. ANTHONY HOPE
With Illustrations by Sydney Cowell.

A Province in Pawn. Hon. T. W. LEGH, M.P.
Illustrated by Photographs.

From a Cornish Window. A. T. QUILLER COUCH
With Thumb-nail Sketches by Mark Zangwill.

The Humours of the Month.

OFFICES { 18, CHARING CROSS-ROAD, LONDON, W.C.
ASTOR-COURT BUILDING, NEW YORK.

Fourth Edition (Sixth Thousand), crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HEALTH and CONDITION in the ACTIVE and the SEDENTARY, by N. E. YORKE-DAVIES, Royal Coll. Phys. Lond., Author of "Foods for the Fat."—Contents:—Perfect health, how to attain. Deviations from health. Insidious causes of disease. Causes of premature decay. Diseases due to diet only curable by diet. Epochs in life. Exigencies of modern society. Idiosyncrasies. The foundation of health. Tight lacing, diseases from. Preservation of female beauty. A short life and a merry one. Constitutional flaws. Aristocratic ailments. The London season. The débutante. The diet of grief. Vegetarianism injurious. Ailments of mal-nutrition and of excess. Obesity, gout, acidity, leanness, indigestion, &c., &c.

Opinions of the Press.

"Those who desire a long and healthy life will perhaps find their best means of obtaining it in the study and observance of such rules as are laid down here. The book is a rational and practical guide to 'Health and Condition.'"—Morning Post.

"Full of valuable hints and suggestive warnings as to the results of improper food and insufficient exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. An Illustrated Treatise based on the special practice and observation of the last 15 years. Price 3s. 6d.; post free, 3s. 8d.
London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST
OF
NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

By S. MACNAUGHTAN.
SELAH HARRISON. By S. MACNAUGHTAN. In one vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

By JOHN LEYS.
UNDER A MASK. By JOHN K. LEYS, Author of "The Lindsays," &c. In two vols. crown 8vo, 10s.

By LESLIE KEITH.
The MISCHIEF MAKER. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "A Rash Verdict," &c. In 2 vols. crown 8vo, 10s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street.

TEN POPULAR NOVELS.
SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

THE STANDARD BEARER. S. R. CROCKETT.
THE CROOK OF THE BOUGH. MENIE MURIEL DOWIE.
SONS OF ADVERSITY. L. COPE CORNFORD.
MISS ERIN. M. E. FRANCIS.
VAUSSORE. FRANCIS BRUNE.
THE PHILANTHROPIST. LUCY MAYNARD
CROSS TRAILS. VICTOR WAITE.
BIJLI THE DANCER. JAMES BLYTHE PATTON.
ACROSS THE SALT SEAS. J. BLOUNDELLE-BURTON.
BETWEEN SUN AND SAND. W. C. SCULLY.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex-street, W.C.

JUST ISSUED.

THE TEMPLE (London), containing Twelve Artist's Proof Etchings by PERCY THOMAS, R.P.E., and Introductory Notes, &c., by the Master of the Temple (Rev. CANON AINGER).—FROST & REED, 47, Queen's-road, and 8, Clare-street, Bristol; or all Booksellers and Fine Art Dealers.

Post free, 1s. 1d.
EXHAUSTION AND PREMATURE DECLINE IN MAN.
A treatise on the restorative effects of Electrolysis.
HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand, London.

AMUSEMENTS.

PALACE, Shaftesbury-avenue. — The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Full Licence. Prices from 6d. Doors open 8.—Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—The Greatest Combination of Talent in London.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINEE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station.—Gordon's Last Stand at Khartoum. New Portrait Model of the late Mr. W. E. Gladstone.

OPERA and THEATRE TICKETS.—Boxes, Stalls, Dress Circle, and Upper Circle in good positions for "The Opera," and every Theatre in London, also Seats for the Military Tournament, can be had at any office of the DISTRICT MESSENGER AND THEATRE TICKET COMPANY. Branches City and West-end. Letters and telegrams to 103, Piccadilly, next to Prince's Hall.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, & SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS NOW OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 PAGES) SENT GRATIS AND POST FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.

The List contains Popular Works in Travel, Sport, History, Biography, Science, and Fiction. Also New and Surplus Copies of French, German, Italian, and Spanish Books.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED,
30—34, NEW OXFORD ST.; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C., LONDON; AND AT BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

GAY & BIRD'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY, at all Libraries and Booksellers. Price 6s.

PENELOPE'S EXPERIENCES IN SCOTLAND.

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN.

Author of "Timothy's Quest" (90th Thousand), "A Cathedral Courtship and Penelope's English Experiences," "Marm Lisa," &c., &c.

This volume is similar in every way to "A Cathedral Courtship and Penelope's English Experiences" of which Punch wrote:—"There is only one word that will fittingly describe this work; it is delightful."

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

IN THE DAYS OF KING JAMES,

or, Romances of London in the Olden Time.

By SIDNEY HERBERT BURCHELL.

A STIRRING NOVEL.

ON THE RED STAIRCASE. A Story of the Time of Peter the Great. By M. IMRAY TAYLOR.

THE JUGGLER. By CHARLES EGBERT CRADDOCK. Author of "The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains."

THE HAND OF HIS BROTHER. By EDITH C. KENYON. Author of "The Squire of Lonsdale."

Scotsman.—"The reader is swept on to the end of the story keenly interested and charmed."

World.—"It is very clever."

NOW READY. THE BOOK UPON

CUBA. By Lieut. A. S. ROWAN and Prof. M. M. RAMSAY. Crown 8vo, pp. 290, with Maps, cloth, 6s.

 An up-to-date and valuable work.

NEARLY READY. Crown 8vo, pp. 238, tastefully bound, 3s. 6d.

ESSAYS AT EVENTIDE. By THOMAS NEWBIGGING.

NOW READY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

HEALTH, GRACE, AND BEAUTY. By MABEL JEUNESS.

London: GAY & BIRD, 22, Bedford-street, Strand.

Agency for American Books.

NEW BOOK ON THE KLONDYKE.

Ready this Week, in 1 vol., large crown 8vo, with Twenty-four Illustrations, price 6s.

To Klondyke and Back.

A Journey Down the Yukon from its Source to its Mouth.

BY

J. H. E. SECRETAN, C.E.,

OF OTTAWA.

WITH HINTS TO INTENDING PROSPECTORS.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 13, Great Marlborough Street.

JUST OUT. At all Booksellers' and Railway Bookstalls.

THE FELLOW PASSENGERS: A MYSTERY AND ITS SOLUTION.

By RIVINGTON PYKE. A new detective story by the author of "The Man Who Disappeared." Long 12mo, cloth, 1s. 6d., paper, 1s.

FAME THE FIDDLER. A THEATRICAL NOVEL. By S. J. ADAIR FITZGERALD. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A very human book, and an amusing one as well. It reminds us of 'Trilby.' Some of the characters are so true to life that it is impossible not to recognise them."—STANDARD.

THE DEVIL IN A DOMINO. A startling story by CHAS. L'EPINE. Long 12mo, cloth, 1s.

"Written with remarkable literary skill, and is undeniably fascinating."—TRUTH.

THE ART OF ELOCUTION AND PUBLIC SPEAKING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

Written by ROSS FERGUSON. Introduction by GEORGE ALEXANDER.

"A useful little book. We strongly recommend it to the chairmen of public companies."—AUSTRALIAN MAIL.

London: LAWRENCE GREENING & CO., 20, Cecil Ct., Charing Cross Rd.

THE JUNE

WINDSOR MAGAZINE

Commences a New Volume, and Surpasses every Sixpenny Magazine ever produced.

It contains the following unparallelled attractions:

THE FIRST LARGE INSTALMENT OF

"WITH NANSEN IN THE NORTH."

LIEUT. JOHANSEN'S NARRATIVE, SECURED AT UNPRECEDENTED COST.

The Opening Chapters of a Splendid New Serial Story—

"PHAROS." By GUY BOOTHBY.

Everyone remembers this Author's DR. NIKOLA, which appeared in THE WINDSOR, and PHAROS is likely to create even a greater sensation.

"THE DESTROYERS." By RUDYARD KIPLING.

Brilliant Stories and Articles by

C. B. FRY. | HARRY FURNISS.
PERCY ANDREÆ. | ETHEL TURNER.
ERNEST E. WILLIAMS. | COTTREL HOE.

SIXPENCE, AS USUAL.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

New Illustrated List, comprising over 3,000 Volumes in every department of Literature, will be sent post free on application.

JUST READY, GUY BOOTHBY'S NEW NOVEL.

THE LUST OF HATE. 5s.

THE LUST OF HATE. 5s.

By Guy Boothby.

Author of "Dr. Nikola," "The Fascination of the King," &c., &c.

"Most strangely and absorbingly interesting, and from the first to the last page compels and enthralls the attention of the reader."—St. James' Budget.

"A story full of action, with never-failing vigour and vivacity, abundance of exploits, and variety of adventurous interest."—The Globe.

A STARTLING NOVEL.

A STOLEN LIFE. 6s.

By M. McDONNELL BODKIN, Q.C., Author of "White Magic," "Lord Edward Fitzgerald," &c.

"It may safely be said that the reader, young or old, who is not interested and entertained by this amazing excursion into the regions of hypnotic phenomena is not worth writing for."—The Morning Leader.

FIVE SPLENDID NEW 3s. 6d. NOVELS.

JUST READY, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. net.

Profusely Illustrated by Stanley L. Wood, Frances Ewan, Powell Chase, & others.

A NEW NOVEL BY E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.

AS A MAN LIVES. 3s. 6d.

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM, Author of "False Evidence," "The World's Great Snare," &c.

Mr. Oppenheim has never written a more powerfully interesting and dramatic work than this. From the first page to the last the reader's interest is enchained.

RICHARD MARSH'S NEW NOVEL.

THE DATCHET DIAMONDS. 3s. 6d.

By RICHARD MARSH. Author of "The Crime and the Criminal," "Phillip Bennion's Death," &c.

"A thoroughly successful novel, exceedingly clever and unique in its strange developments. There is as exciting a series of adventures as any one could wish to go to bed upon."—Sheffield Telegraph.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "TITUS,"

Of which over 1,000,000 copies have been sold in America.

PRISONERS OF THE SEA. 3s. 6d.

By FLORENCE M. KINGSLEY.

"A well-written, exciting story. Here in a wonderful romance of the seventeenth century we have a novel of adventure that should take a very high place among books of its kind."—Lloyd's News.

SIR TRISTRAM. 3s. 6d.

By THOROLD ASHLEY.

"A novel which by genuine merit will achieve its own rescue from the fate of the generality of present-day fiction."—Aberdeen Free Press.

A NEW WAR STORY.

PHILIPPI THE GUARDSMAN. 3s. 6d.

By T. R. THRELFALL.

A stirring novel, dealing with one of the most critical periods in the history of Europe. From the first page to the last the interest never flags, and the characters are drawn with a strong hand.

A WORK OF NATIONAL IMPORTANCE.

Now ready, long 8vo, sewn, 1s.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "MADE IN GERMANY."

MARCHING BACKWARD. 1s.

By ERNEST E. WILLIAMS. Author of "Made in Germany," "The Imperial Heritage," &c., &c.

A brilliant treatise on the burning question of increased foreign competition and depressed home industries, with the causes and remedies of those evils.

NOW READY.

THE BEST AND FIRST UP-TO-DATE BIOGRAPHY OF MR. GLADSTONE.

ENTIRELY NEW EDITION. Revised and carefully brought up to date day by day, with record of the death scene, &c., &c. Demy 8vo, art linen, gilt, 5s.

WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE,

STATESMAN AND SCHOLAR.

A LITERARY AND CRITICAL BIOGRAPHY.

Edited by DAVID WILLIAMSON.

Illustrated with 16 full-page plates, printed on the finest art paper, and including many portraits of Mr. Gladstone and family not hitherto accessible.

For attractive appearance, cheapness, reliability, research, and literary finish, this book cannot be surpassed by any biography of Mr. Gladstone.

In compiling this volume the aim has been to give a careful chronicle not only of the political career, but also to complete the picture of the activity of Mr. Gladstone in other fields by recording his acts and speeches in connection with theology, literature, and art.

WARD, LOCK & CO., LIMITED, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

AMUSEMENTS.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Sole Lessee, Mr. Frederick Harrison.
Managers, Mr. Frederick Harrison and Mr. Cyril Maude.
EVERY EVENING (except on Saturdays), at 8.30,
THE LITTLE MINISTER, by J. M. Barrie.
Miss WINIFRED EMERY and Mr. CYRIL MAUDE.
MATINEES EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.30.

QUEEN'S HALL.
SUNDAY AFTERNOON CONCERTS.
EVERY SUNDAY, at 3.30.
Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood.
The Queen's Hall Grand Orchestra.
Admission free. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 1s., and 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—FIREWORKS.—Magnificent Display every THURSDAY, at 9, by C. T. Brock & Co. Colossal set piece, an eighth of a mile long, depicting THE BATTLE OF MANILA BAY. Wonderful novelties in Living Fireworks, Mechanical Moving Devices and Aerial Displays.

GREAT NATIONAL HORSE SHOW.—CRYSTAL PALACE, SATURDAY, May 28, and WHIT MONDAY and TUESDAY. Riding, Driving, Jumping, Trotting, and Stage Coach Competitions. Horses from Scotland, Ireland, the Continent, and the United States of America are entered for this Show, the Principal Winners at the New York Exhibition being specially sent over to compete at the Crystal Palace. Tickets of all Agents.

"ECCE HOMO!" Munkacsy's Sacred Masterpiece. This famous Work, containing over 70 figures, is NOW ON VIEW for the first time in London at the DOWDESWELL GALLERIES, 160, New Bond-street. Admission One Shilling. 315,000 people inspected the Picture during its exhibition at Budapest, often at the rate of 7,000 daily.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

CONCERTS DAILY.
AFTERNOON CONCERTS, 4 p.m. to 6 p.m.
EVENING CONCERTS, 8.45 p.m. to 10.45 p.m.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—
The CONCERT ORCHESTRA FROM THE THEATRE LA SCALA, MILAN, CONSISTING OF SIXTY-EIGHT PERFORMERS. DIRECTOR, SIGNOR LEANDRO CAMPANARI.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—COLLECTIONS of PRODUCTS from ALL PARTS of the EMPIRE. Open free to the public from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.
Dinners (at 5s. and 7s. 6d., or à la Carte) from 6.30 p.m. Luncheons, &c. Orders addressed to Superintendent, Catering Syndicate, Imperial Institute. Telephone No. 623 Kensington.
Communication by Train and Omnibus to South Kensington throughout the day. Covered way communication with the South Kensington Subway.

International Universal Exhibition.

EARL'S COURT, S.W., 1898.
IMRE KIRALFY, Director-General.
Season Tickets, 1l. 6d.,
Can be obtained at the Exhibition and Libraries.
Admission Daily, 1s.
Open 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.
BAND of the 1st GRENADIER GUARDS.
BAND of the HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.
The LONDON EXHIBITIONS ORCHESTRAL BAND.
THE EMPRESS THEATRE.
GRAND PATRIOTIC NAVAL SPECTACLE.
Peace and War. Naval Manœuvres. The Fleet at Night.
Attack on the Enemy's Forts.
TWICE DAILY, at 3.30 and 9 p.m.
Thousands of Reserved Seats at 6d., 1s., 2s., and 3s.
THE FLORAL LOUNGE.
The Most Delightful Entertainment Hall in the World.
The Chamounix Minstrels and other Novel Attractions Daily, Free.
The Hungarian Minstrels. American Liliputian Troupe.
Grand Hungarian Feszty Panorama. Royal Javanese Troupe.
Hagenbeck's Zoological Kindergarten. Moorish Camp.
Bella Napoli Troupe. Electric Theatre. Captive Balloon.
THE GREAT WHEEL, 300 ft. HIGH.
South Sea Islanders, "Astarte." Belvedere Tower. Electrophone.
Switchback.

THE ROYAL HORSE SHOW, RICHMOND.—Under the Management of THE RICHMOND (SURREY) HORSE SHOW SOCIETY, Ltd. SEVENTH ANNUAL HORSE SHOW, FRIDAY and SATURDAY, 10th and 11th JUNE, 1898. £1,100 IN PRIZES.
Classes for Hunters, Hacks, Harness Horses, Polo Ponies, Tandems, Four-in-Hands, and Jumpers.
Entries close Saturday, 28th May; or, with Double Fees, Monday, 30th May.
Schedules, &c., of the Secretary, 1, The Little Green, Richmond, Surrey.

ROYAL MILITARY TOURNAMENT.
MAY 19th to JUNE 2nd.
ROYAL AGRICULTURAL HALL.
GRAND HISTORICAL PAGEANT—
"SHOULDER TO SHOULDER."
"Cadiz," "Gibraltar," "Alexandria," "El-Teb."
Performances (Daily) at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m.

ROYAL MILITARY TOURNAMENT. — Numbered and Reserved Seats—Mornings, 10s., 7s. 6d., and 6s.; or Evenings, 10s., 7s. 6d., 6s., 5s., and 4s., including admission to the Hall. Box Office now open, Barford-street, Liverpool-road, N.; and at all Libraries.

AMUSEMENTS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE ROYAL.—THE WHITE HEATHER, EVERY EVENING, at 7.45, for a short season. Mrs. JOHN WOOD, Miss KATE RORKE, and powerful Company. Morning Performance, Saturday, May 28, at 1.30. For full particulars see Daily Papers.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.
Lessees, THE GRAND OPERA SYNDICATE, LTD.
GRAND OPERA EVERY EVENING
For full particulars see daily papers. Box-office now open.

LYCEUM.—THE MEDICINE MAN.
Dr. Tregenna.....HENRY IRVING.
Sylvia Wynford.....Miss ELLEN TERRY.
EVERY NIGHT to May 27, at 8.
MATINEE Next Saturday, May 28, at 2.
WATERLOO and THE BELLS. Nights of May 28, 30, June 1 and 13. Matinée, June 11.
THE MEDICINE MAN. Nights of May 31, June 8 and 16.
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. Nights of June 9 and 11. Matinées, June 1 and 4.
THE LYONS MAIL. Nights of June 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 10. Matinée, June 8.
LOUIS XI. Nights of June 13, 14, 17. Matinée, June 18.
Box-office (Mr. J. Hurst) open 10 to 5, and 7.30 to 10. Seats also booked by letter or telegram. LYCEUM.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, Mr. HERBERT BEERBOHM TREE.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8 (doors open 7.30),
JULIUS CÆSAR.
MATINEES EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.
Box-office open 10 to 10. Seats booked from 2s. HER MAJESTY'S.

ADELPHI. A. & S. GATTI,
Sole Proprietors and Managers.
Business Manager, Mr. FRED. G. LATHAM.
EVERY EVENING at 8 o'clock.
A Drama in Four Acts, by David Belasco, entitled:
THE HEART OF MARYLAND,
Interpreted by Mr. Charles Frohman's entire New York Company.
Box Office open from 10 till 10.

SAVOY THEATRE.—On SATURDAY EVENING Next, May 28, will be produced the New Romantic Musical Drama, entitled THE BEAUTY STONE, by A. W. Pinero, J. Comyns Carr, and Arthur Sullivan. Box-office 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.—R. D'OYLY CARTE, Manager.

COURT THEATRE, Sloane Square.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.—EVERY EVENING, at 8.30, TRELAWNY OF THE "WELLS," by A. W. Pinero. Doors 8. Commence 8.30. Box-office now open, 10 to 10. Telephone No. 3,031. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.

GARRICK.—Lessee and Manager, H. T. BRICKWELL.
EVERY EVENING, at 9,
WILLIAM GILLETTE. | TOO MUCH JOHNSON.
Doors open at 7.45. Carriages at 11.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY.—EVERY EVENING, and SATURDAY MATINEE Mr. George Edwardes's Company in THE GEISHA. LAST WEEK. The book by Owen Hall. Lyrics by Harry Greenbank. Music by Sydney Jones.

ST. JAMES'S.—Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER,
Sole Lessee and Manager.
LAST THREE NIGHTS OF THE CONQUERORS, at 8.15.
THURSDAY, June 2, will be produced
THE AMBASSADOR,
A Comedy, in Four Acts, by John Oliver Hobbes.
Box-office open 10 to 10. ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

COMEDY THEATRE, Panton-street, Haymarket.
Sole Manager, Mr. CHARLES HAWTREY.
TO-NIGHT, and EVERY EVENING, at 8.30,
LORD AND LADY ALGY,
an Original Light Comedy, in Three Acts, by R. C. Carton.
Mr. CHARLES HAWTREY and Company.
At 8, a Duologue, entitled CONSTANCY, by Cyril Hallward.
MATINEES SATURDAYS, May 28, and June 18; and WEDNESDAYS, June 1, 8, 22, and 29, at 3. Box-office open 10 to 10.

CRITERION THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.—EVERY EVENING at 8.15, THE LIARS, by Henry Arthur Jones. Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.

VAUDEVILLE.
Sole Lessees and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
EVERY EVENING, at 8.20.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.30,
THE FRENCH MAID,
With New Songs, Dances, and Dresses.
The very successful Musical Comedy by Basil Hood and Walter Slaughter.
Box-office open 10 to 10.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Directors, WILLIAMSON and MUSGROVE, Limited.
EVERY EVENING, at 8, Casino Theatre Company, of New York, in
THE BELLE OF NEW YORK.
"The subject of all the town talk."
Box-office now open at the Theatre from 10 till 10.
MATINEE THURSDAY and SATURDAY at 2.

EMPIRE THEATRE. — EVERY EVENING, New Ballet, THE PRESS, and Sporting Sketch, THE RACE. Grand VARIETIES. Doors open at 7.45.

LONDON PAVILION.—Dan Leno, Marguerite Cornille, Brothers Griffiths, Harriet Vernon, Harry Randall, Bessie Wentworth, Billie Barlow, G. W. Hunter, Rosa Glenn, Leslie's Dogs, and many others Prices from 1s. to £3 3s.—Manager, Mr. FRANK GLENISTER.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

ABERYSTWITH.—The QUEEN'S HOTEL faces the sea, and is lighted by electricity. The late Sir Jas. Clarke, M.D., says: "A fortnight at Aberystwith is equal to a month at most watering-places." For tariffs, &c., apply to W. H. PALMER, Proprietor. Soft Atlantic breezes. Pure water from Plinlimmon, and excellent drainage.

BONCHURCH HOTEL, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, one mile from Ventnor Station.
A comfortable, quiet, and most beautifully-situated Hotel. Pretty garden. Good sea view.
H. RIBBANDS, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HIGHCLIFFE HOTEL. Unrivalled position, West Cliff, full south. Splendid sea view. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Supplies from Alderney Dairy Farm. Telephone 27.—J. KILNER, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—South aspect, 150 rooms, electric light throughout, passenger lift, first-class cuisine, winter garden and lounge, covered tennis court. Turkish, sea-water, and medicated Baths. The Hotel is within two minutes' walk of the Golf Links.—For tariff, address W. KNEESE, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.—Centre of sea front. Electric Light throughout. Lift to all floors. Bicycle room. Inclusive terms if desired from 10s. 6d. to 15s. per day.—For particulars apply to A. D. HOOK, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

CARBIS BAY HOTEL, Cornwall. The very spot to obtain rest and quietude. Overlooking the finest bay in England. Mild yet bracing climate. Within easy distance of London by G. W. R. Splendid Golf Links. "A more beautiful spot for residence could hardly be imagined."—Truth.

FOLKESTONE.—The LEAS HOTEL.—Situated in private grounds. Adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Refurnished throughout. Passenger lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff. Good golf links and tennis court.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Leas. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor
Sanitation Certified.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

JERSEY.—GRAND HOTEL.—The only first-class modern Hotel facing the sea, and full south, the largest, the best appointed, and the up-to-date Hotel in the Channel Islands. Liberal Management.
D. DE LEIDI, Manager.

MALVERN—The IMPERIAL HOTEL occupies the best position, and receives visitors en pension. The golf-links (18 holes) are one of the best in England. Capital stabling for hunters. Droitwich Brine, Turkish and large Swimming Bath in separate buildings.—For tariff, apply to the Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

SALCOMBE (Devon).—BOLT HEAD HOTEL.—This first-class Family Hotel commands magnificent views of English Channel. Delightful cliff walks. Grand coast scenery. Admirable winter health resort. Climate mildest in England. Carriages meet trains when requested. Stabling Billiards. Special terms for winter months and for families.—Apply, Manager.

SANDGATE.—ROYAL KENT HOTEL, a favourite resort of Ruskin. An ideal summer and winter residence, delightfully situated in its own grounds, facing the sea. Redecorated and refurnished. New Coffee-room, Smoking-room, and Conservatory have recently been added. Fifteen minutes from Folkestone. Omnibus meets all trains Sandgate Station.—J. E. TANARE, Prop.

SOUTHSEA.—ROYAL BEACH MANSIONS HOTEL.—Largest in Southsea, splendidly situated on the beach; 300 yards nearer the sea than any other public hotel on the line of marine terraces. Passenger lift. Inclusive terms from £3. 13s. 6d. per week. Entirely under new management.—M. ECCLES, Manageress.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
F. FISCHER, Manager.

BUXTON

DERBYSHIRE.

Highest Town in England.
On the Mountain Limestone.
1,000 feet above sea level.

Centre of the picturesque Peak District. Pure Air. Charming Scenery.

HOT MINERAL-WATER BATHS FOR GOUT, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, &c.

NATURAL TEMPERATURE 82° FAHRENHEIT.

Finest Public Gardens at any Health Resort in Europe, with Pavilion, Theatre, Concert-Hall, Tennis, Bowls, etc. Golf Links (18 holes).

For ILLUSTRATED GUIDE, with Tariffs of the leading Hotels, Hydropathics, Boarding and Lodging Houses, send postage-stamp to THE CLERK, COUNCIL OFFICES, TOWN HALL, BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.

BURLINGTON HOTELS COMPANY, Limited.

BURLINGTON HOTEL, Cork-street, W., near Burlington Arcade. Central, quiet, and most comfortable.
BUCKINGHAM PALACE HOTEL, S.W., close to Victoria Station. Specialty, Wedding Receptions. Suites of rooms facing Buckingham Palace Gardens from 12s. per day.
} London.

BURLINGTON.—The HOTEL BURLINGTON, Boscombe, Bournemouth. 200 rooms, facing sea, and protected from north and east. Acres of beautifully laid-out pleasure grounds, with abundance of winter foliage. A Winter Garden, 300 feet long, facing south, containing dining-room, and kept at a uniform temperature. Nearest approach in England to a Riviera Hotel. 135 minutes from Waterloo. Pullman Car service. East Bournemouth Station. Special Boarding terms. Excellent cuisine for above three Hotels. Tariffs on application to the Managers.

AVONDALE HOTEL & RESTAURANT

(Corner of Dover-street and Piccadilly).
MAGNIFICENT SUITES of ROOMS, including Ladies' Reception-room.
POLIAKIN'S renowned STRING BAND (three years at the Savoy) plays nightly during Dinner and Supper.
LUNCHEON, 4s.; DINNER, 10s. 6d.; SUPPER, 4s.
A SPECIAL ROYAL ACADEMY LUNCHEON at 2s. 6d. served daily.
The Wines have been most carefully selected by connoisseurs.
Manager: Mons. GARIN. } late of the Savoy Hotel.
Chef de Cuisine: Mons. DUTRU. }

AND

HATCHETT'S RESTAURANT.

UNDER AVONDALE HOTEL.

Under entirely new management. First-class Cuisine and Unrivalled Cellar of Wines. Moderate Prices. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, Table d'Hôte, Grill-room, and à la Carte. Arrangements are being made for a String Band to play nightly during Dinner and Supper.
Manager: Mons. EUGENE.

FOLKESTONE

ROYAL PAVILION HOTEL

Sheltered, yet close to the sea and the Boulogne Steamboat and Promenade Piers and beautiful Undercliffe private road. Celebrated for its home-like comforts, cuisine, and wines. Lighted throughout by electricity. Spacious winter garden, affording a delightful lounge amidst sub-tropical plants. Private dairy, farm, and gardens, insuring fresh milk, butter, eggs, vegetables. Private laundry. Hotel omnibus meets all trains at Folkestone Central. The New and Handsome additional buildings will be opened in July.

FOLKESTONE

ROYAL PAVILION HOTEL

A FINE HOTEL] DOVER [IN DOVER BAY

Accommodates 400 guests. Is superbly appointed, with all the comforts of a well-arranged mansion, at moderate cost. Perfect cuisine. The Dover Golf Links for use of Hotel Burlington visitors. The finest coast hotel in England. Brochure and Tariff free.

Facing the Pleasure Pier and in centre of Dover Bay.

HOTEL BURLINGTON

FOLKESTONE.

WEST CLIFF HOTEL.

(180 Apartments)

Now opened for the reception of Visitors.

Important Structural Alterations and Additions have been made since October last.

The Hotel is under the personal superintendence of the Proprietor, to whom all communications should be addressed.

Electric Light and Passenger Lift.

HOTELS, &c.

SAVOY HOTEL OVERLOOKING RIVER AND EMBANKMENT GARDENS.

By day the most beautiful garden and river view in Europe. By night a fairy scene. All charges for rooms include baths, lights, and attendance.

Savoy Restaurant.

Of Gastronomic Fame. Dinners à la Carte. Private Rooms for Parties.

The Savoy Dejeuner à prix fixe, 5s., served on the Balcony overlooking the Gardens and River from 12 to 3.

"The Opera Supper," 5s. The Orchestra plays during Dinner and Supper.

The Restaurant is under the direction of the famous Maitre d'Hôtel, "Joseph," of the Restaurant Marivaux, Paris. Chef, Maitre THOURAUD.

Prix Fixe Dinner (7s. 6d.) is served in the new Salle à Manger, on the Restaurant Floor, at Separate Tables, from 6 to 8.30.

The GRAND HOTEL, ROME, is under the same direction.

HASTINGS. Due South, Facing Sea.

QUEEN'S HOTEL,

LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED.

Sunny, and most sheltered position in Hastings and St. Leonards.
ELECTRIC LIGHT. PASSENGER ELEVATOR.
Moderate Tariff. Hotel Flys attend the trains.
WILLIAM GLADE, Manager.

ILFRACOMBE.

ILFRACOMBE HOTEL.

Famous for its high-class Cuisine and general comfort.

The PRINCIPAL and ONLY HOTEL on the SEASHORE.

An ideal position. 250 rooms. Grounds five acres. Tennis, Croquet. Splendid Swimming Bath. Elegant Lounge Hall. Moderate tariff. Terms "en pension."
H. R. GROVER, Manager.

RAMSGATE.

THE GRANVILLE.

CLARENDON HOTEL, Princes-street, Edinburgh.—First-class Family Hotel. Opposite Castle, and overlooking the gardens. Kitchen lately fitted up on top of Hotel. Recommended to American visitors. Under the personal management of the new Proprietor.

GRAND HOTEL, LYNDHURST (New Forest).—Charming Hotel, recently enlarged. Beautiful grounds of 4 acres adjoin golf links. Hunting, fishing, &c. Trains met at Brockenhurst.
Mrs HART, Manageress.

MARGATE.—WHITE HART HOTEL.
Sixty Bedrooms, many commanding magnificent sea views. Famous for its perfect English cooking and choice cellar. Most invigorating sea air in England. Under supervision of Proprietor—G. MARSHALL.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.

THE PALACE HOTEL.

200 rooms. Finest position. Own grounds. American elevator. Tariff, with plan of rooms and sketch map of Buxton, on application.
A. CROSS, Manager.

EXMOUTH, DEVON.—IMPERIAL HOTEL. Private gardens, facing sea; beautiful views; lovely climate; billiard and smoking rooms; ladies' drawing-rooms; excellent cuisine; good stabling; perfect sanitation; sea bathing; trout and sea fishing; boating, yachting, steam launch, tennis golf.—Under entirely new Management.
H. W. HAYWARD, Proprietor.

LOWESTOFT GRAND HOTEL.

Rooms may now be engaged for Whitsuntide. Special Terms for May, June, and July (Whitsuntide excepted).

SUFFOLK AGRICULTURAL SHOW, June 2nd and 3rd.

QUICK CHEAP ROUTE to DENMARK, SWEDEN, and Norway, viâ Harwich and Esbjerg.—The steamers of the UNITED STEAMSHIP CO. of COPENHAGEN sail from HARWICH (Parkeston Quay) for ESBJERG every Monday, Thursday, and Saturday, after arrival of the train leaving London, Liverpool-street Station, at 7.15 p.m., returning from Esbjerg every Tuesday, Wednesday, and Saturday, after arrival of 9.5 a.m. train from Copenhagen. Return Fares: Esbjerg, 53s.; Copenhagen, 71s. 8d. The service will be performed (weather and other circumstances permitting) by the new S.S. N. J. Fjord and the S.S. Koldinghuus. These fast steamers have excellent accommodation for passengers and carry no cattle.—For further information address, ULGNER, PRICE & CO., 107, Fenchurch-street, London; or the Continental Manager, Liverpool-street Station, E.C.

ROYAL MAIL ROUTE TO HOLLAND,

Via HARWICH and the HOOK, DAILY (SUNDAYS INCLUDED).

Quickest Route to HOLLAND. Cheapest to GERMANY. Improved Service to NORWAY, DENMARK, and SWEDEN.

Send post-card to Continental Manager, Great Eastern Railway, Liverpool-street Station, E.C., for descriptive Illustrated Time Book (free).

SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY.

WHITSUNTIDE HOLIDAYS.

CHEAP DAY EXCURSIONS.

Charing Cross, Waterloo, Cannon Street, London Bridge and New Cross to	WHIT SUNDAY. Train.	WHIT SUNDAY. Return Fares 3rd Class.	WHIT MONDAY. Train.	WHIT MONDAY. Return Fares 3rd Class.
	a.m.		a.m.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS	—	—	8 15	4/-
HASTINGS	—	—	8 15	5/-
ASHFORD	9 0*	3/-	7 10	3/6
CANTERBURY	7 55	4/-	7 5	5/-
DEAL	7 55	4/-	7 5	5/-
WALMER	7 55	4/-	7 5	5/-
RAMSGATE	7 55	4/-	7 5	5/-
MARGATE	7 55	4/-	7 5	5/-
HYTHE	9 0*	3/-	7 10	4/-
SANDGATE	0 0*	3/-	7 10	4/-
FOLKESTONE	9 0*	4/-	7 10	5/-
DOVER	9 0*	4/-	7 10	5/-
†ALDERSHOT	7 20 & 10 15	3/-	7 0 & 9 28	3/-
GRAVESEND	Any Train	1/6	Any Train	1/6
ROCHESTER	8 10	2/6	8 0 & 9 45	2/6
CHATHAM	8 12	2/6	8 0 & 9 45	2/6

* From Charing Cross and Cannon-street only. † Not calling at New Cross.

SPECIAL TRAINS for HAYES, BLACKHEATH, GREENWICH, GRAVESEND (for ROSHERVILLE GARDENS), &c.

SPECIAL NOTE.—The CHEAP FRIDAY, SATURDAY, or SUNDAY to MONDAY TICKETS to and from the SEA-SIDE, issued on May 27th, 28th, and 29th, will be available for the Return Journey on Wednesday, June 1st.

CHEAP RETURN TICKETS, available by CERTAIN Trains, are issued every SATURDAY from LONDON STATIONS to HASTINGS, ST. LEONARDS, HYTHE, and SANDGATE, and Holders may Return by certain Trains on 8th, 10th, 15th, or 17th day. Return Fare, 7s. (3rd Class).

CHEAP CONTINENTAL EXCURSIONS.

BOULOGNE.—Charing Cross, dep. 2.45 p.m., Cannon-street, 2.50 p.m. and London Bridge 2.53 p.m., Saturday, May 28th, 21s. (1st Cl.), 12s. 6d. (3rd Cl.). Returning at 4.30 p.m. on Whit Monday. Cheap Tickets will also be issued on May 27th, 28th, and 29th from Charing Cross and Cannon-street, 30s. (1st Cl.), 25s. (2nd Cl.), 19s. (3rd Cl.). These Tickets are available until June 2nd, and by certain Services only. On WHIT MONDAY, leaving Charing Cross at 10.0 a.m. Returning from Boulogne at 7.50 p.m. same day, or 12.30 a.m. following morning, 14s. (1st Cl.), 9s. (3rd Cl.).

PARIS.—Charing Cross and Cannon-street, dep. 9.0 a.m. and 10.0 a.m. from Charing Cross only, SATURDAY, May 28th, 1st and 2nd Cl. only. Charing Cross and Cannon-street, dep. 2.45 p.m. and 9.0 p.m., May 26th to 30th, 58s. 4d. (1st Cl.), 37s. 6d. (2nd Cl.), 30s. (3rd Cl.). Tickets available for 14 days.

CALAIS.—Charing Cross and Cannon-street, dep. 9.0 a.m., WHIT MONDAY, 15s. (1st Cl.), 10s. (3rd Cl.). Returning same day at 1.10 p.m. and 3.45 p.m., or 1.35 a.m. following morning. Cheap Tickets will also be issued from Charing Cross and Cannon-street, 31s. (1st Cl.), 26s. (2nd Cl.), 20s. (3rd Cl.). These Tickets are available until June 2nd, and by certain Services only. Cheap Tickets will also be issued on Saturday, May 28th, Charing Cross and Cannon-street, dep. 9.0 a.m. Returning at 1.30 a.m. on Tuesday, May 31st, 22s. (1st Cl.), 13s. 6d. (3rd Cl.).

BRUSSELS, viâ Calais or viâ Boulogne.—Charing Cross and Cannon-street, dep. 9.0 a.m. (viâ Calais), 2.45 p.m. (viâ Boulogne), or 9.0 p.m. (viâ Calais), 47s. 6d. (1st Cl.), 33s. 5d. (2nd Cl.), 22s. 2d. (3rd Cl., and by 2.45 or 9.0 p.m. Trains only), May 26th to 30th. Tickets available for 8 days.

BRUSSELS, viâ Ostend.—Charing Cross and Cannon-street, dep. 9.0 a.m., 5.35 p.m., and 9.0 p.m., 37s. 5d. (1st Cl.), 26s. 8d. (2nd Cl.), 19s. 11d. (3rd Cl., and by 9.0 p.m. Train only), May 26th to 30th. Tickets available for 8 days.

OSTEND. Charing Cross and Cannon-street, dep. 9.0 a.m., 5.35 p.m., and 9.0 p.m., 28s. 3d. (1st Cl.), 19s. 9d. (2nd Cl.), May 26th to 30th. Tickets available for 8 days.

The Continental Services will be as usual.

For full Particulars of the Return Times of the above Excursions, Alterations in Train Services, &c., see Bills and Holiday Programme.

ALFRED WILLIS,
Manager (Passenger Department).

GAZE'S

WHITSUNTIDE HOLIDAY TOURS.

SPECIAL PROGRAMME NOW READY,

With Summary of Arrangements for Independent Travel and Conducted Tours.

Tickets for all parts of Great Britain issued in advance over North Western, South Western, South Eastern, Brighton, Great Eastern, and other Railways; also Scotch and Irish Tours.

Cheap Continental Tickets: Calais, 10s., Boulogne, 9s., Brussels, 19s. 4d., Paris, 26s.; Cheap Round Trips, Belgium, Rhine, &c.

Pleasure Cruises: Scotland, Norwegian Fjords, &c.

Seaside Trips, including Travel and Hotel Expenses.

Conducted Tours: Paris, £3 13s., Antwerp and Brussels, £4 19s., Rhine, £8 8s., Switzerland, &c.

HENRY GAZE & SONS, Ltd.,

142, STRAND; 18, WESTBOURNE GROVE; PICCADILLY CIRCUS; and all Branches.

PARIS.—THE PICTURESQUE and CHEAP ROUTE. Viâ NEWHAVEN, DIEPPE, and ROUEN.

Two Special Express Services (Week-days and Sundays).

London to Paris (1 & 2) (1, 2, 3)				Paris to London (1 & 2) (1, 2, 3)
		a.m.	p.m.			a.m.	p.m.
Victoria ...	dep.	10.0	8.50	Paris	dep.	10.0	9.0
London Bridge...	,,	10.0	9.0			p.m.	a.m.
		p.m.	a.m.	London Bridge...	arr.	7.0	7.40
Paris	arr.	6.55	7.15	Victoria ...	,,	7.0	7.50

Fares—Single: First, 34s. 7d.; Second, 25s. 7d.; Third, 18s. 7d.
Return: First, 58s. 3d.; Second, 42s. 3d.; Third, 33s. 3d.

PARIS at WHITSUNTIDE.—SPECIAL CHEAP 14-DAY EXCURSION (1st and 2nd Class only), SATURDAY, May 28th, by the Day Service.—Leaving London Bridge and Victoria 10.0 a.m., and (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Class) by the Night Service, leaving Victoria 8.50 p.m., London Bridge 9.0 p.m. and Kensington (Addison-road), 8.5 p.m., on Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday and Monday, May 26th to 30th.

Fares, First, 39s. 3d.; Second, 30s. 3d.; Third, 26s.

For full particulars see handbills, or address Continental Manager, L. B. & S. C. Ry., London Bridge, S.E.

LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

COLLECTION, CONVEYANCE, AND DELIVERY OF PASSENGERS' LUGGAGE IN ADVANCE.

The Personal Luggage of Passengers will, on application, be COLLECTED, FORWARDED IN ADVANCE, AND DELIVERED at residence or hotel in North Wales, the English Lake District, Blackpool, Morecambe, and other Tourist Resorts at the

NOMINAL CHARGE OF 6d. PER PACKAGE,

which must be paid when the luggage is collected. No package must exceed 112 lbs. in weight.

Tickets dated beforehand to suit the convenience of passengers can be obtained at any of the Company's Stations and at the Receiving Offices, where also orders can be given for Collection of Luggage.

By availing themselves of this arrangement, passengers will be relieved of the trouble and inconvenience of looking after their luggage when travelling. In cases where apartments at destination have not been secured beforehand, the luggage can be addressed, "To be called for," at the Cloak Room of the arrival station.

FRED. HARRISON, General Manager.

LONDON, BRIGHTON, AND SOUTH COAST RAILWAY.

WHITSUNTIDE ARRANGEMENTS.—The Week-End Cheap Tickets issued on May 27th, 28th, and 29th, to and from London and the Seaside, will be available for return up to Wednesday, June 1st.

Special cheap 8, 10, 15, or 17 days' Return Tickets are issued every Saturday from London to the Seaside.

Extra Trains for the Isle of Wight. The 4.55 p.m. from Victoria and 5.0 p.m. from London Bridge will convey Passengers for the Isle of Wight on May 26th, 27th, and 28th.

Extra Late Train to Portsmouth from Victoria and London Bridge 9.20 p.m. on May 28th and 31st.

SPECIAL CHEAP RETURN TICKETS.—TO BRIGHTON.—EVERY SUNDAY 1st Class Day Tickets from Victoria at 10.45 a.m. and 12.15 p.m. Fare, 10s., or Pullman Car, 12s.

TO WORTHING.—EVERY SUNDAY 1st Class Day Tickets from Victoria, 10.45 a.m. Fare 11s., or including Pullman Car to Brighton, 13s

TO PORTSMOUTH AND THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—EVERY SATURDAY, from Victoria 1.0 p.m., Clapham Junction 1.5 p.m., Kensington (Addison-road) 12.45 p.m., and London Bridge 2.30 p.m. Returning the following Tuesday.

TO HASTINGS, ST. LEONARDS, BEXHILL, and EASTBOURNE.—EVERY WEEK-DAY. From Victoria 9.50 a.m., London Bridge 9.45 a.m., New Cross 9.50 a.m.; Kensington 9.10 a.m.; Clapham Junction 9.35 a.m. Fares 12s., 8s. 6d., 6s.

The Eastbourne Tickets are available for return the same or following day, and from Friday or Saturday to Monday.

TO EASTBOURNE.—EVERY SUNDAY Cheap Day Tickets from Victoria 11.0 a.m. Fare 13s. 6d., including Pullman Car.

SPECIAL CHEAP DAY EXCURSIONS.—WHIT-SUNDAY and MONDAY. From London Bridge and Victoria to Brighton, Worthing, Portsmouth, Isle of Wight, Tunbridge Wells, Seaford, Eastbourne, Bexhill, and Hastings; and on WHIT-TUESDAY to Brighton and Worthing.

For full Particulars of all above arrangements see Whitsuntide Programmes, or address Superintendent of the Line, L.B. & S.C. Ry., London Bridge, S.E.

MALOJA, Upper Engadine, Switzerland.

GROUNDS and VILLAS TO BE LET and SOLD.

The largest and most beautiful glaciers in the World. Nature's wonders. Season, beginning of June to end of September. The splendid Palace Hotel, Maloja, offers to its patrons all home comforts, combined with the charm of a climatic Alpine station, first-class highland tours as well as easy walks. 1,811 meters above sea. 350 beds, spacious reception rooms, concert and theatre halls. Milanese Scala Orchestral Concerts daily. Lift. Open-air pastimes, golf, cricket, lawn-tennis, riding and driving opportunities. Large cycle tracks. Sea sport. Oil motor boat on the delightful Maloja lake as well as rowing and sailing boats. Photographic studio. Baths and excellent sanitary arrangements. English and Roman Catholic services in their respective churches. Post and Telegraph Offices. Resident Physician. Highly recommended as a quiet resort early in the season, especially for families. Average temperature, 16 degrees C.

Prices for board and lodging from Fcs. 14 to 20, inclusive of attendance and light, as well as fire on cold days. Further particulars may be obtained from every Bookseller, "Europäisches Wanderbild Maloja," and from the Director

J. F. WALTHER-DENZ, Maloja Palace, Engadine, Switzerland.

ORIENT COMPANY'S PLEASURE CRUISE

by their

Steamship "LUSITANIA," 3,912 tons register.

From London 15th June, Leith 17th June.
To the finest FIORDS in NORWAY
and the NORTH CAPE (for Midnight Sun),
arriving back in London 11th July.
Other Cruises to follow.

High-class Cuisine, String Band, Electric Light, &c.

Managers { F. GREEN & CO. / ANDERSON, ANDERSON, & CO. } Head Offices: Fenchurch-avenue.

For passage apply to the latter firm at 5, Fenchurch-avenue, London, E.C.; or to the West End Branch Office, 16, Cockspur-street, S.W.

SIX GUINEAS.—GENEVA TOUR, nine days, extensions to Chamounix (Mont Blanc), Zermatt (Matterhorn), St. Gothard, Oberland, &c. Lecturers, Sir Robert Ball, Mr. Edward Whymper, Dr. Lunn. Departures weekly from May 10.—Details from Secretary, 5, Endsleigh-gardens, Euston, N.W.; 32, Piccadilly, W.; 47, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.; 3, Charing-cross, S.W.

"COOPER" CYCLES.

From £5 10. Competition Defied.

Latest design Frame, large Weldless Steel Tubes, Ball Bearings, Tangent Wheels, Brake, and Mud-guards, Cushion Tyres, £5 10; Pneumatic, £7 10; Ladies', with Dress and Gear Guards, from £6. Twelve months' warranty. Lists free. AGENTS WANTED

Wm. Cooper, 753, Old Kent Rd., London, S.E.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

A COMMANDING BUILDING, suitable for Club, Hotel, Restaurant, Theatre, Music Hall, Stores, Flats, Religious or Philanthropic Institution, or for Commercial Firms requiring large space. — OXFORD MANSION, Oxford Circus, London, W.—To be SOLD by TENDER, on 30th JUNE next, this well-known BUILDING, of striking elevation and fireproof construction, standing on nearly ¼ acre, with four frontages of 100 feet, each within a few yards of the new Oxford Circus Station of the Central London Railway. Six stories; floor space about 54,700 sup. feet; 153 rooms and large central hall and basement; artesian well. Portland lease 58 years.—For particulars and forms of Tender, apply to LEGGATT, RUBINSTEIN, & CO., Solicitors, 5, Raymond-buildings, Gray's Inn, London, W.C.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended.—Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 (Gerrard).

TATTERSALL'S THURSDAYS' SALES at ALBERT GATE.

Messrs. TATTERSALL beg to give notice that their THURSDAYS' SALES have commenced, and will be continued during the season.

SALES ON MONDAYS AND THURSDAYS.

VEVEY, Switzerland.—A very prettily-furnished FLAT, with good shady Garden. Excellent position. Three sitting-rooms, seven bedrooms. Gas and water laid on. Rent 12 guineas a month.—Apply for further particulars, BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY, 83, Ebury-street, S.W.

NORWAY AND BALTIC CRUISES.

The S.Y. VICTORIA sails JULY 2nd, for 25 days, to NORTH CAPE and NORWEGIAN FIORDS.

To be followed by other cruises on July 30th, and August 18th.
The only modern pleasure cruiser with large airy cabins.

For particulars, apply Manager, 4, Regent-street; GRINDLAY & CO., 55, Parliament-street; or any of THOS. COOK & SONS' Offices.

12 GUINEA NORWAY CRUISES from NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE—FORTNIGHTLY.

"MIDNIGHT SUN," 3,178 Tons, 3,500 H.P.

Finest YACHTING STEAMER afloat. NO UPPER BERTHS.
Sailings:—May 28; June 11, 25; July 9, 23; and August 6, 20.
Special Cruises, September 3rd and 17th.
Fares from 12 Guineas, including first-class table.

For itinerary, &c., apply to the PASSENGER AGENT, ALBION S.S. Co., Ltd., Mercantile Chambers, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, HONOLULU, FIJI, NEW ZEALAND, and ROUND THE WORLD.

CANADIAN PACIFIC ROUTE,

For berths or descriptive pamphlets, apply CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, or 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square, S.W.

MAPLE & CO

Brass Bedsteads

Brass Bedsteads

THE LARGEST STOCK IN THE WORLD

Thousands of Brass Bedsteads at from

38s 6d to £50

Purchased before recent advances

Buyers effect a great Saving

Brass Bedsteads

Brass Bedsteads

MAPLE & CO

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD LONDON

VINOLIA TOILET REQUISITES.

4d PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP
(For Family Use).

For Delicate, Sensitive, Irritable Skins.

The CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST reports:
"An ideal soap, delightfully perfumed."

1/- per box of 3 Tablets.

6d FLORAL VINOLIA SOAP
(For Private Use).

Keeps the Skin as soft as Velvet.

The MEDICAL NEWS reports:
"Beautifully emollient and softening to the skin."

1/6 per box of 3 Tablets.

10d TOILET VINOLIA SOAP
(OTTO)

Scented with Choice Otto of Rose Perfume.

Beautifies the Complexion.

The GENTLEWOMAN reports:
"Strongly recommended to keep the skin smooth and free from roughness."

2/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

6d BLONDEAU PERFUMES

Concentrated, Delicate, Pure.

*Vinolia Bouquet,	Rondeletia,
*Marequil,	Hyacinth,
*Jequilla,	Ylang Ylang
*Losaria,	Stephanotis
Wood Violet,	Opoponax,
White Heliotrope,	Patchouli,
Ess. Bouquet,	Musk,
Frangipanni,	Ambergris,
Jockey Club,	Amaryllis,
Maréchal Niel,	White Lilac,
Millefleur,	Narcissus,
White Rose,	Chypre,
Jasmin,	Violette de Parme,
Musk Rose,	Mignonette,
Honeysuckle,	Clematis,
New Mown Hay,	Wallflower,
Lily of the Valley,

Violet, | *Rhine Violets, | Peau d'Espagne.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/-, and 5/- per bottle.

*These perfumes are not supplied in the 6d. quality.

1/- VINOLIA HAIR WASH

DRY. Freshens and cleanses the Hair, and preserves it free from any oily moist appearance.

MOIST. Imparts a natural gloss to the Hair

1/- per Bottle.

Each in 3 odours: Portugal, Rose, and Violet.

1/1½ VINOLIA CREAM

For Itching, Face Spots, Sunburn, &c.

The LANCET reports:
"An emollient cream for the skin in eczema, rash, eruptions, &c."

1/1½, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

1/- VINOLIA POWDER

For Redness, Roughness, Toilet Nursery, &c.

The LADY'S PICTORIAL reports:
"Superseding the old-fashioned toilet powders which are apt to cause acne spots on the face by blocking up the pores of the skin."

In White, Pink, and Cream Tints.
1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.
6d

(STICKS AND FLAT CAKES.)
Causes no Blotches.
STICKS: Premier 6d., Toilet 1/-, 1/6, 2/6, Vestal 2/-.
FLAT CAKES: Premier 1/-, Toilet 2/-, Vestal 2/6.

6d LYPSYL.

A Coralline Emollient for Dry, Rough, Cracked, or Pallid Lips.

In Rose-Red and White Tints, 6d. and 1/- a Tube.

6d VINOLIA LAVENDER WATER.

Natural and Very Lasting.

Contains the finest Essential Oils, Concentrated, therefore the Most Economical.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, and 3/6.

2/- VINOLIA TOILET WATER.

This is prepared with delicate, refreshing perfumes, and is a most exquisite and delightful preparation to use either clear or in water for the Toilet or in the bath.

2s. per Bottle.

6d PREMIER VINOLIA DENTIFRICE

Aromatic, Tonic, Refreshing, Preservative.
Keeps the Teeth Ivory White.
Premier in Round Box and Glass Bottle, 6d.
English—2/6.
American—1/6.

6d VINOLIA TOOTH SOAP.

An exquisite preparation for the Teeth. Delightfully perfumed and free from any injurious ingredients.

In Round Metal Box, 6d.

6d VINOLIA TOOTH PASTE.

Delicately Perfumed.

Whitens and Cleanses the Teeth, without in any way injuriously affecting the dental structures.

In Collapsable Tube, 6d.

6d BLONDEAU Inexhaustible Lavender SMELLING SALTS.

These Smelling Salts are of exceptional Strength and most Refreshing. They are agreeably scented, the pleasant odour of Lavender being very pronounced.

6d. and 9d. per Bottle.

6d VINOLIA EAU DE COLOGNE.

Fragrant. Refreshing.
As fine as can possibly be made.

The "Court Circular" reports:
"Vinolia Eau de Cologne we consider is absolutely unequalled for strength, purity, and delicacy of aroma."

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/3, and 5/6.

3d per 2-oz. Packet. VINOLIA VIOLET POWDER.

Sanitary. Antiseptic. Soothing.

Specially prepared for Toilet and Nursery use.

In 2-oz. and ¼-lb. Packets, 3d. & 6d.
In ¼-lb. Tins, 6d.
In ½-lb. Tins, 9d.

VINOLIA COMPANY, Ltd., MALDEN CRESCENT, LONDON, N.W.

The Purest and the Nicest.

Hovis Bread

Perfectly Self Digestive.

Hovis Bread is baked and delivered daily by all good class Bakers in the British Isles; Hovis Biscuits are sold by most Grocers and Bakers; or 6d. and 1s. Samples of Bread and Biscuits will be sent on receipt of stamps by THE HOVIS-BREAD FLOUR CO., LTD., Millers, Macclesfield.

POSITIVELY PRODUCES HAIR.

STOPS IT FALLING OUT.

KEEPS IT ITS NATURAL COLOUR.

PREVENTS IT GOING GREY.

BEST FOR BEARDS AND MOUSTACHES.

"TATCHO"

[THE "GEORGE R. SIMS" HAIR RESTORER.]

"TATCHO" is sold by all Chemists and Hairdressers throughout the World in Bottles, 2s. 9d. and 5s., or can be had post-free direct from the office, 11, Farringdon-avenue, E.C., on receipt of Postal Order for 3s. or 5s. 4d. Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "George R. Sims" Hair Restorer Company, and crossed Union Bank.

"GEORGE R. SIMS" HAIR RESTORER COMPANY, Ltd., 11, Farringdon-avenue, City, E.C.

GROWS BEAUTIFUL BOUNTIFUL HAIR.

MAKES WOMEN'S TRESSES SOFT AND SILKEN.

A DELIGHTFUL HAIR WASH AND TONIC.

BEST FOR THE TOILET TABLE.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH

Is the BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE in the WORLD.

PREVENTS THE DECAY OF THE TEETH.

Renders the Teeth Pearly White.

IS PERFECTLY HARMLESS AND DELICIOUS TO THE TASTE.

Is Partly Composed of Honey, and Extracts from Sweet Herbs and Plants.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World.

2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER,

only put in Glass Jars, Price 1s.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from Falling off.

Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.

Being delicately perfumed, it leaves no Unpleasant Odour.

IS NOT A DYE.

Should be in every House where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST OR HAIRDRESSER FOR

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

Mülhens' "Rhine Violets"

4711 TRADE MARK.

READ THIS From the "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS."

. . . One cannot but feel eternally indebted to Mr. Ferd. Mülhens for having invented so altogether delicious and delightful a perfume as the "Rhine Violets." . . . Little wonder indeed that this king of scents should be imitated as widely and piratically as it assuredly is, for no essence of modern times has approached its well-merited fame and favour. . . . Rhine Violets perfume is one thing and Mülhens' "Rhine Violets" (as sold by all good Chemists) is another, and if all who have tested the fragrant and delicious essences which bear this inventor's name would insist on seeing it on the labels, there would be fewer ensuing disillusionments. . . . Mülhens has, in fact, discovered and perfected the following special perfume of "Rhine Violets" — "Maréchal Niel," "Rhine Gold," and "Malmaison," and without the magic prefix of his name, it may be taken that all such so-called scents are but "base-born counterfeits." . . .

3/-, 5/6, 9/-, 20/- per bottle.

"Rhine Violet" Sachets, 2/6 each. "Rhine Violet" Soap, 2/6 per tablet, or 7/- per box of 3 tablets.

Of most dealers in first-class Perfumes, or from

4711 Depot, 62, NEW BOND STREET, W.

FARADAY & SON's

Electric Light Fittings

New Designs

(in Classic and Renaissance) for Season '98

2 & 3 BERNERS ST. LONDON W

WATER SUPPLY.

Send for Illustrated List, No. 49, of

JOHN BLAKE'S Patent Self-Acting HYDRAULIC RAMS

For Raising Water for the Supply of Towns, Villages, Irrigation, Railway Stations, Mansions, Fountains, Farms, &c.
No cost for Motive Power, which is obtained from a Stream of Water passing through the Ram. No Oiling or Packing required. Made in Sizes to raise from 300 to 400,000 gallons per day. Will force to a Height of 800 feet.

Fig. A.—This Ram lifts part of the same water that works it. (Engraved from photo. of Ram which raises 250,000 gallons per day of 24 hours to medium heights, with good working fall.)

This view represents a Ram worked by impure river water, whilst pumping pure water from a well or spring and forcing it to a small reservoir on the hill, at an elevation of 532 ft. and a distance of one mile, from which reservoir the water is gravitated for fire extinguishing and general requirements of mansion, stables, farm, and village.

Fig. B.—This Ram, whilst worked by a stream of impure water, will pump clean water from a well or spring.

TESTIMONIALS.

From A. FIDLER, Esq., Assoc.M.Inst.C.E., Engineer to the Corporation of Blackburn.

Municipal Offices, Blackburn, July 2nd, 1896.

DEAR SIR,—After having had the New Hydraulic Rams at Guide working without intermission for over six months, I am now able to give you the results of the test. A pair of your Rams which we fixed in 1886 to force 16,000 gallons of water per day for the supply of the district of Guide, above our highest reservoir, pumped up much more than that quantity, and worked well until six months ago, when the consumption of water in the district having largely increased, they were superseded by a pair of your latest Patent Rams to raise 50,000 gallons per day. From a test I have recently made, I find their maximum lifting power exceeds 84,000 GALLONS PER DAY, forced through 1,295 yards of delivery pipe, against a head of 190 feet (including pipe friction). From another test made I found that both Rams supplied with 327,816 gallons per day, with a working fall of 32 feet 3 inches, pumped 47,188 gallons per day to a height of 175 feet (including pipe friction), giving 78 PER CENT. OF EFFICIENCY. The new Rams have worked well and continuously, and, having NO METALLIC CLACKS OR VALVES, their action is smooth and without shock. They are extremely simple, and readily adjusted to vary their lifting power. It requires no skill to keep them in order, or put in new working parts, when that comes to be necessary. Considering that the waste driving water from the Rams flows into a lower service reservoir, a very cheap system of supplying the high-level district is thus utilised. The work done by you is of high-class, and very creditable to you.

From COLONEL A. EGERTON, Comptroller and Treasurer of the Household of H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught.

Buckingham Palace, May 14th, 1897.

COLONEL ALFRED EGERTON has much pleasure in acquainting Mr. John Blake that the Hydraulic Ram which he supplied to the Duke of Connaught, at Bagshot Park, two years ago, has continued to work most satisfactorily.

From Messrs. WINTERTON & SONS, Estate Agents, Walton Warren, Burton-on-Trent.

May 25th, 1897.

DEAR SIR,—We are pleased to report as highly satisfactory the working of the Patent "B" Ram which you fixed, to our order, in 1895, at Oaklands Farm, Walton-on-Trent, for Richard Ratcliffe, Esq., of Stanford Hall. The Ram is worked by a small stream of impure water, and forces spring water through 1,267 yards of delivery pipe to a storage tank, 102 feet above the Ram, from which tank you laid a gravitation main and branches, having a total length of 3,645 yards; also 14 cattle troughs, and supply pipe to farm yard, with various draw-off cocks, ball valves, and other fittings. We are pleased to say that you carried out the work to our entire satisfaction, and the Ram has gone well without any cost for repairs. The Ram works very well, and we are perfectly satisfied with the work.

Yours truly, WINTERTON & SONS.

JOHN BLAKE, Limited, Oxford-street Works, ACCRINGTON, LANCASHIRE.

Bulmer's Cider

Guaranteed Pure Juice of the Apple.

Price Lists and Testimonials from

H. P. BULMER & CO., Hereford

or of Wine Merchants Everywhere.

NICOLE FRÈRES POLYPHON MUSICAL BOX

Is the greatest novelty of the age. It plays to perfection any selections of secular or sacred music desired. It is not a toy but a delightful musical instrument. All Dealers, or write for No. 50 Catalogue, post free. From 16s. 6d. to 50 Guineas.

NICOLE FRÈRES Ltd., 21, Ely Place London, E.C. Established 1815.

REAL GERMAN HOLLOW GROUND

KROPP RAZOR

Black Handle 5/6 | Pair, Ivory Handles, in Russia Leather Case, 21/- | Kropp's Duplex Strop 7/6
Ivory Handle 7/6 | Kropp's Strop Paste ...6d.

☞ Write for Pamphlet, "Shaver's Kit and Outfit." Post free.

Wholesale: OSBORNE, GARRETT, & CO., LONDON, W.

Solid Silver, £4 4s.

Substantially made afternoon tea set on approval. If you decide within two weeks that you do not want it, the money will be returned. Every piece is the highest strength consistent with neatness, and will last a life-time. English Hall Marked.

Delivered safe and secure on receipt of

£4 4s.

WATCHMAKERS' ALLIANCE LTD.,
227, Regent-st., & 184, Oxford-st., London.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT

PURELY VEGETABLE, Perfectly Harmless. Will reduce from two to five pounds per week: acts on the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into Fat. Sold by Chemists. Send stamp for pamphlet.

Botanic Medicine Co., 3, New Oxford-street, London, W.C.

LIQUEURS OF THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE.

These delicious Liqueurs, which have come so much into public favour on account of their wonderful properties of aiding Digestion and preventing Dyspepsia, can now be had of all the principal Wine and Spirit Merchants, and all good Hotels and Restaurants throughout the Kingdom.
Sole Consignee: W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

H. SAMUEL'S WATCHES.

In Wear all over the World.

A large saving in price as compared with usual London charges. Stamped 18 carat gold, keyless, centre seconds chronograph, lever movement, extra jewelled, chronometer balance, ten years' warranty.

H. SAMUEL'S Price, £7. 7s.

H. SAMUEL'S NEW WATCH PAMPHLET contains illustrations and descriptions of Watches and Jewellery in Gold and Silver, also Clocks, Plate, &c., together with many letters of approval from purchasers. This pamphlet will be sent to any address, gratis and post free, on receipt of name and address

H. SAMUEL,
Central Watch Depot, Manchester.

USE ONLY

BLAISDELL PENCILS

SELF-POINTING.
ALL COLOURS. ALL GRADES.
NO WASTE. BEST LEADS.

Black Lead 1d. & 2d. Coloured Crayons 2d. & 3d.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Sample Box of 5 Pencils 1s., Free by Post in the U.K.

BLAISDELL PENCILS, Ltd., 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

DENTAKON

For Cleaning

ARTIFICIAL TEETH,

EITHER

Gold, Platinum, or Vulcanite,

Deodorizing, Disinfecting, removing Grease, keeping them Bright and Clean as when new.

ALL WEARERS SHOULD TRY IT.

Recommended by many eminent Dentists.

In Boxes, 1s. 6d., through any Chemist, or Post free from Maker,

C. LOWE, Chemist, Surbiton, S.W.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide (259 pgs.), 3d., "How to open respectably £20 to £2,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., Euston-rd., Ldn. Hairdressers fitted.—H. MYERS.

HASTINGS.

A NEW BRANCH has been opened by

Achille Serre

HIGH-CLASS DYER & CLEANER,

At 38, ROBERTSON STREET.

ALSO AT

HEAD WEST END BRANCH: 263, OXFORD STREET, W.

Works: WHITE POST LANE, HACKNEY WICK, E.

WRITE FOR PRICE LIST.

GRAHAM & BANKS

(FROM JACKSON & GRAHAM).

SUGGESTIONS and ESTIMATES free for all kinds of

DECORATING and FURNISHING

COMPLETE FURNISHING ESTIMATES for £500, £700, £1,000, and upwards.

The New ALBUM of PHOTOGRAPHS contains 500 Illustrations and Prices of Furniture, Decorations, Chimney Pieces, Upholstery, &c. This forms the most Artistic and Comprehensive Catalogue ever issued, and should be in the hands of all who are about to Decorate or Furnish their Homes. Sent post free on application.

445, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

CLARKE'S

"CRICKLITE" LAMPS

For burning Clarke's Patent Double Wick Wax Lights.

The Cricklite Lamp and Light Co.

Respectfully invite the attention of Visitors to London to the beautiful

EXHIBIT OF THEIR NEW "CRICKLITE" LAMPS

AT 75, Regent Street (Next door to St. James's Hall)

now attracting so much attention as the Light of the Future for Decoratively Lighting Dining and Drawing Rooms.

SILK SHADES IN GREAT VARIETY.

SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY HOUSES.

CLARKE'S New Patent Double-Wick

WAX LIGHTS

Specially for burning in the

"CRICKLITE" LAMPS

1/- per Box of 12 Lights. Burn 5 hours each.

Always the same height, and absolutely safe. Lamps from 2/6 to 10 guineas each.

Trade Mark: "CRICKLITE."

SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY HOUSES.

CLARKE'S New Patent

WAX LIGHTS

With Double Wicks

Made specially for burning in the

"CRICKLITE" LAMPS

12 Lights in a Box. Burn 5 hours each. 1/- per Box

Always the same height and absolutely safe. Lamps from 2/6 to 10 guineas each.

Trade Mark: "CRICKLITE."

Two to Seven Lamps on One Standard, 18 in. high, in richly cut Glass or Silver-plated, with beautiful Silk Shades. No trouble in trimming. They are absolutely safe, may be left burning without any attention the whole time, are very economical in use, and take up very little space on the table.

All Letters should be addressed to 75, Regent St., W., or the Manufacturers,

CLARKE'S PYRAMID AND FAIRY LIGHT COMPANY, LTD.

CRICKLEWOOD, LONDON, N.W.

Notice. A Supplementary Show Room is Open until the end of October at 156, Regent St. (corner of Beak St.)

N.B.—SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR USE IN COUNTRY HOUSES AND ABROAD.

"Quality and price being equal it behoves all patriotic Englishmen to buy the produce of their own Colonies, rather than that of Foreign Countries."

Joshua's

PURE

Australian Brandy

The LANCET says:—"It is sound and honest, and of a fragrance, purity, and quality second to none."

	Bottle.
JOSHUA'S "ONE STAR" ...	4/-
JOSHUA'S "THREE STAR" ...	4/6
JOSHUA'S "SPECIAL" ...	5/6

OF STORES, GROCERS, AND WINE MERCHANTS.

JOSHUA'S "SPECIAL," bottled in Melbourne, bears the Stamp of H.M. Government of Victoria, guaranteeing it the PURE PRODUCT OF THE GRAPE.

Importers: JOSHUA BROTHERS, 26, MARK LANE, LONDON, E.C.

THE PATENT "RIGID-CURVE" STROP.

FOR THE HOLLOW GROUND RAZOR.

An indispensable addition to the dressing-bag of military men, clergymen, barristers, actors, men of business, and all whose professions render close, rapid, and repeated shaving a necessity. This Strop is quite different to all others, men to whom easy shaving is a boon are astonished at the solid comfort to be got out of shaving with a razor sharpened on the "Rigid-Curve," a Strop which invariably produces a keener edge than has hitherto been possible by any known means.

Price 3s. 6d., carriage paid. Money returned any time within a month if not approved.

A. HOWARTH, 53, Penn-road, Wolverhampton.

Learning to write with the pen is a wearisome task. . .

But nothing can be simpler or more delightful than learning to manipulate

THE . . .

YOST

. . . Typewriter,

AND THE BENEFITS TO BE DERIVED FROM ITS USE ARE TESTIFIED TO BY AN ARMY OF PEOPLE

INVALUABLE to the Clergyman, the Judge, the Lawyer, the Editor, the Physician, the Business Man, and ALL WHO HAVE MUCH WRITING TO DO.

Sent on One Month's Hire, or Free Trial for Seven Days.

The YOST Typewriter Co., Ltd.,
50, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

For Longhand, Shorthand, Pen-and-Ink Drawing, Music-Writing, indeed, whenever a Pen is necessary, use only a "SWAN."

Adds immeasurably to Celerity and Comfort in writing. Of all Pens most famous.

Made in 3 sizes at
10s. 6d.
16s. 6d.
25s.
UP TO £18 18s.
POST FREE.

Send for Complete . . Illustrated Catalogue

MABIE, TODD & BARD,
DEPT. C. I.
93, Cheapside, London, E.C.
95a, RECENT ST., W., and 3, EXCHANGE ST., MANCHESTER.

GLEBE SUGAR REFINING Co., GREENOCK.
GLASGOW. & St GEORGE'S. HOUSE, LONDON, E.C.

MARTYRS TO INDIGESTION, KIDNEY TROUBLES, RHEUMATISM GOUT, &c., &c.

AVOID BEETROOT SALTS!

—

USE ONLY 'GLEBE' SUGAR.

CARTER 6A NEW CAVENDISH ST. PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON.

ONLY ADDRESS OF ORIGINAL CARTER
LITERARY MACHINE.

For holding book, lamp, meals, &c., in any position over an easy chair, bed, or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. Prices from 17/6

INVALID FURNITURE.
ADJUSTABLE COUCHES and BEDS from £1. 10/-

Bed Lift £3. 10/-
Reclining Boards, 25/-
Walking Machines
Portable W.C.'s.
Electric Bells,
Urinals, &c.
Air & Water Beds.

Bed Rests 7/6
Leg Rests 10/-
Crutches 10/6
Bed Baths 12/6
Commodes, £1. 5/-

Carrying Chairs from £1.
Breakfast in Bed Tables from 30/-

Self-Propelling Chairs from £2

BATH CHAIRS FROM £1. 5/-

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES POST FREE.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, NEW CAVENDISH ST. Portland-pl. London, W.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.
All Pain, Swelling, and Inflammation disappear after two to three doses of Dr LIND'S (M.D.) Specific
"LINDINE."
GUARANTEED HARMLESS. NEVER FAILS. Price 5s. per Bottle, with full directions and Advice, from the Sole Proprietor: O. E. HORN, D.Sc., Bournemouth.

BEST & SAFEST DENTIFRICE
SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS AND PERFUMERS IN ELEGANT CRYSTAL TOILET CASKET
PRICE 2/6.
ALSO IN PATENT METALLIC BOX
PRICE 1/-

PRESERVE YOUR TEETH
BY USING THE
OS TOOTH BLOCK
Established 20 years
OVER 3000 TESTIMONIALS

IMPERIAL ROVER CYCLES

HIGHEST CLASS MACHINES. NOTED FOR STABILITY.

ANY MAKE OF TYRES FITTED TO ORDER.

Fully Illustrated Price List of these celebrated Machines Free on application to

THE ROVER CYCLE CO. LTD. (LATE J. K. STARLEY & CO. LTD.)
METEOR WORKS, COVENTRY.

LONDON { 4 and 5, HOLBORN VIADUCT, E.C.; 157, NEW BOND ST. W.
19 and 20, OLD BAILEY, E.C. (Repairs Department)

VALKYRIE CYCLES

HIGH-GRADE ONLY.

THE SPRINGFIELD CYCLE CO., Ltd., Sandiacre, nr. Nottingham.
London Depot: 38. Shaftesbury Avenue, W.

DUNLOP TYRES.

WHO WAS. . .

RALEIGH?

THE MOST FAMOUS MAN OF QUEEN ELIZABETH'S TIME.

WHAT ARE. . .

RALEIGHS?

The BEST BICYCLES of Queen Victoria's Time.

Catalogue and all particulars
FROM

THE RALEIGH CYCLE CO., LTD.,
NOTTINGHAM.

HIGHEST GRADE CYCLES.

Royal Enfield

ENFIELD CYCLE CO., Ltd.
REDDITCH.

LONDON—6c, Sloane-street, W.
DUBLIN—73, Grafton-street.
CITY AGENCY.—Benethink & Co., Cheapside.
* Send for Catalogue.*

"The Old Favourite."

MAX GREGER'S CARLOWITZ

SAFEST,
SOUNDEST
Dinner Wine.

PURE
HUNGARIAN BURGUNDY.

From 15/- per doz.

Of all Wine Merchants and Grocers.

See that every cork bears the brand 'Max Greger.' Without it the wine is not genuine.

SPIERS & POND'S STORES

QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C. (Opposite St. Paul's Station, L. C. & D. Rly.)

STATIONERY DEPARTMENT.

EVERY-DAY WRITING PAPER.

SPIERS & POND LTD
LONDON
(Facsimile of Watermark).

Ashville Cream Laid, size 7 by 4½, price per ream, 1s. 7d.
Woodville ,, ,, ,, 3s. 10d.
Bellville, Vellum Laid, unglazed, size 7 by 4½, price per ream, 2s. 10d.
Netherville, ,, ,, ,, 3s. 6d.
Envelopes to correspond, per ream, 1s. 9d.
STAMPING FROM OWN DIE IN COLOUR.

Commercial Stationery, Private Stationery, of every Description.

Priced Sample Book on Application, also Price Book, No. 51, published 2nd May (1,000 pages), Illustrated, Free on Application.

WATER ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM DISEASE GERMS, BY USING THE

BERKEFELD FILTER.

Full Illustrated Price List and Testimonials free on application.

FILTER H. AS SKETCH, 42s.

SMALLER SIZE, 30s.

Extract from the Special Report to the British Medical Journal on "The Relative Efficiency of Water Filters," by Drs. Sims Woodhead and Cartwright Wood, Jan. 22nd, 1898. "Experiments were carried out with the Filter H., an exceedingly good model which seems to subserve the functions of a Filter better than any we have yet seen described. . . . The output is so large that there is no reason why such Filters should not supply sufficient water for all household requirements. These Berkefeld Filters afford complete protection against the communication of waterborne disease."—Offices and Showrooms:—

THE BERKEFELD FILTER CO., Ltd., 121, Oxford-street, London, W.
City Depot: W. SCHACHT & CO., 26, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.

WIRE CYCLE SADDLE.

WOODS' PATENT.

AN IDEAL SADDLE FOR LADY OR GENTLEMAN.

NO MORE CHAFING.

SADDLE SORENESS ENTIRELY PREVENTED.

One Month's Trial Allowed.

Fitted with Felt or Leather Cover.

Prices and Testimonials on application to

THE LONGFORD WIRE CO., LTD., WARRINGTON.

Showrooms—61. ST. MARY AXE, LONDON. (Please mention this Journal.

The List of Public applications closes on or before WEDNESDAY, the 25th inst. at FOUR p.m., for both Town and Country.

KALANTAROFF (BAKU) OIL COMPANY, LIMITED.

Capital £50,000, in 50,000 shares of £1 each. Of which £30,000 will be allotted to the vendor, £15,000 are now issued to provide working capital, and £5,000 are held in reserve. 15,000 shares are now offered for subscription at par. Payable as follows:—2s. 6d. per share on application, 2s. 6d. per share on allotment, 5s. per share in two months, and 5s. per share in four months, and the balance of 5s. per share in six months from date of allotment.

DIRECTORS.

Joseph Browne-Martin, Esq. (Deputy Chairman Westminster Trust, Limited), 36, Victoria-street, S.W., Chairman.

J. W. Hughes, Esq. (Messrs. Hughes, Chemery, & Co.), 118, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C. (Director of the Harvey Steel Company of Great Britain, Limited).

T. W. Noad, Esq. (Messrs. Chas. Taylor & Co.), 9, Fenchurch-avenue, E.C.

Hon. W. Rowley, 26, Chester-street, W.

C. D. Carleton Smith, Esq., Tavistock Brewery, Tavistock.

BANKERS.—Messrs. Brown, Janson, & Co., 32, Abchurch-lane, E.C.

SOLICITORS.—Messrs. Minchin & Co., 22 & 23, Laurence Pountney-lane, E.C.

AUDITORS.—Messrs. Curtis Thomson, Lucey, Hicks, & Co., 15, George-st., E.C.

SECRETARY.—W. S. Morgan.

OFFICES (pro tem).—118, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire and work the leasehold property (marked "Kalantaroff," in the plan accompanying prospectus) in the district of Sabunchi, in the oil fields of Baku, Russia, forming part of the plot marked 68 in the official plan, and having an area of about four acres. It lies near the centre of a productive and famous oil field, and is in the vicinity of wells giving a large production. On its boundaries are properties having productive wells belonging to the well-known firm of Messrs. Nobels, and Messrs. Rothschilds (Caspian Naptha Company). The property is within a few hundred yards of the Sabunchi Railway Station.

KALANTAROFF (BAKU) OIL COMPANY, Limited.

Mr. A. Klein, Sworn Broker, of Baku, writes from Baku, January 8th, 1898:—

"The Russian Naptha Company, whose property is immediately adjoining this, have a well not more than 35 sagens (81 yards) from where our No. 2 is being commenced, and at a depth of 100 sagens (233 yards) it spouted yesterday unexpectedly about 5,000 poods, and this afternoon it was expected every moment to spout again. They were preparing to pump it, and expect to get at least 5,000 poods, perhaps more. They have also another well under boring between this and our No. 2, which at 154 sagens (357 yards) has reached the productive naptha sands, presumably the second strata, with much gas, and it is expected to be ready shortly. I believe this property will prove most valuable, and it is also the general opinion here."

The engines, boilers, and derricks, necessary for boring the first two wells (No. 1 and No. 2) having already been provided and erected, the work of boring well No. 2 is being carried on night and day, and it is expected that the first productive oil strata will be reached in about three months' time.

From a report of the Superintendent of the Works dated 31st March, the first layer of naptha sand was struck in well No. 2 at a depth of 275 ft., and at a depth of 289 ft the grey sand strata was entered upon, and on April 14th at a depth of 330 feet in the grey sand there were appearances of gas, which is considered a very favourable indication. The boring at that depth was 2 ft. in diameter.

KALANTAROFF (BAKU) OIL COMPANY, Limited.

Mr. Boverton Redwood, F.R.S.E., F.I.C., Assoc.Inst.C.E., has reported upon the property (see full prospectus) and says:—

"The property is very favourably situated, being surrounded by good oil lands, and in my opinion is practically certain to furnish good results on development. I therefore think highly of it, and confidently recommend it as a desirable acquisition."

Taking the production of the average of the existing oil wells of the whole of the Baku territory at 3,000 poods per well per day or 1,095,000 poods per well per annum, equal to about 17,700 tons and the cost of production at 1½ kopeeks per pood, or 2s. a ton, and a price at 8 kopecks per pood (the present price being 9 kopecks per pood), the profits of each successful well would be about £7,000 per annum. By the terms of the lease one fourth of the output will be paid to the lessor as a royalty, which Mr. Boverton Redwood states, "is moderate considering the position of the land;" (some of the wells of the district pay 30 to 50 per cent. royalty) so that three-fourths of the output would belong to the Company.

On this basis, if the Company should sink twenty wells, which Mr. Boverton Redwood estimates within the probable number, the profits which should accrue would admit of the payment of large dividends.

It is reported that on one of the Arafeloff properties in the same district one well has produced 13,000 poods daily, or more than four times the above estimate for one well, and that another property in the same district, of only 1,280 square sagens in extent, has produced for the last three years an average of 4,000,000 poods a year, or about 64,000 tons.

The petroleum industry in Russia has greatly developed of late years largely owing to the extension and constantly increasing demand for astatki or petroleum residuum, which, from 3¼ kopecks per pood in 1891 has risen to its present price of 9 kopecks, being used as fuel for railways, ironworks, factories, and steamers.

The following contract has been entered into:—An Agreement dated 19th May, 1898, between the said John William Hughes of the one part, and this Company of the other part. This agreement provides for the payment to the Vendor of the sum of £30,000 as purchase money, payable wholly in fully paid Shares of the Company, and for the repayment to him out of working capital of the amount expended by him in the installation of machinery and the prosecution of development work since the date of the lease (7th June, 1897), and of a sum advanced as a prepayment on account of royalties to the Lessor, and of other expenses he has paid in Russia, all which sums do not at the date hereof exceed the sum of £4,200.

Mr. Boverton Redwood's report on this property, and copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and the agreement referred to in the full prospectus can be inspected at the Offices of the Company, and full prospectuses and forms of application can be obtained at the Bankers' and at the Offices of the Company.

21/- Post Free The "Osoezi" Saddle 21/- Post Free

Is at once hygienic, anatomically correct, and pressure upon the perineum is avoided. No Saddle-Soreness, even after the hardest and most continuous riding.

Suitable for Ladies or Gentlemen. Easily adaptable to any Machine.

A. W. GAMAGE, LTD.,

126 to 129, Holborn, E.C.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £30,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up, £300,000. Total funds, over £1,500,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

BIRKBECK BANK (Estab. 1851), Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, London. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, on the minimum monthly balances when not below £100.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK with particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

H. HALFORD and COMPANY,

70 and 71, Palmerston Buildings, Old Broad Street, London.

ESTABLISHED 1869.

Business in Stocks and Shares at close prices.

Dealings reported by wire if required.

Prompt Settlements.

Thousands of Testimonials from Clients.

Americans and Canadians a Speciality. Also Westralians and Kaffirs.

Lists of Closing Prices gratis.

Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

NO CONNECTION WITH ANY OTHER FIRM.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No Member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.

A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

MASSAGE AT HOME.

The MATTO CHAIN

Used by Sandow and all the leading Athletes Cyclists, &c.

Recommended by the Medical Profession.

For Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, and all Nervous Disorders. Prevents Obesity.

Price 7s. 6d. each. By Post, 4d. extra. From all Chemists.

MATTO LIMITED, 32 & 34, Clerkenwell-rd. London, E.C.

THREE GOLD MEDALS.

Exquisite Models. Perfect Fit. Guaranteed Wear.

THE Y & N PATENT DIAGONAL SEAM CORSET

Will not split in the Seams nor tear in the Fabric. Made in White, Black, and all the fashionable colours and Shades in Italian Cloth, Satin, and Coutil, 4/11, 5/11, 6/11, 7/11 per pair and upwards.

CAUTION.—Every genuine Y & N Corset is stamped.

Sold by Drapers and Ladies' Outfitters in the United Kingdom and Colonies

BEST AND SAFEST NATURAL APERIENT.

Hunyadi János

"The Prototype of all Bitter Waters."
THE LANCET.

CAUTION.

Every Bottle bears the Signature o the Proprietor, ANDREAS SAXLEHNER.

The Subscription List is NOW OPEN, and will CLOSE for London and for the Country on or before THURSDAY, 26th May.

THE BRITISH HYDRAULIC JOINTING CO., LTD.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893.

CAPITAL, £1,200,000, All in Ordinary Shares of £1 each. ISSUE OF 800,000 SHARES, payable 2s. 6d. on Application, 2s. 6d. on Allotment, 5s. on the 29th June, 5s. on the 29th August, and 5s. on the 29th October, 1898, of which £100,000 will be set apart as Working Capital.

DIRECTORS.

The Right Hon. The Earl of Crawford, F.R.S., Hon. M.I.M.E., 2, Cavendish-square, W., Chairman.
Walter H. Maudslay (Chairman and Managing Director of Maudslay, Sons, & Field, Ltd.).
Sir James Pender, Bart., M.P. (Director of the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company, Ltd.).
Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. Bevan Edwards, C.B., K.C.M.G., M.P. (late Royal Engineers).
W. Bromley Davenport, M.P. (Chairman Elswick Cycles Company, Ltd.).

BANKERS.—Lloyds Bank, Ltd., 222, Strand, London, and other Branches.

SOLICITORS.—Maddisons, 1, King's Arms-yard, London, E.C.

AUDITORS.—Deloitte, Dever, Griffiths & Co., 4, Lothbury, E.C.

PATENT AGENTS.—Boult & Wade, 111, Hatton Garden, E.C.

BROKERS.

London:—Brunton, Bourke, & Co., 18, Finch-lane, E.C.
Manchester:—Charlton, Illingworth & Hughes, 6, Bank-street.
Newcastle-on-Tyne:—J. Straker Wilson, 23, Grey-street.

CONSULTING ENGINEERS.—Johnson & Phillips, Victoria Works, Charlton, Kent.

ENGINEER.—Chas. Thomas Crowden.

SECRETARY AND REGISTERED OFFICES.—Thos. W. Mills, F.I.S., 9, Pall Mall, London, S.W.

BRITISH HYDRAULIC JOINTING COMPANY, LIMITED.—Schedule of Patents.

C. T. CROWDEN'S BRITISH PATENTS.

No. 22,721. Nov. 27, 1895.—Improvements in or relating to tubular joints.
No. 7,158. April 1, 1896.—Improvements in frame joints for cycles and other tubular constructions.
No. 13,577. June 10, 1896.—Improvements in or relating to the manufacture of wheel hubs and similar tubular articles.
No. 6,540. March 12, 1897.—Improvements in or relating to the making of tubular joints.
No. 27,350. Nov. 22, 1897.—Tube joints.
No. 503. Jan. 7, 1898.—Tube expanders.

W. C. JOHNSON'S BRITISH PATENTS.

No. 4,449. 1897.—Joining together tubes and tubular bodies.
No. 6,664. 1897.—Means and apparatus for joining together tubes or tubular bodies.
No. 9,014. 1897.—(Johnson and Pearson). Cycle frames.
No. 13,339. 1897.—Tube joints made by fluid pressure.
No. 13,340. 1897.—Screw clamping press.
No. 20,451. 1897.—Combined press and fluid pressure intensifying apparatus.
No. 20,452. 1897.—Packing appliances for use in making tube joints by fluid pressure.
No. 21,840. 1897.—Generating fluid pressure for tube jointing or embossing, stamping of sheet metals, and such like operations.

FOREIGN PATENTS.

C. T. CROWDEN'S "TUBULAR JOINT."

FRANCE ... ... No. 260,681. Dated October 24, 1896. Issued.
BELGIUM ... ... No. 124,210. ,, October 26, 1896. ,,

C. T. CROWDEN'S "PRESS."

BELGIUM ... ... No. 134,281. Dated March 8, 1898. Issued.
FRANCE ... ... Serial No. 263,513. Filed March 8, 1898. Pending.

In addition to the above, Patents have been applied for in FRANCE and BELGIUM on Mr. W. C. Johnson's inventions.

THE HYDRAULIC JOINT SYNDICATE, LIMITED.—List of Shareholders.

Abel, Charles Denton, 11, Eastcombe-villas, Blackheath, S.E.
Abercromby, Mrs. Beatrice, 35, Princes-gardens, S.W.
*Ashburton, Lord, The Grange, Alresford, Hants.
Ashton, Lord, Ryelands, Lancaster.
Baker, A. H., Stock Exchange.
Baker, George Bartrick (Executors of the late), 264, Kennington-road, S.E.
Baring, Hon. Alexander Henry, The Grange, Alresford, Hants.
Barker, Francis, Chatsworth Lodge, Chiswick, W.
Batty, George, Berwick-on-Tweed.
Berners, Miss Mare, 11, Ashley-gardens, Victoria-street, S.W.
Birks, Harry William, 62, Threadneedle-street, E.C.
Booth, Mrs. Fanny, Warlaby, Northallerton, Yorks
Booth, William C., Oran, Catterick, Yorks
Burghclere, Lady Winifred, 48, Charles-street, Berkeley-square, W.
Chesterfield, The Earl of, 16, Pont-street, S.W.
Calder, Alexander, 35, Lennox-gardens, S.W.
Carnarvon, The Earl of, 13, Berkeley-square, W.
Chaplin, Holroyd, 19, Lincoln's Inn-fields, W.C.
Cholmeley, Sir Hugh A. H., Bart., Easton Hall, Grantham
Clark, George Southwick, Sunderland
Clark, James Henry H., Southwick, Sunderland
Clark, John Lockie, 93, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C.
Clark, J. W., Hamilton House, Hall-road, N.W.
Courtenay, Mrs. Sarah, Caenby Rectory, Lincoln
Courtenay, Mrs. F. S., 39, Alleyn Park, Dulwich, S.E.
Coventry, The Hon. Reginald W., 1, Balfour-place, Park-lane, W.
Coward, Edward, Hotel Victoria, Northumberland-avenue, W.C.
Cowper, Charles, 6, Livingstone View, Tynemouth
Cox, R. Hippisley, Mitcham, Surrey
*Crawford, The Earl of, 2, Cavendish-square, W.
Curry, Robert, 160, Grey-street, North Shields
Curwen, William (deceased), Exors. of, 46, Drury-buildings, Water-street, Liverpool
Cope, John Garland, 3, Great George-street, Westminster, S.W.
Dallas-Yorke, Mrs., Walmsgate, Louth, Lincolnshire
Davenport, William Bromley, M.P., 1, Belgrave-place, S.W.
Day, Captain Henry R., Stretton Hall, Malpas, Chester
Deeley, Henry Mallaby, Park-place, Mitcham, Surrey
De la Warr, Earl, Bexhill-on-Sea
Ditch, John, Old Buckhurst, Withyham, Sussex
Dickinson, Henry Utrick, 10, Sandhill, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Dobson, Percy Baker, Zulla-road, Nottingham
Doncaster, Robert, Noel-street, Nottingham
Drummond, Francis Maurice, 20, Marine-square, Brighton
Dyer, Colonel Henry C. S. (Executors of the late), Appleby Lodge, Rusholme, Manchester
Edeveam, Eaton, 22, Gloucester-place, Portman-square, W.
Edwards, James Harry, The Hermitage, Whitburn
Electrical Development and Finance Corporation, 39, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W.
D'Erlanger, Baron Emile B., 43, Lothbury, E.C.
Escombe, Rowland L., 3, East India-avenue, E.C.
Exploration, The, Company, Limited, 11, Cornhill, E.C.
Farquhar, Lord, 7, Grosvenor-square, W.
Fenwick, Edwin Harry, 14, Savile-row, Regent-street, W.
Fenwick, John Charles James, Embleton Hall, Long Framlington, Morpeth
Fletcher, Henry H., 58, New-street, Birmingham
Forster, William Steward, Runwood, Maidstone
Foster, Samuel Porter, Killhow, Carlisle
Fowler, Thomas F., Ferrar House, Huntingdon
Fox, Henery Charles, 2, Foster-place, Dublin
Frere, George Edgar, 23, Lincoln's Inn-fields, W.C.
Gibbs, Chas., F.R.C.S., 115, Harley-street, W.
Gilliat, Algernon, 4, Crosby-square, E.C.
Gilliat, Howard, 4, Crosby-square, E.C.
Gilliat, John Saunders, 4, Crosby-square, E.C.
Glynn, William, Killrush, Co. Clare
Gray, Rev. Chas. N., Helmsley, R.S.O., Yorks
Gurdon, Edward Temple, 26, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.
Gutch, Wilfrid, Holgate Lodge, York.
Hambro, E.A., 70, Old Broad-street, E.C.
Heathcote, John Moyes, Connington Castle, Peterborough
Hedley, Armorer, Mayfield, Gosforth, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Herbert, Lady Margaret, 36, Charles-street, Berkeley-square, W.
Herbert, Lady Victoria, 36, Charles-street, Berkeley-square, W.
Hodges, Thomas William, 19, Grey-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Hogg, W., Old Bewick, Northumberland
*Hood, Viscount, 10, Chesterfield-street, W.
Hood, Viscountess, 10, Chesterfield-street, W.
Hooley, Ernest T., Risley Hall, near Derby
Jameson, Mrs. Mary E., 75, Harrington-gardens, S.W.
Johnson, Walter Claude, The Dignaries, Westcombe Park, Blackheath, S.E.
Joicey, Sir James, Bart., M.P., Longhurst, Morpeth
Kitson, Sir James, Bart., M.P., Gledhow Hall, Leeds
Lambert, Mrs. May, The Gables, Worthing
Langley, Hamilton William, 8, Craven Hill-gardens, W.
Lawson, Thomas, 12, Percy-street, Tynemouth
Leathart, Thomas Hedley, Bracken Dene, Gateshead
Leathart, Mrs. Maria, Bracken Dene, Gateshead
Legge, Edward, 7, Albion-street, Hyde Park, W.
Leverson, G. C. B., 1, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.
Lister, The Hon. Reginald, 6, Green-street, Grosvenor-square, S.W.
Long, Right Hon. Walter, M.P., Rood Ashton, Trowbridge
Lord, Francis and George, 4, Austin-friars, E.C.
Lyons, Joseph, 26, West Kensington-gardens, W.
Martineau, P. H., care of Lloyds Bank, 222, Strand, W.C.
MacCamley, Andrew E. W., 1, Howard-street, Strand, W.C.
Marshall, E. Gladowe, Bank Chambers, Durham.
Marshall, James Robson, Chatton Park, Belford, Northumberland
Marshall, William H., 49, St. James's-street, S.W.
Marshall, John Charles Robson, 48, West Nile-street, Glasgow
Matthews, R. F., Harehope Hall, Alnwick
Matthey, George, 78, Hatton-garden, E.C.
Maudslay, Walter H., 25, Hans-place, S.W.
McAllum, Mrs. Ida M., Riding Mill, R.S.O., Northumberland
McCraw, James, 24, Queensborough-terrace, W.
McDonnell, Alexander, Rydens, Horsham-road, Walton-on-Thames
Meakin, Lewis, James, Crown Maltings, Burton-on-Trent
Monsell, Lt-Col. Bolton, 25, Gordon-square, W.C.
Moore, James, 17, Front-street, Tynemouth
Moralle, J., Jun., South Shields
Mordaunt, Henry James, 63, Warwick-square, S.W.
Naters, John George Sharp, Jesmond Cottage, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Nesbitt, William, 16, Waterloo-place, S.W.
Noble, John H. B., Jesmond Dene House, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Noble, Saxton W. A., The Grove, Jesmond, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Nye, Edwin, 88, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C.
Oliver, William Henry, 61, Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.
Ormston, Charles William, 9, Sandhill, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Osborne, Clarence A., Cavalry Club, Piccadilly, W.
Otto, George, North Shields
Owles, Charles, 16, Russell-st., Covent Garden, W.C.
Parker, The Hon. Cecil, Eccleston, Chester
Pender, Sir James, Bart., M.P., 2, Mount street, W.
Phillips, Maberley, 29, Grafton-road, Whitley
Platt, Mrs. Eleanor, Gorddinog, Llanfairfechan, N. Wales
Platt, Colonel Henry, C.B. Gorddinog, Llanfairfechan, N. Wales
Prentice, John, Berwick-on-Tweed
Rason, Walter James, 3, Portman-mansions, W.
Rea, George G. Middleton Wooller, Northumberland
Reltou, Henry, 9, Carlton-terrace, Low Fell, Gateshead
Renals, Sir Joseph, Bart., 26, Craven Hill Gardens, W.
Ribblesdale, Lord, Gisburn Park, Clitheroe, Yorks.
Ridout, Arthur Geo., 102, Grey-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Ritson, Utrick A., 15, Queen-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Roddam, R. John, Roddam Rigg, Wooperton, Northumberland
Sanderson, William John, Claremont Buildings, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Scott, Walter, Victoria Buildings, Grainger-street West, Newcastle-on-Tyne
De Segundo, Charles Sempell, 6, Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, W.
Sellon, John Scudamore, 78, Hatton-garden, E.C.
Sharp, Arthur H., Dumbleton Hall, Evesham
Sharp, Robert, Riding Mill, R.S.O., Northumberland
Singh, Prince Frederick Duleep, Old Buckenham Hall, Norfolk
Singh, Princess Sophia Duleep, Hockwold Hall, Norfolk
Spearman, Sir Joseph, Bart., The Hall, Wem, Salop
Stevenson, James, Berwick-on-Tweed
Stocker, George Bertram, 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C.
Straker, Charles Edmund, High Warden, Hexham-on-Tyne
Swiney, Colonel Geo. C., United Service Club, S.W.
Seton, Sir Bruce Maxwell, Bart., care of Lloyds Bank, 222, Strand, W.C.
Teage, William Roope, 8, West Chapel-street, Mayfair, W.
Thirlwell, F., South Shields
Thornton, John Harry, Eagle house, Hornsey, N.
Tollemache, The Hon. Stanhope, North Leigh, Ipswich, Suffolk
Tufnell, Colonel Edward, 34, Chester-square, W.
Tufnell, Henry, The Grove, Wimbledon Park, S.W.
Turner, George Henry, Littleover, Derby
Turney, Sir John, Alexander Park, Nottingham
Turner, Lewis, E. V., Lloyds, E.C.
Vavasseur, Josiah, Rothbury, Blackheath Park, S.E.
Villiers, Noel, 8, Grosvenor-square, W.
Vyvyan, Capt. George R., Forest Lodge, Shooter's Hill, Kent
Wadham, Arthur, 60, Jermyn-street, S.W.
Wadham, Edward, Milkwood-rd., Dalton-in-Furness
Ward, Capt. L. H., 5a, New Burlington-street, W.
Watson, Robert Fraser, Leaburn, Hawick, N.B.
Watson, Thomas Lindsay, Leaburn, Hawick, N.B.
Weldon, W. H., F.S.A., College of Arms, E.C.
Westmacott, John, The Woodlands, Mitcham
Wheler, Edward Galton, Swansfield House, Alnwick
Williamson, David Arnot, 28, Percy-gardens, Tynemouth
Wilson, Lady Margaret, Chillingham Barns, Bedford, Northumberland
Wilson, John Straker, 23, Gray-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne
Wright, William, Wollaton Hall, Nottingham
Younger, George, Alloa, N.B.

Copies of the Prospectus, with Form of Application, can be obtained at the Office of the Company, or from their Bankers, Brokers, or Solicitors.

As the whole of this issue has been already arranged for, this announcement is made for public information only, and to comply with the rules of the Stock Exchange. Copies of the Prospectus will be sent to the Shareholders of The Fish Oil and Guano Co., Ltd., immediately, with an intimation as to the number of Shares each Shareholder will be entitled to apply for. Shareholders in the Fish Oil and Guano Co., Ltd., who intend to avail themselves of the right to apply for Shares in this Company on the terms of this Prospectus, must send in their applications to the Company's Bankers in London or Dublin on or before SATURDAY, the 4th day of JUNE, 1898, at 1 o'clock p m.

VOLENITE, Limited.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893.

CAPITAL - £80,000, Divided into 80,000 Shares of £1 each. 45,000 Shares will be allotted as fully-paid to the Vendor in discharge of the purchase price, whereof 40,000 Shares go to the Fish Oil and Guano Company, Limited, in discharge of the purchase price payable to that Company. Issue at par of 35,000 Shares, being the balance of the Capital, of which, pursuant to the terms of the contract between the Vendor and this Company, 21,250 Shares are now offered for subscription to the Shareholders of the Fish Oil and Guano Company, Limited, in proportion to their holdings in that Company, and the remaining 13,750 to the discoverer of Volenite, and others as hereinafter mentioned, as nominees of the Vendor. Payment to be made as follows:—On Application, 10s. per Share. On Allotment, 10s. per Share.

DIRECTORS.

The Right Hon. The Lord Lurgan, Chairman, 21, Lowndes-square, S.W.
Francis Bellingham Jameson, Esq., 29, Kildare-street, Dublin, and The Albany, Piccadilly, London, W.
George V. Sims, Esq., 14, Pembridge-villas, London, W.
Directors & Members of the Fish Oil & Guano Coy., Ltd.
Major J. Roper Parkington, J.P. (Messrs. J. R. Parkington & Co.), 24, Crutched Friars, E.C., and 6, Devonshire-place, London, W.

BANKERS.

Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., Lombard-street, London, E.C.
The Royal Bank of Ireland, Limited, Foster-place, Dublin.

SOLICITORS.

H. Percy Becher, Esq., 26, Bedford-row, London, W.C.
Messrs. T. W. Hardman & Sons, 14, Molesworth-street, Dublin.

AUDITORS.—Messrs. Mellors, Basden, & Co., 33, St. Swithin's-lane, London, E.C.
CONSULTING CHEMIST.—F. Lamplough, Esq., C.E., Industrial Chemist and Board of Trade Engineer, 5, Green-terrace, Rosebery-avenue, London, E.C.
BROKERS.—Messrs. Millar & Llewellyn, 24, Austin Friars, London, E.C. Messrs. Perry & Cairnes, 30, College Green, Dublin.
REGISTERED OFFICE,—16, St. Helens-place, London, E.C.
SECRETARY.—J. Kendall Rigby, Esq.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to acquire:—

(a.) The benefit of the application made by Mr. Frederick Lamplough for Letters Patent for the United Kingdom in respect of a method and apparatus for saturating, vulcanising, and oxydising fibrous materials in the production of material to be used for insulating and other purposes, which material has been designated "Volenite," and is more particularly referred to in the Report of Mr. Lamplough hereinafter set out, together with the right to apply for the Patents throughout the world in respect of the said invention.

(b.) The Registered Trade Mark "Volenite," and the exclusive right thereto.

(c) A non-exclusive licence for Great Britain to manufacture Fish Oil in accordance with Mr. Stanley's Patents for "Improvements in or relating to the treatment of Fish and Fish Offal and in apparatus therefor" for the purpose only of the manufacture of "Volenite."

(d) The Factory and Works of the Fish Oil and Guano Company, Limited, located at Gorleston, near Great Yarmouth, which works have recently been completed and are now in complete working order. The Contract of Tenancy under which these works are held contains a proviso authorising the tenant to acquire the freehold of the ground upon which they stand, and also certain cottages adjoining let at about £30 per annum, for a sum of £1,300.

(e) The plant and machinery lately erected at Myddleton-street, London, E.C., under the direction and advice of Mr. Lamplough, and the benefit of the tenancy under which the premises on which same are erected are occupied.

For some time past Mr. Lamplough had been experimenting with the oils produced by the Stanley process from fish and fish offal, with the result appearing from his reports, of which the following are copies:—

5, Green-terrace, Rosebery-avenue, London, E.C., October 9th, 1897.

To the Directors of THE FISH OIL AND GUANO SYNDICATE, LIMITED.

Gentlemen,—In accordance with your request I beg to report that I have carefully gone into the uses to which your fish oil produce can be put with profit, and from experiments I have made with your oils, I find that they can be utilised to formulate an entirely new industry, which I believe will cause as great a revolution as did the Bessemer steel process, with all its attendant profits.

I have sent you two or three pulley wheels manufactured by me from your Fish Oil product. These pulleys can transmit 40 per cent. more power than ordinary pulleys, while the cost of production is 75 per cent. less. The same remarks apply to friction hoists of every description, elevators, &c.

Taking the oil as a whole I should propose to utilise the more volatile portion for making high-class machinery oils, and the middle class, which has a very high flashing point, I should use for making a compound I propose to call "Volenite." This material is quite unaffected by heat. Vulcanite will commence to soften at a temperature slightly under 100 degrees Centigrade, while our material will remain unaffected at double that temperature, without being in any way injured.

The following are a few of the uses to be found for this material, which, I may say, can be produced, at a very trifling cost, and sold at a large profit.

Imperishable railway sleepers, railway carriage wheels, pulley wheels, friction wheels for hoists, and clutch couplings, brake blocks, carriage panels, embossed panels for artistic internal and external decoration. Electrical switch-boards, fuse bases, electric bell bases, magnet ends for dynamos, electric motors, and insulating material capable of resisting up to and above 70,000 volts pressure of electricity according to thickness. Accumulator cells, dry cells, Declanche cells, plating cells and vats, and many other articles.

I have also sent you specimens of transposed fibre which you will note are soft. These would be for ornamental embossing and for electrical purposes, while other specimens have been hardened, and they can, for different purposes, be made almost as hard as flint.

The material you can manufacture for electrical purposes is, in my judgment, vastly superior to any vulcanised fibre; and as it is an admitted fact that ever since the growth of electricity engineers have been anxiously seeking for a substitute for Vulcanite and vulcanised fibre, the former being too expensive and the latter non-effective and unsuitable for their purposes in many respects, this should cause a very large demand indeed for your manufacture.

The material I have sent you, although only $\frac{1}{16}$th inch thick, is capable of resisting up to 70,000 volts pressure of electricity, which makes it invaluable for insulating purposes. The best vulcanite this thickness breaks down at 10,000 volts.

I strongly advise you to arrange for the immediate erection of works capable of producing a minimum of 500 tons of Volenite per annum to commence with. The machinery and plant already erected by you can be utilised in the new works when the latter have been completed.

In regard to the cost of the material; after charging £15 a ton for your oil, and say £10 a ton for other materials, maximum price, the Volenite will only cost a small sum per ton. It can be readily sold in large quantities for electrical and other purposes, at prices ranges from 1s. 6d. per lb. upwards, representing at least £170 a ton, and I do not think that I am over sanguine in saying that you can, the first year, sell 500 tons of this material. Allowing for liberal trade commissions I think there would be no doubt that your Company could earn £30,000 a year from the starting of the works, and I am confident that once the uses for this material become known its sale would be more than doubled in the second year; but even if you divide my figures by two you will see that the results will justify the immediate erection of the necessary plant, which will take a few months to construct.

The machinery will be entirely automatic and regulated by specially designed automatic regulators, which will do away with considerable labour, and in respect of which a patent has been applied for in the interest of your Company.

I have not gone into technical details as to the treatment of the material; but I may state that the manufacture requires a treatment of only seven hours.

Yours faithfully, F. LAMPLOUGH, C.E.
Industrial Chemist and Board of Trade Engineer.

The following Supplemental Report having reference more particularly to pliable Volenite, was subsequently furnished by Mr. Lamplough:—

5, Green-terrace, Rosebery-avenue, London, E.C.
4th February, 1898.

To the Directors of THE FISH OIL AND GUANO SYNDICATE, LIMITED.

GENTLEMEN,—Since your statutory meeting, held on August 28th last, Volenite has been brought from a state of embryo to a perfected article, ready for the market, and now only awaits the erection of the necessary machinery for turning it out in large quantities. When I first commenced my experiments and reported to you accordingly, I had only discovered the method of manufacturing a hard Volenite which is of great value on account of the many uses it can be put to, and the result of actual experiment with better appliances since August last has only been to more strongly confirm my original opinion as to its immense value in the markets of the world. I understand this opinion has also been confirmed in the report of the expert you have independently employed. Notwithstanding the immense commercial value of the hard material, you suggested that it would greatly enhance the value of Volenite if a soft and pliable material could be produced, and, as a matter of fact, you gave me no rest until I consented to experiment in that direction. You will be pleased to hear that my efforts have been attended with success far greater than I anticipated, insomuch that I have produced an article that is not only flexible, but that can be worked almost identically the same as indiarubber; that is to say, it can be moulded into any shape, and either vulcanised hard as ordinary ebonite, or left in a cured, flexible condition, similar to indiarubber sheeting, possessing qualities in some cases far superior to the indiarubber, which becomes quite useless for making high-pressure steam joints, whereas the flexible Volenite will do this, and remain quite unaffected at 400 deg. Fahr. This particular use, putting aside its many other applications, is of great value on account of the pressing demand for a jointing to withstand the intense heat of our modern high-pressure steam machinery, and although there are many steam packings on the market made for this purpose, none appear to have answered, and in making high-pressure joints we are still forced to revert to the days of Watt & Stevenson and red-lead putty, and this, as those who have used it will testify, leaves much to be desired. Either of the materials would in itself be sufficient to ensure the success of any company you may think fit to form for the purpose of working it, and the soft material being something like three or four times the value of the hard, the delay of the last few months has simply served to enhance the value of the discovery.

Yours faithfully, F. LAMPLOUGH, C.E.,
Industrial Chemist and Board of Trade Engineer.

Samples of both the hard and pliable Volenite furnished by Mr. Lamplough have been submitted to electrical and other engineers for their opinion, and Reports have been made by them, copies of which are enclosed herewith, and to which the attention of intending Shareholders is called.

It is proposed at once to erect the necessary plant and machinery in or near London—as advised by Mr. Lamplough—for carrying on the new manufacture; in the meantime utilizing the existing works at Myddleton-street, and in order to insure a continuous supply of the oil needed in the manufacturing department (for which purpose only oil obtained in accordance with the Stanley process, as the Directors are advised, is suitable), the works at Gorleston have been acquired.

The Directors believe that there is a practically unlimited market for Volenite in respect of many of the articles mentioned in Mr. Lamplough's Reports, especially for those connected with the electrical business, and for steam jointings and pulleys. They cannot, of course, bind themselves to any estimate of the profits which may be realised when the Company is at work; but, having regard to the low price at which, according to Mr. Lamplough's Report, Volenite can be produced, as compared with rubber, ebonite, and mica, now so largely used in the electrical trade, and which, it is expected, Volenite will largely supersede, they confidently anticipate a very large annual profit, and they have no reason to doubt the correctness of Mr. Lamplough's estimate as given in his report above set out.

The Vendor (who is the Vendor to and the Promoter of this Company and re-sells at a profit) agrees to satisfy all claims by the discoverer of Volenite and other persons for services rendered in connection with such discovery and otherwise, prior to the registration of this Company, to satisfy the commissions payable to the Directors of the Fish Oil and Guano Company, Limited, under Article 94 of that Company's Articles of Association upon this sale, and to indemnify the Fish Oil and Guano Company, Limited, against the same, to indemnify this Company against any claim for special remuneration by any Directors of this Company, under Article 96 of the Articles of Association of this Company, and also to bear and pay all the costs and expenses of and in reference to the promotion and registration of the Company, including legal expenses, printing, stamp duties and registration fees, and the issue and advertising of this Prospectus down to the first allotment of Shares, and also guarantees the subscription at par of the entire issue of 35,000 Shares hereinafter referred to.

The Vendor has fixed the purchase price at the sum of £45,000, payable, as to the entire amount thereof, in fully-paid Shares. Of the balance of the Capital, 13,750 Shares have been applied for, and will be allotted to the discoverer of Volenite and others at par, and 21,250 Shares are offered to the Shareholders of the Fish Oil and Guano Company, Limited. The subscriptions from these Shares will produce a sum of £35,000 cash, which sum the Directors believe will be amply sufficient for working capital and for the erection of the factory and works above referred to, and for all other requirements.

The following contracts have been entered into:—

1. Agreement dated the 20th day of May, 1898, and made between the Fish Oil and Guano Company, Limited, of the one part, and Harry Bennett of the other part.
2. Agreement dated the 20th day of May, 1898, and made between Frederick Lamplough of the one part, and Harry Bennett of the other part.
3. Agreement dated the 20th day of May, 1898, and made between Harry Bennett of the one part, and this Company of the other part.
4. Agreement dated the 20th day of May, 1898, between this Company of the one part, and the said Frederick Lamplough of the other part.

Agreements may also have been entered into with various parties in connection with the expenses and other matters, to none of which the Company is a party, but which may be technically within Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867. Applicants for Shares shall be deemed to have had notice of these agreements (if any), and to have waived all right to any particulars thereof, whether under the said Section or otherwise, and applications for Shares will only be accepted subject to this provision.

The contracts above specified, also the original Reports hereinbefore referred to, and copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association may be seen at the Offices of the Solicitor to the Company in London, and copies thereof may be seen at the offices of the Solicitors to the Company in Dublin.

The three first-named Directors of this Company are also Directors and Members of the Fish Oil and Guano Company, Limited, and as such are interested in the promotion of this Company.

Applications for Shares should be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus, and forwarded to the Bankers of the Company, together with a remittance for the amount payable on application.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, and Secretary of the Company.

London, 21st May, 1898.

THE BRITISH WESTRALIA SYNDICATE, LIMITED.

DIRECTORS.

FRANK GARDNER, Chairman. E. S. REVETT, Deputy Chairman.
J. B. JOEL. H. WALTER. A. R. STEPHENSON.

Australian Manager.—ZEBINA LANE, Perth.

Solicitors.—ASHURST, MORRIS, CRISP, & CO., 17, Throgmorton-avenue, E.C.

Bankers.

GLYN, MILLS, CURRIE, & CO., 67, Lombard-street, E.C.
THE BANK OF AUSTRALASIA, 4, Threadneedle-street, E.C.

Auditors.—CHATTERIS, NICHOLS, & CO., 1, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

Secretary.—WALTER BRAMALL.

Registered Offices.—32, OLD JEWRY.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS TO THE SHAREHOLDERS,

To be submitted at the Fourth Ordinary General Meeting of the Shareholders, to be held at the Company's Registered Offices, 32, Old Jewry, E.C., on the 27th day of May, 1898.

The Directors beg to present to the Shareholders the Profit and Loss Account and Balance Sheet for the year ended 28th February, 1898, which have been duly audited.

The last year's working shows a realised cash profit of £77,871 7s. 2d. which the Directors consider extremely satisfactory. Adding to this sum the balance brought forward from last year's account there is a total to the credit of the Profit and Loss Account of £177,951 15s. 6d.

In pursuance of the policy followed hitherto, the Directors propose to continue the maintenance of a large cash reserve, and they recommend a dividend at the rate of 50 per cent. (10s. per share) payable free of Income Tax to all Shareholders registered on the 20th May, 1898. This will absorb £40,000 leaving to be carried forward £137,951 15s. 6d.

In accordance with the practice of previous years, the Syndicate's holdings and investments have been taken in the Balance Sheet at strictly cost prices. Two only of the investments showed any market depreciation and in these cases they have been written down to the price of the day; if the securities were taken at current prices, a further very large profit would be shown.

In October, 1897, Lease 986, at Kalgoorlie, was sold to the Boulder Bonanza Gold Mining Company, Limited, and the purchase consideration having been received, the property has been transferred to that Company.

Various interests have been acquired in the Colony of Western Australia during the past year, from which the Directors anticipate satisfactory returns.

The Board have again to acknowledge the valuable assistance rendered by Mr. Zebina Lane, their Australian Manager.

The Board have sustained a great loss by the untimely death of their colleague and Chairman, the late Mr. Woolf Joel. The vacancy in the Directorate has been filled by the election of his brother Mr. J. B. Joel, and Mr. Frank Gardner has been appointed Chairman of the Company.

The Auditors, Messrs. Chatteris, Nichols & Co., retire, but being eligible, offer themselves for re-election.

FRANK GARDNER,
Chairman.

32, Old Jewry, E.C.
16th May, 1898.

PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT, 12 Months ended February 28th, 1898.

(Incorporating Australian Accounts to January 31st, 1898.)

DR.	£	s.	d.
To Australian Expenses:—
Prospecting, Salaries, Cablegrams, and General Expenses, and Australian Manager's Commission	9,266	15	8
,, London Expenses:—
Rent, Office Salaries, Directors' Fees, Cablegrams, Legal Expenses, &c.	3,145	16	0
,, Depreciation written off Investments and Furniture and Fittings	3,221	18	11
,, Balance carried down	77,871	7	2
	£93,505	17	9
To Balance carried to Balance Sheet	177,951	15	6
	£177,951	15	6

CR.				£	s.	d.
By Profit on Sale of Properties and Shares				89,982	9	1
,, Interest, Commission, &c.				3,505	1	2
,, Transfer Fees				18	7	6
				£93,505	17	9
By Balance from last account				141,239	10	8
Less Dividend, March, 1897	£40,000	0	0
Income Tax	1,132	17	4
Audit Fee	26	5	0
				41,159	2	4
				£100,080	8	4
,, Balance 1897-8 brought down				77,871	7	2
				£177,951	15	6

BALANCE-SHEET, February 28th, 1898.

LIABILITIES.	£	s.	d.
To Capital authorised and issued—
80,000 Shares of £1 each...	80,000	0	0
,, Sundry Creditors	11,230	12	2
,, Profit and Loss Account—Balance	177,951	15	6
	£269,182	7	8

ASSETS.							£	s.	d.
By Australian Properties Account:—
Amount expended for purchase and development to date ...							9,955	14	7
,, Freehold Building Estate, Perth							21,639	2	3
,, Sundry, Stocks, Shares, Interests, &c., at cost							122,006	4	0
,, Sundry Debtors							2,350	18	8
,, Furniture and Fittings							875	15	4
,, Cash at Bankers, &c., and on Loan:—
Cash at Bankers and in hand				£3,502	6	2
,, Loans fully secured:—
Stock Exchange Account to Account	£40,478	1	6
At 7 days' Call	62,374	5	2
Other Loans	1,000	0	0
				103,852	6	8
							112,354	12	10
							£269,182	7	8

We have audited the above Balance Sheet and Profit and Loss Account and certify them to be correct. We have verified the Stocks and Shares in hand, the Securities held against loans and the amount of cash at the Bankers.

CHATTERIS, NICHOLS & CO., Chartered Accountants,
Auditors.

London, 16th May, 1898.

The PARISIAN DIAMOND CO.

"ORIENT" PEARL and DIAMOND CROWN.
A very exquisitely executed piece of Diamond work. Price £80 0 0.

THE "Orient" Pearls.
THE COMPANY'S GREAT SPÉCIALITÉ.

143, Regent St., W,
THE COMPANY'S NEW BRANCH (Opposite Liberty's, Chesham House).

GOLD MEDAL,
PARIS, 1889.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.

DIAMOND TIARA.
New Design. Set à jour in Real Diamond Mounts.
Price £27 0 0.

143, Regent St., W.
43, Burlington Arcade, W.
85, New Bond St., W.
And in Paris.

OUR PUZZLES.

RULES.

1. The sum of £2. 2s. will be given every week for the best EPIGRAM, CONUNDRUM, LIPOGRAM, BOUTS-RIMÉS, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.
2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.
3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and, for obvious reasons, no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.
4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this journal.
5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH OFFICE by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.
6. Not more than one Prize will be given a Quarter to the same competitor.
7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.
8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed 12, and must under no circumstances consist of more than 14, letters.
9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THEIR NOMS-DE-PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.
10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.
11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed—

PUZZLE EDITOR OF "TRUTH," CARTERET-STREET, QUEEN ANNE'S-GATE, S.W.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,003.—RHYMES TO "JONATHAN" AND "MEXICO."

HARPSICHORD (real name and address will be printed in due course)	£1 1 0
SINGEON (,, ,, ... ,, ,,)	1 1 0

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,004.—HUMOROUS SONG WITH REFRAIN.

MOS (real name and address will be printed in due course)	£2 2 0

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,009.

The usual Prize of Two Guineas is offered this week for

THE BEST "IN MEMORIAM" VERSE, CONTAINING EIGHT RHYMED LINES, ON THE LATE MR. GLADSTONE.

The verses may be written in any metre which is in ordinary use; and each line must rhyme with some other line in the stanza. All answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, June 6, at the latest.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,005.

Many of the Definitions of a Gentleman were of a cynical or satirical character rather than humorous. Some of the best of them were in fact not humorous at all. It was only a small proportion of the definitions received that was eligible for a prize. In these circumstances the prize has been divided between ALPHA and LEAF-RULE for the following definitions:—

A bloke as 'as a bloomin' Bank 'Oliday all to 'iself, whenever 'e wants one.—ALPHA.

One who can wear a fur-trimmed overcoat without looking like a music-hall proprietor.—LEAF-RULE.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

META.—It was given about two years ago.

W. W.—The subject is not one of sufficient general interest to justify its use in the manner you suggest.

BINNS.—The character you refer to is to be found in "Martin Chuzzlewit."

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,006.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

WORDS SUGGESTED AS SUITABLE FOR DESIGNATING THE OFFENCE OF RIDING IN A CLASS OF CARRIAGE SUPERIOR TO THAT FOR WHICH THE FARE HAS BEEN PAID.

Classhopping, Classlifting, Classiflying.—R. F.

Malfaresation or Malfareousness, Nonfaresation Nonfareousness.—Dodger.

Journey-faking.*—F. J. B.

* "Fake," slang term for taking what you have no right to.

To defare.—Ados.

Brevet-Pullmaning, Parly-pirating.—Cochrane Field.

Hyperfaring, Superiding, Hyperiding.—Leaf Rule.

Supertravlocate.—Zen.

Unfairing or Unfareing, Unfairwelling or Unfarewelling.—Mimyarrah.

Super-carrailery, Super-farailery.—Pulchrios.

Supercargoing (superior carriage going).—Aunt Ida.

Farebilking, Farescalping, Raildefrauding, Classdodling, Fareswindling, Farechiseling.—Chelsea.

Philopropriority.—Beginner.

Fraud is the general term, Bilking comes near it, but it is not specific enough. Transclassing, as an attempt at a new word, might do as a makeshift, until the proper term is evolved, probably on the Boycott system of evolution. Tresclassing may also be suggested. Indeed the word trespassing is not far off the mark. The terms tresclassing and tresclasser doubtless would imply as much of the offence as the question, as the other form trans.—Commoner.

Ananiasing. It will be remembered that Ananias took what he thought was a ticket to heaven and got back part of the price—i.e., paid for a third-class ticket and tried to travel in the first-class.—Barf.

Railway-bulling ("Bull"-ing means buying for a rise).—Natprobanian.

Superclassition.—Davham.

Over-riding.—C. F. Reid.

To Thudfust; derivation: Third-first ("second" eliminated, as the major offence is almost universal among offenders), vulgarised to suit porters, &c., as: "E's a reg'lar Thudfuster," &c. The criminal: Thudfuster; the act: Thudfusting. An habitual criminal: Thudfustic, sometimes used as an adjective. The art of Thudfusting supremely well: Thudfusticism, &c. 2. To Superclass: obvious, but covers the ground, regular verb; Superclassing, Superclasser, &c. 3. To Underfare: Underfarer, Underfaring, &c.—Mallaby.

Locopoaching. Locopoachery, Locomopoach, Primotertianism, Malfareism, Slygoism, Kleptoveyance, Kleptoclass, Kleptostyle.—La Plata.

The best word (coined) for riding in a railway carriage, &c., seems to be Supratenancy, since the offence is really the occupation of a superior carriage, whether such is stationary or on the move.—Poor old Jeff.

Classifarailty, Classnobbery, Rasclasscality, Classifarefakery, Neclassfariousness, Subclassfaritude, Compartmendacity.—Wordsworth.

Classbilk, Overtravel, Overclass, Overfare, Classcheat.—Etona.

Trick-riding, Overfareance, Cross-classing, Surreptrainery, Defaulticketing, Malafareance.—Aidee.

Overfaring.—Cestrian.

Farefrauding.—O. P. Q.

Excessimism.*—Rabelais.

* Etymology: Excedo and imum (the lowest place), with reference, of course, to the common phrase "Excessing."

Viaferricextravasation.—Classico-Medico.

Classbilk, Ticketbilk.—Nocerb.

Illustrious Sir,—Many centuries ago, two miserable fellows, named Horatius C. Flaccus and Vergilius Maro, used to travel by the railway from Roma to Antium. They had only third-class season tickets, but they were often seen in the first-class Pulmanus smoking cars. After frequent warnings, they were had up before the Beakini and fined, and at all the stations along the route, placards giving their names and offence were posted. This line being very prominent—"Primo pro tertio ibat."* The school boys contracted the sentence into, "Pri-pro-ter-ibat," and would shout it at the culprits. In time it was further contracted to "Pri-ter-ibat." If this were Anglicised it would be "Pritcribation."—Yours comfortably warm, Albius Tibullus, Hades (first turning to the left), Svonok.

* By first instead of third he used to go.

Excelsiorism.—Twee.

Ticketicide. Morphiamunnery (moreforyourmoneyry).—Wildcat.

Classbreaking, or overclassing, or overclassriding. Henry ix.

Carbilking.—Scotus Viator.

Onebettermanning, Secondaryfirsting.—Bad Luck.

Excelsioriding, Superiding.—Frinez.

Trickriding.—Addie.

Trespassfraud, Travelfraud, Classfraud, Classfranding.—Trinkie.

Hautevoléevoyaging.—Alastor.

Superclassification.—Scorpio.

Farefraud, Payevasion, Sneakpassage, Suismuggling, Rapriding (from Rapio).—Cock Robin.

Fraud-de-fray.—Necky.

Counterficeting, Fraud-faring.—Robert Martin.

Twiklasraling.—Pound.

Train-fraud. e.g., X was charged with "train-fraud" at Bow-street, the prisoner was found guilty of "train-fraud."—Kela Mela.

Underbook. This word is now one that railway men understand the meaning of, and is on a par with other booking-office terms (compare undercharge, overcharge).—Clay.

Slyfaring. Travelincog. 'Emalgomating. Railoofing. Goingnap.—Pigtail.

Stolnluxurailing.—Homnis.

Locofraud.—Nemo.

Superclassity, Superclassation, Sinepatuperclassation, Superclassinepatrickery, Superchery, Meandaring (mean, darling, and devions), Superclassineparidity, Showswindlery.—Pyramid.

Classalienation.—Tan Tun.

Anticomania.—Eblana.

Ameanfrauditis.—Eblana.

Firstclassmisdemeanour, Wayfarefraud, Too easy going.—Excelsior.

Supercargoing, Expatriation, Expay.—Esperanza.

Classtrespass, Superclassing, Classcheating, Under-booking.—Ludwig B.

Rug-er-mer-ing: This was a name invented by me when a girl to imply anything that was mean, shabby, and dirty, each of which epithets will, I think, describe the "railway cheat."—Otter

Super-travelling.—Blackest Rose.

Fare-lifting.—Chess Vale.

Bestcrail, Besterailer, Bestcrailing; Poacherail, Poacherailer, Poacherailing; Grabbcrail, Grabberailer, Grabbcrailing.—Sinona.

Non-par-rail-ing, Unfrankedtraining, Pirailunfaring.—V. C.

Seat-sneaking, Seat-sneaker, Classomania.—Neptune.

Bluffing.—Frosch.

Rail Cheap-Jacking, Stowaway Wheeling, Booking Unionist for Salisbury Junction, Sly Entraining for Sad Detraining, China-ticketing, Underbooking, False-faring.—Cassim.

Class-trespass, Subfaring, Class-jumping.—Hailey burian.

Superclassing.—Almavlva.

To Surcar, to Supcar.—Conail.

Fraudrailance, Cheaticketing, Supercarology, Noroominthirdiness, Sinepayearluxurism.—Fishy.

Trainceadding, Tricketonier, Trainkidding, Ticketkiddling, Ticketfraud.—Risk.

Underfaring.—Echo.

Noun; Overtravelling. Verb: To Overtravel.—Ulis.

Fare-docking.—Siln.

Railbilking, Bookfoiling, Classjumping, Rocketing, Highlevelling, Telescoping, Malticketing, Ticketsharping, Shortfaring, Misfaring.—A. E. L.

Supercargoing, Superimposition.—Sahib.

Overjoggling, Upriding, Overclassing, Farechiselling.—Avis.

Superfaring, Superclassing, Overclassing Ultraclassing, Overfaring, Swindlefaring, Underbooking, Classexcessing, Underticketing.—Gingernut.

Ticket Trickomania. It is sufficiently practised to be known as the ticket trick, and irresistible enough to be a mania, and the above fully expresses the whole thing. If it were not too long, perhaps Traintickettrickomania would be more specific.—T. Waddle.

Superclassing.—Fad.

Underbooking or farecheating.—Manuscript.

Railwaypoaching.—Alpha.

Trainsharping, Classdefaulting, Class-sharping.—M. E.

Setcheting, derived from seat and cheating.—Sissie.

To Misrail, Mistravel, Misbook, Passclass, Misfare, Thirdfirst, Firstthird, Falsifare, Overrail, Overclass, Underfare, Underbook, Supertravel, Superclass, Superrail, Pluseclass.—Aldbarn.

Farebilking, Classkleptomeani, Fare-shirking, Class kleptomania, Ticket-raising, Rail-change-ringing.—Merle.

Cheatingsnobbonrail, Meancheatonrail, Gentlicheatonrail, Gentilcheaterail, Cheatingrailsnobb, Gentilrailcheat, Snobbyrailcheat.—Jack Cade.

Excelmania or Ultramania, Seatcompounding, Trainticking.—Myrak.

Riderpest, Overriding, Underbooking.—Bardolph.

Hieroclassites, Classforgetfulness, Classomatism.—Creran.

Locozening ("loco," contraction of locomotive, "cozen," to cheat). Rail-jumping ("jumper," slang term for ticket-inspector on tramway routes.—Djalfi.

Non-parveknewism.—de Brisi.

To Superfare.—Oxoniensis.

Train-bilking, Un-fared, Classkleptomania, Foul-Priding.—Mincing Lane.

Masque-railing, Fare-faking, Felon-fareing, Megalgo-mania, Cheat-seating, Higher-class-than-pass-omania, Tripped-tripping, Trick-tripping.—Robert Martin.

A sitting im-posture, Misplaced confidence trick, Railway bilker, Artful dodger, One who will have the best of everything—and the cost.—Edgcome.

Pay low—ride high, Go one better, Go up higher, Excelsiorism or Excelsior-riding, Company-defrauding-riding, Class-confounding, Class-dodging, Class-jumping, Railway-guard-dodging, Guard's-eye-opening, Class-levelling, Carriage-swindling, Carriage-climbing.—J. McGrigor Allan.

Lapprobi, from lapsus—a slip, and probi—of honesty. Conbonmores, from contra bonos mores—against good morals. Ultravir, from ultra vires—beyond the powers possessed.—Stiggins.

Defrauding, Cheating, Fraudulent, Dishonest, Unfair, Niggardly, Stingy, Mean, Shaver, Sharper, Stealer, Underhand, Deceiver.—Fir-tree.

Snapperee, Snapperfunk, Highlows. Snapper being the sobriquet of the railway company's officials, who are employed to detect persons riding in a superior class to that for which they have taken their tickets. Snapperee—if they are caught. Snapperfunk—if they run the risk of being so.—Xit.

The prefix, over, sometimes expresses an excess in our doings, as in the words overbearing, overdo, overcharge, &c. The act spoken of in our case is that of taking a place, of seating oneself. Therefore a suitable term to denote a sort of excess in that act might be to overseat oneself (to oversit). Of course it is then required that the expression be adopted by the general public, and that, by common consent and by custom, a specific meaning be attached to the novel term as to the above words.—Coloniensis.

 Some competitors have suggested a word which describes the offender rather than the offence.

A ticket without leave man, a man of no class.—Ransch.

Snekril, Classhopper, Cheatril, Class-cadger.—Kintyra.

Highflyers, Flitting-sneaks, Underpayeads.—Allspice.

Noclass, Encroachman, Thirdrate, Railsnipe, Cheaptick.—How Nice.

Nicker, Fraudist, Nickelass, Fraudclassist, Rollclassist, Compthief, Defrauder, Trainfrauder, Wrongseater, Railsneak.—Penguin.

Higherchislefares, Classrisers, Farecheaters, Unfareclassdeflers, Higherclassists, Travelcheatfarers, Chislefarists, Higherfarefrauds.—Dagmar.

Ticket-offender, Under-payer, Under-charger, Class-invader, Class-intruder, Class-wrongdoer, Class-misleader, Wrong-classer, Company-defrauder, Class-violater, Compartement-invader, Railway-intriguer, Class-interloper, Class-miscalmer, Rail-underpayer, Railway-underpayer, Rail-offender, Railway-offender, Ticket-implicater, Class-implicater, Rail-implicater, Railway-implicater, Class-defrauder, Class-swindler, Rail-swindler, Railway-swindler, Suspicious-classer, Suspicious-fare, Fabulous-fare, Fictitious fare, Bombaster, Puffer, Car-puffer, Buffer, Ticket-poacher, Car-paradox, Car-deluder, Unsound-ticketholder, Ticket-rover, Seat-rover, Car-pirate, Class-rifler, Place-rifler, Outplacer, Misseater, Misplacer, Ticket-illuser, Ticket-illusioner, Class-illusioner, Class-cheater, Chargeable-tripper, Ticket-tricker, Car-tricker, Class-tricker, Soft-seater, Stuffer, Whiffler, Shuffler.—Sweetums.

PATENT FAST DYED KHAKI MATERIALS.

Absolutely Fast to Washing.
Stand any amount of wear.

Most useful for all kinds of wear by Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children.

Contractors to
H.M. WAR OFFICE and INDIA OFFICE.

WOOL.

SERGES.
FLANNELS.
CORDS.
LEG BANDAGES.

COTTON.

DRILLS.
SERGE.
CORDS.

Price List and Patterns Free on application to

E. SPINNER & CO., MANCHESTER AND BOMBAY, Sole Agents.

JUNO CYCLES ARE THE VERY BEST

Any JUNO Twelve Monthly Payments.
JUNO Lady's or Gent's Safety, £12 12s., 21/- monthly; £14 14s., 24/6 monthly. JUNOS from £10, 16/8 monthly. Write for New Season's List of JUNO Cycles & Accessories, sent post free. Junos shipped to all parts of the world. Large discount.

METROPOLITAN MACHINISTS CO., LTD.,
75, 76, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.; & at Piccadilly Circus, London W.

Madame Marie Mathieu,

Who has been privately patronised by the highest ladies in England and abroad begs to state that BY THEIR DESIRE she has now taken additional rooms at

23, CONDUIT STREET, W.

She wishes it to be known that she is the SOLE OWNER and IMPORTER of the OIL which she uses in her treatment for the removal of wrinkles and in all her preparations for the skin.

Prices: Derma Paste, 10/6; Crême Roma, 5/-; Avoinine Powder, 3/6.
All these preparations are harmless, healthy, and most beneficial to the skin.

Hours: 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.

"TRUTH"
CAN BE OBTAINED AT
THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY,
224, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

TORPID LIVER.

Small Pill.
Small Dose.
Small Price.

HEADACHE.

Purely Vegetable Sugar Coated.

1s. 1½d.

FRANZ JOSEF

APERIENT WATE

Highly appreciat all over the World Twenty Years past.

Is the Only Palatable Natural Aperient Water. SOLD EVERYWHERE. HEAD OFFICE: BUDAPEST.

Genuine Old Welch Dressers

(Inlaid and Carved Oak), from £6. 10s.

ILLUSTRATED PRICED CATALOGUES POST FREE.
ALL GOODS CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY STATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

HEWETSONS,

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD, London, W.

THE

Chancery Lane Safe Deposit

AND OFFICES COMPANY, LTD.

CHAIRMAN: Sir WILLIAM H. MARLING, Bart., Stanley Park, Stroud.
VICE-CHAIRMAN: ROBERT C. PONSONBY, Esq., 1, Clement's-inn, Strand, W.C.

SAFES and STRONG ROOMS for the Deposit of Deeds, Bonds, Plate, and Valuables of every description from £1 1

Rooms for Consultations, Writing Rooms, and Telephone Rooms, &c., Free of Charge.

Rooms for Arbitrations, Meetings of Shareholders, Creditors, and Companies' Meetings from 10s. 6d.

Registration of Keys with Accident Insurance Policy for £100, on payment of 1s.

Offices, Flats, and Chambers to Let, close to Law Courts, Patent and Public Record Offices. Moderate Rents.

DEPOSIT BANK.

MONEY RECEIVED ON DEPOSIT in Large or Small Sums, Repayable at Eight Days' Notice. Compound Interest allowed at £2 10s. per Cent. per annum.

Further particulars can be obtained from E. Vincent Evans, Manager and Secretary of the Company, 63-4, Chancery-lane, London.

PARISIAN

FONDANTS, CHOCOLATES, and BONBONS
of the finest quality and from the first makers in Paris.
Depôt des Chocolats de la Maison.
F. MARQUIS (Passage de Panoramas) PARIS.

S. SAINSBURY,

176 and 177, STRAND, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1839.
Third door west of Norfolk-st., connecting the Strand and Thames Embankment.
Lists on application.

Enormous Demand.

There can be no surer sign of popularity than the enormous demand all over the country for

LIPTONS' DELICIOUS TEAS

They are appreciated everywhere for their delicate flavour and exquisite aroma, and undoubtedly have attained the pinnacle of fame.

LIPTONS' DELICIOUS TEAS. Millions drink them daily.

Millions of people are daily drinking and enjoying these delicious Teas, fresh from the sweet-scented island of Ceylon. Liptons own some of the most famous estates in Ceylon, which cover thousands of acres of the best tea-growing land, including such well-known gardens as Dambattenne, Laymastotte, Monerakande, Mahadambatenne, Mousakelle, Pooprassie, Hanagalla, Gigranella, Karandagalla, Daminatenne, Oakfield, and Nahakettia, in connection with which several thousand natives are constantly employed.

LIPTONS CONTROL THE TEA MARKET.

LIPTONS' TEAS

HAVE THE

LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD

ROYAL APPOINTMENT

LIPTON,

Tea Merchant by Special Appointment

To Her Majesty The Queen.

BUY FROM THE GROWERS.
The Finest Tea the World can produce.

PER 1/7 LB.

NO HIGHER PRICE.

RICH, PURE, AND FRAGRANT

PER 1/- AND 1/4 LB.

LIPTON LTD.,

TEA, COFFEE, AND COCOA PLANTERS, CEYLON,
THE LARGEST TEA, COFFEE, AND PROVISION DEALERS IN THE WORLD.

Chief Offices: CITY ROAD, LONDON. Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

Ceylon Offices and Tea and Coffee Shipping Warehouses: PRINCE STREET, and MADDEMA MILLS, CINNAMON GARDENS, COLOMBO. Indian Offices and Shipping Warehouses: HARE STREET, CALCUTTA.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

RICHARD A. McCURDY, President.

Policy-holders in the "Mutual" enjoy the advantages of

SECURITY.—

Assets, 1897, exceed	£52,000,000
Surplus, 1897, exceeds	7,250,000

ADAPTABILITY.—

LIFE INSURANCE.

INVESTMENT.

INCOME.

PROMPTITUDE.—

Claims paid in London immediately on receipt of satisfactory proof.

LIBERALITY.—

Bonuses have, in many cases, trebled the original sum.
Surrender values of unique liberality paid.

Detailed information supplied on application.

Head Office for the United Kingdom:

17 & 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

D. C. HALDEMAN, General Manager.

FIRST SPECTACLES.—When these are required the advice of a very skilful optician should be taken, as, unless the spectacles used in the first instance are exactly suited to the eyes, mischief is soon done which cannot afterwards be remedied.

BROWNING'S SYSTEM OF SUITING THE SIGHT

IS ALWAYS SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. JOHN BROWNING, President of The British Optical Association, and Author of "Our Eyes," now in its 17th Edition, price 1s., 63, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. May be consulted personally free of charge.

EPPS'S COCOAINE.

COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.

The choicest roasted nibs (broken-up beans) of the natural Cocoa on being subjected to powerful hydraulic pressure, give forth their excess of oil, leaving for use a finely-flavoured powder—"Cocoaine," a product which, when prepared with boiling water, has the consistence of tea, of which it is now, with many beneficially taking the place. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system. Sold only in labelled tins. If unable to obtain it of your tradesman, a tin will be sent post free for 9 stamps. — JAMES EPPS & CO., LTD, Homœopathic Chemists, London.

QUEENBORO' AND FLUSHING ROUTE TO THE CONTINENT.

ROYAL DUTCH MAIL

DAY AND NIGHT SERVICES.

Trains leave London (Victoria, Holborn Viaduct, St. Paul's, and Herne Hill Stations) for Queenboro' TWICE DAILY (Sundays included) in direct connection with the large, fast, and powerful PADDLE Steamers to Flushing.

BEST, QUICKEST, AND SAFEST ROUTE TO HOLLAND, GERMANY, SCANDINAVIA, AUSTRIA, SWITZERLAND, AND ITALY.

Passengers and Luggage booked through from and to London to and from the principal Stations on the Continent.

Through Communications, AVOIDING PASSAGE ACROSS LONDON (on week-days only), between Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham and Glasgow and Queenboro', and vice versa, viâ Willesden Junction and Herne Hill.

Time Tables and full particulars gratis through the ZEELAND STEAMSHIP COMPANY'S LONDON OFFICE: 44A, FORE-STREET, E.C.

"WORTH A GUINEA A BOX."

BEECHAM'S PILLS.

FOR ALL

BILIOUS & NERVOUS DISORDERS,

SUCH AS

Sick Headache, Constipation,
Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion.
Disordered Liver & Female Ailments.

SALE NOW OVER SIX MILLION BOXES YEARLY.

In boxes, 1/1½ and 2/9 each, with full directions.

Prepared only by the Proprietor.

THOMAS BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire.

Sold by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Dealers everywhere.

W. & F. THORN, 19, Gt. Portland-st. W.

LONDON AGENTS.

THE STEREOSCOPIC COMPANY, 106, 108, Regent-st. W.

THE

ELSWICK

LADY'S ELSWICK.

1898

Elswicks are, if possible, superior to those previously made and are as perfect as money and skill can make them.

GENTLEMAN'S ELSWICK.

ELSWICK CYCLES are fitted with the PATTISSON HYGIENIC SADDLE.

CITY AGENTS—
BENETFINK & CO.
107, 108, Cheapside, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & WYMAN, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

◦ TRUTH ◦

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1118. Vol. XLIII. Thursday, June 2, 1898. Price Sixpence.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Building," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

THERE is no foundation for the report that the Queen has forbidden the Royal Procession at Ascot, in consequence of the death of the Duchess of Teck, and that the Royal Stand is to remain closed with drawn blinds. Everything is to be as usual this year. There will be the customary "semi-State" procession up the course on the Tuesday and on the Thursday, when the Princess of Wales, the Princess Christian, the Duchess of Connaught, and other Royal ladies will attend the meeting; and the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian, the Duke of Connaught, and the Duke of Cambridge will come to the races privately on the Wednesday and the Friday.

It is probable that the Prince and Princess of Wales will travel by special train from Paddington to Windsor on Tuesday and on Thursday, and then drive through the Great Park to the course, being joined at the New Mile Gates by the carriages from Bagshot Park and Cumberland Lodge. All departments of the Household are concerned with the Royal visit to Ascot on Tuesday and Thursday, these being the only days on which the Court officials are responsible for the arrangements. The Master of the Horse manages the procession, the Lord Chamberlain controls the Royal Stand, and the Lord Steward provides the luncheon, which is served in the dining-room behind that edifice, everything being brought from Windsor Castle.

The Queen and the Empress Frederick have at last succeeded in bringing about a reconciliation between the Emperor William and the Duchess of Sparta, who was a favourite sister until she joined the Greek Orthodox Church, after which he declined all intercourse with her. The Duke and Duchess of Sparta, who have been staying for a month at Friedrichshof, near Homburg, with the Empress Frederick, were last week the guests of the German Emperor and Empress for a couple of days at Berlin. They will visit Denmark and England later on in the summer.

The Prince of Wales is prevented by other engagements from going down to North Wales next month for the Royal National Eisteddfod, but the Duke of Cambridge has promised to attend this function, and H.R.H. will be the guest of Lord and Lady Carrington at Gwydyr Castle, near Llanrwst, during the week of the fêtes.

The Duke of York, who now gets £220 a year half-pay, will receive £830 a year while he is in command of the Crescent. Sir Charles Cust, who is one of the Duke's equerries, has been appointed First-Lieutenant of the Crescent. His service paths have run in pleasant places, as he was for three years in the Royal Yacht Osborne, and previously in the Alexandra, when she was the Duke of Coburg's flagship in the Mediterranean. The Duke of York will be well "dry-nursed" on board the Crescent, as Commander Campbell and Lieutenants Greatorex and Phillpotts are three of the cleverest and most promising officers in the service. Lieutenants Rucke-Keene and Cecil Raikes were both special promotions out of the Royal Yacht, and they were pitchforked over the heads of between seventy and eighty senior officers of the same rank.

Prince Nicholas of Montenegro is said to have been much disappointed because the Queen did not give him the Order of the Garter during his visit to Windsor. It is unreasonable of the Prince to expect a blue ribbon, as this decoration has always been reserved for Sovereigns of what may be defined as the first class, excepting only such minor potentates as are nearly related to the Queen and the Royal Family. The Queen has already conferred the first class of the Royal Victorian Order (G.C.V.O.) upon Prince Nicholas, and the other day his eldest son, Prince Danilo, was given the second class (K.C.V.O.), but the decoration is not held in high esteem upon the Continent.

Prince and Princess Christian will entertain a large house party during Ascot race week at Cumberland Lodge, Windsor Great Park, where Princess Aribert of Anhalt-Dessau and Prince Albert of Schleswig-Holstein are expected to arrive shortly from Germany.

The Empress Eugénie has been staying for a week at the Hôtel Continental, Paris, in the strictest incognito, on her way back to England from the Riviera. The Empress will spend the next month at Farnborough, after which she is going for a cruise in her yacht Thistle, which is now at Cowes. It is possible that the Empress may visit Strathpeffer this summer, in order to take a course of the waters for rheumatism.

The Queen herself selected Lord Pembroke to represent her at Mr. Gladstone's funeral, not so much because he is Lord Steward, but rather on account of the long, affectionate, and unbroken friendship which existed between his father, Sidney Herbert, Lord Herbert of Lea, and Mr. Gladstone. They were intimates at Eton and at Oxford, and were most closely associated together in public life. Mr. Gladstone and Sidney Herbert were Sir Robert Peel's prime favourites among the younger statesmen whom he introduced to public life, and they gave a hearty and unswerving support to his policy, both during his life and after his death. If there had been no such excellent reasons for choosing Lord Pembroke, her Majesty would probably have been represented by Lord Breadalbane or Lord Carrington.

A very different funeral I should have devised for Mr. Gladstone. It was an official ceremony, under the direction of the Earl Marshal. The people for whom Mr. Gladstone had laboured and toiled were absent from the procession and from the Abbey. In the Abbey space is limited. But surely there could have been a procession through the streets in which the people might have joined. Peers and Court officials were the chief mourners at the funeral. When he lived they were not his most ardent admirers.

I trust that we shall show our respect for Mr. Gladstone in something more than mere words. We speak of him as the greatest statesman of the age. We laud him as the greatest of patriots. We glory in all that he did for us. And yet, as it seems to me, many of us are inclined to undo his work, and to pursue a course in direct opposition to the principles that he advocated and practised. Peace, Retrenchment, and Reform, were his watchwords. They should be inscribed beneath the statue that is to be raised to his memory in Westminster Abbey. But even this will be of little avail, if we regard them as the expression of a paltry and exploded superstition.

Amid the universal mourning of the past fortnight I have heard of only one discordant note—one feeble splutter of political rancour. On Thursday week a certain landowner and magistrate in the Midlands, distinguished for nothing but the rabidness of his Toryism, hoisted the Union Jack as a public token of his rejoicing that "Gladstone was dead at last;" and on the following Sunday the same individual ostentatiously stalked out of the parish church during the service, rather than listen to a tribute to the dead statesman. To give the name of this ornament of the squirearchy would simply gratify his craving for notoriety. It is better to leave him to the judgment of his neighbours, who from long experience have learned to appraise the poor creature at his proper value.

Last week much surprise was caused in Ireland by the unexplained absence of the Lord-Lieutenant from the Birthday Review in the Phœnix Park. Unless under very special circumstances, which prevent his attendance, it is according to Viceregal usage that the Irish Viceroy attends the Review. A salute is fired as he comes on the ground, and he takes his place at the flagstaff, surrounded by his household and staff in full dress, for the march past. Lord and Lady Cadogan only left the Viceregal Lodge on the day before the Review, which, shorn of State glories, and with an unusually small number of military, was a very poor affair.

Another and greater surprise in connection with Viceroyalty was the occurrence at the Theatre Royal on Saturday evening, when Lord Cadogan gave his banquet at the Viceregal Lodge. Lady Cadogan attended the theatre, the band playing "God save the Queen" on her entrance, as if she were the Sovereign's representative. No doubt she was not responsible in any way for this breach of etiquette, which was an example of the over-zeal of courtiers and toadies. The counter-demonstration which it provoked should be a warning to toadies—if they ever take one—that zeal in servility ought not to outrun discretion. The wife of the Lord Lieutenant is not the Lady Lieutenant, but "Her Excellency" like the wife of an Ambassador. Royal honours for her are a breach of etiquette, with regard to which Royalty is specially severe.

The sudden death of Sir John Gilbert has deprived Ireland of an able, learned, and painstaking scholar and historian, who devoted his talents to research into the past of his country. He and Lady Gilbert, though fond of seclusion, were well known in literary and cultured society and lived in the neighbourhood of Dublin. Lady Gilbert—the poetic and clever authoress known as Rosa Mulholland—is the sister of Lady Russell of Killowen. Much sympathy is felt in the sudden affliction which has fallen upon her.

From various quarters exception has been taken to the comments in TRUTH of the 19th ult. on the bestowal of the ribbon of St. Patrick upon Lord Lucan. I have been reminded by one reader that Lord Lucan owns 60,000 acres in Co. Mayo, and is an Irish Representative Peer; another tells me that Lord Lucan is a good and considerate landlord, and that Lady Lucan has done valuable work in encouraging cottage industries upon the estate and so on. All these facts I gladly record, and if to be a representative peer, to own 60,000 acres, to look after

---

For the TRUTH HOTEL LIST, see page 1400 in the present issue.
For HOSPITALS and APPEALS, see page 1398.
For AMUSEMENTS, see pages 1398-9.
For OUR PUZZLES, see page 1409.

your estate properly, and to be the husband of a Countess who encourages home industries, are qualifications for the Order of St. Patrick, I give way at once. I have no idea myself what the qualifications for such a distinction really are. At the same time, my authority for the statement that Lord Lucan has hitherto been "unknown in Ireland" (Ireland meaning, I take it, something more than County Mayo), is an authority not usually at fault; and there seems reason in the view that the Order of St. Patrick ought by rights to be reserved for Irishmen who have distinguished themselves in Ireland.

Apropos of the last Queen's Birthday Gazette, I have been asked how it is that, while Royal honours are freely bestowed upon all sorts and conditions of public officials, it is almost unprecedented for a coroner to be thus favoured. The gentleman who makes the inquiry points out that coroners are among the hardest worked, and certainly not the least useful, of our public functionaries, and he asserts, probably with reason, that "the fear of the coroner is one of the greatest safeguards to human life." The distribution of titles and Royal honours is a sacred mystery, which it is not for a profane mortal like myself to pry into; but, judging from the annual lists, I should say that hard-working and useful officials are the last people likely to find a place there.

The Master of the Buckhounds and Lady Coventry are to stay, during Ascot week, with their relatives, Mr. and Lady Emily Van de Weyer, at New Lodge, near Windsor, where the house party will also include the Lord-Lieutenant and Lady Cadogan.

The Duke and Duchess of Portland, who are spending the holidays at Welbeck Abbey, will entertain a large party during Ascot races at Harewood Lodge, Colonel Hay's place at Sunninghill, which they have taken for the week. Harewood Lodge was rented once or twice by the Prince and Princess of Wales for Ascot week.

The appointment of the Duke of Portland to be Lord Lieutenant of Notts is a distinct and severe snub to the Liberal Unionists, who were entitled to expect that the office would go to their party. As a matter of fact, even the Tories do not like the appointment, as Lord Belper is unquestionably the individual best qualified in every way for the post. If, however, a Tory was to be selected, it is thought that the post should have gone to Lord Newark. The Duke of Portland's services to his party are somewhat phantasmal, and they have already been most generously recognised by the Lord Lieutenancy of Caithness and the office of Master of the Horse, which means over £3,000 a year, excluding the perquisites; and his Grace has now held the post for nine years. It has not been usual for Ministers thus to pile favours upon one supporter, but Lord Salisbury is splendidly indifferent to all those unwritten laws which usually regulate the dispensation of Crown patronage. The Duke is popular in Notts, but he now lives very little at Welbeck, and his qualifications for the Lord Lieutenancy are simply nil. Lord Belper constantly resides in the county, and he is thoroughly acquainted with all the duties of the post; for it is well known that he has done most of the work during the long illness of the Duke of St. Albans. His appointment was regarded in Notts as certain to take place, and it would have given universal satisfaction, whereas the choice that has been made pleases no party.

Mr. Harbottle Estcourt, who died last week at Carisbrook Castle, where he resided in his official capacity as Deputy-Governor of the Isle of Wight, was certainly the best known and the most popular resident in the island. He had for many years been prominently associated with most of the local institutions, and he held many important public offices. He was an immense favourite among all classes, parties, and sects, and his death is deeply and universally lamented. Mr. Estcourt was appointed Deputy-Governor of the Isle of Wight in 1866 by Lord Eversley. He was highly esteemed by the Queen and the Royal family.

By the death of Mr. Spencer Walpole a first-class ex-Minister's pension of £2,000 a year has fallen in. Mr. Walpole was certainly well rewarded by his grateful country for his public services in the period of thirty-three months during which he held the office of Home Secretary, as he drew the pension for more than thirty-one years. Mr. Walpole was both nephew and son-in-law of Spencer Perceval, who was murdered by Bellingham in the lobby of the House of Commons in May, 1812, when he filled the office of Prime Minister. He sat in Parliament for thirty-six years, representing Midhurst for ten years, and Cambridge University for the remainder of his public life, which terminated when he resigned his seat in 1882.

My worthy Lieutenant of the Globe, I told you only a few weeks back that when you next misbehaved yourself I would, out of deference for your tender susceptibilities, hand you over to a lady member of my staff for correction. I see that you have once more been indulging in some feeble personalities, so I have asked the lady in question to write a nice little paragraph for your benefit. This is what she says in reply:—

Is it worth while to take any notice of this little man? He seems to have picked out one of the mildest paragraphs that ever appeared in TRUTH, and, not having understood it, he applies to it a silly impertinence about your getting more irritable as you get older. The retort which I should like to make to this is that, as the Globular Lieutenant gets fatter, he is getting stupider. But I suppose if one said that, he would cry out that your staff are vulgar and illiterate persons, and appeal to you again to keep us in order. I would rather have nothing to say to him.

SCOTT ADIE, 115, Regent-st., London, for Shooting Suits, Golf Suits, Travelling Coats, Inverness Capes, Carriage Rugs from 10/9, Shawls, hand-knit Hose, Scotch Cheviots, and Harris Homespuns.

SAVOY HOTEL, Savoy Restaurant, London. Large reception-rooms for fashionable réunions. Orchestra plays daily during dinner and opera supper.

On the whole, perhaps, the lady is right. Though I may be getting irritable in my old age, I certainly could not allow any one to suggest in TRUTH, my dear Lieutenant, either that your waist is increasing in size, or that your head is increasing in thickness. The first allegation would hardly be polite, and the second would hardly be credible.

The latest idea for advertising an hotel. People in all parts of the country have just been favoured with an epistle beginning thus:—

——— Hotel,
———, W.
May 18, 1898.

DEAR SIR,—May I call your attention to this hotel, in which I am staying, and which is in an admirable neighbourhood for those who wish to spend a few weeks in London during the season?

The hotel has only been recently opened, and is charmingly situated, &c.

This is written, or rather lithographed, on note-paper, stamped with a crest, and a riverside address. The writer frankly states, a little later on, that he is interested in the hotel. He must be. And judging by the number of his circulars which have found their way to TRUTH Office, with more or less sarcastic comments, he has succeeded in interesting a good many other people in it, too—though probably not quite in the way he intended.

A weekly paper, announcing that the Duchess of Hamilton is going to compile a history of her first husband's family (which is probably a pure fiction), states that she may have inherited literary tastes and talents from her father, the late Duke of Manchester, who wrote an interesting work entitled "Court and Society from Elizabeth to Anne." The book in question, which was published about thirty-four years ago, was worked up out of the family papers at Kimbolton Castle by Hepworth Dixon, and the Duke of Manchester never really wrote a single line of it, although his name appeared on the title-page as the author. An adequate account of the Hamilton family would be a hard task even for a writer profoundly acquainted with Scotch history, and it certainly could not be successfully achieved by any amateur.

The Bradfield College play this year is to be the "Antigone," and the performances will take place on Monday, June 20, Thursday, June 23, Saturday, June 25, and Tuesday, June 28—subject always to the views of the clerk of the weather. It is a bold experiment to give a Greek play in England, even in June, under exact classical conditions in an open-air theatre. But the Bradfield authorities have made arrangements by which, if the play is postponed, all intending visitors can ascertain the fact before their arrival. I much impressed by the following notice in the programme, which denotes more courage than any London theatrical manager has yet shown in dealing with the Matinée Hat question:—

It is requested that all visitors should wear low hats, and that lady visitors should bring fans and not sunshades, as the latter impede the view of those who sit above them.

All visitors, be it noted; not gentlemen only.

The master of a Voluntary School recently applied to the Association of Voluntary Schools in his district for an "occasional monitor." The letter was referred to the General Council, and some discussion arose as to what was meant by an "occasional monitor." The Bishop of Oxford suggested that the Nonconformist Conscience was probably intended.

A good example of the arbitrary manner in which elementary school teachers are dealt with by voluntary school managers has just been given at St. Ann's, South Tottenham. Last August Miss Jane Evans was engaged as head mistress of St. Ann's Infant School, and the report of the Government Inspector shows that she has done her work efficiently and satisfactorily. In her agreement no condition was laid down as to her place of residence, but she took lodgings which had been recommended to her by the managers. Recently, however, her parents decided to take a house at South Tottenham, just outside the bounds of the Parish of St. Ann's, and Miss Evans intimated that she intended to live with them. There is no pretence that this change of residence would interfere in any way with her work at the school, but the managers object to her living "out of the parish," and on this ground they have now given her three months' notice of dismissal. Considering that these voluntary schools are almost wholly maintained by grants from the State, a teacher should surely be afforded the protection of an appeal to the Education Department against such harsh and unreasonable treatment.

I owe an apology to the examiners at the last March examination for the Britannia. The mysterious algebraical problem about Mr. Gladstone's age was not printed, it appears, as given in last week's TRUTH. My version of it came from the official reprint of the papers, regulations, and marks. The original problem was as follows:—

Mr. Gladstone was born in the year A.D. 1809. In the year A.D. x^2 he was $x-3$ years old. Find x.

In the reprint x^2 became x, and the problem was reduced to the nonsensical form in which I found it.

Mr. Balfour has presented the Rev F. S. Webster, Rector of St. Thomas's, Birmingham, to the important Crown living of All Souls', Langham-place, which is worth about £700 a year. Mr. Webster, who is an Evangelical, is a nephew of the Attorney-General. The vacant living of St. Thomas's, which is worth about £500 a year, is in the gift of a body of Low Church trustees.

FOR BEAUTIFYING AND PRESERVING THE TEETH nothing equals ROWLAND'S ODONTO, which removes tartar, and imparts a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface. Use ROWLAND'S ODONTO for keeping your teeth sound and white. Of Stores and Chemists.

"HÔTEL BURLINGTON," AT SUNNY BOSCOMBE. (200 rooms). Every luxury. Delightful grounds. Magnificent golf links. Sea-water baths. Moderate charges.—Bournemouth East Station.

The Bishop Suffragan of Stepney is to be the Canon in residence and Sunday afternoon preacher during the month at St. Paul's Cathedral, replacing Canon Scott Holland; while at Westminster Abbey Canon Wilberforce is succeeded by Archdeacon Furse.

The appointed preachers at the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, during the month are: on the 5th, the Sub-Dean; 12th, the Rev. J. E. C. Welldon, Head Master of Harrow; 19th, the Rev. F. J. Holland, Canon Residentiary of Canterbury Cathedral; and on the 26th, Canon Ellison.

The Archdeacon of London is ex-officio patron of the vicarage of St. John's, Hoxton, which is worth about £600 a year, with residence. Any one would suppose that Archdeacon Sinclair would make a point of presenting a clergyman who has earned such preferment by good work in the diocese of London. The Archdeacon, however, as is the scandalously common practice of clerical patrons, has perpetrated a gross and most discreditable job, by pitchforking the Rev. Eric Farrar into the living. Mr. Farrar has no claim whatever upon the Diocese of London, but he is recommended to Archdeacon Sinclair's favour by the fact that he is a son of his old friend, the Dean of Canterbury. The Rev. Eric Farrar is quite a young man, and in no way distinguished. A few years ago there was a great and most justifiable clamour because the Bishop of Worcester presented this fortunate ecclesiastic to the living of St. Thomas's, Coventry, which he now holds. Bishop Perowne had no valid defence, and he could only attempt to excuse himself, with a truly infantile ingenuousness, by pleading that he was under obligation to Dr. Farrar (his nominee's father), who had done a good deal of work for him as examining chaplain, and he felt bound to testify his gratitude. The working clergy of the Diocese of Worcester were not, however, satisfied with this sophistical twaddle, and the Bishop has never recovered the ground which he then lost.

I am told that in the neighbourhood of Higham Gobion, Bedfordshire, four other parishes can be found exemplifying scarcely less conspicuously than the instances I have already given of the disparity between clerical incomes and clerical work in some of the country parishes. My informant adds that they also exemplify the deterioration of parsons under the influences of isolation and idleness. Without wishing to identify myself with the last statement, I can certainly say this: that if parsons do not deteriorate under such conditions they must be very exceptional beings. For an ordinary mortal, I can imagine nothing worse than to plant him, say at five-and-forty years of age, in a remote country village, with a living secured to him for the rest of his life, hardly a couple of real days' work to do in the whole week, no one to criticise him, and nearly all his neighbours ready to fawn upon and truckle to him. Few men could save their own souls under such conditions, let alone the souls of others.

By the way, talking of Higham Gobion, it is worthy of note that this strangely-named parish had for its patrons and rectors during nearly a century and a half the family which has produced in the last two generations Sir Henry Hawkins, the Vicar of St. Bride's, Fleet-street, and his son, Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins.

The Church of England has an enlightened, charitable, and courteous representative in the Vicar of Castle Cary. In the ordinary course of things this reverend gentleman allows the doors of the parish church to remain open all night and all day. On the occasion, however, of a recent Wesleyan funeral in the churchyard the doors of the church were locked, and from a letter the Vicar has written it appears that this precaution was taken in order that "persons opposed to the Church" might not "stray" into the sacred edifice. What would have happened if a Nonconformist had perchance set foot in the building is not quite clear. But I think the Liberation Society ought in common gratitude to award a medal to this Vicar. A cleric of his type must render it invaluable service.

A pious lady asks me whether I appreciate the fact that in asking for the suppression of the "area-gate tout" I may be checking the blessed work of the Christian Colportage Association for England. I never heard before of the C.C.A.F.E., but from a pamphlet which my correspondent encloses I gather that it is an agency which has a staff of 130 colporteurs, and has circulated more than sixteen millions of Bibles, Testaments, and evangelical publications; that the colporteurs "travel every month more than 20,000 miles, and knock at about 150,000 doors, selling their wares and seizing opportunities of speaking to people personally about salvation." It is added that "the blessing is untold." Very probably. I should think that a person knocking at 150,000 doors in order to speak to people personally about salvation would hear something very different from blessing at 999 doors out of every thousand.

Here is an edifying anecdote illustrative of the Christian Colporteur's modus operandi. The evangelist is describing his visit to a large country house, where he had often called before, but without effect:—

> This day the cook again appeared at the door, and asked me to come in, as she wanted to speak to me.
>
> She then took me into the servants' hall, and calling the housemaid, told me of the trouble they were in about their souls.
>
> Both women had tears in their eyes; so I sat down, and taking out my Bible, began to read a few texts. I told them also the story of my own conversion, and while doing so, the footman, a young man of about two-and-twenty, entered and sat down with us.
>
> He also seemed troubled, and I learned that all three had been reading "Heavenly Love," and were deeply convicted of sin.

The Association states that it uses the greatest care in finding suitable men; so I suppose we must take this narrative as authentic. But I confess that, before accepting the edifying record of conversion, I should uncommonly like to know where this penitent cook, housemaid, and footman are to be found.

News of the erratic career of Miss Griffen's Australian snowball continues to arrive from all parts of the world. I have had two copies of the letter in French sent to me during the last week from Surinam, and two from different parts of France. One of the latter has been found in the possession of a demoiselle in a young ladies' school at Neuilly. Doubtless school children have played an important part in disseminating this historic begging-letter. It is perfectly clear from the fact of the letter having been translated into foreign languages that the original pretence of collecting old English stamps for the benefit of the cottage hospital of St. George's District, Hurstville, was all bunkum, and that Miss Griffen is now amassing postage-stamps from all countries in the world, that is to say, articles which have a very considerable commercial value. It is quite time that the authorities of this hospital at Sydney, or the neighbourhood, who originally gave their countenance to this questionable enterprise, should wash their hands of it. To stop it is, of course, entirely beyond their power, but they can at least enlighten the public as to the amount they have received from Miss Griffen, and the use which it is to be put to.

Apropos of snowball collections, I wonder that Commissary-General Hamley does not adopt this method for obtaining members for the Junior Conservative Club. I see that the gallant officer is still circularising the public as busily and as indiscriminately as ever, numerous well-known Liberals having been informed during the last two or three weeks that they can be admitted to the advantages of membership, "prior to the entrance fee being introduced," on payment of their modest guinea. Why not offer this precious privilege to everybody who will write three copies of the Commissary-General's circular and send them to his tailor, bootmaker, and pawnbroker, with instructions to continue the chain in the usual way? In this manner the whole population of these islands, and probably the Colonies, too, would in time receive an invitation to join the Junior Conservative Club, without the Committee spending another halfpenny on postage-stamps.

I ought to have mentioned last week, but was prevented by pressure of other matters, that I had received a letter from the Chairman of the Board of Management of the London Orphan Asylum, and also a visit from the Secretary, with reference to comments in TRUTH of the 12th ult., upon the last report of the institution. It may be remembered that the point of my remarks was that the comparative table of expenditure per head for the last ten years showed that, while the cost of feeding and clothing the children had been greatly reduced of late years, the office and working expenses had increased, as had also the item "Educational and Administrative Expenses;" the result being that, in spite of the reduction under the first head, the total cost per child had increased in ten years to the amount of nearly £3 per annum.

What the Chairman and Secretary say in reply to this is, first, that the increased cost under the head of educational and administrative expenses is entirely due to increased outlay on education, owing to the cause which was suggested in my paragraph; secondly, that the reduced cost of the actual keep of the children is due to more advantageous contracts having been concluded; and, thirdly, that the increased "Working and Office Expenses" are mainly due to unavoidable increase in advertising and other expenditure for raising money. The Secretary assures me that the children are better fed and clothed now, in spite of the reduction in cost, than they were ten years ago; but I understand from him, on the other hand, that every year it becomes harder to keep up the income—owing, I suppose, to increased competition among charitable agencies.

I have so high an opinion of the work of the London Orphan Asylum that I am only too ready to accept these explanations, though I would certainly suggest to the managers that it behoves them to keep a tight hand upon the office expenses. The real moral of the whole thing, however, seems to be that the more freely and readily the public gives, the greater is the value of their gifts. If charity were what it ought to be, the subscribers would look for the charities. As it is, the charities have to look for the subscribers, and the cost of looking for and finding them swallows up a very substantial percentage of the proceeds. The motto for those who have money to give in charity should be bis dat qui dat—sponte.

A further supply of photographic and other scraps has been generously placed at my disposal by Messrs. Charles Goodall & Son, for the manufacture of scrap-books for the TRUTH Toy Show. Although Christmas is still some time off, the time is none too long if all the little pictures I now have to dispose of are to be made up into books by the date of the next Show; and I know that there are many good ladies among my readers who are ready to take up work of this kind at any season of the year. If any such will kindly communicate with me, I will forward them parcels of Messrs. Goodall & Son's scraps at the earliest opportunity.

I am asked to state that a ball will be given in the Empress Rooms, Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington, on Monday, June 20, in aid of the Distressed Gentlefolk Association.

A concert, in aid of the South London District Nursing Association, will be given at Stafford House on the afternoon of Thursday, June 9, under the patronage of H.R.H. Princess Christian. Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Fanny Davies, and a large number of other eminent artistes have promised their services for the occasion. For tickets and further information I may refer the reader to Mr. F. Holland Schwann, Oakfield, Wimbledon Common.

The following amounts have reached me towards Lady Jeune's Holiday Fund for poor and sickly London children:—W. M., £1 1s.; Gladys and Karin, £2 2s; J. P. M., £2 2s.; Anon., £5.

I have perused with much interest a memorandum just issued from the War Office upon the duty of officers in regard to the morals of their men. The memorandum specially lays stress upon the duty of company officers, who are to inculcate upon the men under their control, particularly the juniors, the disastrous effects, moral, physical, and professional, of intemperance and vice of all kinds. After perusing the document, I cannot help feeling that a shining light was lost to the Church when the present Commander-in-Chief joined the Army. Far be it from me to say one word to minimise the effect of this discourse from the War Office pulpit. On the contrary, I think that the discourse only fails in one respect, and that is that it lays a little too much stress upon the importance of precept, and not enough upon that of practice. No doubt officers can effect almost unlimited good in raising the moral tone of their men; but they are more likely to do this by example than by verbal exhortation.

There is one form of misconduct on the part of soldiers which appears to be somewhat rife, but it is not even glanced at in Lord Wolseley's memorandum. The other day I gave publicity to a complaint from a soldier respecting the amount of petty larceny perpetrated in an Infantry battalion in India. Here is an extract from an officer's letter which throws further light on this subject:—

> If I might suggest an opening for your further influence, I would beg you to continue to point out the enormous number of desertions and thefts among soldiers. Men are allowed to enlist into the Army with practically no character at all. The result is that a young blackguard enlists for a week, gets a free kit, value perhaps £3 to £5, and so many days' good grub; then sells the kit, and moves on to the next military station. The number of petty barrack-room thefts is positively appalling. A man dare not leave any article of property lying about. Even a trifle like a forage cap, if left unguarded, will have the chin-strap stolen, the cap itself being numbered. Not a day passes without something disappearing, and to detect the thief, or rather to conclusively prove his guilt, seems impossible.

This is written by an officer in the Royal Artillery. I trust that his experience is a little exceptional. When, however, we see, as we not infrequently do, magistrates and police officers recommending men who have fallen into the clutches of the law to take an early opportunity of enlisting, it is not surprising that dishonesty should be prevalent in the ranks.

Why should men be enlisted into the Army, as the writer of the above puts it, "practically with no character at all"? Only the other day I was told that, at any rate in the north of England, no Militia recruit is accepted until his character has been investigated and reported upon by the police. If I were to suggest that the same rule should be applied to the Army, I suppose it would be answered that the difficulty of obtaining recruits is great enough already, without aggravating it by requiring a character qualification. It occurs to me, however, that the fact that recruits are accepted in this indiscriminate way may in itself operate as a check on recruiting, for it undoubtedly tends to keep really respectable lads out of the Army.

The private soldier who wrote to me on this subject the other day, remarked that few lads of decent character know what class of men they will have to associate with until they get into the Army, and that many of them, when enlighted by experience, take the earliest opportunity of leaving for that reason. When I hear of recruits being rejected because they have one or two decayed teeth, I cannot help thinking that it might be to the interest of the Service if an equal amount of care were paid to blemishes on their moral character.

I do not mean, of course, that you should only enlist the goody-goody. Heaven forbid! I have not forgotten Lord Charles Beresford's scallywag, and I am not going to suggest that a boy who has robbed an orchard or a hen-roost may not make as good and honourable a soldier as the country could wish for. But between Lord Charles Beresford's scallywag and the type of irreclaimable blackguard described by the officer whom I have just quoted, there is all the difference in life. It ought not to be impossible to keep the one and yet reject the other.

A table was given in TRUTH a week or two back showing the amount to which a Militia officer is out of pocket on his training, the total coming to £16 2s. 7½d. for twenty-seven days. It has been pointed out to me that there is something fallacious about these figures, which I confess I overlooked in publishing my Militia friend's letter. A Militia officer has to live at his own expense during the eleven months in the year when he is not in training, and he could hardly do this at the rate of £16 2s. 7½d. for twenty-seven days, including food, wine, lodging, washing, two menservants, and a horse. His Militia training, therefore, ought to save him something in pocket at the same time that it affords him a month's change of air and occupation, for which most men would be prepared to pay something extra. This seems a reasonable view of the case, which, I presume, most Militia officers will accept.

I have also been favoured with a curious explanation of the dearth of officers in Lancashire Militia regiments, to which attention was called in TRUTH the other day. In bygone days there was a very hostile feeling between the commercial and manufacturing plutocracy of Lancashire and the local military element, and my informant states that traces of the feeling still survive, and that there is a great absence of hospitality to officers on the part of the wealthy manufacturing people who occupy houses in the county. The consequence is that Lancashire men with a taste for soldiering join southern Militia regiments, while the southerners who join Lancashire regiments, finding themselves cold-shouldered, do not encourage their friends in the south to follow their example. My correspondent asserts that the majority of officers in the Lancashire Militia battalions have usually been southern men, who have strayed in more or less by accident, and that officers from Lancashire are mostly to be found in the southern counties. If this be true, I suppose it is a survival from the long bygone time when Manchester was the headquarters of peace-at-any-price. Now that Lancashire is the stronghold of Toryism—not to say Jingoism—we may hope to see a development of martial instinct among the manufacturing and trading classes.

CHALLIS'S ROYAL HOTEL, Rupert-street, Piccadilly-circus.—The new Louis XV. Dining-room now open for Luncheons and Dinners. Table d'Hôte Luncheon, 2/-, from 12.30 to 3 p.m.; Table d'Hôte Dinner, 3/6, from 6.30 to 9 p.m., served at separate tables. Open to non-residents.

"KRONENQUELLE" WATER.—The famous specific against GOUT, RHEUMATISM, and DIABETES. Prices: 1 dozen bottles, 10/6; original cases of 50 bottles, 40/-.—Sole Importers, W. SCHACHT & Co., 26, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C. Pamphlet by eminent medical specialists post free on application.

I have no doubt that one of my Militia correspondents is right when he says that the strength and efficiency of a Militia regiment depend primarily upon the Commanding Officer, and that a C.O. can never keep his regiment up to the mark unless he is a local man, spending the best part of his time in the county. This was just the point to which I desired to direct attention in my first article on the numerical weakness of the Militia. When you see two county regiments side by side, one up to its full strength both in officers and men, and the other several hundred short, the cause must be looked for entirely in the regiment itself, and primâ facie the responsibility must rest on the Colonel. It seems to me that this is the point to which attention should be directed at the War Office and that where a regiment falls conspicuously below its proper strength the experiment of finding a new C.O. should be tried. One of my correspondents refers to a regiment which was in first-rate trim under a late Colonel, a local man, but which has now become "an Adjutant's Regiment," with results which are conspicuously unsatisfactory, and he goes on to refer to another battalion which threatens to become "a Sergeant-Majors' Regiment." I fancy there are in the Militia a good many Adjutants' Regiments and Sergeant-Majors' regiments. The aim of the War Office should be to convert them all into Colonels' Regiments.

Mr. Brodrick confided to a questioner in Parliament last week that the War Office has under consideration the desirability of taking steps to prevent any future buying and selling of Volunteer colonelcies. This was apropos of a recent notorious case, which has been more than once referred to in TRUTH. The best way to stop such practices would be for the War Office to provide the funds which at present have to come out of the pockets of officers. As has been fully proved by at least one recent case, the War Office itself imposes a cash qualification for commissions by refusing to do its duty in regard to the financing of Volunteer regiments, and leaving officers either to supply the deficiency themselves, or let their regiments go to the dogs. Let the War Office relieve Volunteer officers of this burden, and we shall hear no more of wealthy men being smuggled into honorary colonelcies merely for the sake of their contributions to the regimental funds.

It seems doubtful whether jobbery and personal favouritism have ever been more rampant and undisguised than under the present régime at the War Office. Only in August last I called attention to a rank job in the appointment of Colonel Hutchinson, R.A., as Deputy-Adjutant-General at Headquarters, to qualify him for which appointment he was made a temporary Major-General, though there were several Major-Generals with infinitely superior claims to employment. This job has now been aggravated by the promotion of the same officer to Major-General, the senior Artillery Colonel (Colonel Holley) being superseded in order to carry the transaction into effect. While Major-General Hutchinson has absolutely no war service, Colonel Holley in 1884 commanded a battery in action in the Soudan, was mentioned in despatches, and was given a step of rank for his services. He is well known as a most capable and energetic officer. These, however, are not the qualifications which commend themselves to the present rulers of the Army.

I heard the other day incidentally from a Marine officer abroad that a recent Admiralty circular has redressed a long-standing grievance of officers of the Royal Marines. Majors R.M. are now placed on the same footing as Majors in the Army in that they receive the higher rate of pay at 16s. a day after two years' service, instead of after three years' service as heretofore. It is noteworthy that this is one of the points which were brought before the First Lord by Major Brittan, and doubtless many of my readers will remember that Major Brittan fell into disgrace and was heavily punished by the Admiralty in consequence of making this, among other representations. It is highly interesting, therefore, to note that within two years of Major Brittan's punishment one of the points for which he contended has been conceded. As a matter of fact, it was really conceded in less time than that, for the concession was promised in the Navy Estimates last year, and the Admiralty circular on the subject was approved by an Order in Council of August 3 last, although not actually issued from the Admiralty till a few weeks back.

In this connection I note that Mr. Goschen was questioned by Sir John Colomb the other day respecting another anomaly, against which Major Brittan had protested—namely, the rule which places any Marine officer, of whatever seniority, when landed for shore operations,

WHITEHALL COURT, S.W.:—To Let, Bachelor and other Suites. Electric Light, Service, Bath-rooms. Meals in public or tenants own rooms.—Apply, Manager.

THE HOTEL CECIL RESTAURANT.—Orchestra daily during Luncheon, Dinner, and Supper. M. François, Chef de Restaurant, from the Grand Hotel, Monte Carlo.

under the command of any Naval officer, however junior, landed at the same time. Sir John Colomb's question suggested that Regulations should be issued to place operations on shore under the command of officers who are specially trained for that purpose. The only answer he got, however, was that "the Board does not propose to issue any Regulations." Of course the Board does not, and never will until the Royal Marines are represented as they ought to be at the headquarters of the Navy.

Mr. Goschen went on to say on this occasion that, "the responsibility of making arrangements for the successful accomplishment of any operations they may be directed to undertake must necessarily be left to the Commanders-in-Chief, or senior officers in command." Mr. Goschen must surely know that this is not the point. The question is whether officers who are specially trained to conduct land operations should, in conducting such operations, be placed under the authority and control of officers who have had no such training. The present state of things is an absurdity on the face of it, and would not be tolerated for a moment, but for the fact that the Service is entirely ruled by Naval officers who are jealous of the Marines, and lose no opportunity of sitting upon them.

I am glad to hear that since attention was called to the matter in TRUTH of the 19th ult., a marquee has been erected for the purpose of a library and recreation-room for the men of the 2nd Leicestershire Regiment at Kilworth. I congratulate the authority responsible, whoever he may be, on this prompt response to my remarks, but at the same time the fact remains that the regiment was under canvas from April 30 until May 24 without any convenience of this kind for the benefit of the men, although the needs of the officers and N.C.O.s have been properly looked after from the first. This ought not to be.

Owing to the Whitsuntide holidays, I am compelled to hold over a large mass of Army correspondence for future treatment. Here, however, are just a couple of little matters that will be out of date next week:—

2nd Battalion Northamptonshire Regiment, Aldershot.—There is a regulation to the effect that orderly-room sergeants shall only be promoted to the rank of colour-sergeant after serving three years in the rank of sergeant. A sergeant of this battalion, however, a man who joined the battalion after purchasing his discharge from another, was only promoted sergeant in November last, and has been employed in the orderly-room ever since he joined, has just been promoted to colour-sergeant and appointed on the same day orderly-room sergeant, passing over the heads of about twenty sergeants senior to himself. Surely this is not in accordance with the regulations, and, in any case, it would seem to show very unfair favouritism.

No. 1 Company, Medical Staff Corps, Aldershot.—The men of this company appear to have been the only men in camp who got nothing in the shape of a holiday to celebrate the Queen's Birthday. They were kept on duty at the Cambridge Hospital till 5 p.m., without any visible reason for it except the personal fancy of the sergeant-major. On occasions of this kind should there not be one rule for all branches of the Service?

In a recent letter from India I am told that the prejudice against admitting soldiers in uniform to the better-class hotels and restaurants is even stronger there than it is at home. The writer states as an example that one hot afternoon he saw a soldier come into the bar of the York Hotel at Calcutta and ask for a drink, which was refused. The man then asked if he might have a glass of water, and this also was refused. There is, as my correspondent points out, no difficulty in the way of soldiers being served with any amount of poisonous liquor in drink shops kept by natives, and they are merely driven to these places by refusing them refreshments in decent licensed houses. In India, where the military element is so much more powerful and influential than in England, there ought to be no difficulty in impressing this consideration upon the licensing authorities, and bringing pressure through them upon the publicans.

The Mediterranean Squadron has left Malta for a cruise in the Levant, and will be away until the middle of July There are only five battleships with the squadron, so that the fleet evolutions during this cruise are likely to be on a very limited scale, and there cannot be much battle training. There are not even any heavy cruisers, which might replace battleships in fleet manœuvres.

Pretty nearly every one nowadays regards himself as a strategist and an expert in naval matters. I do not so regard myself, nor do I accept the amateur strategists and experts around me at their own valuation. But to the strategy-less and in-expert mind, one or two things occur in view of the operations of the Spanish and American navies. Quality rather than quantity of ships must win the day in a naval encounter. One ship, equipped with the strongest armour and the most powerful guns, can not only bid defiance to a dozen less strongly armoured and less powerful when it comes to a fight, but destroy them; and one ship that can steam faster than others can choose when and where the fight is to take place. The only qualification to these propositions is that possibly the big ship can be blown up by a torpedo launched from a boat. This is the risk that has to be run. It may be that science will find means to hinder the torpedo boat blowing up the ship of war; it may be that it will render the ship of war as little able to defend itself against the boat as a whale is to escape from a swordfish. The whole naval art is reduced to a question of having the best scientific machines of attack and defence. But unfortunately every year some new machine is discovered which renders all existing machines practically as useless as Noah's Ark would be against a storm in the Atlantic. One thing alone is certain—these naval machines require coal, and therefore if any naval Power hopes to hold its own on the ocean, it must have coaling stations well distributed over the globe.

I have been asked to ventilate a queer grievance from Haulbowline Island. The island is divided into the FASHIONABLE STATIONERY.—LATEST DESIGNS.—Invitation Cards, Ball Programmes, Menus, Visiting Cards, &c.—PARKINS & GOTTO, Court Stationers, Oxford-street, London, W. Patterns free.

Ordnance side and the Naval side, with a gate leading from one department to the other. Lately a regulation has been issued that none of the Naval people are to enter the Ordnance side, and vice versâ, and a lock has been placed on the gate, with policemen on duty to see that each department keeps to its own side. This proceeding has caused much inconvenience on both sides, and as the ukase is understood to have been issued by the naval storekeeper on his own sole responsibility, the inconvenience is accompanied by a good deal of irritation.

The Postmaster-General will have to face a serious drop in his revenue when the law puts a stop—as I hope it will do—to the pernicious enterprise of the circularising usurers. The aggregate expenditure of these harpies on stationery and stamps must be something enormous, judging from the volume in which their rejected addresses continue to pour into this office. As an instance of their activity, one gentleman mentions that, having lately, upon his marriage, executed and registered a settlement of property in favour of his wife, he was, within a day or two, besieged with offers of financial assistance from about fifty money-lenders or touts. There is, however, nothing surprising in the fact that these vultures swoop down upon a newly-married man. Nowadays they gather together in the same way at a birth or a funeral, or any other event which appears likely to afford an opening for business. From the cradle to the grave every likely victim is pursued by these birds of prey.

In the way of impudence I have not come across anything lately to beat an exploit of S. Albert, of 47, Albemarle-street, W. This individual had the assurance to send his circular to a young man, addressed to the care of his father at the latter's club. But young men whose names figure in "Burke" or the "Landed Gentry"—particularly those who have just come of age—have always been the sort of pigeons whom Albert prefers to pluck, or, more correctly, to have a hand in plucking. As a matter of fact, he is not a money-lender himself, but a mere tout. He is, or was, chief jackal to a well-known usurer named Henry Jacobs, the father of the man "Jay" (otherwise "Jacobs") who was examined before the Parliamentary Committee.

A word of warning to people who think they will score off Isaac Gordon, otherwise James W. Ryland, of 6, Livery-street, Birmingham (and other aliases and addresses too numerous to mention), by sending back his circulars with more or less uncomplimentary remarks in unstamped envelopes. Isaac is too sharp to be caught in that way. He simply refuses to take in the unstamped letter, and if there is any address inside, it is returned through the Dead Letter Office to the sender, who has to pay a fee of twopence before he can ascertain what letter it is. By the way, as an illustration of the persistence with which Gordon pesters people with his attentions, a correspondent states that within a recent period this rascal, under his alias of "Robert Dean," of 99, Withington-grove, Manchester, has sent him no fewer than five different circulars.

As a postal pest, the racing tipster makes a good second to the money-lender's tout, and in the former case, as in the latter, a considerable section of the public seems to consider it a matter of duty to send the circulars to Carteret-street, with indignant letters about the gentry from whom they emanate. I should like to point out that it would be at once simpler and cheaper for the unappreciative recipients to consign such circulars to their own waste-paper baskets. It would, too, be a vast relief to mine, which is always overflowing. As a rule—there are, of course, exceptions—the individual tipster is not worth any special notice, and sensible people do not need to be warned against the fraternity generally. As for those who are foolish enough to listen to the voice of the turf charmer and pay for his prophecies, they gain an experience which should teach them better.

One of the exceptions to the rule has, by the way, just turned up, in the shape of a circular issued by a certain H. Hodges, from Coromandel House, Lovel-road, Winkfield, Berks. This individual introduces himself as "not an ordinary advertising tipster," but a gentleman who, through the loss of "nearly the whole of his fortune," is obliged "to do something to maintain his position." He proceeds to state how he does it:—

> I am a member of the principal London clubs. The stables I am immediately connected with are Hornsby's, at Wantage, Berks; W. G. Stevens', at Compton, Berks; C. Peck's, at Ogbourne, Wilts; and Peace's, at Lambourne. Whenever a horse is running from these particular stables, and they are fancied, I know all about them. . . . . You would be in possession of stable secrets of the greatest importance, comprising the real and final intentions of the interested parties, such as could by no other means be obtained. . . . .

It has struck me that the trainers named might like to hear of Mr. Hodges' pretensions to the possession of their "stable secrets." I dare say the information will astonish as well as interest them.

Not many weeks back, a minor poet, whose lays I am sometimes privileged to publish, foretold, in an inspired vision, various developments of penny-in-the-slot mechanism, including an automatic tipster, which would supply names of winners for every coin placed in the slot. It seems to have been one of those prophecies which owe their success to their being uttered after the event, for I have since heard that automatic racing-tip machines have been on the streets for a long time past. On learning this, I sent one of my staff to invest a few coppers for me in selections for events at Epsom. We were too late for the

TRAINS DE LUXE.—LUCHON EXPRESS, every Tuesday and Thursday, direct to Luchon. ENGADINE EXPRESS, to Coire and Lucerne. CARLSBAD EXPRESS, daily to Bayreuth, Carlsbad, &c. Tickets and all particulars from INTERNATIONAL SLEEPING CAR Co., 14, Cockspur-street, London, S.W.

DUYSEN PIANOS are the most superb of all modern Instruments. They stand absolutely unrivalled for beauty of tone, touch, & finish. A consummate success in small grands.—LLOYD'S, 24, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

Derby, but we got a pennyworth for the day following with these results: One winner (at 13 to 8), one second, one third (at 6 to 5 on), one loser, and two non-starters. You might spend a good deal more than a penny on tips and do worse than this. But heaven forbid that I should offer it as a sample of the penny-in-the-slot tipster's usual form.

That the "Queer Stories" in TRUTH are popular, I have long known; but never till this last week had I the slightest idea of the critical acumen with which they are studied by all classes. Last week's story had reference to a bygone Derby, and in it was mentioned the vintage of champagne which a party were drinking. About twenty of my contemporaries in the Press, and some scores of readers of TRUTH, have discovered with immense delight that at the Derby of 1877, "the Derby Devils" were drinking 1884 Bollinger. Everybody wants to know how they did it. Well, everybody who goes to a race meeting is a prophet; and I suppose these festive devils, being connoisseurs, foresaw what a good vintage there was going to be in 1884 and made good use of this knowledge. There is another explanation, comparatively prosaic, which does not seem to have occurred to anybody. It is that the author wrote "'64," and that in the vicissitudes of printing and editing the figures got altered.

The neighbourhood known as Child's Hill, Hendon, bears a painfully inappropriate name. It would be more accurately called Child's Grave, for it has an infant mortality which has now reached the appalling rate of 341 per 1,000, whereas in Hendon itself the infant mortality is only 82 per 1,000. The population of Child's Hill is almost entirely of a working-class character, and in his report to the District Council the Medical Officer partly attributes the high infant mortality to the overcrowding which occurs, owing to the insufficiency of the house accommodation. The state of things which causes this frightful massacre of innocents should surely be the subject of a public inquiry, with a view to drastic measures for its abatement.

Many lawyers object strongly to any alteration of the present limit of County Court jurisdiction, and in doing so they are not by any means defending the interests of their own profession only. The County Court is primarily an instrument for the recovery of small debts and the summary determination of small disputes, and every attempt to convert it into a local branch of the High Court must impair its usefulness for its primary purpose. A barrister writes on this point:—

> The result of sending big cases to the County Court, as shown already by the Employers' Liability cases tried there, is this: A big case is called on, with counsel on both sides, expert witnesses, and all the usual paraphernalia. Result: All the small cases are adjourned to next Court day, with the usual disastrous consequences of costs and delay to all parties concerned. You have repeatedly commented on the block of business in County Courts, particularly Wandsworth. What would it be if really heavy cases were habitually tried in the County Courts? I recollect a recent case, which was really a High Court action, but tried by consent in the County Court. We began at 11 a.m. and went on till 7 p.m. The consequence was that all the little disputes were adjourned to next Court day, which was, perhaps, a month distant. The summum bonum is to get rid of the small cases in the High Court, not to send big ones into the County Court.

Many amazing replies have at different times been put into the mouths of Ministers when information has been sought through the House of Commons; but I doubt whether a more astonishing utterance has ever been made than that which the Home Secretary made last week in reply to a question by Mr. Lough, M.P. Mr. Lough asked whether Mr. Bartle, storekeeper at Leeds Gaol, was recommended by the Commissioners of Prisons for promotion to Deputy-Governor on the ground of opening up a fresh channel of promotion for members of the clerical staff, and whether any other promotions of members of that staff to the rank of Deputy-Governor had been made. To this Sir Matthew White-Ridley replied as follows:—

> Yes, the promotion was made on the grounds stated, and nine similar promotions have since been made.

Mr. Bartle was promoted in May, 1895. Nine Deputy-Governorships have since been filled up; but how far they can be described as "similar promotions" the following list will show:—

1. Major Campbell (Army).
2. Mr. Farewell (Colonial Service).
3. Mr. Mitchell Innes (Colonial Service).
4. Captain Farrant (Army).
5. Mr. Basil Thompson (son of late Archbishop of York).
6. Mr. Northey (Colonial Service).
7. Major Dundas (Army).
8. Captain Guyon (Army).
9. Major Marryat (Army).

On reflection, I should think that Sir Matthew White-Ridley will feel it desirable to interrogate the subordinate functionary who informed him that nine similar promotions to Mr. Bartle's have since been made.

It is not often that a magistrate lays himself open to criticism on the score of undue leniency in dealing with an offence against property. The Cardiff Stipendiary, however, certainly seems to have done this in a recent case. The defendant, Mr. John Storrie, is described as "the well-known local sage and antiquary," and in his methods of interfering with a neighbour's business he is decidedly antiquated, if not sagacious. Mr. Storrie objected to the proposed establishment of a club next door to his own house, and by way of enforcing his objection he tore down some woodwork at the front of the premises. This brought him a solicitor's letter, to which he replied by taking a hammer and smashing the plate-glass window of the intended club. The damage was estimated by the owner at £9, and if it had been committed by a local working man in a drunken freak the stipendiary would probably have sent him to prison. The "local sage," however, was let off with the payment of £2 15s. damages and a fine of one shilling—a penalty which, in view of the deliberate nature of the offence, was preposterously inadequate.

The Maximum of Effect at the Minimum of Cost.—An Object Lesson in Decorating and Furnishing can be obtained by inspecting Messrs. WARING'S Suites of furnished rooms at 175-181, Oxford-st. W.

SURPLICE SHIRTS for evening wear, with pique fronts, 9/6, 10/6 each, made to measure.—SAMPSON & Co., Shirt Tailors, 268, 270, Oxford-street, London, W. Price lists forwarded.

It will be seen from my Legal Pillory that penalties for offences of violence and cruelty have ruled exceptionally low during the past week. At Halesowen a wife can be beaten for the modest fee of 18s., and at Spittlegate the same pastime can be indulged in absolutely free of expense, the defendant being merely bound over to keep the peace. The Newbury Bench charge 25s. for what they themselves characterise as a very serious assault; at St. Helen's the cost of a kicking outrage, in which the complainant's shoulder was fractured, is only 20s.; and at Bolton 10s. is the ridiculously cheap price asked for inflicting five wounds on a man's head, one of them a gash six inches long. As for cases of cruelty to animals, 10s. will pay for starving a calf at Newark, and £1 for deliberately burying a pig alive at Llanfyllin, or working a horse to death at Winchester. On the other hand, very much heavier pecuniary penalties are exacted for the simplest offences against the Game Laws, while sentences of hard labour are mercilessly inflicted for acts of vagrancy or trumpery little thefts:—

Halesowen Police-court. Before Messrs. H. Howard and A. H. Wiggin. George Hackett, charged with an aggravated assault upon his wife. He struck her several blows on the face and head, and he had frequently ill-treated her. Fined 18s., including costs.

Newbury County Police-court. Before Messrs. A. R. Tull, A. Southby, A. J. Bingham, and other magistrates. Five men named Rosier, Shuttle, Crook, Taylor, and Hearne, charged with assaulting Charles Rodd. The defendants, who were drunk, committed a brutal and unprovoked assault upon complainant. The Chairman said it was a very serious case. Fined 25s. each, including costs.

Newark County Police-court. Before Colonel Craig, Dr. Broadbent, and Mr. J. Hole. Edward Smith, charged with illtreating a calf by keeping it in an outhouse for a week without food. When found the animal was still alive though very thin and emaciated. Fined 10s.

Bolton Borough Police-court. Before Dr. Livy and Mr. E. P. Piller. Francis Patterson, charged with occasioning actual bodily harm to Stonewall Jackson. Defendant struck complainant on the head with a glass, causing a gash six inches long and extending to the bone. There were five other wounds. The Bench reduced the charge to one of common assault and fined defendant 10s. and costs.

Spittlegate Police-court. Before Mr. G. Neville, Major Longstaffe, Colonel Parker, and other magistrates. Henry Collin charged with assaulting his wife. It was stated that he had several times seriously assaulted her, and that on the last occasion he struck her a violent blow, knocked her down and attempted to strangle her. He had previously been bound over to keep the peace. The magistrates now again bound him over.

Oundle Police-court. Before Messrs. Bigge, Leaton, and Capron. George Hull and Frederick Hull, charged with trespassing in search of game. Frederick fined £1 16s.; George, £3 6s., or in default a month each.

Dunmow Petty Sessions. Before the Rev. E. F. Gepp, Messrs. E. T. Foakes, and J. B. Frankham. Arthur Thorogood, labourer, charged with taking seven partridges' eggs. Fined £2 7s. 6d. The defendant said he had no money. The Chairman: Then you must go to hard labour for a month.

East Grinstead Police-court. Before Mr. C. H. Everard. Wm. Edward Mitchell, charged with lodging in the open air and being without visible means of subsistence. Four days.

Bedford Divisional Petty Sessions. Before Major Higgins and other Magistrates. Henry Crisp, charged with stealing twenty hens' and ducks' eggs. Three months.

Middlesex County Sessions. Wm. Temple, charged with stealing a fowl at Tottenham. Twelve months.

Holt Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. E. Bowyer Sparke, C. W. H. Cozens-Hardy, J. H. Tooke, C. Temple Lynes, and Sir A. Jodrell. John Nurse, labourer, charged with taking partridge eggs; and Freeman Large charged with aiding and abetting him. Nurse fined £5; Large £3 5s., or twenty-eight days each.

Bridlington Police-court. Before Mr. R. Medforth. John Cameron, charged with begging. Fourteen days.

Llanfyllin Petty Sessions. Edward Owen pleaded guilty to a charge of cruelty to a pig. He was employed to kill and bury a pig infected with swine fever, but, instead of first killing the animal, he buried it alive. Fined £1 and costs.

Winchester City Police-court. Before the Mayor, Colonel F. A. Dickins, Messrs. W. H. Jacob and S. H. Frampton. Frank Polkinghorne, charged with causing a horse to be worked while in an unfit state. Owing to the bad condition of its mouth, the horse had got into a wretched, starved condition, and defendant received several warnings respecting it. He persisted in working the animal, and at last it fell down dead in the road. Fined £1 and costs.

St. Helen's Police-court. Wm. Simms and Joseph Simms, charged with assaulting Peter White. They knocked him down and kicked him so badly that he had to be carried into his house. His shoulder was fractured, one eye nearly knocked out, and four of his teeth broken. Fined 20s. each and costs.

Tipton Police-court. Jane Goode, Hannah Birch, and Charlotte Attewell, charged with stealing coal, value tenpence, from a canal boat. One month.

Wolverhampton Borough Police-court. Before Mr. A. M'Bean and other Justices. Marian Hill Jameson, charged with stealing shoes from a shop-door. One month.

Totnes County Police-court. Before Messrs. F. Cornish-Bowden and B. W. Hayman. Thomas Salsby, charged with damaging a fence to the amount of 2s. 6d. Fined £1 15s., and in default of payment committed for fourteen days.

Rotherham Police-court. Wm. Sunman and George Buckle, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found on the highway in possession of a couple of rabbits and poaching implements. Buckle fined 20s. and costs; Sunman, £5 and costs.

Leeds Police-court. Before the Stipendiary. Harry Almond and his wife, charged with neglecting their two sons, aged five and seven years respectively. The children were badly neglected, and more than once locked out of the house and left to wander about the streets all night. Bound over.

There is a philanthropist of the first water, Claud Byng by name, at Victoria-grove, Folkestone. He is the lucky discoverer of an infallible method of amassing wealth; but instead of keeping it to himself, as a more selfish man would do, he is eager to divide his good fortune with others. About a month ago he advertised as follows in the Daily Telegraph, the favourite medium for such benevolent offers:—

Immediate. Partner wanted at once (active or sleeping). £50 or upwards. Join gentleman with similar amount. £100 turned into over £1,300 monthly. Proof afforded. Also suit ladies.—Z., 1, Victoria-grove, Folkestone.

It will hardly surprise my readers to learn that this gold mine was to be worked at a gaming table. To a request for further particulars, Mr. Byng (otherwise "Z") replied that for the previous month he had been playing roulette at the Kursaal Private Club at Ostend, "both his wife and himself being members." There he had hit upon "a wonderful system," under which losing was an impossibility, and the profits were enormous. These profits were, indeed, under-estimated in his advertisement, for he had proved by subsequent calculations that "from March 26 to April 24 he could have turned £100 into £2,279 10s." In case his correspondent might be inclined to hesitate and lose his chance, Mr. Byng thoughtfully added:—

I have a number of likely answers, so that if you wish to share in this "El Dorado" it must be settled without delay.

And by way of inspiring confidence, he appended to his

Subscriptions greatly needed by The Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—2,876 convictions this year; 7,545 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to Secretary, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

H. L. Savory & Co.'s Cigarettes.—By Special Warrants of Appointments to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, H.S.H. the Duke of Teck, and the Houses of Lords and Commons. To be obtained of all the leading Houses in the trade.—Sole address, 59, Piccadilly, London, W. Specimen case of samples, containing all sizes, 2s. 6d., with price list.

name the letters "R.A.M.," and enclosed the programme of a sacred concert he had given.

This first seductive proposal not being accepted or even acknowledged, Mr. Byng, a few days later, tried another upon the same party. If the latter did not care to invest so much as £50 or £100, would he be disposed to take one or more £5 shares in a syndicate, Mr. Byng "paying back out of profits £25 for each £5"? Or would he be willing to advance Mr. Byng a loan of £50 or £100 at 60 per cent. per annum on the security of the copyrights and plates of "five splendid and valuable popular songs"? The gentleman thus addressed failed to swallow even this tempting bait, and no further attempt has been made to hook him. Last week, however, Mr. Byng blossomed forth in the D.T. with the following more flowery advertisement :—

A Klondike.—Thousands risk their lives on a fruitless errand to Klondike or invest in a Company which pays no dividend. Why do either when a fortune lays at your very door? Professional gentleman has solved a problem which has hitherto been deemed an impossibility; nothing to do with turf or stocks. People may be sceptical, but it can be proved a positive fact that a capital of £200 would have made . . . . £4,396 clear profit in less than a month, and this can be done again and infinitely more. Wanted to form syndicate, capital £200 to £7,000 in £1 shares; £100 already subscribed. Honest treatment absolutely guaranteed. . . . . Only want your support to make you wealthy.—Z., 1, Victoria-grove, Folkestone.

Mr. Byng's scheme, it will be observed, is extremely expansive. Originally he wanted one partner and a capital of £100. He has obtained them—at least he says so—and he might now be piling up riches beyond the dreams of avarice. Yet so anxious is he to benefit his fellow-men that he now invites 7,000 of them to put down £7,000 and share in his "El Dorado." To my mind it would be a shame to take advantage of his good nature—indeed, I shall think very poorly of anybody who does so.

There is a newcomer among West End Shylocks—his quarters are in Suffolk-street—who baits his hook with the attractive announcement that "the terms do not exceed 10 per cent. per annum (not per month)." The parenthesis is a nasty cut at some rival practitioners, but I would not advise anybody to place too much faith in the statement which precedes it. The would-be borrower who expects to get money from this individual at 10 per cent. will, I suspect, be egregiously disappointed.

Judging from the number of Ernest Day's circulars flying about, this individual still finds customers for the valuable family portraits of which he continues to come into possession through the death of a relative. The customers, however, must be extremely simple people, independently of the fact that they are not readers of Truth, for it is quite obvious in Day's recent letters that the name of the portrait and the references to the person depicted are written in at a later date than the body of the letter, which should be a sufficient indication to any one who can read between the lines that the letters are written in bulk and the names filled in afterwards, as occasion arises, to fit each particular portrait. Ernest Day has now been carrying on this game for the last six or eight years, and it is indeed a marvellous thing that he has not yet exhausted either the supply of old prints or the supply of fools to purchase them.

It does not appear to be generally understood that "Bernard Beaumont, Author," who is soliciting orders for a "New high-class County Work" from an address at Kingston-on-Thames, is our old friend Manning Press, author of so many high-class county works that have been in bygone times noticed in Truth. I mention this in order to preclude any doubt on the point in future. Press, if I remember rightly, changed his name in consequence of the attention he received in these columns—a compliment which I much appreciate, but which only inspires me with a desire to demolish "Bernard Beaumont" as effectually as I have demolished Manning Press.

This worthy has always maintained that his method of bookmaking is a perfectly legitimate one. If it is, nothing that has ever been said in Truth can ever do him the slightest harm, for I have always stated with the most scrupulous accuracy that his aim is to induce nobodies to imagine themselves somebodies by providing them with niches in his biographical temple at so many guineas per head. By advertising this fact I should have thought that I was helping to find him customers. Yet, instead of thanking me, he responds by changing his name. Surely this is an admission that too much publicity does not suit his particular line of business.

Mrs. and Miss Eyres, of Lincoln, whose letters soliciting orders for widows' mourning were referred to in a recent issue of Truth, are fortunate in possessing friends in different parts of the country who have come forward to answer for the genuineness of their case and the truthfulness of their statements. In the face of what they say, I have no desire to comment further on the widows' mourning business; but if anything would lead me to do so, it is a letter that I have had from one indiscreet friend of the family, who, after reminding me of some information which I am said to have received two years ago, proceeds to lecture me in this strain :—

Colonel Eyres did not leave his wife and children unprovided for. It was Colonel Eyres' son who lost all his money and made an improvident marriage, and since his death his wife has been trying to earn an honest living by making widows' collars and cuffs. It is a perfectly genuine case; and it is very hard on her that you should try to injure her honest endeavours to keep a home for herself and children. I hope you will not interfere any further in this business.

If I do not "interfere any further in this business" it will only be because I am too tender-hearted to deal out justice impartially. It is quite certain that the people who seize on announcements in the Times as a pretext for forwarding samples of goods, or begging-letters, are an intolerable nuisance, and the nuisance is in no way mitigated by the fact that the people who act so are "genuine cases." It is equally certain that if every one endeavouring to make an honest living were to adopt Mrs. Eyres' tactics, life would soon become intolerable for the rest of us, unless Parliament should legislate for the suppression of such nuisances. I have always waged war on this method of getting "an honest living," and if, out of mere sentimental consideration, I make an exception in favour of Mrs. Eyres, people will say that I am as bad as the Great Unpaid, who have one law for one class and another for another. It seems to me a pity that the many people who take an interest in this good lady do not start her in business in some place where she can "earn an honest living" on the same lines as any other tradeswoman.

If you want to entirely Furnish your House or select any article of Furniture or Carpet, &c., send for Hewetsons' Illustrated Priced Catalogue.—Hewetsons, Tottenham Court-road, London.

For Truth, and all other Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals, send your Subscriptions to Wm. Dawson & Sons, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's-bldngs., London. (Estab. 1809.) Catalogue gratis.

As was only to be expected, the revolver craze is gradually spreading from London and the larger towns to the more rural districts. For the matter of that, the ways of boys are very much the same all the country through, and the possession of a sword or a pistol confers a temporary distinction upon the proprietor, which renders him at once the envy and admiration of his fellows. It has come to the knowledge of the Norfolk magistrates that an advertising firm are distributing circulars broadcast offering boys revolvers for the sum of three shillings and sixpence each. The result, it is needless to say, has been that a brisk sale has already been established, and reckless shooting is being carried on in various parts of the county. It is only a matter of time for the extension of this dangerous traffic to every part of the country, more especially if no steps are taken to repress it, and as it is an evil which requires no very elaborate amount of legislation, it surely ought to be dealt with without delay.

It would seem that there is practically no limit to the various directions in which paper is likely to be employed in time to come. An ingenious inventor has recently produced a shoe for horses made from this material. It is to be fitted to the hoof with a strong glue, and it is claimed for it that it will be found much more lasting than the iron article it is intended to replace; whilst its lightness and the absence of all danger from nails in shoeing, will render it, if it proves serviceable in other respects, an inestimable benefit to horses and their owners. Moreover, it is announced that the new underground wires about to be laid from London to Birmingham are to be insulated by means of specially prepared paper, and should this invention answer, another large field for the employment of paper will have been opened up. At this rate, Japan will soon lose its monopoly of paper-made goods.

I suppose that the Home Secretary is making progress with his promised "phossy jaw" prosecution and inquiry, although I have not noticed any visible results yet from his promise on this subject. Assuming, however, that the matter is to be fully investigated, I would call attention to suggestions which I have received from more than one quarter that half the evils of handling phosphorus may be overcome by a thorough ventilation of the rooms where the work is done. Here is a very striking piece of testimony on this point from a working man employed in a match factory at Leeds :—

> I think if all places were properly ventilated there would be no cases of death from phossy jaw, or they would be very rare. I have worked at Seanor & Sons for thirty-five years, and I have never been under the doctor for one week, that is, for bodily sickness, and I might say there has never been a case of phossy jaw at these works. There is one woman that works with me who has been filling boxes of matches for twenty-five years which are all mixed with yellow phoss. Nearly all the girls arrange (Qy. average) from eight to ten years, which proves to me that where there is plenty of room for the smell to go away there is not much danger. I should think that I have mixed and dipped tons of yellow phoss, as I have done nothing else for twenty years out of thirty-five that I have worked at these works.

This is the testimony of a practical man, and deserves consideration. If a man can go on working yellow phosphorus at Leeds for twenty or thirty years without injury, there is no reason why the same thing should not be done in London.

The Home Secretary's utterance in Parliament last week on the subject of palmistry is as obscure and incomprehensible as any deliverance of a professor of occult science. According to the official doctrine thus laid down, a palmist—which I suppose includes any fortune-teller—can only be convicted when there is an intention to deceive. On this principle the Home Secretary appears to draw a distinction between the gipsy who tells fortunes for servant-girls and the Bond-street palmist who tells fortunes for the nobility and gentry. The argument would seem to be that the aristocratic professor of occult science does not intend his utterances to be believed, whereas the gipsy is a conscious impostor. More utter rubbish I never heard, and it is astonishing to find it delivered from such a quarter.

All women, whether Duchesses or shop-girls, go to a fortune-teller in precisely the same frame of mind. Very possibly they accept the responses of the oracle with a certain amount of mental reservation; and very possibly the oracle does not expect all his (or her) utterances to be believed implicitly. But to assume that a guinea fee indicates a less fraudulent intention than a sixpenny one, is merely to lay down one law for the rich and another for the poor. Sir Matthew White-Ridley went on to say that "suspicious cases were watched by the police, and whenever there was evidence that fraud or imposition was being practised they prosecuted the offender." If the Home Secretary will kindly explain how a police officer decides for himself that one fortune-teller is a fraud and that another is not, he will confer very valuable information upon the public.

Frances Moore has now on view the latest Models from Paris in Hats, Bonnets, &c. Special and exclusive designs in Toques.—8, Maddox-street, Regent-street, W.

Mortlock's (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "Mortlock's" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

Unless the lesson of the Sierra Leone rebellion is taken to heart at the Colonial Office, it is quite on the cards that we shall shortly be confronted with a similar trouble in the Gold Coast Protectorate. The cause of the mischief, too, will be very much the same in the latter case as in the former. The Government of the colony is proposing to pass a Lands Bill, which fundamentally alters the conditions on which the Protectorate exists, and, moreover, imposes a tax which is sure to be resisted. In justification of this measure, it is said that it is necessary to protect the forests from injury by the reckless felling of timber, and to prevent waste and forest lands and minerals from being improvidently dealt with. The native kings and chiefs admit that some legislation in this direction is desirable; but contend that the Bill goes a long way beyond the requirements of the case.

One portion of the Bill vests in the Governor the ultimate and paramount title to all unoccupied or waste lands, and empowers him to lease or sell them to any person on any terms he pleases. These are lands which have never been ceded to us, which are within the domains of the recognised kings and chiefs, and which in native eyes are their inalienable property. Other parts of the Bill make important changes in regard to the devolution and descent of immovable property, and deal in an iconoclastic spirit with sundry tribal rights and native customs. To clinch these confiscatory and revolutionary proposals, there is, finally, a provision for the establishment of what is called a perpetual quit rent, but what is in effect a land-tax. Such a tax could not be effectively or profitably collected if its collection were opposed, and there is little doubt that it would be opposed in the most vigorous way.

So strong is the native feeling against the Bill, that a number of kings and chiefs of the western province of the Protectorate are this month coming to England to support in person the protests they have already made in a petition asking her Majesty not to sanction the measure. It is understood that they are anxious to come to some reasonable arrangement, and that in the matter of taxation they would not object to contribute to the necessary revenue for the development of the Protectorate if their contribution were levied in the form of a percentage based upon the rentals paid and the value of the services rendered by occupiers and natives within their domains. On the other hand, it is practically certain that if any attempt is made to enforce the Bill in its present form the discontent now smouldering throughout the colony will break out into open rebellion. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the Colonial Secretary will give a friendly hearing to his dusky visitors. The little war that we still have on hand in Sierra Leone should be a sufficient warning of the danger of contemptuously disregarding native opinion and gratuitously provoking native resentment.

It is a curious fact that while Dr. Sun Yat Sen has been banished from Hong Kong out of deference to the wishes of the Chinese Government, a committee of refugees from the Philippines has been, according to the statements of the news-agencies, sitting at Hong Kong to organise and direct the insurrection against the Spanish Government in those islands. It is also certain that the Spanish Revolutionary Committee has been acting in concert with the American Admiral. In view of our duties as neutrals, there would seem to be much more reason for interfering with the operations of the Philippine rebels than for persecuting Dr. Sun Yat Sen, whose revolutionary designs were to all appearance of a more or less academic character. Nobody, so far as I know, has ever suggested that an active revolution in China was being fomented in Hong Kong, and the action of the Colonial Government in that case seems to have been a gross violation of our traditional policy towards political refugees, merely for the purpose of obliging the corrupt and rotten Chinese Government. If the Hong Kong authorities can wink at the proceedings of the Philippine Junta, they have not a shadow of justification for their proceedings in Sun Yat Sen's case.

SCRUTATOR.

LEYDS V. CHAMBERLAIN.

DR. LEYDS has conclusively shown in his lengthy despatch, that, whether it was wise or not, we deliberately gave up British suzerainty over the Transvaal, by the Convention of 1884. In that year a deputation came to London from the Transvaal, openly and avowedly to induce her Majesty's Government to abrogate the suzerainty asserted in the Convention of 1881. Lord Derby, then Colonial Secretary, met the demand by striking his pen through all allusions or claims to the suzerainty contained in the old Convention, and both Liberal and Conservative Ministers declared that our relations with the Republic were such as this latter Convention established.

Suzerainty is a vague word. The Convention of 1884 specifically lays down the reservations, outside of which the South African Republic is independent. Why, then, raise the question whether suzerainty is a proper definition of the relations established by the Convention? The assertion of suzerainty seems to have been made by Mr. Chamberlain to strengthen his case for a refusal to agree to arbitration in regard to any matters in dispute between us and the Republic. Suzerainty, according to him, vests the interpretation of the Convention with us. But this hardly holds water, in view of the fact that what is called the "Coolie Question," in its relation to the Convention of 1884, was referred to the arbitration of the President of the Orange Free State, the award setting forth in its preamble:

Whereas certain questions have arisen between the Government of the South African Republic and the Government of H.M. the Queen with reference to the fourteenth Article of a certain Fire Protection on Country Houses.—Merryweathers' system. Economy, convenience, efficiency. Illustrated particulars post free.—Write Merryweathers, 63, Long-acre, London.

Convention entered into in London, February 25, 1884, by the representatives of the said Governments . . . .

After this, if Mr. Chamberlain's argument that suzerainty precludes arbitration be correct, it exposes us to the reply, that the suzerainty has already been admitted not to exist by the fact of arbitration having been already agreed to.

Assuredly if we wish to establish harmonious relations with the South African Republic, it would be well to consent to arbitration whenever we and the Republic differ in respect to the scope and meaning of any Article in the Convention. If one party to a convention may interpret it as he pleases, the Convention, so far as regards the other party, might as well never have existed. We have already done the Transvaal grievous wrong. Mr. Rhodes, the Administrator of Rhodesia, and the Cape Premier, Sir Graham Bower, the Secretary of the High Commissioner, and others for whom we are directly responsible, entered into a conspiracy to subvert the Government of the Republic, and the former induced British officers to join in a raid against that Republic by assuring them that H.M. Government approved of it. When the question how far the Colonial Office was cognisant of this plot was submitted to a Select Committee of the House of Commons, Mr. Chamberlain deliberately suppressed documentary evidence in his possession, which the Solicitor of Mr. Rhodes and of the Chartered Company asserts would have proved such cognisance; and since then Mr. Chamberlain has never ceased to laud Mr. Rhodes, and he has even assented to the Chartered Company replacing that gentleman in the position that he occupied before the raid in Rhodesia. Under these circumstances, to vest in Mr. Chamberlain the right to interpret the Convention between H.M. Government and the Republic is about as fair as it would be to leave this to Mr. Rhodes.

It by no means follows that we ought to consent to submit any issue between us and the Republic to the arbitration of a foreign Power. Against this there are, I think, valid objections. The arbitrators should be the Chief Justices of the two British Colonies and of the two Republics in South Africa, and if three of these Chief Justices cannot agree, the matter in question should be referred to the Committee of the Privy Council. I do not believe that the Transvaal would suffer from the composition of the ultimate Court of Appeal being British, for Judges are seldom actuated by anything beyond the legalities of an issue submitted to them. To refer the question whether the relations existing between us and the Republic constitute a British suzerainty would be to raise an academic issue, serving no useful purpose. Such reference should only take place in respect to specific differences arising from any action on our part or on the part of the Republic, which either party may consider to conflict with the Convention regulating the relations of the two States.

Our aim should be to establish a friendly feeling between us and the Republic. For Mr. Chamberlain to go out of his way to term our relation to the Republic a suzerainty, after Lord Derby had struck the word out of the Convention that regulates this relation, and although the word had never been used after this Convention had been signed and ratified, was a deliberate attempt to wound the feelings of the Boers in a matter more sentimental than practical. President Kruger had got the better of him in their epistolary encounters. He knew that the President plumed himself on having induced Lord Derby to give up the claim of suzerainty. It was because he thought that its reassertion would be specially disagreeable to the President that he reasserted it.

HOTEL ALBEMARLE, Piccadilly, London. Private Suite, Bath, Electric Light, Lift. VERMERSCH, Proprietor. Paris: Imperial Hotel, Champs Elysées. Boulogne S/M: Imperial Pavilion Hotel.

AMERICA AND HER FRIENDS.

Dr. Johnson said that he did not believe that an earthquake had taken place in Lisbon for many months after full details had been given of it in the newspapers. Were the Doctor now living, he would not place implicit faith in the news that is conveyed to us each day in regard to all and everything connected with the Hispano American War. We are treated every morning to the latest information as to what the rival naval commanders have done during the last twenty-four hours, and their most secret intentions in the future, but all this valuable information is usually contradicted the next day, when fresh fictions are vouchsafed to us. One thing alone is certain: if the struggle be fought out to the bitter end, the victory will rest with the Americans, because they are far stronger than the Spaniards.

The relations and sympathies of neutrals towards the belligerents afford a further field for imaginative "facts." As the United States are strong and powerful, the journals of each European Power seek to show, not only that their own nation is animated by the most friendly dispositions towards America, but that other Powers are tainted with Spanish sympathies. Seldom a day passes without our newspapers containing a full and veracious account of French negotiations and intrigues on behalf of Spain, and they contrast this with our warm love and affection for our cousins. The truth is that no European country has meddled in the quarrel, nor is it likely to meddle, for the plain but practical reason that there is nothing to be gained by siding with Spain. With respect to our position, we believe that the sooner Spain is cleared, bag and baggage, out of Cuba, the better it will be for the Cubans in particular, and the cause of humanity in general. We, therefore, heartily wish our cousins success, and speedy success, in their endeavour to attain this end. The vast majority of the people of this country have always been for the maintenance of the most cordial relations with the United States, and they have proved this in past times. But these have not been the views of the classes. The war against American Independence continued long after the people had declared themselves desirous to recognise that independence, and King George III. had to be coerced into submission to the popular will. During the Civil War the people alone prevented the governing classes from dragging us into an alliance with the party of disintegration. Only a year or two ago the outspoken declarations of the people obliged the present Government to adopt a conciliatory attitude in respect to the Venezuela dispute. The affectionate gush of our "yellow journals" just now is not based on any special love for the United States, but on a desire to secure her alliance, in case they can manage to force us into a war in order to carry out that expansion of Empire which is their craze. What, indeed, Mr. Chamberlain means by an alliance between the two countries to be cemented on some battle-field, he probably hardly knows himself. Where is this Anglo-Saxon battle-field to be? What is to be the "great and noble cause" for which we and the Americans are jointly to fight? Against whom are we to fight? Where does the advantage of the United States come in? Is the alliance to be general? If so, is it to be an offensive and a defensive one? What gain would it be to the United States for us to guarantee to them the integrity of their possessions? No European Power has ever dreamt of endeavouring to assail that integrity. Are the United States prepared, in return, to guarantee to us the integrity of our Asiatic and African dominions, and all further accessions to these dominions that it may please us to make? Does any one in his senses suppose that either the American President or the American Senate would assent to such an alliance? Such suggestions are not within the area of practical politics, they are only put forward as sops to fool the unwary.

What I should like to see is a treaty of arbitration in respect to all disputes that may arise between this country and the United States. This would be worth all the vapid, sentimental, cousinly twaddle that is being aired. If later on there arises some particular issue, which both countries regard as of paramount importance to their well being, and which can only be obtained by a war, it will be time enough to join forces in order to attain it. I confess, however, that I greatly doubt whether there ever will be such an issue, for friendly as we may feel towards the United States, we are entirely at variance in respect to the commercial policy which we consider essential to our welfare. Countries are actuated in their policy by regard for their interests. Our interest in the policy of the United States is to keep on terms of cordial friendship, and if it happens that we do not quite agree upon some matter, to refer the decision to some third party, instead of having recourse to arms. America is now at war with Spain. She has too much self-respect to ask us to come to her aid, not holding Mr. Chamberlain's view that it is consistent with the dignity of a great country to run about, hat in hand, begging and imploring foreign nations to enter into alliances.

The following would be reasonable terms on which to end the war now raging. Cuba should be handed over to the United States, Spain being freed of all guarantee in respect to the Cuban public debt. Spain should be left in possession of Porto Rico and of the Philippines. Each side should pay its own costs. The war was undertaken to free Cuba. That island has been so thoroughly misgoverned by Spain, that she deserves to be deprived of it; but as it belonged to Spain, I hardly think that it would be consistent with fair play to oblige her to pay the cost of depriving her of it, or to punish her by the loss of other territory for not having accepted without a struggle the loss of her most important colony. The United States, having thus acquired Cuba, might deal with it as they please. If wise, they would leave it to the Cubans. This is, however, a matter for their consideration alone.

What I would respectfully impress upon the Americans is, that they will make a terrible mistake if they seize the occasion of this war to acquire territories outside the area of their legitimate influence, such as the Philippine Islands. That they are, like Russia, a self-contained country, is their strength. The whole scheme of American polity would be shattered, were the globe to be dotted over with American islands, neither States nor Territories, held under subjection. In all probability the inhabitants of the Philippines, of Porto Rico, and of Cuba would be considerable gainers by America annexing them; nor do I think that we, or, indeed, any other European Power, would be in any way damnified. But the question to the Americans should be whether they themselves will, on a balance of advantages or disadvantages, profit by the annexation. We used to glory that we were a non-military nation. We have drifted into the position of a nation with larger armaments than any other. No matter what we spend on armaments, we are called on to spend more. We hold a larger portion of the globe than any other nation. So absorbing becomes earth-hunger when once indulged, that we are every year adding new territories to our Empire. And what is the result? All domestic reforms are put aside as unworthy to occupy our Imperial minds. If a poor man asks for bread, he is told joyfully to starve, with the comforting reflection that he is the citizen of an expansive and expanding Empire. It is with us as it is with a silly landowner who allows the tares and weeds to flourish in his fields, and bends all his efforts to his useless rocks and swamps. We who hold to the wise policy of Mr. Gladstone and of other of our departed leaders are sneeringly called "Little Englanders." Be warned, therefore, by the example of this country, my American friends. Be ready, as I know you are, to defend the vast heritage that has accrued to you. But rest satisfied with it. Remain an example to the world that it is possible to be great and prosperous without grabbing, now on one pretext, now on another, territory that is a source of weakness rather than of strength, and without wasting your substance in armaments designed to defend and to increase these unremunerative acquisitions.

MR. ROOKE'S WELSH MUTTON.

On the 12th ult. a paragraph appeared in Truth warning housekeepers and others against an advertisement offering Welsh mutton direct on application to H. A. Rooke, Coed-y-brain Farm, Nannerch, North Wales. In support of the warning, it was mentioned that the housekeeper to a gentleman in Yorkshire sent an order accompanied by a remittance to the said address, and had been unable to obtain the goods or any answer to subsequent letters—although a previous order had been duly executed. Further, on communicating with the local police, the Yorkshire gentleman was informed by the Superintendent that no such person as H. A. Rooke was to be found at Nannerch, that several other people had been defrauded in the same way, and that the author of the advertisement appeared to reside in Liverpool.

Spa, Belgium.—Summer Season.—Casino, Concerts, Racing, Pigeon Shooting, Theatre. Delightful situation. Excellent Hotels. For details apply to Jules Crehay, Secretary, Casino.

I felt fully justified in publishing this paragraph, having before me the statements of the Yorkshire gentleman whose money had been sent to Mr. Rooke, and also the statement of the police officer in answer to this gentleman's inquiry. However, a week later I received the following letter:—

12, Commerce chambers,
16, Harrington-street,
Liverpool, May 18, 1898.

Sir,—I have been consulted by Mr. H. A. Rook with regard to a paragraph appearing on page 1168 of your issue of 12th inst.

I am informed that the paragraph in question, so far as it reflects upon the character of my client, is entirely untrue and misleading, and my instructions are to ask you for a retraction and apology, or a reference to your solicitors.—Yours respectfully,

Jno. C. Wilson.

The Editor of Truth,
The Editorial Offices,
Carteret-street, Westminster, S.W.

It would be impossible for any newspaper to be carried on for a week, if every statement made in it in good faith and on authentic information were to be contradicted in the next issue, whenever a lawyer made a demand for such contradiction accompanied by a threat of litigation. Moreover, it will be seen that Mr. Wilson's curt epistle is framed in very guarded language. He does not state that the paragraph is wholly untrue, but only that it is untrue and misleading "so far as it reflects upon the character of his client." Yet he demands "a retraction and apology" without limitation or qualification of any kind. Had such a "retraction and apology" been published, it might conceivably have been quite as "untrue and misleading" as the original paragraph, or possibly more so. The facts stated in the paragraph are undoubtedly true. There can be no question that Mr. Rooke's advertisement was answered with the result stated, and that the police were consulted with the result stated. The original statement was, in fact, very much within the truth, for I can now point to upwards of a dozen parties in all parts of the kingdom who have sent money to Mr. Rooke with precisely the same result as the original "gentleman in Yorkshire." No correction, therefore, will convey the whole truth to the public which does not explain precisely the nature of Mr. Rooke's connection with the advertisement, and the reason why persons who have forwarded cash in answer to the advertisement have been unable to obtain either the goods they ordered or a return of the money, or even an answer to letters.

On these grounds, before complying with Mr. Wilson's request, I wrote and requested from him further particulars. I inquired whether I was to understand that he denied the statements of the gentleman in Yorkshire and the Police Superintendent at Holywell; and I told him that if he would furnish me with proofs of the accuracy of such denial, I should then be willing to give publicity to it, as I had certainly no wish to do injustice to his client or any one else. The reply was as follows:—

12, Commerce-chambers,
16, Harrington-street,
Liverpool, May 25, 1898.

Sir,—Referring to your letter of yesterday's date, if you will look at mine of the 18th inst., you will see that my informant was Mr. Rooke himself, whose statements (as far as any criminal intent is concerned) I prefer to those of "a gentleman in Yorkshire" or even a policeman.

As you have neither apologised nor referred me to your solicitor, as requested, and the annoyance caused to my client through your article daily increases, he has commenced proceedings to-day.—Yours respectfully,

Jno. C. Wilson.

This letter, it will be seen, does not carry the matter a step further than the previous communication. Mr. Wilson, of course, believes his client's statements in preference to those of any third party. He is paid to believe them, and, if I understand the etiquette of the profession rightly, he would be guilty of an irregularity if he stated in public that he did not believe them. For this reason, however, Mr. Wilson's belief in his client's statement does not afford a particle of corroboration of the statement itself (whatever it may have been) and cannot possibly be accepted in place of the kind of evidence for which I asked. I cannot help, too, being struck by the fact that Mr. Wilson qualifies his belief in his client by introducing the singular phrase, "as far as criminal intent is concerned." Am I to understand from this that, except in regard to criminal intent, Mr. Wilson would not accept his client's statement against that of two other witnesses? If so, the issue is narrowed very considerably, and comes down to this: that while what "the gentleman in Yorkshire" says may be true and what "the policeman" says may be true, Mr. Wilson will answer for it that his client has no criminal intentions.

I cannot help thinking that Mr. Wilson would have done much better for his client had he accepted my invitation and given me for publication his client's version of the facts, and his explanation of whatever looks awkward in them, instead of refusing both, and taking refuge in the very ambiguous disclaimer, backed by the scarcely less ambiguous remedy of a libel action. I have not accused Mr. Rooke (if that is the correct spelling of his name) of any "criminal intent." I have merely stated facts, and left the public, to whom the advertisements are addressed, to form their own conclusions. If Mr. Rooke is in a position to show that it is a mere accident that money has been received without value being given in return and that inquiries after the advertiser at Nannerch have been unsuccessful, or if he can offer any explanation which puts a different complexion on the facts, all this could have been done at once through the columns of Truth; and the increasing annoyance which, according to Mr. Wilson, his client is experiencing, would have been stopped at once. As it is, Mr. Rooke and I will appear some months hence before a judge and jury in Liverpool or elsewhere; Mr. Rooke will then say, before a very limited audience, what he has to say, and the jury may, or may not, accept his version and explanation of the facts. In the meantime, those who are interested in the facts merely know that Mr. Rooke, through his solicitor, asserts the paragraph to be "untrue and misleading," but declines to say what portion of it is untrue, or in what way it is misleading, and prefers the chances of a libel trial in a few months' time to the opportunity that has been offered to him of correcting the mistake at once through the columns of TRUTH. Assuming everything in his favour, and admitting—as I am quite ready to do when reason is shown for it—that Mr. Rooke has been the innocent victim of a mistake, I hardly think he has chosen the best way of vindicating himself.

For the Decorating and Furnishing in best modern manner, or in any of the traditional styles, of a single room or an entire house, Hampton & Sons, Ltd., prepare, free of charge, suggestive schemes and competitive estimates.—Pall Mall East, S.W.

THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF TESTATORS.

A brief reference was recently made in TRUTH to the testamentary dispositions of the late Rev. E. N. Pochin, a clergyman of the Church of England, who, having for many years led a disreputable life and treated his wife and children vilely, consummated his iniquities by bequeathing the whole of his property, amounting to the considerable sum of £109,000, to a religious society, and leaving his family destitute. It was subsequently pointed out to me by one of my readers that this case exemplifies a very serious defect in the English law with reference to the powers of testators—a defect which probably does not exist in the law of any other civilised country. I have made certain inquiries with a view to verifying this last statement, and I find it perfectly accurate. It seems desirable that public attention should now be further directed to this point, with the view of bringing the English law into harmony with what appears to have been the general rule in civilised countries from the time of the Roman jurists.

Without professing to have exhausted the subject, I find that the power of a testator to bequeath the whole of his possessions away from those primâ facie entitled to look to him for support is not recognised in any part of Germany, in France, or, what brings it more closely home to us, north of the Tweed in this island. I think it may almost be taken for granted that no such right is recognised in any country the legal system of which is based upon Roman law, and it certainly would not be recognised in any country in which the legal system was based upon common sense. My personal knowledge of Roman law is a little hazy, but I am credibly informed that for at least 500 years before the time of Justinian the principle was recognised that a child disinherited by a parent could bring an action to set aside the will; and this principle had been extended before Justinian's time in two ways: first, by allowing a corresponding right to parents disinherited by children, and to others in the ascending and descending scale whose claims upon the testator were set aside by the will; secondly, by allowing to these parties, even where they had not been entirely passed over in the will, the right to claim a share of the inheritance not exceeding one-quarter of the amount to which they would have been entitled upon intestacy. Roman law, therefore, foresaw and provided against the testamentary designs of such individuals as the late Mr. Pochin. The same remark applies to the law of France, where a testator cannot alienate from his descendants more than half of his estate if he leaves one legitimate child at his death, one-third if he leaves two children, or one-quarter if he leaves three or a greater number. Under Scottish law I understand that a man cannot under any circumstances alienate from his lawful wife and children more than one-third of his estate. In Germany the law has hitherto varied in different States, but a new code, which will unify the law of the whole Empire, has recently been passed, and will come into force in the year 1900. The effect of it upon the point we are now discussing seems to be this—that any person, either in the ascending or descending scale, who would have been entitled to a share of the estate on the intestacy of the deceased, can claim half of that share, notwithstanding any testamentary disposition to the contrary. In all these countries the testator's relatives may forfeit their rights by misconducting themselves towards him during his life; but that is a branch of the subject with which we are not now concerned.

I only refer to the foreign law on these points in order to show that the English law is as opposed to the practice of other nations as it is repugnant to justice and common-sense. It is repugnant to common-sense, because, as things stand, a man of ample means may upon his death, either from spitefulness or mere caprice, leave the whole of his property, as Mr. Pochin did, away from his dependants, and saddle the community with the responsibility of providing after his death for those whom he has beggared. Every ratepayer has the best possible right to object to this. We may not be able to prevent a man from beggaring himself and his family either by his idleness or his vices during his lifetime; but, at least, when he dies, and when the law regulates and supervises the disposition of his effects, the law can make its own terms as to the power of a testator to impose charges upon the rates. We already compel every member of the community who departs this life to hand over to the State in the form of death duties a certain portion of his effects, and the tendency of recent legislation has been to increase rather than to diminish this portion. It is a foolish inconsistency to permit at the same time a man of means to say through his will, "I decline to make provision out of my estate for the support of my wife and children, and I will leave them to be provided for by the workhouse and the relieving officer, or by the charity of their neighbours."

Moreover, it may happen that the possession by a testator of the power to take this course inflicts the greatest injustice upon his surviving dependents. The worst feature in the case of the Rev. Mr. Pochin was that he had possessed himself while alive of the whole of his wife's property; and I believe I am right in saying that it was by means of the money thus placed at his disposal that he amassed a large part of his wealth. Yet the whole of the property which he thus owed directly or indirectly to his wife he alienated from her by his death—a piece of undisguised, though legalised, robbery. In spite of Married Women's Property Acts, the line of demarcation between the property of wife and husband is often hard to maintain intact, and it is a monstrous thing that a husband should be able to obtain money from his wife during her life and bestow it in other directions when he dies. Nor must it be forgotten that the power to commit this wrong gives to every paterfamilias a terrible hold over his wife and family during his life. By holding over them in terrorem the threat to reduce them to beggary by his will, there is scarcely any indignity or cruelty which an unscrupulous man might not force his wife and children to submit to. I am not an enthusiast on the subject of woman's rights, nor do I hold with the extreme advocates of the emancipation of married women. But I think that justice requires that every wife who duly performs her part of the marriage contract should for her own protection be given an inalienable right to a certain proportion of her husband's estate upon his death. Nor is there any apparent reason why, if the law compels a man to maintain his offspring during his life, it should not enforce the same obligations upon him when he is disposing of his property at his death. An amendment of the English law in these directions is urgently needed, and I trust that it will not be long before we see some attempt to carry it.

FRIVOLITY AT THE GAIETY.

Théodore de Banville, the Parisian poet of dance and song, has placed a clown among the constellations, by the side of Andromeda and Perseus. For him the great point was that the heart should remain at rest, the soul untroubled. It was always fête-day with him; he was always embarking for Cythera, or just returned from the "Closerie des Lilas." I am sure Banville would have naturally gravitated to the Gaiety, had he lived this side of the Channel. He would have been the historian of its rise and progress to the present triumphal dimensions. Kate Vaughan's unforgetable elegance would have been preserved for coming generations in some scented lyric; his Muse would have fitted on the shoes of Letty Lind and danced in them across the centuries.

Yes, I can imagine nothing more likely to stimulate the interest of the times to come than the discovery of one of these Gaiety plays—one of those mosaic manuscripts tied together with a girl's hair—Venetian girl, Circus girl, or some other rose girl.

These plays have all the elements of permanence, and chief among them an absolute concentration on the most trivial side of actual English life. True, we may find ourselves in Corsica or Venice, and the scenery and accessories be quite perfect, as on the present occasion. Yet we know that wherever Miss Ethel Haydon goes Mr. Edmund Payne is sure to follow, and that the exquisite elegance of Miss Katie Seymour will be pirouetting close by. We know, in fact, that we are safe in the Strand, and to my mind that is as interesting as the Venice of Tiepolo. All this will charm posterity, as we are charmed rather by the mimes of Herondas than the flints of Demosthenes. Then a Gaiety play is so illogical, so like life itself. There is no horrible sequence of events, little attempt at dovetailing situations. Suffice it that our authors occasionally deign to connect two scenes with some rose-garland or the silver thread of Mr. Harry Greenbank's lyrics. Here also, no straining after foreign models; Miss Connie Ediss, for instance, so bright in song and repartee, may be said with but slight risk of error to have been born within hearing of Bow Bells.

Should Mr. Edwardes ever reach this point in my criticism, he will certainly exclaim with great truth and reason: "But what does posterity matter to me? I work for the present." How true and how right he is! It is just through this complete absorption in the spirit of the moment, in the not very lofty pre-occupations of insular England, that the "Runaway Girl" has a chance of distancing married women like Mrs. Tanqueray. But enough of the year 2000, and let me tell you the story of "The Runaway Girl." I have looked, but cannot find it. The poor thing is smothered beneath the frills and furbelows of the chorus; let us not deprive it of so delicious a death.

This Gaiety broth is the better for its many cooks. Mr. Lionel Monckton and Mr. Ivan Caryll made the music, Mr. Hopwood and Mr. Greenbank the lyrics, Mr. Hicks and Mr. Nicholls the words, while Mr. Willie Ward arranged the dances with his usual unerring instinct and intelligence—and Clarkson supplied some beautiful blonde wigs. Suddenly, as I am told, the chef appeared in the shape of Mr. George Edwardes. The broth would not do. Throw it away! Everybody had to set to work again, and the play we applauded on Saturday is the result of their rapid labours. And this young "Runaway Girl," like her sisters, will grow all the time she runs. Already I hear of a new dance for the twinkling toes of Miss Katie Seymour; and the stress of his various avatars—as jockey and courier—will certainly elicit some spontaneous fun from Mr. Edmund Payne. Of the Gaiety may be said what Miss Ellaline Terriss so charmingly sings in the first act of this new play:—

> Oh, sly cigarette!
> Oh, fie cigarette!
> Why did you teach me to love you so,
> When I have to pretend that I don't, you know?

This is, perhaps, not very solid nourishment; but some of us prefer cigarettes to cigars.

SERIOUSNESS AT THE SAVOY.

We have temporarily done, it seems, at the Savoy, with the quips and cranks of the old partnership. The merriment of the two jolly Savoyards no longer attracts in sufficient force to cover the heavy salaries of ever increasingly paid artists for a long run. The Gilbert and Sullivan opera has, by a paradox which ought to delight Mr. Gilbert, been killed by its own excellence. Everybody persists in comparisons, and contrasts a new work with the funniest of its predecessors. No one takes into consideration the self-evident fact that the wit is apt to run less freely as the jester approaches middle age. It is perfectly true that the feeblest of Gilbert and Sullivan is superior to the best of any other author and composer. It is also true that both Gilbert and Sullivan have temporarily sampled other partners without any better luck. So now, after a not very successful dip into French opéra bouffe, Mr. D'Oyly Carte is trying the experiment of a totally different form of entertainment, and the Savoy has become a serious play-house. It seems strange at first, though doubtless we shall get used to it. There were, indeed, times on Saturday night when we were all sorry that Mr. Pinero, who may be a born dramatist, but who certainly is not a heaven-sent librettist, had not provided himself with a ruthless sub-editor armed with a plentiful supply of blue pencils. There were other times on Saturday when Mr. Passmore must have literally yearned for permission to "gag" or dance a jig, and when his audience would have been delighted had he broken loose. But the fun was never permitted to be more than mediæval; the artists, with Mr. Pinero's eye upon them, stuck pluckily to the text; and when, in the course of hours, the audience turned over the last of nearly ten dozen of pages—the heaviest libretto, from the point of view of avoirdupois, that the Savoy has yet offered us—they may have been delighted by charming music and a pretty spectacle, but they could not conscientiously pretend that they had enjoyed a merry evening.

It seems to me almost a pity that Mr. Pinero was so fearful of treading in the footsteps of Mr. Gilbert. Satire and paradox are well-nigh obligatory in this form of entertainment; and yet, although the subject frequently suggested both, Mr. Pinero would have none of them. Even Satan, in the person of Mr. Passmore, was limited in his jokes to mediæval specimens anent the monotonous warmth of his residence and the fall which he, like the crippled weaver's daughter, sustained in early life. There is distinct topsyturvydom in the notion of "The Beauty Stone," which impels a Prince, although fascinated by an Eastern houri, to fall in love with a cripple, while an Oriental Delilah, in turn the possessor of the talisman, finds it useless when the victorious War Lord at whom she is setting her cap, is stricken blind. The cheerless demeanour of the Lord of Mirlemont himself was perhaps not the fault of the author. The new American tenor, Mr. Devoll, for some occult reason, elected that the ardent lover should be a smileless Prince. Even when, encased in solid brass armour, he was hoisted upon the shoulders of two staggering attendants, the sardonic side of the situation scarcely seemed to occur to him, and the expression of his face, as he led his gallant knights to victory, was that of a man about to have his tooth out. Even Mr. Isham as his despondent squire was more jovial, and less given to asides and tragedy airs. But the ladies fairly carried off the honours. Miss Pauline Joran, as the Eastern houri, who enacts the rôle of a Delilah, sang like a true artist and acted with veritable dramatic feeling; while Miss Ruth Vincent made a pathetic figure as the crippled girl; Mr. Lytton and Miss Brandram did what they could with the conventional parts of her aged parents; and Miss Emmie Owen a saucy wench, who eventually turns good when she honestly falls head-over-ears in love with the Devil, was at her brightest and archest.

Sir Arthur Sullivan, although a little hampered by the humourless manner in which the story has been treated, has fortunately been provided by Mr. Comyns Carr with some scholarly lyrics, and he makes the most of his opportunities. Sir Arthur, in short, declines to be dull, and has evidently made up his mind that seriousness may, after all, be allied with melody and brightness. We have, it is true, one or two reminiscences, some of the composer himself, and at one point, funnily enough, a phrase of the comic song which suggests that the police best know the time has hovered about his memory. Also it may be true that the composer has refrained from any excessive display of ambition in the more dramatic situations, albeit they always show refined fancy and sound musicianship. Sir Arthur employs representative themes—a frequently heard motive for the moody Lord of Mirlemont, a bell song for the Devil (who, however, for the most part, is surrounded by music of mediæval cut), and a delicious prayer motive for the crippled heroine. There is also an effective touch of local colour in the Oriental dance and chorus of Saida and her maidens, while there are plenty of ensembles and concerted pieces of a pattern which would have been the delight of the musical folk of the last generation. To my mind, however, Sir Arthur is most successful when he is most natural, and when he allows his melodic genius to have the fullest play. There are, fortunately, numerous examples, among the best being the delicious opening duet, the cripple's prayer, the Devil's legend of the "Beauty Stone," and his duet and dance with the pretty page, the Song Tournament, the Eastern dance, the love duet, the Squire's martial ballad, the duet of the old folks, the song, "with a burden," of the cripple, which permeates the third act, and the page's delicious little ditty, with pizzicato accompaniment. The music, in fact, is much better than the libretto, which, in its turn, would be better still if an hour's dialogue were remorselessly cut out of it.

Mr. D'Oyly Carte, when he undertakes a thing does it thoroughly, and he and his staff have spared neither pains nor money to properly mount the "Beauty Stone." The quaint dresses of the peasants and the more opulent ladies have been faithfully copied from originals in Flemish pictures, while the male costumes and armour are exact replicas of the real article. The effect is most picturesque, and as a spectacle the new opera is one of the best ever seen at the Savoy. The audience were quick to recognise and appreciate these facts, and hence the more than usual heartiness of Mr. Carte's "call" on the final fall of the curtain.

DANGERFIELD 95.

Miss Annie Russell has youth and good looks on her side, and has brought these across the Atlantic to conquer us. She could not have chosen a better weapon than this cleverly conceived though not very well written play, of Miss Mildred Dowling. In little more than half an hour Miss Russell has swept the keyboard of the emotions, reproducing with startling fidelity the habits of disreputable Bohemia, and passing from these back to proper young-ladyhood as to both manners born. Her motions and gestures are natural and always easy, and her diction is for the most part good. But why does she say "minnyature" for miniature and pronounce medicine as a trisyllable? This, perhaps, forms part of "America's system for the improvement and correction of Grandmother's English."

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE LATE DUC DE BASSANO.

THE Duc de Bassano, who died last week, was five years older than Mr. Gladstone. In regard to vitality, he was a grand old man, but otherwise commonplace. The most that can be said of him was that he ever conducted himself like a highly respectable bourgeois. This is no small praise when one considers what a dissipated sphere he lived in during the eighteen years of the Empire. He was a first cousin twice or thrice removed of M. Henri Maret. Madame de Rémusat is worth reading about his immediate ancestor, the first Duc de Bassano. That interesting writer sometimes twisted the truth, but there were never scales on her eyes.

The late Duc de Bassano had manners that matched with his resonant title. He entered the diplomacy of Louis Philippe, and adopted the tone of the second-rate diplomats of his time. This tone was a little pompous. Guizot, Comte de St. Aulaire, Corsican Sebastiani (who was more a rough diplomat than a soldier), and Comte de Jarnac were free from the defect. But they were, intellectually speaking, first-rates. There is nothing safer in diplomacy than a little pompous reserve when one has not a ready wit. A hauteur that shows not so much pride as a care for professional dignity is also a safeguard.

The late Duc de Bassano was chiefly accredited by Louis Philippe to small Rhineland Courts. He learned at Turin what etiquette meant. The lesson proved useful after the Coup d'État. He was made Grand Chamberlain directly the Empire was restored. Practically he chose the guests of the Emperor and Empress when they did not send lists to him. This gave him many opportunities to oblige. He used his power with careful discretion. The lists sometimes sent down to him were enough to startle him out of his propriety. One too well-known lady, whose husband was connected with the London Press, had the privilege of presenting names. But she was herself excluded. This compromise was hit upon by Macquard, when he feared the matter might lead to a divided ménage. The Duc liked to oblige whenever he could safely do so. The rush on his office and the piles of scented letters he received were fearful. But his calm dignity remained unruffled. His sense was sound. As a godson of Napoleon and Josephine, he was dear to the Emperor. His impeccable correctness was prized by the Empress. She was sensitive on points that touched on her Imperial dignity. When she was in exile, the Duc went to pay her and the Emperor his duty. He remained a sort of honorary Grand Chamberlain up to the time of the Prince Imperial's death. Through his sister, Lady Ashburton, he had a large circle of English friends. The Duchesse de Bassano had an imposing presence. She looked well in a court procession. So did he.

The Duc de Bassano was twelve years old when Waterloo was fought—for the future benefit of Hopes, Barings, and Rothschilds. He therefore had recollections of Napoleon, who was helped by his father to draw up the Code. Napoleon was the busiest man alive; but he found time to visit some of the beauties with whom Josephine surrounded herself. Madame Maret was one of those he liked to call on. The late Duc remembered his being announced one day when his mother was surrounded by her nestlings. It was the fashion to have one's quiver full of them. The children, perhaps, heard that he was an ogre, for they rushed to hide under the loo table. He heard the pattering of the little feet, and asked the Duchesse where her whelps were? After searching in the corners, he saw a little foot sticking out from under the table cover, and seizing it, drew it towards him. It was that of his nephew's future Grand Chamberlain. There was something of the beast of prey in all Napoleon's caresses. His native savagery was never more apparent than when he was playful.

A Napoleonic Prince or Duke living to a ripe age is exceptional. The nobility of the Empire were jouisseurs. They died young, and their families generally became extinct. The revival of the Empire drove nails into most of their coffins. Morny then led the dance. He had the hard head and the refined but overweening sensuality of Disraeli's heroes. I could understand that author admiring him. But the fascination he exercised over women puzzled me. He was dissipated without spirit. He must have been worn out before he was born. Queen Hortense était si farceuse! Though in the Morny monde, Bassano was not of it. Length of days and a healthy posterity rewarded his regular habits and sobriety.

The death of the Comtesse Ducos also revives some recollections of the Empire. Though a great beauty in her prime, she was free from airs and assumption. The Comtesse remained young in feeling. One saw this in her dress and in her very pleasing face. I used often to see her at the parties of Mme. Magnin at the Bank of France. Her late husband, whom she long outlived, was Minister of Marine throughout the Crimean War. The post was then no easy one, but he filled it ably. His wife's beauty was no advantage to him. It excited too much jealousy. Wearing her heart on her sleeve, she was undefended. She belonged to the circle of the late Mrs. Ayers. The Comtesse could not live without society, and enjoyed it in the most harmless way. I am glad to see that the Empress Eugénie has recognised her lovable qualities in a letter to her son—written by her secretary, M. Piétri.

The actual Comte Ducos is in diplomacy. He has many friends. It would surprise me to hear he had enemies. His standing amusement is to turn the ruins of an abbey into a dwelling-house. The abbey is somewhere near Rheims. All his spare time is spent in effecting the transformation. The hobby is an expensive one. Converting ruined abbeys into modern residences was made the fashion by Baroness Nathaniel de Rothschild. She has restored that of Vaux Cernay, and lives in it in summer.

Walking, Cycling, Shooting, Yachting Dresses, &c.—John Busvine & Co., Tailors and Riding Habit Makers to H.R.H. the Princess of Wales, the Princess Victoria of Wales, the Duchess of Fife, the Princess Charles of Denmark, the Marchioness of Lorne, the Princess Henry of Battenberg, the Duchess of Connaught, the Duchess of Albany, the Empress of Austria, the Empress of Russia, the Empress of Germany, the Princess Henry of Prussia, the Princess Victoria of Prussia, the Infanta Eulalia of Spain, the Countess de Paris, the Duchess d'Aosta.—4, Brook-street, London, W.

"L'Exposition de l'Art de la Femme" does not mean a display of feminine arts, but of arts appropriated to woman's use. I dare say that our great-grandfathers were delighted with the belongings of our great-grandmothers. But for comfort one would hardly select the eighteenth-century strait-laced corset. Above it was a corsage all lined with buckram and whalebone. The hoop-expanded skirt was garlanded with artificial flowers or other falbalas. It was hard to sit down properly in it. When once the wearer sat down, she liked to remain seated. A bolt-upright position was obligatory. The hair was expected to remain undisturbed for several days. Hence the necessity, when one retired for the night, to be propped up with pillows. There was really no other way of enjoying a little comfort. The coverlets and pillow-cases were considered adjuncts of the bedgown, a most luxurious object for the time. There were bath coverlets of embroidered flannel, for visitors might be received in the bath-room. Fashionable people under all circumstances lived in a glass house, unless when at les petits châteaux. The children were early trained to bear ennui and to behave like little stoics. I really do not see the harm. Thus trained, they died "game" on the guillotine. The only woman who made a row was La Dubarry. She was a low-born person.

The snuff-box belonged properly to l'art de la femme. What skill was lavished on it! One showed one's rings in taking a pinch of snuff. The taste for scents was not much developed. How could it be when nostrils were filled with snuff? But I can imagine the snuff box as being indispensable. Snuff was the only deodoriser. Ladies quite gave it up after the Revolution. It was on the wane before. La Nouvelle Héloïse did not take snuff, nor did Marie Antoinette.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

"Where shall we lay the man whom we deplore?
Here, in streaming London's central roar.
Let the sound of those he wrought for,
And the feet of those he fought for,
Echo round his bones for evermore."

Tennyson.

We have buried, dear Lady Betty, our great dead with great dignity and with great simplicity, as befits a great nation. William Ewart Gladstone has cut his name deep on the records of the race; we have filled the letters in with gold.

. . . . .

Descriptive writing is a fine art; not an exact science. The descriptive writers have contributed very picturesque accounts of the lying in state of the remains of Mr. Gladstone in Westminster Hall; and, according to them, this was an especially impressive ceremony, which was rendered the more striking by the simplicity of the surroundings. As a matter of fact, a less solemn and a less impressive scene could scarcely be devised. When Westminster Hall was the centre of the political life of the nation many memorable events occurred within its walls. It has long ceased to be useful, and, practically, it has for years been closed to the public. This huge, bare hall terminates with a flight of steps which are apparently purposeless, but incidentally lead to a passage on the left that is altogether out of proportion with the hall and with the steps, and to a doorway on the right that is some few feet wide. In the centre of this vast hall was the coffin, raised several feet above the ground, and dwarfed by the magnitude of the setting. It wanted a blaze of light to give prominence to the coffin, and a background, however slight, might have heightened the effect. As it was, only four candles, which looked like tapers in the immense building, had been provided. On either side of the coffin there passed two thin streams of sightseers, raising a thick cloud of dust as they tramped over the wooden gangways, whilst the monotonous "Move on, please," uttered every half-second by the police, jarred on the nerves of all who had made the pilgrimage in the hope of obtaining inspiration. The Koh-i-noor set in the dome of St. Paul's would not be more completely lost than was the coffin of Mr. Gladstone set in the centre of Westminster Hall.

* * * * *

Piper Findlater, whose heroic conduct at the battle of Dargai has excited general admiration, has recently had the Victoria Cross attached to his breast by her Majesty in person. The piper has been disabled by his wounds, and has, therefore, been retired from the Service. He is a poor man, and the pension which the Government confers upon him is altogether out of proportion with the heroism of his act, and with the consequences of his injuries. Tempted by circumstances, Private Findlater accepted an offer to reproduce on a music-hall stage the incident which has made him famous. Every excuse can be made for the piper, but it would be difficult to express adequate contempt for the spirit of the day which is prepared to vulgarise even heroism.

It is with the highest appreciation of this spirit that I announce with pleasure the following forthcoming performances:—

Lord S*l*sb*ry has consented to appear at the —— throughout the month of June, when he will each evening reproduce the memorable ceremony of kissing the hand of the Queen on being appointed Prime Minister of Great Britain.

. . . . .

The members of the Cabinet have been engaged to appear for a limited number of nights at the —— at immense salaries, when they will give representations of Cabinet Councils as they are held in the Council Room at Downing-street.

. . . . .

The services of the Archbishop of Ca*t*rb*ry have been secured by the directors of the ——, and during the period of his engagement his Grace will every evening reproduce the ceremony of his enthronement. This magnificent spectacle is certain to attain exceptional popularity with the patrons of the ——.

. . . . .

Mr. J*s*ph Ch*mb*rln will repeat his celebrated B*rm*ngh*m speech every night until further notice at the ——. The performance is sure to appeal to the best instincts of the ladies who frequent the —— Hall.

. . . . .

Rear Admiral S*mps*n, with the officers and men under his command, have consented to appear at the ——, when they will, for a few nights only, give accurate representations of the historical combat between the Am*r*c*n Fleet and the Matanzas mule. This series of performances will be delayed until Rear-Admiral S*mps*n has discovered and destroyed the Sp*n*sh Squadron.

. . . . .

It should be made a condition when the Victoria Cross is conferred that the decoration and the act which is associated with its bestowal should never be employed in such a way as to bring these into disrepute. Moreover, a rich nation, such as Great Britain is, can well afford to grant substantial pensions to those who distinguish themselves by heroism on the field of battle, all the more so that thousands of unimportant officials retire from the public service after a few years of not arduous labour with pensions of several hundreds of pounds.

* * * * *

It was noticed at the funeral of Mr. Gladstone that most of the mourners who followed the remains of the great statesman wore their hats. A piercing north-east wind prevailed at the time, and the day might be described as a summer morning iced. When will the very unreasonable custom of following the dead bare-headed be abandoned? Every year hundreds of men are driven to their deaths because they have not sufficient strength of character to run counter to custom in this respect. To stand bare-headed by the side of a grave in a bitter east wind whilst the funeral service is being read is no real mark of respect for the remains of the one who is dead, and it is an especially dangerous practice.

* * * * *

It had frequently been foreshadowed in these columns that in the event of Sir Philip Currie being transferred to Rome, Sir Nicholas O'Conor would be appointed to be British Ambassador at Constantinople. This forecast has been verified. It is probable now that Sir Francis Plunkett, the British Minister at Brussels, will be promoted to be British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, or to be Ambassador at some post which may become vacant by transferring an Ambassador to the Embassy vacated by Sir Nicholas O'Conor.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

IT is odd that any one should be surprised at the Derby having ended in such a veritable crash for backers, for it was universally admitted that the three-year-olds are a very bad lot, and I pointed out a fortnight ago that the melancholy fashion in which they have gone on beating each other has afforded additional evidence of the absolute truth of the saying, "It is impossible to handicap cocktails." What, however, was astonishing in connection with the Derby was the utterly idiotic price which feather-brained backers were so infatuated as to accept about Disraeli, than whom no horse has ever been so vigorously written up on such very slight grounds. I never fancied Disraeli for the Derby, partly because he was obviously held safe by Dieudonné on the two-year-old running, and also because it seemed to me that the merits of his Two Thousand victory had been extravagantly and preposterously over-estimated. The fact is that at Newmarket Disraeli was nearly the only horse in the field that was thoroughly fit. After the ignominious collapse of Wantage in the Newmarket Stakes it was not easy to see how Disraeli could be regarded as a good thing for the Derby, and if the favourite had started for the Newmarket Stakes it would have been a blessing for his later backers, as he would certainly have been defeated by Cyllene. It is a fact, moreover, that Disraeli was never properly galloped over the Derby distance. There was no excuse whatever for him. He got well away, and for some time held a prominent position in the field, but, once having dropped back, he was never seen again. Dieudonné, who had gone badly in the market for some days, was heavily backed at the finish, and the Duke of Devonshire's colt ran well, but, as was feared, he proved deficient in stamina. He was placed fourth, but I fancy he was really third best. An evening paper stated on Thursday that after the first hundred yards Dieudonné "was never seen in front," which is idiotic nonsense. Elfin made the running for a long way, but was "all out" when they came down the hill. Batt looked all over like winning easily, until about a hundred yards from home, when Jeddah overhauled him, and, running on well, Mr. Larnach's colt won very cleverly at the finish.

Of course, Jeddah is now described as "a really grand horse" by some mooncalves, who could see no merit in this colt until after his victory at Epsom; but this crazy jargoning is always the rule after a big race. I feel quite convinced that it is a case of "heads and tails" with the whole lot, and that if the race was run again this afternoon over the same course, the issue would be some equally astounding and disastrous turn-up. At least, let all rational people be most careful in their operations on the three-year-old races at Ascot. Months ago I expressed the opinion that Jeddah would probably turn out to be the best of the Egerton House lot for the classic stakes, as he appeared to be more likely to prove a stayer than any of his stable companions. He, moreover, had displayed more stamina in public than any other starter for the Derby, as the An.M., over which he won the Craven Stakes when he was palpably backward, is a more severe course than the R.M., over which the Two Thousand was run. Of course, after Jeddah's ghastly exhibitions in the Two Thousand and Newmarket Stakes it was simply impossible to conceive that he would come out and win the Derby, and there have been some sinister hints (founded on intense ignorance) that he was having a day to himself when he was beaten at Newmarket. The boundless and bottomless folly and absurdity of these sour drivellings are proved by the fact that Jeddah was well backed when he was defeated, whereas nobody could be flogged into supporting him at Epsom. If he had gone badly in the betting at Newmarket, and then had been heavily backed at Epsom, there would have been some reason in such criticisms, but under the circumstances they are manifestly baseless and muddy-minded.

The credit of breeding Jeddah belongs to the late Duchess-Dowager of Montrose, and his dam Pilgrimage was in foal with this colt when she was purchased for a small sum by Mr. Larnach at Newmarket in July, 1894, at the sale of her Grace's stud. The winners over Jeddah form an exceedingly select band, consisting simply of people who backed him before and after he had carried off the Craven Stakes, and after his defeat in the Two Thousand he was knocked out to a forlorn price, so that there never was any opportunity of hedging. Wantage ran creditably enough, considering that he is certainly not a horse shaped for such a course as Epsom, and if the going is good at Ascot he ought to win a race there.

It was a fearful disaster for the "1, 2, 3" backers that Dunlop should have been placed third, as Dieudonné probably carried their money for a situation more than any other horse in the race. Considering that Dunlop had been beaten off in the Payne Stakes when much fancied for that race, such a resurrection was no more to be expected in his case than in that of Jeddah. I advise my speculative readers, however, to attach no importance to this horse's position in the Derby, as for some distance from home the race was practically a match between Jeddah and Batt, and it is highly probable that several of the runners were eased when it was found that all chance of winning was gone. Heir Male carried a great deal of money, because he had managed to scramble into second place for the Newmarket States, but his backers might have considered that Cyllene won with such consummate ease that probably 21 lb. would not have brought the pair together.

The Virginian is a nice colt, but he is not yet quite in proper racing trim. The half brother to Whittier will be winning some race wherein he has the benefit of a maiden allowance, and he must not be forgotten. Batt was my winter selection for the Derby at a time when long odds were offered against him, and my original conviction that he would ultimately prove to be the best of the Kingsclere three-year-olds was much strengthened when Hawfinch was sold out of the stable, and for this animal I never had any fancy whatever. Batt is still "coming on" apparently, and I dare say he will win the Leger. Perthshire was last year exalted by gushing simpletons into a wonder well worth £10,000, on the strength of his having beaten some platers at the Epsom Spring Meeting, but he soon lost his reputation, and if his owner had been well advised this colt would not have been trained for the Derby as his preparation has no doubt affected the speed which he undoubtedly possessed last year. Mr. Brassey, who is very sagacious in the management of his stud, wisely withdrew Orzil, who cannot get a yard beyond five furlongs, and I hear this colt is in reserve for the Fernhill Stakes at Ascot. An enormous amount of money was invested on Wednesday on the American horse Archduke II., who was regarded as a certainty for a place, on the strength of a good trial with History. He was galloped over the full Derby distance, whereas Disraeli had never been sent beyond a mile and a quarter. Archduke II. may be trusted to win a good handicap before the season is much further advanced. The Wyvern has been outrageously overrated, or else he is an arrant rogue. Mr. Leigh's colt was well beaten by Argosy on the Saturday before the Derby in a gallop over the D. M. The great Newmarket tip at the finish was Pheon for a place, but Lord Ellesmere's colt never even "flattered" his over-sanguine friends. However, Pheon will be winning a race presently, and he is a colt that must not be forgotten. With respect to Disraeli, I see that it is stated that his half-brother, Bullingham, was considered "for a time" by Captain Machell "to be fully the equal of Isinglass." This is all moonshine. Captain Machell may have been under some such delusion before the colts had been galloped or raced, but never afterwards. It would not have been the first time of Captain Machell being egregiously mistaken as to the comparative merits of horses in the Bedford Cottage stable. His firm faith in the superlative excellence of a long since forgotten beast named Fevre, was something pathetic, and cost him dear, as on more than one occasion that animal was actually preferred by him to King Lud.

Jeddah has several engagements at Ascot, and I am told that Mr. Larnach will probably decide to start the colt for the St. James's Palace Stakes, in which he would meet Batt and Dieudonné at even weights. It is a pity that he is not in the Princess of Wales' Stakes at the Newmarket first July meeting, as it would have been most interesting to see the result of his meeting with Velasquez, and he would have had to run against Lord Rosebery's horse with 3 lb. the worst of the weights. After the Derby running it will be strange if Lord Rosebery does not carry off both the Princess of Wales' Stakes and the Eclipse Stakes, but Velasquez will have a more difficult task in the Jockey Club Stakes, as Cyllene is entered for that race, and they will meet at weight for age (9 lb.) if Velasquez does win the first of the Newmarket £10,000 races.

Boniface was a hot favourite for the Great Surrey Breeders' Foal Plate on Thursday but it is a pity that the colt had not been kept for Ascot, as he wanted a few more gallops, and the Epsom course evidently does not suit him. He did not get off well, and he ran very green at the finish, but his jockey was in no way to blame for his defeat. I shall expect Boniface to do better at Ascot, where he is engaged in both the Coventry Stakes and the New Stakes. The money of the "sharps" was dashed down on Mr. Merry's Sir Hercules, half-brother to Surefoot, by Sir Hugo, who is a grand colt, but very backward, and it was a blunder to race him in his present condition. The Hampton Rose filly, who won the Mostyn Plate at Chester, just beat Boniface, and she was a lucky winner. Sir Hercules will run next at Ascot, either for the Biennial or for the Coventry Stakes. Boniface, not being a starter for the Woodcote Stakes, Desmond was made a great favourite, but was cleverly defeated by Fairy Gold, by Bend Or out of Dame Masham, another winner at Chester. Desmond, however, ought to win any race at Manchester this week that he may be started for.

People who had lost over the Derby thought they had a fine chance to get their money back by plunging on Winkfield's Pride for the Epsom Cup. The horse was very heavily backed, and it was said that the stable commission was £5,000, defeat being regarded as impossible. Winkfield's Pride, however, was beaten a long way from home, and the reputation of the Australian horse, Newhaven II., about whom there has been so much trumpeting, was lamentably shattered, for Bay Ronald won very easily indeed, running at even weights. In the City and Suburban, when it was recklessly asserted that Mr. Brassey's horse ought to have been beaten by Newhaven II., it will be remembered that Bay Ronald had 10 lb. the best of the weights. It is, indeed, a true saying that the best policy, as a rule, is to follow winners, instead of being gulled by fairy-tales about what ought to have happened. Of course, there are exceptions, and I think that if Boniface again meets the Hampton Rose filly he will beat her, while later on in the season I shall expect Sir Hercules to defeat them both if he goes on all right. Winkfield's Pride was not fit, and he will do better presently.

The victory of Airs and Graces for the Oaks is surely the final consummation of the extraordinary ill-luck which has pursued the Duke of Portland for some years past. Of course, the Welbeck colours had an amazing run of good fortune for several seasons, but of late years some malicious spirit appears to have been working against them. Airs and Graces was purchased by the Duke as a yearling, but he thought she would never be of any value on the turf, and as he did not require her for the stud, she was weeded out at Newmarket last December for 480 gs., a truly tragical transaction. I suppose the Duke will get the £400 which is payable to the nominator of the winner. Nun Nicer, as I pointed out last week, was the only filly which ran for the Two Thousand that was then thoroughly fit, and her defeat on Friday did not surprise me; but I certainly did not expect Airs and Graces to win, as she is touched in her wind, which was much against her over this course. If the colts are a bad lot, it is highly probable that the fillies are even worse.

The Duke of Westminster's filly Lowood, who was much fancied for the Oaks, was struck out of that race, and she is in reserve for the rich Coronation Stakes at Ascot, which event she will probably win. Lowood has accepted for the three-year-old Free Handicap, with 7 st. 2 lb.; but if I now had to give the name of the winner of that race in two attempts, I would be disposed to select Pheon or Schonberg.

There are positively only thirty-two entries for the Duchess of York Handicap of £1,500—a race which is run at the Hurst Park Summer Meeting. Mile handicaps are dreadfully overdone at present, but owners move in mysterious ways, for a £500 race at Kempton Park has obtained twenty-nine entries. Some years ago there would have been at least a hundred subscriptions for a £1,500 handicap over a mile course.

There will be racing next week at Brighton, Beverley, Lewes, and Lingfield, and there will no doubt be large fields at the Sussex fixtures, but there is not likely to be any sport of general interest, all the best horses being now in reserve for Ascot and for the Newmarket July Meetings. The principal event of the week will be the £1,000 two-year-old stake at Lingfield on Wednesday, for which there are thirty acceptances, including the filly by St. Simon out of Hampton Rose, who will have 7 lb. the worst of the weights with maidens, but this penalty ought not to stop her.

I shall not attempt a definite prediction on the Grand Prix, except to express a confident opinion that no English horse has any chance for the Longchamps race. Gardefeu (winner of the Prix du Jockey Club) and Cazabat ought to prove the best of the French lot.

Neither of the Universities did well in their earlier matches last week. Essex, without its full strength, outplayed Oxford, and Yorkshire simply overwhelmed Cambridge, for whom Hind again proved his value as a bowler. Judging by the success of Winter with his lobs against A. J. Webbe's team, it looks as though he would be just one of those sort of bowlers who would come off at Lord's. But unless he proves himself useful as a bat it will be rather risky to give a place in the team to one who is only a lob bowler. A few years ago Wood bowled lobs with great success for Oxford, but then he was a hitter as well. Surrey have really had bad luck.

Major Howe & Co., Ltd.—Fashionable Boots and Shoes.—16, Coventry-st., W.; 60, Strand, W.C.; 81, Gracechurch-st.; and 13, Queen Victoria-st., London. "Note Addresses." (Repairs.)

After their beating by Essex they have had no chance of retrieving their position against either Derby or Warwick. To be engaged in two consecutive matches in which not a ball is bowled is a record experience for a county. Lockwood again bowled well against Gloucestershire. At one time Sussex looked like making an end of Notts at Brighton. But on going in a second time, Gunn and Shrewsbury played in quite their old form, and a draw was the result. In Montezuma, Sussex have a bat who will undoubtedly make a reputation for himself. Mason and Hearne were chiefly responsible for the success of Kent over the M.C.C. After the comparative failure of the young Kent captain in the Australian tour, it is very gratifying to find him in such good form with bat and ball. Small scoring was the rule in the Lancashire and Derbyshire match, Cuttell and Briggs both improving their averages.

With reference to the Warwick county ground at Edgbaston, Birmingham, it must be borne in mind that it lies low, and has a clay subsoil. A correspondent says the county authorities should take the question of drainage into their immediate consideration. Probably the question of money is very material. Surely Birmingham will see that there is nothing wanting in that respect.

In the amateur golfing championship more reputations are generally lost than made. The heroes of local links go forth to conquer, and, as a rule, unless they be Scotchmen, prematurely demise. Tait and Mure-Fergusson met in the final; but, only after a great struggle, for the latter only beat Robb by one hole, and Low did not succumb to Tait until the twenty-second hole was played. Truly a battle of giants, and this was done with two thousand spectators following at Hoylake. As a further incentive to beginners, it is as well to mention that Robb missed a two-foot put on the home green, and so lost the match.

The Cycling League is said to be securing a large number of members. There is substantial work for such an organisation to undertake. It will not devote its valuable energies to the serious task of providing cycling brass buttons, notepaper, and trinkets, but it will endeavour to really protect the interests of riders. The amount of money saved and expended and the volume of labour employed is out of all proportion to the miserable results produced by that remarkable body calling itself the C.T.C.

In the Eights at Oxford last week New College retained the headship of the river for the third successive year. A week before the races began they were the best crew on the river by a long way, and there seemed to be more than a possibility of their sending a crew to Henley capable of retaining the Grand Challenge Cup. At the last moment, however, they were deprived of the services of G. O. C. Edwards, who has been forbidden by his doctor to row for the rest of the season. In spite of the fact that they were thus compelled to row an untrained man, they maintained their position without much difficulty, although Magdalen on one night got within a third of a length. The pace attained by the Magdalen crew is to be attributed to their pluck and dash, rather than to their form. They were not a good crew, and the rowing of the Blues, Gold and Burnell, stood out in marked contrast to that of the others. Balliol rather disappointed their supporters. They had plenty of good material, but were unlucky in being unable to find a suitable stroke. F. Warre, who eventually set the work for them, performed very creditably for one who has had little or no experience in that position. Trinity were very rough at the beginning of the term, but, under the tuition of the Rev. M. B. Furse, they were eventually transformed into a very fair College crew. The rowing of the other crews was rather above than below the average of the last few years. Merton alone call for special mention. They rowed in good style and with plenty of life, and thoroughly deserved their seven bumps. It is to be hoped they will try their luck at Henley.

The ups and downs of Brasenose were rather remarkable. On Saturday one of the crew broke a slide or a stretcher, and they were bumped by Hertford, and on Monday they rebumped them. On Tuesday they met with another accident, and were again bumped by Hertford; and on Wednesday they again asserted their superiority, a performance which, from a spectator's point of view, added considerable interest to what might otherwise have been a somewhat uninteresting procession.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—Such a succession of holidays as we are now having is not calculated to improve business. Epsom Races naturally claimed the attention of the Stock Exchange and of the public, and with the Saturday and Monday Stock Exchange holidays transactions have, as a consequence, been on a limited scale. Yet the tone has been distinctly firm, and at times there has been a speculative outburst in one or the other department.

The Position on the Stock Exchange—A Brighter Outlook.

The view is generally taken that during the current broken week very little business will be transacted. Yet the unexpected frequently happens, and the outlook is so much brighter that it is quite on the cards that the public will at last enter the markets to some extent again. From Paris comes the news that the Niger Convention will be signed almost immediately, and there certainly does not appear to be the slightest hitch in the negotiations. People are wondering more and more what Mr. Chamberlain could have meant by his extraordinary Birmingham lucubration. The Chinese question has entered a quiet phase, and the transfer of Wei-hai-wei is proceeding satisfactorily. Apart from the construction of railways in the Yang-tsze Valley, I hear that several industrial concessions have been granted which will all tend to open up the Celestial Empire. As regards the Spanish-American war, it has come to a point where news really unfavourable to the United States side is extremely unlikely. As American successes really mean the shortening of the conflict, the news of any important victory of the Yankee fleet, which appears to have Admiral Cervera at its mercy, would send up American Rails very considerably, and cause all the other markets to brace up, with the exception perhaps of Spanish. But then it is being argued that even Spanish will eventually improve, should peace be dictated to Spain. The monetary position is distinctly encouraging, and with the present much lower rates in the money market speculation will doubtless revive, while gilt-edged investment securities should also receive greater attention. Home Railway stocks are being picked up again by investors, and showed remarkable scarcity at the settlement. American Rails have maintained a moderate advance, and are strongly backed by Wall-street wire-pullers. South Americans have been distinctly more active, although a temporary reaction took place in Brazilians owing to adverse rumours. The Kaffir Circus has been but slightly affected by the publication of the contents of President Kruger's despatch on the suzerainty question, the substance of which was known weeks ago, so that it has been fully discounted. The slight reaction which occurred after the carry-over should be recovered again, especially as the May crushings are expected to prove very satisfactory. In West Australians a much firmer tone has prevailed, and a good demand has again been experienced for Adelaide account for all the high-class shares, especially those in the Hannan's district. The Industrial department is also rallying from the depression caused by the political scare.

Money and Gilt-Edged Investments—Where are the Dear-Money Prophets Now?

Where are the dear-money prophets now? Three weeks ago, when the rate of discount for three months' Bank bills was 4 per cent., they were predicting a rise to 4½ or 5 per cent., and were at the same time anticipating all kinds of evils. Within a few weeks' time their prophecies have come to naught, and on Thursday last the Bank of England reduced its rate to 3½ per cent., while rates of discount in the open market are as low as 2⅜ per cent. for three and six months' Bank bills, and short money is to be had for the asking in the neighbourhood of 2 per cent. This furnishes another illustration of the curious tendency of the ordinary financial writer to anticipate dear money, and I am surprised that my confrères of the leading dailies, with the facilities they have at their command for interviewing the haute finance, cannot keep up to date. Of course, the Japanese lock-up caused some stringency, but this was to the well-informed only a temporary incident; and it had, in fact, been arranged beforehand that no lasting inconvenience to the Money Market should arise from the Japanese transaction. The American demand for gold is altogether in abeyance, and with the exception of some small purchases for India, there is at present no call upon the stock of gold of the Bank of England, which has now been raised to £34,835,205. Our central institution has thus been placed into a very strong position, and will not easily let go its hold on the market. It has had to reduce its rate to 3½ per cent., and may have to further put it down to 3 per cent.; but the political outlook has improved so much, that it is safe to prophesy that we shall not have any dear money during the next three months. The unsophisticated persons who have been selling Consols as a hedge against commitments in other stocks, and on the predictions of dear money, will, I am afraid, feel sadly disappointed now that Consols are quoted at 112 for the account. I grant that the position is somewhat strange in view of the fact that a great war is in progress—that between the United States and Spain; but that struggle has been localised so much, that it is now possible to judge of the extent which it may reach, and everything points to an American success, which will probably bring the conflict to a termination in the near future. Other high-class investment securities have so far recovered but slightly, and they have not, of course, risen yet to anything like the top price touched during 1897, as will be gathered from the following list of prices:—

—	Highest in 1897.	Present Price.
	£	£
Consols, 2¾ per cent. till 1903 (for the account)	114	112
Do. 2½ per cent. till 1905	107	105
Local Loans Stock	115	110
Bank of England Stock	351½	347½
India Sterling 3½ per cent.	119⅛	114
Do. Do. 3 per cent.	112½	107
Do. Do. 3½ per cent. Rupee	64⅛	62⅛
Metropolitan 3½ per cent.	125	117
Do. 2½ per cent.	103⅝	99xd
Birmingham 3½ per cent.	127	118
Leeds 2½ per cent.	100	98
Liverpool 3½ per cent.	138½	131½
Manchester 3 per cent.	112⅝	106½
Nottingham 3 per cent.	119	112½
Caledonian 4 per cent. Debs.	156	148
Do. 4 per cent. Pref. No. 1	153⅞	142
Great Central 4½ per cent. Debs.	163½	156
Great Eastern 4 per cent. Debs.	152¾	144xd
Do. 4 per cent. Con. Pref.	150¾	141½
Great Northern 3 per cent. Debs.	120¼	112
Do. 4 per cent. Perp. Pref.	153½	143
Great Western 4 per cent. Debs.	158¾	149
Do. 5 per cent. Con. Pref.	191½	181
London and North-Western 3 per cent. Debs.	122	115
Do. Do. 4 per cent. Con. Pref.	154¾	146
London and South-Western 3 per cent. Debs.	121	114
Do. Do. 4 per cent. Con. Pref.	154	145
London, Brighton, and South Coast 4½ per cent. Debs.	173¾	165½
Do. 5 per cent. Pref.	189¾	179½
North-Eastern 3 per cent. Debs.	119½	113
Do. 4 per. cent. Pref.	153½	144
South-Eastern 5 per cent. Debs.	193¼	183½
Do. 5 per cent. Con. Pref.	188	179

There is but little doubt that in the near future we shall see a further recovery in these securities, but it should always be borne in mind that political accidents of an adverse character may recur, and it is not wise to pay for even gilt-edged stocks the high prices ruling during last year. Rupee Paper is firmer at 62⅛, and India Stock has advanced a point. The Chinese loans have been well maintained, the Seven per Cent. Silver Loan at 97, the Six per Cent. Gold Loan at 107½, the Five per Cent. Gold Loan and the Four and a Half per Cent. Gold Loan at 99 and 88¼ respectively. Japanese Scrip, too, is steady at 104. The new Greek Loan is quoted at ¼ premium.

HOME RAILS.

On looking back a year ago to Whitsuntide, one cannot help being struck with the absence of any improvement in Home Railway stocks since that period. Yet, for instance, all the Heavy lines have shown considerable increases in traffics, and the larger returns have not by any means been confined to them. The South-Eastern traffic increase has been considerable, and the Scotch Companies, too, are showing very favourably. To show the progress which has been made in traffics even during the present year, I have compiled the following little table, from which it will be seen that further improvement has been marked even on the big takes of last year:—

GROSS RECEIPTS FOR THE PERIOD FROM JANUARY 1 TO MAY 15.

—	Gross Receipts in 1897.	Gross Receipts in 1898.	Increase.
	£	£	£
Great Eastern	1,476,801	1,520,726	42,087
Great Central (Sheffield)	814,013	837,010	22,997
Great Northern	1,825,738	1,881,613	55,875
Great Western	3,304,530	3,299 830	– 4,700
London and Brighton	936,476	966,819	30,343
London, Chatham, & Dover	509,284	522,287	13,003
London and North Western	4,255,056	4,354,348	99,292
London and South Western	1,267,010	1,310,944	43,934
Metropolitan District	155,747	160,936	5,189
Metropolitan	306,622	313,122	6,500
Midland	3,619,177	3,676,365	57,188
North Eastern	2,689,371	2,731,034	41,663
South Eastern	782,423	821,729	39,306
*Caledonian	1,065,767	1,092,653	26,886
*Glasgow and South Western	403,000	418,118	15,118
*North British	1,041,730	1,070,421	28,691

* Returns from February 1 only.

Here, then, is a substantial increase in the receipts which should point to higher values, and would, doubtless, have caused the same, had we not been troubled with all kinds of political rumours, and had not, too, the labour outlook become more involved, so that the Railway Companies generally have had to increase wages. Another depressing feature has been the Spanish-American war, and the temporary rise in the value of money; but as money is now getting much easier, this adverse influence is passing away. Under all the circumstances there appears to be little reason why London and North Western, for instance, which were twelve months ago quoted at 206¾, should now stand at only 198½, while North Eastern last Whitsuntide stood at 178¼ as against the present price of 175¼. Of course, we all know the reason for the fall in Great Western, which at 164 compare with 177¼ a year ago; but this decline is only partly due to the recent unexpected issue of capital, a previous relapse having been caused by the coal strike in South Wales. Brighton "A" are but two points lower than the price of a year ago, but Dover "A" stand at 112 as compared with 116⅞ twelve months ago. They dropped during the political scare to 105½, but are now again strongly on the upgrade, being chiefly in favour owing to the very progressive policy adopted by the South Eastern Railway Company. London and Chatham First Prefs. are at about the same price as they were quoted a year ago, but Great Eastern have not recovered their former popularity, being about a point below the price ruling last Whitsuntide. Great Northern Deferred have sustained a heavy fall, and the present quotation of 55 compares with 68 a year ago.

The reason for this downward movement is, of course, the coming Great Central competition, and from the point of view that Great Northern Deferred have fallen so heavily, one would think that Great Central Ordinary and Preferred Ordinary should deserve all the more attention at their present low values. Metropolitan have advanced nearly 10 points during the last twelve months, and Metropolitan District Prefs. are 9 up. Yet District Ordinary are still quoted only 29, and should therefore deserve special attention. The Scotch Deferred stocks have passed through many fluctuations during the past twelve months, but even now show little change as compared with the prices ruling at last Whitsuntide. In fact, while North British Deferred are a couple of points higher, Caledonian Deferred Ordinary have declined. Should the present more favourable atmospheric conditions continue to prevail, our Home Railways will greatly benefit, more especially the passenger lines, and under these circumstances it will be useful to show the present quotations and comparative yields of the different stocks :—

—	1893. H'gh'st.	1893. Low'st.	Present Price.	Div. p.c. 1897.	Yield p.c.
London and North Western ...	205½	196½	198½	7⅛	3 9/16
Great Western	179⅛	165½	164	6	3⅝
Midland Preferred	88¾	82¼	85¼	2½	2⅝
Do. Deferred	95⅞	84½	88¼	3⅜	3¾
North-Eastern	181¾	172¾	175¼	6⅜	3⅝
London, Brighton Ord.	191½	183	186	6½	3½
Do. "A"	186¼	172½	177¼	7	4
London & South-Western Ord.	236	217	225½	7	3
Do. Deferred...	98¾	87	93½	3	3½
South Eastern Ord.	157	148	151	4 15/16	3¼
Do. "A"	117⅛	105½	112	3⅞	3½
London, Chatham 1st Pref.....	138¾	133½	136½	4⅓	3¼
Lancashire & Yorkshire Ord...	149¼	145	146	5⅛	3½
Great Eastern	124⅝	118	120⅛	3½	2⅞
Great Northern "A"	58	48	52	2¼	4 1/4
,, Deferred	61⅜	50¾	55	2¼	4⅛
Great Central Pref. Ord.	77	62	66	1½	2¼
Do. (1894) Ord.	—	—	41½	3*	7
Metropolitan	136⅞	127¼	133	3¾	2¾
Metropolitan District Pref. ...	113½	108	110	3⅜	3 1/16
Caledonian Ord	161¾	150	155	5⅛	3 7/16
Do. Deferred (Coras)...	59⅜	54⅛	57	2⅛	3 11/16
North British Deferred	47⅝	41¾	44	1⅛	2½
Do. Preferred	93⅜	86¾	89½	3	3⅓
Central London Ordinary	10 15/16	9 13/16	10¼	3*	3
Rhymney Ordinary	278	265	265½	10½	4

* Payable until completion of lines.

Of all the stocks above referred to, it will be seen that, apart from Midland Deferred, Brighton "A" and Caledonian Deferred Ordinary give the best yield, apart from Great Northern "A," which yield 4 1/16 per cent. on the basis of last year's profits, which cannot, however, any longer be taken as a guide. In the Heavy division a yield of about 3⅝ per cent. can be obtained. The rise which has just taken place in Dover "A" to 112, and in Districts to 29, confirms the view which I have for some time expressed; and there remains yet to be fulfilled my anticipation of a sharp advance in Great Central 1894 Ordinary, now quoted 41½.

YANKEE RAILS—WALL-STREET VERY CONFIDENT—LONDON "BEARS" NERVOUS.

Fluctuations in the Yankee market have been comparatively small during the week, and whenever prices here fell below parity Wall-street came in a buyer, so much so that the "Bears" on this side are getting very fidgety. They had already a taste at the last carry-over of what may befall them, the rate of Milwaukee going off to ⅛ back to even, while contangoes on the other stocks of the active list were also very light. In New York there is a tale about that London is short of 40,000 Milwaukee shares, but this is doubtless an exaggeration. It is, however, a fact that there are no Milwaukee to spare in this market, and the price was at one time as high as 102¼, and even now is but little lower. The course of prices of the whole of the active list will be gathered from the following comparative table :—

—	Price, Jan. 3, 1898.	Highest in 1898.	Lowest in 1898.	May 20, 1898.	Opening Prices, May 31.
Atchison	13⅜	14 3/16	10⅜	12⅜	12⅞
Do. Five per Cent. Pref.	31⅝	33¾	23⅝	31⅝	32¾
Canadian Pacifics ...	84⅝	92¼	74	85¼	86¾
Central Pacific	11⅞	15¾	11	12⅝	14¼
Denver	11⅞	14⅜	10	11⅝	12¼
Do. Pref.	47¼	54⅜	41½	46⅝	48½
Erie	15	16⅝	11¼	12¾	13⅜
Do. First Pref.	39½	44⅞	29½	35⅝	36½
Grand Trunk 1st Pref.	57⅛	69⅞	57⅛	68½	73⅜
Do. Guaranteed ...	70	78¾	70	74¾	78¼
Lake Shore	176	198⅞	177¾	190	192
Louisville	58½	62½	45¼	55¼	57
Milwaukee	97½	102¼	85½	99⅝	101⅞
Missouri, Kansas, and Texas	13⅛	14½	9 15/16	11¼	11⅝
Norfolk Adjust. Pref.	48¾	57	42⅞	51⅝	53
North. Pacific Pref., New	61⅛	70⅞	59	66⅞	68
New York Central ...	110¼	122¾	108½	118	120
Ontario	16⅜	19 1/16	13⅜	15¼	15½
Reading	11½	12⅛	7 13/16	9¼	9½
Southern Ordinary ...	9½	10½	7	8⅝	9
Do. Pref.	32¼	34½	24 3/16	29⅞	31½
Union Pacific	26⅝	36¾	18½	23	23¾
Wabash Pref.	18½	20 3/16	14¾	19¾	20½

It will be seen that quotations have been hardening in all directions, Milwaukee, however, taking a front seat. Any startling development with reference to the war would of course exercise an important influence upon values, and more especially would an American victory probably bring an all-round advance of from $2 to $5. This is one reason why the "Bears" have of late been exceedingly nervous. The war, however, is not the only influence, as the prosperous condition of the farmers in view of the high prices ruling for grain naturally improves business. Good times, moreover, still seem to be in store for the farmers, as the acreage under wheat, for instance, is now being figured out as 26,200,000 acres, and the official statistician estimates the probable yield per acre at 13.3 bushels. On this basis a winter wheat crop of 348,460,000 bushels is looked for, as compared with 332,701,105 bushels a year ago. I still keep to my opinion that Louisville and Nashville is one of the best stocks to buy in the American department, and that Union Pacific Preferred and Common will also be well in the running. The present price of the Common of 24 is, of course, with all the assessments paid, and the deduction made of the Preference stock given in lieu of the assessment—which worked out at the time to about $8. This brings the price up to 32, but it has touched 36 during the present year, and there is every prospect of a smart improvement, and whenever the announcement is made that dividends on the Preferred have commenced, Union Pacifics will doubtless move. With reference to the Baltimore and Ohio, it is stated in some quarters that the reorganisation scheme will not be brought forward until the war is over, but it seems to be to all intents and purposes cut and dried, and the impression prevails that an assessment of $20 will have to be paid on the Common stock, against which new securities worth $10 per share will be given. Nothing definite has yet been announced with reference to the Pacific rate-war, but the impression still continues that it is on the point of settlement. Canadian Pacifics have shown strength, and have, as I anticipated, improved to 87. The last traffic return showed an increase of $42,000, and a further rise is looked for. Grand Trunks have moved somewhat irregularly. The "Bulls" took an exaggerated view of the coming last weekly traffic increase, and were going for one of £16,000. When only a gain of £8,145 was announced, there was a good deal of disappointment, heavy sales following. A recovery has, however, since set in, and a very strong opinion is prevailing that we shall see a further sharp rise. The Guaranteed are quoted 78, the First Prefs. 73, and the Second Prefs. have now come into favour at 53⅛, and look like going better.

LONDON AND PARIS EXCHANGE, LTD., 24, Throgmorton-street, London, E.C. This Corporation is prepared to make Advances on Mining Shares, at 6 per cent. per annum, subject to a deposit of 20 per cent. Clients by this system save the heavy contangoes usually charged.

Foreigners and South Americans—Spanish Vagaries—The Brazilian Problem.

The reduction in the Bank rate here has greatly pleased the Paris Bourse, just as the danger signals which were hoisted some weeks ago were equally unwelcome there. The Paris Bourse at present wants fair weather, especially as the Coulisse trouble is by no means at an end, but on the contrary there is now a prospect of a complete rupture with the Parquet, and of the migration of the Coulissiers to Brussels. I dare say that finally some arrangement will be come to, but the uncertainty must for some time longer deprive the Bourse of any strong initiative. Much, of course, depends upon the duration of the Spanish-American war. The sooner that is ended the better it will be for Spain and Spanish finance, in which French financiers are so heavily interested. In fact, while an American victory would probably at first depress Spanish Fours, any subsequent peace rumours would doubtless counteract this influence and put the bonds up again. As to the independence of Cuba, it would from the financial point of view be considered rather a gain than a loss to Spain. After declining to 33½, Spanish Fours have improved to 34⅜ and reacted to 33¾, but there is every prospect of a fresh recovery whatever may happen, as it is evident that the French financiers are determined to see Spain through her difficulties. Whenever the time comes for peace-making these financiers will doubtless wield a strong influence in opposition to the warriors in Madrid. I am glad to see that affairs in Italy have settled down now, and this has exercised a favourable influence upon Italians, while most other foreign securities have improved in sympathy with Spanish. Rio Tinto, of course, are in a somewhat anomalous position. The Company is doing well, and the shares are favourites of the Paris Bourse, but everything depends upon the extent to which minerals will be taxed by the Spanish Government in order to defray the expenses of the war. Amongst South Americans, Argentines have further improved, the 1886 Loan being quoted 90¾, the Funding Loan 89¼. Argentine Railway stocks have also shown strength, and Buenos Ayres and Pacific Four and a Half per Cent. Second Debenture stock, to which I drew attention last week, have been well maintained at 92, while Western Railway of Santa Fé bonds, to which I also referred, have been steady at 41. On the other hand, after a further improvement there has been a partial set-back in Brazilian Government issues, as the financial reorganisation is evidently not going through quite smoothly. That a solution will eventually be found, however, I do not doubt. In fact, the Rio Exchange has already improved to 6⅞. There seems to be a tacit understanding that Uruguay bonds should remain at about the present level until some reasonable estimate can be formed as to what will be the future political and financial conditions in that Republic. Chilians have been firm, and Mexican Sixes have hardened, while Peruvian Corporation stocks have also displayed a more favourable tendency. Mexican Rails have at last aroused from their lethargy, the First Prefs. having been put up to 73½, but these are a dangerous gamble.

The Kaffir Circus.—Dr. Leyds' Diplomatic Despatch.—Politics v. Crushings.

We have now the full text of the despatch from the Transvaal Government to Mr. Chamberlain concerning the question of the suzerainty of Great Britain over the Transvaal, and although Dr. Leyds has evidently expended all his ingenuity upon the compilation of this document, it has fallen very flat. Six months ago, when our French and German neighbours were still somewhat favourably disposed to the South African Republic, the despatch might have met with some approval in those quarters; but the non-progressive character of the Transvaal Government has been so fully demonstrated to France and Germany by the refusal of Oom Paul to act upon the recommendations of the Gold Industry Commission, that an appeal to the Continental gallery is now doomed to failure. Personally, I think it does not matter one jot whether the Transvaal acknowledges the Queen's Suzerainty or not, as long as they are determined to uphold the London Convention of 1884, and this the despatch emphatically states. I have no doubt that Mr. Chamberlain will reply in a similar diplomatic strain, and that this little correspondence will go on for some time until finally it fizzles out again. But the contents of this much-discussed communication, which was to show the world that President Kruger and his colleagues "were a Government" have been known weeks ago, and its effect has been fully discounted. What is more important as regards the South African market is that rates at the settlement were very much easier, the contango on Chartered easing off to 1d., Randfontein to 5 per cent., East Rands to 5 per cent., Simmer and Jack to 4 per cent., while Johannesburg Consolidated Investment and Barnato Consols were at last arranged at even. This shows that the account is of very small dimensions, and this position—in view especially of the falling tendency of the Money Market—must eventually act as a strong support to the Kaffir Circus, should the other departments revive sufficiently to impart renewed animation also to South Africans. Quotations braced up considerably for the carry-over, owing to repurchases by "Bears," thus fully bearing out the view which I had taken, that covering on the part of the ursine party would support this market. A few sales have since been prompted by the publication of the despatch, and, these coming upon an inactive market in view of Epsom races, and the protracted holidays, caused a moderate relapse in Rand Mines to 29 1/16, in East Rands to 4½, in Consolidated Goldfields to 4⅛. With the reopening of the markets this week, however, it is quite on the cards that we shall see a stronger tendency, especially if—as is generally expected—the May crushings prove satisfactory. Although fluctuations in the South African market have of late been of moderate dimensions only, it will be useful to glance back at the highest prices ruling during the past year, as compared with present prices:—

——	Highest 1897.	Highest in 1898.	Lowest in 1898.	Price May 27, 1898.
Angelo	5 11/16	6	4½	5⅛
Bonanza	4 9/16	4	3⅝	4 5/16
Buffelsdoorn	2	⅞	⅜	5/16
Barnato Consols	2⅝	2½	1¼	1 11/16
City and Suburban (£4)	6 5/16	6 5/16	4 5/16	5½
Cons. Deep Level	6	6⅛	3⅛	3⅛
Cons. Goldfields Def.	9 11/16	5½	3¾	3 15/16
Crown Deep	14¾	14⅜	10¾	11
Crown Reef	12¾	12½	11¼	12½
Durban-Roodepoort	7½	6⅝	5⅜	6¼
East Rand	5 9/16	5½	3 9/16	4 7/16
Ferreira	24¼	26⅞	22¾	24
Geldenhuis Deep	7⅛	7⅛	6	7¼
Do. Estate	4⅞	5¼	4⅛	5⅜
Glencairn	2 13/16	2 9/16	1⅝	1¾
Goldfields Deep	10⅜	10¾	7	8 1/16
Henry Nourse	9¾	9¾	8⅜	9
Heriot	8⅞	8¼	6⅞	7¼xd
Joh. Con. Invest.	2⅝	2 3/16	1 9/16	1 5/16
Joh. Pioneer	11¼	12½	9½	9¼
Jubilee	8¼	9⅜	6¾	9⅝
Jumpers	6	5 15/16	4⅜	4⅞
Knight's	5 13/16	4½	2 13/16	3⅛
Langlaagte Estate	4¾	4¼	2⅞	3⅛
May Consolidated	2⅝	2½	2	2 7/16
Meyer and Charlton	6⅛	4 15/16	4	3 15/16
Modderfontein (£4)	5 1/16	3 15/16	3⅛	3⅜
Nigel	3 1/16	2 3/16	1 5/16	1 11/16
Primrose (New)	4⅞	4 11/16	3 1/16	3½
Princess Estate	2 13/16	2 9/16	1½	1 15/16
Rand Mines	34⅞	34⅞	26	29
Robinson (£5)	8¾	9	7½	7⅞
Roodepoort United	5⅛	4½	3½	3⅞
Simmer and Jack	5	4⅛	2 13/16	3⅜

The Barnato stocks have been comparatively firm, and certainly the reports of the annual meetings of the New Primrose and Glencairn Companies—which were held in Johannesburg on the 25th inst.—are of a very favourable character. I gather from the report of the Glencairn meeting, at which Mr. Harold F. Strange presided, in the absence of Mr. S. B. Joel, who is at present recruiting his health on the Continent, that the report and accounts show that since crushing was resumed at the end of July last 84,938 tons have been milled by the 110 stamps running. The profits amounted to £44,167 to the end of the financial year in December last, and are equal to 10s. 3d. per ton. The costs are the lowest on the Rand. All the machinery is running smoothly. Development had increased to 293,000 tons. The successful debenture issue had released profits, which would be distributed in due course. He anticipated an increase in the profits by 50 per cent. on starting an additional fifty stamps as soon as labour could be procured. He referred to the water supply, and stated that the strike of a stream of water in the western shaft covered all present requirements, leaving the dam untouched. At the New Primrose meeting the same Chairman stated that the report and accounts presented showed a gross profit for the financial year ending December of £151,353, equal to 10s. 9d. per ton crushed. The principal increases were due to reduced costs of working and better extraction by the cyanide process. Development had been maintained at 30,700 tons; the mine workings and all the plant were in good order. Ample provision had been made for depreciation. He referred specially to the dyke difficulty between levels 11 and 12 having been overcome; the overlap fully compensated for the break, and no loss of the reef had been caused. He confirmed the forecast of continued dividends made by Mr. S. B. Joel, the Chairman of the Company. In Deep Level shares a fair business is being transacted, and although every now and then there is a set-back, this section is undoubtedly most promising. Flotations of new ventures are even being entered upon, and my Johannesburg correspondent informs me that the most recent of the latter is the Village Deep, formed to take up over 117 claims known as Ingram's, being on the dip of the Village Main Reef Company. The capital of the new Company will be £300,000, in £1 shares, of which 180,000 will be issued to the vendors of the 117 claims, and 60,000 are taken up by them at £2 each, thus providing a working capital of £120,000 cash; 60,000 shares will be held in reserve, and will not be issued at a lower price than £2 per share. It is intended to acquire more claims to the east of Qugramsburg, and thus increase the total claim area to about 195 claims. This new flotation has an important bearing upon the position of the Goldfields Deep, which owns a 25 per cent. interest in Qugramsburg, and will thus receive for its holding 45,000 Village Deep shares, which should be worth not less than £5 each, or £225,000. The obligation to subscribe working capital will be fulfilled, according to agreement between the two companies by the Consolidated Goldfields of South Africa. The Goldfields Deep has also recently acquired another mynpacht, or mining lease, on Booysen's estate, equal to thirty-four claims, in addition to the mynpacht already held, whose area is equal to thirty-three and a half claims. I cannot help thinking that as soon as any recovery takes place in the market Goldfields Deep will reach a much higher price. London operators are not very sanguine just now with regard to further concessions to the mining industry by the Transvaal Government, and such news, for instance, as came to hand with regard to Mr. Esselen's attack upon Mr. Chamberlain, and Mr. Kruger's despatch, is not exactly of a hopeful character. Yet my Johannesburg correspondent seems to anticipate that more reductions will be granted. He, of course, admits that the recent reduction of 10s. per case in the price of dynamite is no great concession in itself, as it only reduces the working costs by about 3d. per ton. But he still thinks that there is a more reasonable and conciliatory spirit on the part of the Transvaal Government towards the mining industry, and he mentions, at the same time, that it is confidently expected in well-informed quarters in Pretoria that further concessions of a more substantial nature will be granted. Diamond shares have been firm. A slight reaction in De Beers was promptly recovered again, and the quotation is now 26⅝, while New Jagersfontein are steady at 7½.

SIMMER AND JACK DEVELOPMENTS—A RECORD OF SHAFT-SINKING.

It has been noticeable of late that even during the weaker intervals of the South African market Simmer and Jack shares show a firm front. This is no doubt due to the fact that the position of the mine is very favourable. The shares at the present price of 3 5/16, however, are still at a very low level, and whenever a fresh revival takes place in the Kaffir Circus, they should move more rapidly than the rest. My Johannesburg correspondent draws special attention to the steady increase in the output of the mine for 1898, the following being the figures for the last four months: — January 10,163 oz.; February 8,881 oz; March 11,419 oz.; April 14,351 oz. The falling-off in February was due to a breakdown in the machinery, but the April figures are excellent, as only the same number of stamps—viz., 240—were at work as during February and March. The lower levels of this mine are opening up so well that further increases may be confidently expected. In the Simmer West and Jupiter excellent progress is being made, for the Simmer West shaft is down 1,207 ft., and the Jupiter 1,347 ft. The reef should be struck in these properties at a depth of 2,500 ft. to 3,000 ft., and as sinking is progressing at the rate of about 140 ft. per month, it will not be so long before definite news is to hand. At the Simmer East, development is being actively proceeded with on the reef in the Hammond and Clement shafts, and the Lohse shaft—in which the reef was cut by a diamond drill at 1,850 ft.—has attained a depth of 1,280 ft. It is worthy of notice that a "record" in shaft-sinking has been accomplished in this shaft during the month of April, the footage completed being no less than 165 ft.; in March the shaft was sunk 150 ft., or a total for the two months of 315 ft. I remember the time, not so long ago, when a total of 65 ft. or 70 ft. per month was considered quite satisfactory; but the present rate of progress has so completely changed former conditions, that a Deep Level property can be brought to the producing stage in a comparatively short period. A few years ago experts used to calculate on a basis of five to six years. Now they can reduce that time by one-half, and it is unnecessary to point out the importance of such a reduction to the holders of Deep Level shares.

WEST AUSTRALIAN AND OTHER MINES.

The West Australian Market has exhibited a much firmer tendency than that for South African mines, and more especially the higher-class shares are again coming into favour. This is not surprising considering that results are distinctly satisfactory and crushings continue to show improvements. A favourable feature is also the promised legislation of the West Australian Government with regard to mining leases and to the alluvial difficulty. The Royal Commission which had been appointed has now reported in favour of future holders of leases for claims being entitled to all the gold within their boundaries; no leases to be granted over alluvial ground—except under certain circumstances; no lease to be granted within twelve months from the passing of the proposed Amendments Act at the present goldfields where alluvial gold is known to exist; and, finally, that alluvial gold be defined as "all gold" except that found in a seam, lode, dyke, vein, or quartz reef. The strongest market has been that for Lake View Consols, which are quoted 9, and for Ivanhoe, BRIGHTON.—NORFOLK HOTEL.—Old-established County and Family Hotel. The best situation. Replete with comfort, style, and luxury. Moderate charges.—JULES A. CREIGHTON, Manager.

ST. RONAN'S, the Scottish Natural Mineral Table Water, aërated and bottled direct from the St. Ronan's Wells, Innerleithen, immortalized by Sir Walter Scott. Remarkable for its curative properties. Sold in splits, pints, and quarts everywhere.

which have improved to 6. But Hannan's Brownhill have also come into favour at 7⅝, and, after declining, Great Boulder Proprietary have improved to 17s. 6d. The following is the list of crushings for the week, which is somewhat short :—

	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Oz. of Gold.	Assay of Tailings Per Ton.
Champion Extended & Home Rule	700	600	—
Princess Royal (Cue)	250	178	—
East Murchison United :
Great Eastern	1,620	1,100	8 dwt.
Donegal Leases...	390	356	3 dwt.
Bayley's United (Tailings) ..	887	892	—
Central Wealth Consol	25	855	—
Golden Ridge	7½	7¾	8 dwt.
Lady Evelyn	101	111	—

It will be useful to now again consider the fluctuations which have taken place in West Australian shares during the past twelve months, and I herewith publish a comparative table of prices giving the highest figures touched in 1897, the highest and lowest in 1898, and the present quotations :—

Names.	Highest, 1897.	Highest in 1898.	Lowest in 1898.	Price May 27, 1898.
Associated Gold Mines ...	5 5/16	4 9/16	2⅜	3½
Belle Vue Prop.	1⅝	—	—	1⅛
Burbank's Birthday Gift ...	2 1/16	1 15/16	⅞	1⅓
Central Boulder	1⅝	1⅜	11/16	½
East Murchison United ...	1 3/16	1¼	⅞	⅞xd
Florence	13/16	⅞	⅓	9/16
Golden Horseshoe	9	9 1/16	6½	9 1/16
Golden Links	1 7/16	1 7/16	½	11/16
Great Boulder Proprietary ...	27/-	25/6	18/0	18/0
,, ,, Perseverance	5¼	4 9/16	2⅝	2¾
,, ,, Main Reef ...	2	1 13/16	1 1/16	1¼
Hampton Plains	3	1 7/16	½	11/16
Hannan's Brownhill	7½	8 5/16	6½	7¾
,, Proprietary ...	1⅛	22/6	13/0	10/6
Ivanhoe	7 3/16	6½	4 11/16	6 3/16
Kalgurli	7¼	6 15/16	4 3/16	5 7/16
Lady Shenton...	2 5/16	3 11/16	1½	2 5/16xd
Lake View Consols	12⅝	11 5/16	7½	9
London & Globe Finance ...	2	2 11/16	1¼	1 5/16
Londonderry	7/0	¾	⅓	3/0
Mainland Consols	2 3/16	¾	¼	5/16
Northern Territories... ...	—	4 15/16	1⅛	1
Princess Royal (Cue) ...	—	—	—	2/9
W. A. Goldfields	6	2⅝	1⅛	1⅛
W. A. Joint Stock Trust ...	3 5/16	2¾	⅞	9/16

There have been a good many disappointments in the West Australian market, and the uncertainties of mining have been fully illustrated in their case. But, all the same, there remains the fact that some of the leading mines, and especially most of those to which I have always directed attention, are doing excellently, and maintain fair quotations, although even the latter do not represent their full value. Amongst these are specially to be numbered Great Boulder Proprietary, Hannan's Brownhill, Ivanhoe, and Lake View Consols; but amongst the favourites are also Associated Gold Mines, Golden Horseshoe, Sons of Gwalia, Lady Shenton, and Kalgurli. It is reported by cable from the Hannan's Brownhill that the new mill has been completed. It is the finest in the colony, and with the old plant it will treat 200 tons of ore daily. This means a very large output in the near future. A strong demand has set in for London and Globe Finance shares, which have advanced to 1⅜ with a rising tendency. An improvement in Great Boulder Main Reef, on favourable advices from the mine, has been a feature, and there has been a better demand for Lady Shentons up to 2⅜ x.d., and according to a cablegram just received from Perth, W.A., a new make of stone has been struck in the hanging wall at the side of the main reef; the average of vein, including new make, is 11 ft.; the new make is 12 in. wide, showing gold quite equal to 3 oz. per ton, which greatly improves that part of level No. 4 lying to the South; and the manager adds that some very fine specimens will be forwarded by the next mail. Florence have improved to 9/16 on a cablegram stating that at 30 ft. solid mineralised stone is shown 2 ft. 6 in. wide, going quite 1 oz. to the ton, and that there is every appearance of improvement in a few feet. Developments on the Golden Pike are favourable, and it is expected that richer stone will be met with shortly as a result of the recent discovery. East Murchison United have been dealt in to a fair extent, and Kalgurli have been a feature of strength. An improvement has taken place in the W.A. Market Trust group. The reconstruction of the Market Trust appears to be fully assured, as it is understood that a large proportion of the assessment has been guaranteed. Northern Territories have been a strong market up to 1¼, and Joint Stock Trusts have been firmer. Under these circumstances it is probable that Joint Stock Founders, which have fallen from ⅞ to 5/16, will also improve again, especially as a considerable dividend will shortly be paid on them. As regards other Australian mines, Mount Morgan have been firm, but Mount Lyell have shown great weakness, this market being altogether disorganised. In Indian mines, movements have been unimportant, and with few exceptions prices have eased off. Copper shares have been dull, and in New Zealand mines hardly any business has been transacted. British Columbian shares have also suffered a slight reaction, while British America made up at the special settlement at 19s. 6d. After reacting to 18s., these shares have recovered again to 18s. 9d. In view of the very important deal of the Corporation with reference to the acquisition of the Le Roi mine, a smart improvement may come about at any time.

THE SYNDICATE-TOUTS AGAIN.

Some time ago I had occasion to draw attention to the renewed efforts of the syndicate-touts to entice country investors into their nets. I then referred more especially to F. Charles, 89, London Wall, London; Alexander Baring & Co., 11, Bridge-street, Bath; and Davenport & Co., 18A, London-street, London, E.C. I have now before me circulars issued by George Armstrong & Co., 106, High Holborn, London, who are distributing these broadcast over the country. They are headed "success without liability or risk," and are on all fours with the missives which used to emanate from the offices of the syndicate-touts which were brought to book by the City Solicitor during the past year. Thus George Armstrong & Co., commence their circular, "It is with great pleasure that we have to inform you of the success of our last joint deal, the magnificent profit of 375 per cent., being the highly satisfactory result." In addition they mention profits of from 300 to 520 per cent. realised in six recent deals, and boast that these "grand profits" "have not been the result of a blind gamble, but the natural outcome of special information and experience." The dodge of guaranteeing new subscribers to their joint deals against any loss whatever is also resorted to. Need I again point out that if George Armstrong & Co., or the people who trade under this name, were actually making the huge profits of which they boast, they would undoubtedly prefer to keep them for themselves instead of offering to enrich complete strangers by offering to share the same with them? A reader of TRUTH has recently been staying at a farm in the country, and to his great surprise the farmer's wife showed him some circulars which had been sent to her by Kynnaston, Son, & Co., stock and share dealers, 114, Fenchurch-street, E.C., in which the suggestion is made to operate in Great Western Railway Ordinary stock at once. The letter was dated May 17, and a profit of £70 on each £10 was promised. My readers, of course, know that Great Western was on that date quoted at 169½, and that, through the unexpected issue of new capital stock and the continuation of the Welsh coal strike, the price has since dropped to 164. That transaction, therefore, would have caused a heavy loss instead of the promised profit. Another very curious circumstance is that Kynnastons enclose printed circulars headed "Kynnaston's Accumulative System," in which particulars are given of transactions which have been carried out by them in Home Railway stocks. The extraordinary part about this effusion is that altogether impossible prices are mentioned. Thus they state that a client bought £1,000 Brighton "A" at 119 and sold it at 120¼, while their other transactions are also embellished by quotations such as Caledonians at 32½, Great Eastern at 71, &c. It is a long time, indeed since Brighton "A" were quoted 119, and I do not think that Kynnaston's accumulative system was then in existence. The prices mentioned of Caledonian and Great Eastern were also quoted many years ago, and altogether it looks as if the circular had been drawn up by some one absolutely ignorant of present conditions and prices on the Stock Exchange. In view of these extraordinary discrepancies, it is particularly advisable to give Kynnaston, Son, & Co. a wide berth.

The London Co-operative Cab Company—A Disclaimer.

I have received a communication from Mr. Stanley Evans, solicitor, of 20, Theobalds-road, Bedford-row, W.C., taking objection to the statement which I made in Truth of May 26 that I had been told that the London Co-operative Cab Company had been "started some time ago by a man named Stanley Evans." Mr. Stanley Evans, of 20, Theobalds-road, states most positively that he never started such a Company, and, in fact, never heard of it until his attention was called to my article. It is quite clear, therefore, that Mr. Stanley Evans of Theobalds-road was not meant by the report that reached me, and which was referred to in Truth, and I have much pleasure in giving this disclaimer every publicity, while expressing my regret that the reference should have caused any inconvenience to Mr. Stanley Evans, a highly-respectable solicitor, and partner in the firm of Stanley Evans & Co., of 20, Theobalds-road, Bedford-row, W.C. Mr. Stanley Evans states that there is no other person of the same name in the London Post Office Directory, but, although that directory is very comprehensive, everybody's name is not in it, and there is some evidence that a Mr. Evans is connected with the London Co-operative Cab Company. This information I have obtained altogether apart from the report above referred to, as in a written communication from a gentleman who was given as reference for the Company by the secretary (Mr. Hardinge), as one of their oldest and largest depositors, the statement is made that "he [the depositor] has known the principal, Mr. Evans [christian name not given] for many years." I now propose to institute the strictest inquiry into the above report, which reached me from a usually reliable quarter, and if I should succeed in unearthing another Mr. Stanley Evans, or a person going by that name, whether connected with the Company in question or not, I shall consider that I shall have rendered an important service to Mr. Stanley Evans, solicitor, of 20, Theobalds-road.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

The Anglo-French Textile, Company, Limited.—The business of this Company will be the manufacture of Cotton Yarns and Cloth, in a cotton spinning and weaving mill, to be erected by the Company at Pondicherry, in French India. The capital is fixed at £200,000 in 10,000 Preference shares of £10 each and 100,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each.

A recital of the possibilities of this venture occupies the greater portion of this prospectus, but they are very much in the future. There is also a clause which provides that half the surplus profits, after paying the Preference dividend and 10 per cent. on the Ordinary shares, shall be paid to the Directors in addition to their fixed remuneration. Why should they have this extra remuneration?

The Anglo-Norwegian Kieselguhr Company, Limited.—With a capital of £100,000 in shares of £1 each, this Company has been formed to acquire 100 lakes and waterfalls in South Norway, which are said to contain immense deposits of infusorial earth, known as "Kieselguhr" or "fossil meal."

This prospectus is full of the many advantages and uses to which this earth or "fossil meal" can be applied; but these have yet to be proved. It is extremely doubtful whether the estimated profit of £45,000 per annum will ever be realised.

My Letter Box.

As several of my conditions are not adhered to by many of my correspondents, I take this opportunity of reminding them that I can only reply to communications which are accompanied by the names and addresses of the writers, not, of course, for publication, but as a token of good faith. All anonymous letters will be consigned to the waste-paper basket. Some delay must necessarily occur in answering questions which entail special inquiries, and it is, as a rule, not possible to attend in the current issues to communications which arrive after Friday. My correspondents will also greatly simplify my task by reading my weekly letters carefully through, as these frequently contain remarks on the very subject on which information is sought. Their letters should also be plainly written, and to the point, and it is necessary that the different stocks or shares on which information is asked should be numbered. I again repeat that I can accept no fees for my replies in my "Letter Box," and that I cannot undertake to answer by letter or telegram. I must also absolutely decline to execute any orders for stocks or shares, or to act as an intermediary in any way. The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

Tyro.—Yes, you should hold your Uruguay bonds. It looks as if this country will gradually work into a prosperous position again. F. T.—Prospects of Argentines are favourable, and there is nothing against an investment in the Customs loans. K. K.—These lottery-bonds yield very small returns only, and for the rest depend upon the drawings. There is no objection to this investment, if you care for that kind of thing. Orient.—The office of this concern is quite a small one, and there are only one or two persons in it. It is not at all an important association, but merely a touting concern, and you should have nothing to do with it. Certainly do not pay any more money.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

W. C. M.—The various quotations are the buying and selling figures, and most mining shares are of a denomination of £1, but there are also exceptions. When, for instance, a pound share is quoted ½ to ⅝, this means that at ⅝ or thereabouts you can buy, the difference being the jobber's turn. Sometimes, of course, it is possible to buy at the price between the cabled "middle" price. P. J. F.—There would be no objection to your buying a house on this Company's terms, but I do not recommend investment or deposits with it. N. B.—The question of what is the duty, if any, upon silk into Morocco is too far afield for me to reply to. F. J. C.—You can do better by applying to a respectable building society. Concerns such as that you refer to are not to be recommended. Meta Colqhoun, and A. J. C.—I published in last week's issue a paragraph on this Syndicate-tout under the heading "Who is F. Charles?" and I advise you not to listen to his blandishments.

Home Rails.

H. S.—The exchange into Great Central 1894 Ordinary might be advisable. Tyro, Edinburgh.—Obviously, there is much less margin for a rise in the Preference stock No. 1 than in the Ordinary No. 2, but there is no reason to sell the former at a loss. Anxious, Macclesfield.—1. Gordon Hotels Four and a Half per Cent. Debenture stock at 139½, and Courage & Co. Four per Cent. Debenture stock at 124½, should suit your purpose. 2. I can see no reason for selling now. Harold.—Last year's dividend on Vestas amounted to 17s. 7d. per share, so that at the present price of 20 they yield about 4¼ per cent. I should prefer Coras to the other stocks mentioned by you. The advice given by other contemporaries to wait before buying Home Railway stocks has proved very misleading, as prices have already jumped up. To some extent, you have already missed your market.

American and Foreign Rails.

Writer, Liverpool.—Certainly hold your American Rails for an improvement. In due time they will doubtless go higher, even if there should be fluctuations. Nestor.—Canadian Pacifics should be held for a much higher price.

Mining Shares.

E. L. B.—Certainly hold Glencairn (1) and Oceana (2), this is not the time to sell South African shares. You should also hold No. 3 for an improvement. Market Trust, Surrey.—Yes, I think your best plan is to join the reconstruction, as this will undoubtedly improve the value of the shares. Hotspur.—You have been very unwise in parting with your money before receiving the transfer of these mining shares, and you should certainly not pay up the rest of the money until the shares have been actually transferred to you. W. G. L.—You have been most foolish in allowing yourself to be frightened out of your shares by the political rumours. If you had consulted TRUTH you would not have done so. How could you sell Ivanhoe at 5¼, and Lake View Consols at 8 15/16? They have since improved to 6 3/16 and 9⅛ respectively. As regards Randfontein you should also buy these back, which you can do at present without much loss. Globes Ellara.—You should certainly stick to all your mining shares, and more especially to London and Globes and British America Corporation. These in fact might be averaged, with at least two of the other shares. Vere.—You have omitted to enclose the list of your South African holdings, and I am therefore unable to give you advice on this subject. The life office in question is one of the wealthiest American insurance companies. Eventide.—Sons of Gwalia dropped at one time to 1¾, from which there was a rebound, and your broker no doubt has bought as cheaply as he could. Highlander.—I think your only course is to hold these South African shares. I have never advised their purchase, but this is not the time to sell. The same applies to the other shares. Alfred J. A.—London and Globes have already recovered to 1⅜, and should go considerably better. You should buy more to average. A Clicker.—The news from this mine has of late been unfavourable. Disappointed.—It may be advisable to join the reconstruction, as otherwise it is possible that you will forfeit your shares. Balshagray.—Cable information concerning the Driefontein is expected shortly. C. M.—All your mining shares are again recovering, and you should distinctly hold for a further rise. 1. Certainly do not sell now. 2. Most decidedly hold. 3. You might average Randfontein and London and Globes now. B. A. C.—British America Corporation shares are undoubtedly a good purchase at the present price. A. R.—I should think that under the circumstances it would be advisable to join the reconstruction and sell after. W. N., Northwich.—There is a quarrel between the liquidator in Edinburgh and the receiver in London, and in the meantime you had better do nothing. Geranium.—After the reconstruction the W. A. Market Trust will probably recover again. British America Corporations and London and Globes are both improving, especially the latter, and there is nothing the matter with either.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

Gratitude.—Unless there was misrepresentation, I do not see how you can insist upon having your application for debentures in this Company cancelled; but I may be able to advise you more definitely if you tell me the name of the brewery. Lancashire.—No doubt dividends will be paid half-yearly, but you cannot expect any announcement for some months yet. C. Mc.D.—It is a great pity that at the outset you did not heed my repeated warnings against the Great Horseless Carriage Company. I really cannot help you now that the cart is in the mud. Legal proceedings would only be of use if they were taken in conjunction with other shareholders. Clementina.—Prospects of this brewery Company do not seem to be favourable, and the management is evidently indifferent.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

Nice.—I cannot say that I am particularly in favour of either Nos. 2 or 3, or of the Coal Company, No. 5; but the other stocks in which you propose to invest seem to be suitable. Roker.—With regard to American Rails, I certainly consider Union Pacific Prior Lien bonds and Preference shares as most promising. I stated the position of the Union Pacific last week, and there is every prospect of a dividend being paid on the Prefs. As regards a lock-up in mining shares, I should prefer Randfontein and East Rands (3 and 4) to the Indian shares (1 and 2). Nos. 5 and 6 are less promising. Amongst the Industrials, No. 4 is very speculative; No. 5 is not in a satisfactory position; and Nos. 6 and 7 had best be left alone until the Spanish-American war is over. Nos. 1 and 3 are fair investments, but no catch. Tregenza.—1. No option but to hold for the present, Brazilians are on the upgrade. 2. This also applies to these stocks. 3. Prospects of the British America Corporation are very favourable. 4. No reason to sell. Alexis.—Yes, this is a good time to buy Hannan's Brownhill and London and Globe Finance. None of the bonds mentioned, viz., Russian Internals, Canal de Panama, and Bons de l'Exposition de 1900, have yet been drawn. Spades—Amongst the Industrial stocks mentioned by you Nos. 1 and 4 are the most promising, but you will find something to suit you in my letter under "My Chapter on Industrial Stocks." Welsbach Ordinary and Preferred are an excellent purchase, and there is nothing against the bonds Nos. 9 and 10. Lee.—1. Yes, you should average London and Globes at once, they are already on the upgrade. 2. You may as well clear your profit. 3. No. 4. Not particularly; I should think that Welsbach Ordinary or Deferred would be preferable. 5. There seems to be no option but to join the reconstruction. 6. A fair investment of the kind, but no catch.

CHINA AND GLASS. — Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

MY CHAPTER ON INDUSTRIAL STOCKS.

Should foreign politics continue to take the more favourable course which they have adopted of late, the Industrial department will doubtless be greatly benefited, and we may see some of the old animated times again. No one can possibly say whether popular fancy will turn towards oil, gas (Welsbach), or cotton shares, but I should think that the last-mentioned gamble had pretty well fizzled out. At all events, English Sewing Cottons are now quoted 5/16 premium only, and some of the "Bulls" seem to be very much afraid of the special settlement which is about to commence. Coats' Ordinary are dull at 58½, and Fine Spinners are quoted 3/32 premium; but at this price there are only sellers. An American Thread Company is now on the tapis to take in fifteen Companies, and, of course, our Yankee cousins are relying upon this Company for half the capital. Welsbachs have upon the whole been a very good market, and, as I anticipated, rates proved very light at the settlement, the Ordinary and Preferred being carried over at from 4 to 6 per cent., the Deferred at from 6 to 10 per cent. The fact is, that stocks have passed into stronger hands, and I fully anticipate an early advance, more especially in the Ordinary now quoted 111, while the Preferred stand at 97, the Deferred at 18s. 9d. The various exhibitions of the new burner, which are being held in the City and elsewhere, are evidently popularising this new invention. Russian Oil shares have declined to 21½, the Preferred to 10⅛, on the scare about the title; while Schibaieff are quoted par to ⅛ premium. Volenite shares have temporarily eased off to 4½ premium. West Australian timber shares have shown dulness, chiefly in view of the coming competition, and Millars' Karri and Jarrah are quoted 2¾, Davies 1¼. It is understood that the response to the appeal to the public of the Australian Hardwoods Company has been very indifferent, and this should act as a warning to the promoters of the new Jarrah Companies now on the tapis. It is quite absurd to bring out with large capitals Companies to acquire leasehold properties, which can be obtained for a mere song. Liptons have been steady, the Ordinary at ⅞ to 15/16 premium, the Preferred to ¼ premium. In brewery shares Allsopp Ordinary have been firmer at 147. Lyons have been firm at 4⅛ on the issue of the report, which confirms the payment of a balance dividend at the rate of 17½ per cent., making 15 per cent. for the year. After placing £5,000 to reserve, and writing off sundry amounts, the directors propose to carry forward to next account the sum of £1,315. Salmon & Gluckstein have been steady at 32s., Natal Steam Coal at 1⅛ to ¼. I am not surprised that Pegamoid have now fallen to 5s. 6d. I always warned my readers not to put their money into this concern. In cycle shares dealings have been small, and prices have not yet taken a turn for the better. Dunlop Ordinary are quoted 13s., the Deferred at 7s., and the Debentures have again dropped 5 to 65, while Humber Ordinary stand at 9s. 9d. x.d., the Extensions at 5s. Cycle Components are quiet at 1 3/32, Swifts at 9s. 6d., Singers at 8s. 9d., Amalgamated Tyres at 3s. 3d. Amongst new issues which are on the tapis is a debenture issue of a leading brewery Company, the conversion of the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' Company of Regent-street—which is attracting much attention—half a dozen Karri and Jarrah Companies of very varying merits, an engineering Company, Hooley, Limited, &c. There is every prospect of the issue of Five per Cent. Preference shares to be made by the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' Company to customers and the public proving a considerable success. The business is one of the largest and most prosperous of its kind, and the amount required to pay the preference dividend on the basis of the average profits for the last three years is covered several times over. The whole of the ordinary shares will be held by the vendors, Messrs. W. Gibson and J. L. Langman, who will continue to manage the business. Owing to the progress made in electric traction, electric tramways are meeting with much favour, and several of those constructed in the colonies and now working are achieving excellent results. Take, for instance, the Cape Electric Tramways, Limited, which was started in 1897, and owns all the shares of the Companies composing the tramways of Cape Town and Port Elizabeth. The net profits from both systems amounted in November, 1897, to £4,517; December, £6,479; January, 1898, £6,913; February, £6,254; March, £6,594; April, £6,275; a total of £37,032, which is a very satisfactory result. Assuming that the next six months' profits were on the same scale, the profits for the year would amount to £74,064, and deducting debenture interest at 5 and 6 per cent. on the two issues made (£24,650), there would be a surplus of £49,414 available for the dividends on the capital of £400,000 in shares of £1 each (the Debenture debt amounting to £430,000). It takes £40,000 to pay a dividend of 10 per cent. on the Ordinary shares, so that they may already be considered to be on a 10 per cent basis. The present price of 25s. per £1 share is under the circumstances extremely moderate, and the shares would not be dear at 30s.—Your affectionate Uncle,

MOSES.

All Rights Reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

A COSTLY GIFT.

Part I.

FRANKLYN VAVASOUR was a miser up to date. His clothes were not ragged, nor did he deny himself the necessaries of life. On the contrary, he moved in good society, lived luxuriantly, and even indulged in what might be called personal extravagance. This may sound paradoxical, but the simple explanation is that Franklyn Vavasour had such a supreme regard for his own comfort and well being, that he grudged no expenditure on that account. But, outside this purely selfish limit, no wretched half-starved monomaniac that ever shivered in a garret hoarded his money more zealously than this highly-polished, fashionably-attired young gentleman. While contenting himself with exacting the uttermost farthing of value for every pound he spent upon himself and his pleasures, Franklyn Vavasour rigidly drew the line at generosity to others in any shape or form. He had probably never bestowed a halfpenny in charity in his life; he did not know the meaning of hospitality in a reciprocal sense; and if he gave a dinner at his club, or lent a friend his horse to ride, it was always from sordid and calculating motives.

It is truly astonishing, considering that Franklyn Vavasour's idiosyncrasies were pretty generally known, that he contrived to maintain a sort of lukewarm popularity among his friends and acquaintances. He was what is called a "jobber" on the Stock Exchange; and, by many years of patient assiduity and obsequious time-serving, he had established a lucrative business, and when a man is well-to-do and successful, a very little commonplace amiability will hide a multitude of shortcomings. He was a man of about thirty-five and a bachelor. Nor did he seem in any hurry to turn Benedick, though he went a good deal into society. He found this a cheap form of amusement, for in these days a bachelor and a dancing man is a privileged being, who is eagerly sought after, and from whom no return for kindness shown is expected. For the rest he was not a bad-looking fellow, and though his tall, slim figure, sharp features, and steely blue eyes afforded some index to his character, he was naturally regarded as a highly eligible parti.

One evening Franklyn Vavasour descended the steps of a friend's house in the neighbourhood of Portman-square in a very gloomy and depressed frame of mind. He had quitted the ball-room early, for a little incident had occurred which had affected his spirits. A short time previously he had been invited to the wedding of a daughter of a Stock Exchange friend named Pyecroft. Franklyn was not fond of weddings, because they were associated with the giving of presents. He thought wedding presents a hateful and degrading institution, and he decidedly set his face against them. Therefore he had refused the Pyecroft invitation, feeling that his business relations with the father would render it a little awkward for him to attend the wedding without making the customary offering.

But old Tom Pyecroft was one of those bluff, outspoken products of Stock Exchange culture, who are devoid alike of sensitiveness and delicacy. He was a broker in a large way of business, and he had been in the habit for a good many years of dealing with Franklyn, who had found these transactions very profitable. It appeared that Tom Pyecroft (as he was universally called, even by lads young enough to be his grandsons) had not been made aware till that evening of Franklyn's polite refusal of the wedding invitation, and meeting him at the ball, he had taken him to task about it, with his usual engaging frankness.

"Frank, I call it confounded shabby behaviour," he said, using, however, a considerably stronger adjective than is here set down, "and I didn't think it of you."

"The fact is, I've given up weddings," Franklyn had replied, lamely.

"It is all tommy-rot," returned the other, "you must come, and that is the long and short of it. You and I ain't going to quarrel, Frank, over a trifle like this, eh?"

"Oh, no! Certainly not!" answered Franklyn, uneasily, fancying he detected a latent significance in his friend's words, "I'll come by all means."

"That is right, I knew you would," cried Tom Pyecroft, slapping him vigorously on the back. "You can bring your present with you, my boy."

It is probable that the old gentleman's concluding words were only uttered in jest, for he was an inveterate buffoon, and he loved to rally people on their weak points. But poor Franklyn groaned in spirit, for he would almost as soon have parted with his heart's blood as spend money in this way. Thus meditating, he hailed a hansom, when he got within a shilling cab fare of his chambers, and gave himself up to bitter reflections. But the situation had to be faced, for the wedding day was close at hand, and he began to consider seriously what was the smallest sum that he could decently spend. While turning over this important problem in his mind, Franklyn's attention was attracted by something which glittered at his elbow, and putting forth his hand absently, he was amazed to find a small brooch in the form of a star, hanging loosely by its pin from the cushion of the cab.

He examined his treasure-trove with curiosity, and perceived at once that it was a valuable diamond ornament. No doubt the last occupant of the cab had been a lady, who, having removed the brooch while adjusting her wraps, had stuck it into the cushion of the cab, and carelessly forgotten it. This conjecture was confirmed by the conduct of the driver of the cab, who suddenly pulled up, and descended to examine his horse's knee by the light of a gas-lamp.

"What is the matter?" inquired Franklyn, involuntarily closing his hand over the brooch.

"He has gone lame. I must get home when I've put you down, sir," grumbled the man.

"Had an accident?" asked Franklyn, noticing that the harness of the animal seemed disarranged.

"Yes, sir, collision in Baker-street."

"Anybody hurt?"

"No, sir. There was a lady inside at the time. She screamed and jumped out in a fright, and wouldn't get in again, and I lost my fare," grumbled the man as he re-ascended his perch.

This explanation cleared up the mystery. The accident had probably occurred at the moment when the lady had removed the brooch, and her terror and agitation had caused her to leave it behind. Franklyn's first impulse was to inquire of the cabman where the lady had entered the cab, in view of restoring her property. Unhappily the idea suddenly flashed across his mind that this diamond brooch was just the sort of article that would be suitable for a wedding present, and without any definite dishonesty of purpose, Franklyn put the brooch into his pocket, and said nothing to the driver about it.

That individual was inclined to be garrulous on the subject of his recent misadventure, when Franklyn alighted at his own door; but if his object was to excite sympathy in the bosom of his fare, he was speedily disillusioned by receiving a very hard-earned shilling and a curt good night. The man whipped up his patient horse and departed with curses, while Franklyn let himself in with his latch-key, feeling strangely elated at having kept silent about his find.

It is a singular fact that from the moment he reached his own room, and closed the door behind him, Franklyn Vavasour regarded the brooch as his own private property. The moral aspect did not enter into his calculations at all. He could not resist the temptation of availing himself of what he regarded as a pure stroke of luck; and as he turned the brooch over in his hands, he remembered with a thrill of satisfaction that Miss Pyecroft's future husband was a young officer, who was under orders to rejoin his regiment in India immediately, whither the bride and bridegroom were to depart from Brindisi, after a brief honeymoon on the Continent. When this important fact occurred to him, Franklyn Vavasour made up his mind on the spot that the brooch would be his wedding gift. The only thing that troubled him was that it was almost too valuable for his purpose. Though no judge of stones, Franklyn realised that the diamonds were large and of the purest water. It seemed probable that the owner would advertise her loss in the newspapers, and the resemblance between the missing article and his gift to the bride might attract attention. To obviate this as much as possible, Franklyn decided to obey literally Tom Pyecroft's injunction, and to take his present with him to the wedding. By presenting it at the moment of the bride's departure he would show becoming modesty, and would ensure its not being exhibited to the public gaze among the other gifts. He also had the brilliant idea of purchasing a case for the brooch at the United Co-operative Stores, of which he was a member, thus naturally conveying the impression that he had purchased his present there.

His scheme succeeded as completely as such unhallowed projects frequently do at the outset. He went to the wedding, and, waiting until the bride appeared in her travelling dress on the eve of departure, he slipped the case into her hand. He had hoped that the young lady, in her natural agitation, would have refrained from opening it before others, but Tom Pycroft's daughter had her emotions well under control, and was able to manifest the most flattering appreciation of Franklyn's generosity.

"Oh, look, every one! Look, father! It is beautiful!" cried the bride, rapturously, handing the brooch round to be duly admired. "Mr. Vavasour, you are a perfect dear. I must kiss you for it—I really must."

Franklyn's passing annoyance at the public demonstration was more than compensated by the chorus of admiration and approval which his gift elicited, especially when Tom Pyecroft, who was slightly maudlin and decidedly intoxicated, clasped him warmly by the hand, and said:

"Frank, dear boy! You've done us proud. I didn't expect it of you, but it is an agreeable surprise. I shan't forget, old chap, its—hic—devilish good o' yer."

It was a new sensation for Franklyn to be commended for generosity, and he experienced a pleasant glow of virtuous satisfaction as he wended his way to his club when the wedding party broke up.

Nevertheless, he kept a watchful eye on the second column of the Times and other newspapers, for when the excitement of the affair had passed he began to be troubled with vague misgivings. Whenever an announcement caught his eye with the ominous heading "Lost," Franklyn felt a cold shiver, but the owner of the brooch made no sign, and after a day or two he began to feel quite happy and comfortable.

One evening, about a fortnight later, Franklyn Vavasour, returning to his chambers to dress for a dinner party, was accosted on the door-step outside by a dingy-looking individual, who smelt of stables and also of liquor.

"Beg pardon, sir," said the man, touching his hat, "might I speak to you a minute?"

"I've nothing for you," said Franklyn, adopting his usual formula.

"You are the gent, sir; now I hear your voice I'm sure of it," was the unexpected rejoinder.

"What do you mean?" inquired Franklyn, to whom the other's face suddenly seemed familiar.

"It was you as I drove home here on Tuesday night, the 10th of this month," said the man with conviction.

Tuesday night, the 10th? Franklyn Vavasour, though taken aback, was for a few moments entirely unsuspicious, while he endeavoured to recall that particular date to mind. Then, all of a sudden, it flashed across him that the occasion referred to was the momentous evening on which he had found the diamond star, and that the man was the driver of the hansom cab!

Franklyn flushed crimson, and with the man's eye fixed upon him he could not for the life of him deny the assertion.

"Well, what then?" he inquired, sharply.

"An unpleasant thing has happened," said the man, "a lady swears she left a brooch in my keb, and they say——"

"They! Who?" interrupted Franklyn, with a paroxysm of apprehension.

"The p'lice!"

"The police! Oh, nonsense! I mean," added Franklyn, checking himself. "What have the police got to do with it, and what has it all got to do with me?"

"Well, sir, it's this way," began the man.

"Come inside," said Franklyn, abruptly.

The police! This unpleasantly suggestive word rang in Franklyn's ears, and rendered him so nervous and uncomfortable that he felt he would rather hear what the man had to say in the privacy of his own room. He therefore led him upstairs, and during the interval he had time to recover his composure.

"Well, my man, what is it?" he inquired, briskly.

The man's story was soon told, for it had the merit of simplicity, and Franklyn's private knowledge enabled him to grasp it readily. It appeared that the owner of the brooch was convinced that she had left it stuck into the lining of the hansom cab from which she had alighted at the moment of the accident. The police had been communicated with, and the driver had been readily found. Suspicion rested upon him and upon the helper at the yard who had cleaned the cab the next morning, but each, naturally, stoutly denied the accusation. The matter was complicated, as regarded the cabman, by his having been unable to remember where he had driven his subsequent fare. He had been suspended by his employer, and for some days past he had been frantically endeavouring to refresh his memory as his only chance of rehabilitating himself.

"It come on me, sir," he said, in conclusion, "all of a flash. I was takin' a glass at the 'ouse opposite, when I seed this building—Monarch Chambers—and, by Jove! I says, says I, dash my buttons, that's it, and I'd just stepped over to make inquiries, when you came along promiscuous."

"Oh, that's it, is it?" said Franklyn, inwardly cursing his ill-luck.

"I suppose you didn't find the article, sir," said the man, confidentially.

"Certainly not," replied Franklyn, with desperation.

"I believe it's a plant, and that the lady never lost no brooch at all," grumbled the man; "least wise, not in my keb!"

"You are right, no doubt," exclaimed Franklyn, eagerly.

"Yes, sir, the p'lice think theirselves precious clever," said the man, turning to depart, "just because I'd 'ad a drop that night after the accident and couldn't remember where I'd drove you to, they think I'm a thief, but it'll be all right now."

BRANDAUER'S CIRCULAR-POINTED PENS. Neither scratch nor spurt. Glide over the roughest paper with the ease of a soft lead pencil. Assorted sample box, 7 stamps, from the Works, Birmingham.

"Stay!" exclaimed Franklyn, turning a shade paler. "What do you mean by that?"

"Well, sir, of course, I shall put 'em on to you," said the man.

"Confound it!" cried Franklyn; "I've got nothing to do with it."

"No doubt, sir; but the p'lice will make inquiries. Good day, sir," said the man.

"Ahem! My man, this is a very unpleasant affair, as you say," gasped Franklyn. "I—I don't want to be mixed up in it."

"No more didn't I, sir," said the man, doggedly.

"Really, my friend," said Franklyn, putting his hand insinuatingly into his waistcoat pocket, "you have been very badly used. But I wonder, now, whether it is absolutely necessary for you to tell them about me? You are absolutely innocent. There is nothing whatever against you."

He reluctantly produced a sovereign as he spoke, and placed it in the man's ready palm. The fellow glanced at the coin, and then lifted his eyes to Franklyn's with a very cunning and significant expression.

"I'm afraid I can't do it, sir, not at that price," he said, lowering his voice.

"How much would you—ahem—expect?" asked Franklyn, unguardedly.

"I've been suspended for more than a week. I've a living to make, and, if the p'lice will let me go, I must leave London," said the man, slowly. "If you will make it a tenner, guv'nor——"

"Stop!" exclaimed Franklyn, startled by the man's tone and manner, "you misunderstand me. I know nothing about the brooch."

'No, sir; very likely not—but——"

"Look here, my man," interposed Franklyn, frantic at having given the man cause to suspect him, "you seem to think I wish to bribe you. Why should I? It is simply that I don't want the police to come bothering here if I can help it. I'm sorry I gave you that sovereign now."

"Beg pardon, sir, but I meant no harm," said the man, evidently abashed by Franklyn's virtuous indignation, "you see how I'm placed?"

"Yes, yes," returned Franklyn, hurriedly, at the same time producing his card—"My request was thoughtless, unreasonable. Here is my card. Give it to the police. I am dining out this evening, but I shall be back at 11 o'clock. You can tell the police that."

"Very well, sir," said the man, completely humbled—"Thanking you, sir, for your kindness."

Franklyn showed the fellow out, feeling hot and cold by turns at his narrow escape of having placed himself in his power. Luckily, he had realised, just in time, the extreme foolishness of such a proceeding, and that the wisest and safest course was to brave the thing out. His hand trembled somewhat, however, as he tied his white tie that evening, nor did he particularly enjoy his dinner-party. It was disagreeable to think that he was an object of solicitude on the part of the police, and though he took the precaution to fortify himself for the interview by a few extra glasses of his host's claret, he felt a little uncomfortable, when, on returning to his chambers, he found himself confronted by an inspector in uniform.

The officer was a stout, heavy-featured individual, whose aspect was not calculated to excite alarm. He rose stolidly from his seat when Franklyn appeared, and addressed him with respectful deference.

"Beg pardon, sir," he said, gravely, "I took the liberty of calling to corroborate the story of a cab-driver, James Partlett."

"I don't know his name," said Franklyn, maintaining a very tolerable composure, "but I guess who you refer to. The man called here earlier in the evening"

"Yes, sir. Says he drove you home in his cab, a hansom, from the neighbourhood of Baker-street on the evening of the 10th," said the Inspector.

"Quite right, he did," replied Franklyn, emboldened by the fact that the Inspector was staring stolidly around the room while he spoke.

"Was he drunk, sir?"

"He says so, I suppose he ought to know," said Franklyn, feeling quite facetious, "I didn't notice him particularly. Of course, I don't want to get the man into trouble," he added magnanimously.

"It isn't that, sir," said the officer. "It is about a diamond brooch that is said to have been left in his cab. I suppose you saw nothing of it?"

"Nothing," said Franklyn, calmly. "You are welcome to search my rooms if it is your duty," he continued, laughingly.

"No occasion for that, sir. Your word is sufficient," replied the Inspector, who had probably previously satisfied himself of Franklyn's good repute. "I only wanted to verify the cabman's story."

"Will anything happen to the man?" asked Franklyn, with a little natural anxiety.

"There's no evidence against him. I expect the lady was mistaken," said the Inspector. "Good evening, sir. Sorry for having troubled you."

"Won't you take something, Inspector?" inquired Franklyn, producing the whisky decanter and a glass in the fulness of his heart.

"You're very good, sir. Your good health," said the officer, tossing off a dram.

"Supposing now that this driver had found the brooch—which I don't the least believe," said Franklyn, rather quickly, "but supposing he had, what then?"

"Six months' hard," said the Inspector, laconically.

"What! for simply finding it," exclaimed Franklyn, aghast for private reasons.

"Finding and keeping," corrected the Inspector, "unlawful possession and converting to his own use."

"I see. But it seems rather severe, doesn't it? It is not quite the same as stealing," said Franklyn, feeling rather faint.

"There ain't much difference, sir, and it is the law, anyway," replied the Inspector, with becoming gravity. "It is just a question of intention. If a person finds a thing and appropriates it to his own use, he commits a criminal offence."

"I fancy a good many people don't quite realise that, Inspector," said Franklyn, with an uneasy laugh.

"All the worse for them, sir, if ever they get found out," was the significant reply. "Good night, sir, and thank you."

(To be continued.)

ART NOTES.

As Messrs. Cassell's "Black and White" Exhibition at the Cutlers' Hall, in Warwick-lane, Newgate-street, is only open until the 7th of this month, intending visitors have no time to lose. I can promise them that they will find an interesting show, embracing drawings from many of the prominent black and white men of the day, from Mr. H. M. Paget to Mr. Caton Woodville, from Mr. C. W. Wyllie to Mr. Hatherell. Most of the drawings by the numerous popular draughtsmen represented are the originals of illustrations which have appeared in the countless books and magazines which are issued from La Belle Sauvage-yard, and they can be purchased at prices which seem to me remarkably cheap. The most expensive drawings in this Exhibition (one of them by a real R.A., Mr. J. MacWhirter) are valued at eight guineas, whilst there are sketches by the late Mr. Fred Barnard and others to be had for half-a-guinea. There are some delightful little landscapes by Mr. Alfred East; and Mr. Herbert Railton contributes some more of those architectural subjects which he is able to invest with so pleasant a spirit of poetry and romance. Admirers of Thackeray will, if I mistake not, approve of Mr. H. M. Brock's illustrations of that great novelist's ballads. For, fortunately, Mr. Brock is not only a good draughtsman, but he also has that sense of humour which is so indispensable to any artist who would satisfactorily illustrate Thackeray. Look, for instance, at the drawing made for the ballad of "The Mahogany Tree," and you will see at once that Mr. Brock is a humourist as well as an artist. Mr. H. B. Nelson's quaint drawings, in which animals are invested with the tastes and foibles of human beings, would serve admirably for the decoration of nursery walls; whilst Fairyland, so little believed in, there is reason to fear, by the century-end child, finds a sympathetic interpreter in Miss Marie Miles. For further details I have no space, but I would repeat that the exhibition as a whole is one which should not be missed by those who take an interest in the current development of "black and white" art.

Of the many visits I have paid recently to the galleries of the Fine Art Society none has afforded me more entertainment than that made to the drawings of M. Caran d'Ache, now on view at 148, New Bond-street. It has always seemed to me that Caran d'Ache as a caricaturist stands entirely alone. To say he has not the deep insight into human nature of Willette, nor the modernity of Forain, nor the ultra-realism of Steinlen, is not very much to the point. To hail him as a marvellously effective draughtsman, endowed with a never-failing fund of graphic humour, is only to give him his due. The comic swing and dash of his drawings, the humorous verve of his cartoons, are not more remarkable than the care and finish of his draughtsmanship; and having been tickled and entertained by his irresistible pictorial jokes, you can derive a purely artistic pleasure by examining the details of his sketches, where every accessory of the costumes and the mise en scène is so wonderfully accurate, so scrupulously complete. Take, as a sample of the grotesque and laughable details he can crowd into one drawing, his "Taking of Jericho" (No. 104). I venture to say that no one who looks at the Jewish Army marching so proudly round the walls of that city, headed by their delightfully Hebraic drum-major, walking backward and pompously manipulating his staff in the well-known drum-majorish manner, will be able to refrain from a protracted internal chuckle—if, indeed, his feelings do not find vent in an audible guffaw. It is, in fact, as an illustrator of the humours of military life that M. Emmanuel Poiré (for Caran d'Ache is but a nom de plume) is seen at his very best. He is as much at home with the French linesman as Rudyard Kipling is with our own Tommy Atkins, and it is not too much to say that he has done as much to popularise soldier life in France as the author of "Soldiers Three" has in this country. It was as a military painter that Caran d'Ache commenced his artistic career; and it was at the studio of M. Detaille that he first presented himself when he arrived in Paris from St. Petersburg with a portfolio of drawings under his arm to serve as his introduction. When, in due course, he served his five years in the army, he passed most of his time in drawing uniforms for the Ministry of War, an experience which has since been of the utmost value to him. But it was his drawings in the Figaro which first made him known in England, and he is, as I know to my intense satisfaction, every week still a regular contributor to that journal. All who have made his acquaintance in its pages will, I feel certain, hasten to improve it by a visit to the Fine Art Society's Galleries; and those who have not yet had the pleasure of enjoying his humour should on no account miss the present opportunity of adding to the pleasures of life by becoming acquainted with it.

MUSIC.

MORE ABOUT BOGUS "REGISTERED" TEACHERS.

A FORTNIGHT ago I printed an article upon bogus "Registered R.A.M. and R.C.M." teachers, a subject which, if I may judge from the correspondence I have received, is of enormous interest to a large number of professional musicians, particularly in the provinces, where the bogus "registered" teacher is rampant. Some of my correspondents, I am bound to say, seem very much inclined to run off the track and to enter into more or less valuable dissertations upon school examinations generally, and the proceedings of the Royal Academy and Royal College of Music in particular. The question, however, so far at any rate as I have at present discussed it, really lies in a nut-shell.

The Associated Board of the Royal Academy and Royal College have instituted a system by which teachers and schools have to be registered and to pay a fee of a guinea a year before their pupils can be examined in their own localities. Whether this hunger for stray guineas is quite worthy of the "Associated Board," who notoriously make enormous profits on their examinations, may legitimately be open to question. That the unlucky use of the word "registered" is a mistake, there unfortunately can be no question at all. The guinea subscription merely entitles provincial schoolmistresses and teachers to be placed upon the register of schools situate away from the great centres, and to examine whose pupils a special examiner must be sent from London. It clearly does not confer any diploma upon the registered school or person, for school proprietors, although usually people of business or versed in mathematics and the classics, often do not even claim to have the slightest knowledge of musical matters. It was, indeed, very largely to protect the schoolmistress who may be strong in Greek and logarithms, but weak in counterpoint; and for the defence of parents and guardians having no means of knowing whether their children are being properly taught music, that these school examinations were founded by the Associated Board.

Certain unscrupulous persons have, however, found in this very innocent system an excuse for placing after their names "Registered R.A.M. and R.C.M." As one of my correspondents very fairly puts it, "the public are led thereby to believe that the advertiser holds a diploma from these two eminent institutions which we in the musical profession know is not the case." Nobody, of course, blames the Associated Board for the fraud which has been practised upon them, and if the business arrangements of the Board had still been in the hands of the late Mr. Watson, thanks mainly to whose keenness of judgment and good sense, the Board so quickly attained to the high position it now holds in musical life, the matter would, I think, have been dealt with in a very simple, speedy, and straightforward fashion; the names of the offending parties would have been ruthlessly struck off the roll, and the obnoxious word "registered" would have been dropped altogether.

So far, however, as I am aware, the present authorities of the Associated Board have taken no step whatever in the matter, except that their hon. secretary, Mr. Samuel Aitken, has written a long and rambling epistle to the Daily Guardian of Nottingham—a town in which it seems a very brisk discussion upon this grievance has been for some little time in progress. Mr. Aitken's letter would occupy about a page of my space, and I am bound to express an opinion that the greater portion of it will not be endorsed by such sensible men of the world as Sir Charles Parry and Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the heads of the two institutions named. Mr. Aitken, in fact, offers no excuse for the muddle which this guinea "registration" has caused, nor does his letter appear to give the slightest indication that he sees any ground for a reform, the necessity for which I venture to believe his equally conscientious though more level-headed colleagues on the Associated Board will recognise as imperative and urgent. Mr. Aitken prefers, quite à propos de bottes, to attack some rival institution (which, with curious lack of courage, he does not name), saying that, during a recent visit to Australia, "I was aghast at the publication of the results of an examination which had been held there by an English body, in which out of 619 passes in all grades 254 were awarded honours." He also makes a special point of the fact that, as hon. secretary, he is unpaid. It matters nothing to the public, nor, indeed, to any one, save those by whom he is employed, whether he is paid or not. Nobody for a single moment supposes that he has acted upon mercenary, or, indeed, upon any but the most conscientious motives. Indeed, in my own rather wide experience of men and matters, I have found that honorary officers can, unwittingly, do even more harm by their lack of experience and authority than those who are paid for their labour. Still less is it to the point, though Mr. Aitken appears to think it is, that at the Royal Academy of Music instruction costs about £16 a year per pupil more than the pupil pays. If it be the fact, there must be some bad management somewhere. At the Guildhall School of Music the fees of pupils are lower than at the Royal Academy, although the teachers are certainly paid at a good deal higher rate. Yet despite occasional dippings into the school bags by peculatory clerks (a race not altogether unknown at the R.A.M.) and other little matters which need not now be discussed, the Guildhall people manage to make both ends meet; and, indeed, the fees of the pupils practically cover the whole of the expenses of the institution, less the salary of the principal. What, however, all this has to do with the silly system of the Associated Board in "registering" teachers at a guinea a head nobody, I fear, but Mr. Aitken can quite understand.

The whole point is this. Thanks to the absurd use of the word "registered" the public are given to understand by unscrupulous persons that this guinea subscription carries with it some sort of diploma or qualification. It is only in professional circles that it is known the very reverse is the fact. It is, therefore, perfectly obvious that the course to pursue is to drop the word "Registered" and to strike the offending teachers off the Associated Board's lists. If the word "Registered" is not used at all for the future, there will be no temptation to the teacher, whether at a school or in private practice, to adopt a title to which he has no sort of claim. Indeed, as it appears, there are only something like 700 schools and persons on the entire list. Even if each paid a guinea—and it is acknowledged that the fee is returned where more than twelve pupils are examined—the net income derived from this source is not sufficient to warrant the danger of foisting upon the public as "registered" teachers, a set of people who possibly may not be musicians at all. Arrangements can surely be made for the local examination of schools without this machinery of registration, or, at any rate, without the guinea imposition and the use of the word "registered." I believe, indeed, that the Associated Board have a special examination for teachers although I am not quite certain upon the point, as an application to the Associated Board for their current List of Regulations has, perhaps owing to the forgetfulness of an "hon." clerk or the neglect of some "hon." postman, not been answered. At any rate, there should be no difficulty at all in fixing upon some method which would inform the public whether a teacher is qualified or not, after due examination or some other proper test. Instead of suggesting some such course, Mr. Aitken complains bitterly that five leading musicians in Nottingham who were educated at the Royal Academy of Music do not join his precious "registered" party and pay their annual guinea. They are, I think, quite right to refuse to do so, or to risk their professional reputation by mixing themselves up with the bogus "registered" teachers. Indeed, until the combined intellects of the two institutions can devise some means of protecting bonâ-fide teachers from being confounded with these guinea bogus people, the leading musicians of the provinces would do well to avoid the undesirable repute which "registered" frauds are likely to earn. But the whole matter would seem to be a very simple one, and by the exercise of a little common sense could be easily put right.

At the opera, after the extreme activity of the first fortnight, when he produced ten works within twelve nights, Mr. Maurice Grau has been indulging in a rest. Last week, indeed, the only addition to the repertory was Boïto's "Mefistofele," which was given on Thursday for the first appearance this season of Mme. Calvé. The French prima donna has not been here for a couple of years, but since her last appearance at Covent Garden she has sung abroad in a variety of new parts, such as Ophelia in Thomas's opera, Selika in "L'Africaine," Marguerite in "Faust," and the heroine in "Mefistofele." Boïto's opera hardly suits her so well as her more dramatic rôles in "Carmen" and "La Navarraise"; and, indeed, except as to the prison scene, Margaret in "Mefistofele" has little to do save to look pretty and to sing delightfully. Whether Mme. Calvé's style has become more developed since she was last here—a fact which is insisted upon in America—remains, therefore, to be seen. M. Plançon was the protagonist—a rôle associated with the name of that great artist Signor Nanetti. On Wednesday, also, after an interlude in which Mme. Bauermeister frightened M. Edouard de Reszke out of his wits by fainting on the stage, the curtain being rung down with almost amazing alacrity, we had a new Margaret in the person of Miss Suzanne Adams. The character of Juliette, in which she made her début here, is, however, much better suited to this promising young American prima donna. On Saturday "Roméo" was again announced, but not, unfortunately, with M. Jean de Reszke, who, down to date, at any rate, has confined his appearances in London to the Wagner operas. It is hoped before he goes that he will give us an opportunity of hearing him in more vocal parts.

Next Monday we begin the three cycles of "Der Ring des Nibelungen," operas to be performed strictly in the dark, and with many another attempt to imitate Bayreuth. The nonsense about closing the doors, and not allowing anybody in or out, has, however, been put a stop to, so far, at any rate, as the subscribers are concerned. Box-holders can go in or out as they please, while the proposition to close the stall doorways has been promptly settled in the negative by the management, who have carted the doors bodily away. The great lager-beer question remains in abeyance. But a sham Bayreuth without lager-beer would be a sham indeed.

Madame Patti is back again in town, and on Thursday she appeared at the first of Messrs. Harrison's concerts at the Albert Hall. The great artist was in luxuriant voice, and apparently in the best of health. She was announced to sing three songs, but, as usual, also gave a similar number of encores. Madame Patti, next Tuesday, will make her first appearance at a miscellaneous concert at Queen's Hall at the Jubilee performance in honour of her friend and old associate, Herr Wilhelm Ganz. That popular musician settled in this country in 1848, and has therefore resided with us half a century. He was a member of the orchestra at Her Majesty's, and as a youth he frequently conducted opera for his father in Germany. Herr Ganz likewise, years ago, conducted the concerts of the new Philharmonic Society and his own orchestral concerts; but during the past few years he has devoted himself mainly to teaching at the Guildhall School of Music and elsewhere.

Dr. Dvoràk will, after all, not appear at the Philharmonic Concerts this season. No reason is assigned for his absence, so that it is assumed that it did not pay the eminent Bohemian to return during the summer. M. Moszkowski took his place at the Philharmonic Concert on Thursday, but the programme contained no novelties. There have been nearly fifty concerts during the week, but the number dropped off for Whitsuntide, and, indeed, during the whole of the present week both of the Queen's Halls have been let for the Medical and Surgical Exhibition. Among the concerts of the week may be mentioned that given by Miss Christie, when Herr Hellmesberger, a son of the famous Viennese composer, who adapted the popular Handel's "Largo," made his début as a violoncellist. He should have selected something better than a transcription of the slow movement of Spohr's violin concerto. Mrs. Julian Marshall conducted on the 24th the thirteenth annual concert of the South Hampstead orchestra. The chief item of the programme was Tschaïkowski's fifth symphony in E minor, of which a very good account was given. Mr. Eben Jackson, at a concert at Steinway Hall last week, also introduced several new ballads, and gave a first appearance to Miss Edith Kirkwood, a promising young singer, who is a granddaughter of the late General Pottinger, and has been studying for the past three years at the Berlin Conservatoire. Mr.

Farkoa; Miss Peppercorn and Mr. Antonietti (two promising young Royal Academy students, who should choose a less busy period of the year for their performances), and Mr. Chevalier, who sang at St. James's Hall on Thursday some of the most familiar of his coster and other songs, have been among the concert-givers.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—I have learned to distrust the judgment of those "friends" by whom every amateur author is besieged to print his lucubrations, and to wonder whether another pressure than that of their advice has not been the vera causa of publication. "Obliged by hunger and request of friends"—the hunger being that of an insatiable vanity. Hence I augured ill of Mr. Aubyn Trevor-Battye's "A Northern Highway of the Tsar" (1) when I came upon in its preface this time-worn apology for its appearance. For once, however, these friends have been justified, and more than justified, by the outcome of their judicious pressure, since this account of an insane expedition undertaken and carried through triumphantly "in defiance of all tradition, custom, and common sense" is most interesting reading. Not the least interesting part of the book is Mr. Trevor-Battye's opportune account of the Tsar, on whom the eyes of all England are fixed at present. Allowing due discount for "A Northern Highway of the Tsar" being dedicated by permission to His Imperial Majesty, Mr. Trevor-Battye's account of the Emperor Nicholas is reassuring.

> In his simple domestic life, in his filial treatment of his revered mother, his manly bearing towards the friends of his boyhood, no less than by his general "level-headedness" he has shown himself worthy of the great position he has been called upon to fill while still so young.

As for the Russian peasantry, their loyalty to the Tsar, according to Mr. Trevor-Battye, is so passionate and profound that it can be shaken by nothing but universal and free education, and only partially and lightly skaken even by that. At present the Russian peasant is an overgrown child "in the simplicity of his enjoyments, in his wonder at new things, in his improvidence and insouciance, in his dumb obedience to the strong arm of physical power, in his very faiths and very superstitions he is a child; he has the child's obstinacy, the child's inability to weigh conditions, and the child's want of self-control." And this, be it remembered, is the partial judgment of an enthusiastic philo-Russian. Colonel Alderson's "With the Mounted Infantry and the Mashonaland Field Force" (2) is written with much more spirit than elegance. The following sentence should be set to a Sandhurst cadet to parse:—

> Through the troublesome early days of the rising, when questions of whether this or that patrol could be sent out—questions of life and death for some, in fact—had to be decided; through the times when food was short and people said the Government (i.e., the Company) ought to feed them; settling this big or that little question in a kindly, gentlemanly manner—while he saw every one, no matter who, and listened to their story; authorising this or that expenditure—through all this the Judge steered the ship.

The Colonel, however, can wield a sword, if not a pen, brilliantly, and would have done no doubt even more execution among the natives but for their unconscionable objection to expose themselves to be slaughtered like sheep.

> Many kraals had been taken and burnt, and some 100 head of cattle captured; but I doubt if the enemy had lost many men, they took such precious good care to keep under cover!

They must, however, have been more accommodating in other engagements to judge by the proportion of killed on each side. Take, for example, the big battle in which Mr. Rhodes himself was engaged, to the breathless admiration of Colonel Alderson. "It was characteristic of the man (Rhodes) to go and risk his own life at the head of thirty Dutchmen in taking a cluster of straw huts." But what was the risk in this Armageddon? "One man, named Swart, was wounded, and some thirty rebels killed." "Si pugna est ubi tu pulsas, ego vapulo tantum." Should you be in the mood for novels I can most strongly recommend to you Mr. Vincent Brown's "Ordeal by Compassion" (3), if indeed it may be called a novel. The story is slightness itself, and is concerned with a "wastrel" who murdered his wife; but it is to the telling of it and to its teller that you owe the depth of your interest. The narrator is a quaint old bachelor uncle of the criminal, who discloses naïvely his own beautiful character in the simple but exquisite English of the narrative. Its style, indeed, is so exquisite that you find yourself wondering where an English mechanic had picked it up. "Harry gave a sigh that was like years of his life departed in a breath" is not the style of an uneducated mechanic, nor for that matter, of any but a born poet. Yet the style of "Ordeal by Compassion" does not strike you as affected, as does that of Mr. Marriott Watson's "The Heart of Miranda" (4), which seems to move with the self-conscious stiffness of Malvolio in his cross-gartered yellow-stockings, and not without his sublime self-complacency. But the stories are nearly all interesting, while some of them, "En Route," for example, are strikingly original and dramatic. Mrs. Murray Hickson's "Shadows of Life" (5) are very prettily told stories, but so dismal that they might have been the work of Miss Julia Mills in her forlornest hours. Life itself is not so bright as to make you welcome the shuddering shade of these "Shadows." As a pick-me-up after such depressing reading I should advise recourse to "Her Ladyship's Elephant" (6), which might be dramatised with "roaring" effect as a farcical comedy. The curtain, however, ought to be rung down upon a less hurried and huddled-up ending than that which disappoints you in the tale. In conclusion, I have only to apprise you of the appearance of "Pendennis" (7), in the new edition of Thackeray—an edition which derives exceptional charm and interest from Mrs. Richmond Ritchie's biographical introductions to each volume.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

P.S.—To the making of books about Mr. Gladstone there will probably be no end for many a year to come, so vast and varied is the material his long and many-sided career presents to the biographer. Already such publications, good, bad, and indifferent, are rushing from the press in a perfect torrent. To name only a few. Mr. W. T. Stead is, of course, early in the field with a "Character Sketch," the substance of which has previously appeared in various magazines and reviews; Mr. James Bowden has published a little work which, under the title of "Gladstone: the Man," deals pleasantly with non-political phases of his life; Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co. have issued a new edition of the admirable monograph that Mr. H. W. Lucy wrote in 1895 for "The Statesmen Series;" and Messrs. Routledge have brought out "A Popular Biography." More ambitious than any of these will be the "Life of Mr. Gladstone" which Sir Wemyss Reid has edited for Messrs. Cassell & Co., and which is to be published in twelve monthly parts. It is to contain many letters and documents never hitherto published, and it will be profusely illustrated.

(1) "A Northern Highway of the Tsar." By Aubyn Trevor-Battye. With Map and Illustrated by the Author. (Westminster: Archibald Constable & Co. Price 6s.)

(2) "With the Mounted Infantry and the Mashonaland Field Force." 1896. By Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel E. A. H. Alderson. With Map and Numerous Illustrations and Diagrams. (London: Methuen & Co.)

(3) "Ordeal by Compassion." By Vincent Brown. (London: John Lane. Price 3s. 6d.).

(4) "The Heart of Miranda," and other Stories, being mostly Winter Tales. By H. B. Marriott Watson. (London: John Lane. Price 6s.)

(5) "Shadows of Life." By Mrs. Murray Hickson. (London: John Lane. Price 3s. 6d.)

(6) "Her Ladyship's Elephant." By David Dwight Wells. (London: William Heinemann. Price 6s.)

(7) "The Works of William Makepeace Thackeray." With Biographical Introductions by his daughter, Mrs. Ritchie. Vol. II. "The History of Pendennis. (London: Smith, Elder, & Co. Price 6s.)

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheque and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—It was curious to see the coincidence of flags half-mast high last week for the great dead statesman with the preparations for illuminations for the Queen's Birthday. And then the Derby day in the midst of the solemn arrangements for the funeral! I suppose the sharp contrasts of life are never so clearly to be seen anywhere as in great cities. There are so many worlds represented in them. The world of politics is stirred to its depths by recent events. The thoughtful world looks on with sympathetic interest. The smart world rushes feverishly after its pleasures, resenting anything that interferes with them. The working world has but little leisure for contemplation of either the sorrows or the joys of the rest, and when it folds its newspaper after breakfast devotes itself to the great business of earning its living. A glimpse outwards from the self-centre comes with the evening paper, as the City man returns from his day's work, but his life is in £ s. d.

Almost all the various worlds are off for Whitsuntide. The Drawing-Room is now fixed for Wednesday, the 8th, a much better day than Monday. I am afraid the season is not going to be a very brilliant one. The weather has been so dreadfully naughty, you see, that all enterprise has been taken out of people. If there is a fine June, this will improve. It is remarkable how dependent we are upon the weather. After some centuries' experience of the climate, we ought to be comparatively independent of and accustomed to it. But we are not a bit!

Lilla is sending her little Pom to the Ladies' Kennel Show on June 23 and 24 at the Botanic Gardens, Regent's Park, and Ethel is going to show her lovely Russian cat. We are all going to see the dear things in their captivity. They will be visited by relays of friends during the two days. Lilla and Ethel are to tell us exactly at what hour we are to relieve each other. Is it not funny?

I heard last week that some of the little jewelled tortoises that Christabel wrote us about some months ago from Paris were to be seen at Elfrida's pretty bonnet-shop in Sloane-street. The very morning I heard it I started off full of curiosity, and found that all had been sold except one. You may fancy what a demand there was for them The one remaining had a coat of mail composed of diamonds and sapphires, and for tethering purposes a long chain of finest gold workmanship. The length of the little beastie was about an inch and a quarter. The jewelling is clipped on by means of small clasps, and has to be removed when the baby tortoise has its bath. It resides, when off duty, in a box supplied with damp moss and small lettuce leaves. The left shoulder seems to be the orthodox place for wearing this peculiar decoration. The specimen I saw was lively enough, wriggling its small black legs when turned upside down, and evidently having will enough to object to the inverted position. Its eyes were bright and staring. I wished I knew its age, and what it thinks of a mode of life so different from all its family traditions.

At Miss Frances Moore's we saw the jewelled tortoise imitated in tortoise-shell and strass on some very tempting hats, among which we particularly admired the Trelawney, resembling that worn by Miss Irene Vanbrugh, in the play at the Court Theatre; it is most becoming in shape, and not in the least exaggerated. We went with Lilla, who wanted one of their cycling toques, made entirely of straw, and consequently impervious to weather injuries. Even the aigrette is in straw, and the whole thing is as light as it is sensible, and becoming withal. Its business-like air was in strong contrast with a lovely picture hat, all black tulle and feathers. We dearly loved a lavender straw hat trimmed with long sprays of lavender, imitated just as they grow on the bush, and with a little market bunch of small pink roses in the front. There was a suggestion of rustic innocence and artlessness in it that we found extremely pleasing. Lady Teazle might have worn such a hat when first she came to town. Already sold for Ascot was a cherry-pink straw, trimmed with velvet and chiffon of the same tint. The brim was tilted very high at the left side, with a cluster of shaded roses tucked in beneath. Another bunch nestled among the folds of chiffon.

You would have admired a toque compact of turquoise tulle and black velvet, the crown having silver appliqué on net, the blue showing shyly through. A tall blue feather, held down with a bow of black velvet, composed the trimming. As you are aware, the newest hats turn up in front, and one of this shape was in yellow straw trimmed with yellow silk muslin and many bows of white glacé ribbon. A pair of yellow wings hung out at the left side in the latest phase of dishevelment, for, you must know, an air of wildness is indispensable to the correct disposal of the fashionable feather. The thing to be avoided, apparently, is any suggestion of regularity. We saw two or three attractive hats made of grey plateaux twisted up into undulations. One of these had green and brown and white feathers held in with the little imitation tortoises I told you of.

Is it not refreshing, in these days of fret and bustle and rush, to think that there are people who actually have time for knitting stockings? It gives one a feeling of repose to dwell on the idea. To reflect that there are at this moment some hundreds of quiet folk sitting in sunny rooms calmly turning the heel or finishing the toe of a stocking, is to restore one's faith in a possible leisure, lost to sight, it is true, but perhaps to be attained some day. "But how do I know," you will ask, "that there are persons so blessed as to be able to devote themselves to such a reposeful avocation?" I infer it from the fact that a little "Complete Guide to Stocking Knitting," by "Andrewetta" has reached its third edition. It is published by the Women's Printing Society, 66, Whitcomb-street, W.C. I am not qualified to judge of the aptness of the directions given, but the ready sale of the little sixpenny book seems to guarantee its excellence. I see that the authoress says in her preface that in knitting "the young find delight and the aged solace."

I know how you delight in old furniture, and I wished most heartily that you had been with me when I inspected a very interesting collection of French cabinets, suites, settees, tables, screens, and bureaux at Harrod's Stores. Many of the specimens are already sold, which is not surprising, as the prices are unusually low, offering an excellent opportunity for collectors to add to their list. There was a fine piece of tapestry, which was hung against the light, and gained much in colour and even expression by being thus "set clear" as it were. Seen with the light merely on it, instead of richly filtering through it, it was not half so effective. The most important pieces in the collection are two cabinets painted by Van Neen, the artist who taught Rubens. They were both in possession of the family of Beavis, Clyst House, Exeter, in 1766. Since then their history is clear. The highest experts have pronounced them to have been painted by Van Neen. One of them is decorated with classic subjects; the other with scenes from Old Testament history. Enlarged duplicates of most of the pictures are in the Vatican at Rome, and one, purchased about a hundred years ago, is at Grosvenor House. The bright red wood, with all this quantity of decoration, makes them very attractive, and you cannot imagine what a quantity of detail has been lavished upon them by the cabinet maker, apart from the artist. A central door opens and reveals a little pillared space, the floor of which is decorated with costly marbles, and the walls with inlaid woods. The little shaped drawers, like those of all the numerous bureaux and secrétaires in the collection, are perfectly adapted to their purpose, and open and shut with the greatest ease. There are whole suites of furniture, in Louis XV., Louis XVI., and Empire styles, the latter looking more severe than ever when in such close proximity to the more decorative periods. By means of this furniture the self-consciousness of the "Little Corporal" will be handed down through another century or two. His initial "N.," his bee, and his fleur-de-lys appear on everything.

GOWNS FOR ASCOT.—Messrs. REDFERN are now making a Special Show of Ascot Gowns in their new Conduit-street Salon. The Exhibition contains a number of exquisite Toilettes, to which a visit of inspection is cordially invited.—REDFERN, 26, Conduit-street, W.

Beautiful Gowns, both Day and Evening; Tea Gowns, Mantles, Lingerie, and Millinery, are to be seen at Madame OLIVER HOLMES', Court Dressmaker, 61, New Bond-street, London, W.

Some of the little Louis XV. bureaux are of so quaint a shape as to make them almost lovable, and I can quite imagine myself loving one of them if it were my own. That one small fact, possession, makes such a difference, does it not? One finds a charm in even ordinary things when they become one's own.

Lilla has gone to Dieppe for Whitsuntide. She loves the Casino there, and the excitement of the little horses, and her passion for riding can be gratified in long excursions round the country, to the Forêt d'Arques, to the woods of Varengeville, and the picturesque Manoir d'Ango. My own impression is that she is on the look-out for a bit of freehold about Dieppe whereon she may build a bungalow. She always says she is afraid to say anything about her plans, for there seems to be an infectiousness in them, and she does not wish to be anticipated. I wish she would build there, for she would let us hire her bungalow pretty cheap, and we love Dieppe. The air is so velvety soft, and the old town so quaint and interesting.

Princess Christian will open and preside over the annual sale at the Royal School of Art Needlework this year on June 7, 8, and 9. Admission on the first day will be, as usual, 2s. 6d., and on the following days 1s. 3d., this charge including tea. And the latter function is made so delightful that it is worth far more than an ordinary tea. The walls are hung with young beech boughs, and the gas brackets are wreathed with ivy and smilax, and there is always such delicious butter and cream. I wonder if they come from Cumberland Lodge. I hear that the arrangements are to be different from those of former years.

We have taken a little cottage by the river for a month or so, and go down to-morrow. If only Jupiter Pluvius will take a holiday like the rest of the world, we shall be happy enough. There is always an element of uncertainty, however, about a fresh house, and the first twenty-four hours spent in one are almost painfully interesting. The discoveries made are not invariably agreeable. The songs of innumerable larks and the waving boughs of freshness make up, however, for much, and, even if it rains, we shall at least have rest from the strain of constant, involuntary hearing and seeing, both of which are such a fatigue to the brain, inseparable from town life.

What different ideas of pleasure in a holiday people have! By the way, I am sure I have read and heard that remark some score of times. There is nothing original in the discovery. But just think how thousands of our fellow creatures rush about in a constant turmoil, finding enjoyment in it, when perfect rest is all that other thousands crave. The first set are the happiest, for one can always find noise and bustle, but how often can one find real rest? Lilla's mother told me the other day that the only real rest she had ever had was when she had broken her leg very badly and had to keep her room for six weeks. She read dozens of books in the six weeks and was perfectly happy. The recipe might not answer for all, though. So do not pass it on. It would rather resemble the Chinese method of obtaining roast pork. The plan consisted in burning down the house.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

DEAREST MADGE,—To those whose days are, in a way, all holidays, Whitsuntide, and every season of the kind, is more or less of a disturbance and something to grumble at. When one is doing just what one likes one does not want to do anything different. At a critical time for toilets, it becomes a positive grievance to have the shops shut for several days, though one bears it heroically, through consideration for those in whose lives holidays are the exception, not the rule. To them Whitsuntide is the best holiday time of the year. It has so many possibilities. When the weather is good it is very good; the country and the seaside offer real and healthful delights, short-lived though they be. But even a few days of sunshine, fresh air, and idleness, are, to the toilers of the world, things of beauty, which, if not joys for ever, have wonderfully lasting effects. If only the "people" would not take their pleasure so tumultuously—just as we do ourselves in our own way, for the matter of that. One can only hope that they do not feel what they look like feeling. Lookers-on see more of the game than the players, and so it may be that the holiday rush and crush seem more to us, more strenuous and terrible than they really are. One could solve the question by going and doing likewise; personal experience of, say, a popular excursion on a Bank Holiday would no doubt give an impressive lesson, which would instruct one's whole life.

Last week the usual Lawn Tennis Tournament was held in Fitzwilliam-square, and though fickle fashion did not favour the occasion, as in the halcyon days when tennis held the first place as a popular pastime, the playing was excellent, the prizes valuable, and the number of competitors great. As usual, the leading players from across the water took part in the contests. A military band discoursed music every afternoon and all the afternoon. The square was daily a gay sight, with Nature, as well as humanity, in full dress, the lilacs, and hawthorns, and laburnums being in full bloom. The first opportunity which the season has afforded for the display of light costumes, whether spring or summer ones, was fully availed of; the number of pretty faces and figures in connection with pretty dresses was remarkable enough to brings to one's mind forcibly the tradition of Irish beauty, which is amongst the most harmless and charming of our traditions; though, probably, the mothers of eligible sons would not always agree in the harmlessness. The dollars of American heiresses have not carried off more "partis" than the beauty—generally penniless—of Irish maidens.

No Viceregal patronage was extended to the Tennis Tournament this year, which was rather unkind. Every Lord-Lieutenant, until Lord Cadogan's time, used to attend it in state. With him we have the feeling more and more each year that his heart is not in the duties of his Viceregal state. In the variety of parts which he is called on to play, the English nobleman predominates over the Irish Viceroy. What a pity that in all the legislation our country is favoured with our viceregal institution is not brought more into touch with common sense. Could any Lord-Lieutenant help getting "mixed" in all the parts he has to play?

At the end of this month the flitting from Dublin becomes general; to the country, the seaside, and across the Channel. Especially the latter, for with every year the attractions of the great capital of the Kingdom seem to draw us to it more and more. In fact, every one who possibly can goes every year to London for some weeks, or months, as the case may be. When not for Society, for the theatres, the pictures, the shops, and, last not least, the study of life at high pressure. If only you Londoners would reciprocate, and come to us for peace and quiet! Perhaps you may think that these things are not the special products of our country. But the unexpected always happens, and many who come here for excitement find themselves, to their surprise, in a Sleepy Hollow. Even the torchlight procession to celebrate '98, which took place one night last week, was conducted most peaceably. The authorities are wise enough now to let national feeling have open expression in marching and singing. Don't you know the relief of a good outbreak against a person with whom one is angry? How quickly anger dies out after it, whereas if pent up it goes on smouldering. It is the same way with national feeling in Ireland—it only grows dangerous if suppressed.—Yours, ever,

CLARE.

Here, by the way, are a few recipes for you. Be sure to let me know how you like the results of having them tried.

This is a delicious sauté of young pigeons:—

Halve the pigeons and fry them briskly with a minced shalot

STOUTNESS.—Well-cut Corsets and a supporting Belt are the most effective means of toning down a redundancy of tissue.—Apply to Mesdames SYKES, JOSEPHINE, & Co., The Celebrated Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-st., Oxford-circus, London.

"MADGE'S" advice for smart and original Shirts, Blouses, Veils, Hosiery, Gloves, &c., "LEE, of Wigmore-street, has no equal."

and 2 oz. of butter in a stewpan, sprinkle them with flour, toss them over the fire until the flour is slightly brown, then add a slice of bacon, finely minced, cover all again till the bacon is done, then put in the livers of the birds, salt, pepper, a little lemon juice, a blade of mace, a tablespoonful of thick tomato purée, and stock to cover the whole. Bring it to the boil and simmer it until the pigeons are tender. Serve it with boiled rice in a separate dish.

This dish is called "Polish sraszy." It is really excellent:—

Cut and trim some fillets of beef about ¾ in. thick. Sauté them quickly with hot butter in a stewpan, seasoning them with salt, pepper, and a pinch of pounded cloves. Meanwhile a minced Spanish onion and a clove of garlic should be steamed with an ounce of butter in a separate stewpan until done, but not brown. Then add the onion to the browned steak, cover the pan, and allow them to steam until the steaks are done, basting frequently with their own liquor, and adding a little stock as it dries away. When the meat is quite done pour off the gravy, remove the fat, and thicken it with a little potato flour, boil up and return it to the meat. Serve the fillets garnished with crisp slices of fried potato.

This is a new entrée of veal and cucumber:—

Cut 6 cutlets from a nice piece of fillet of veal, about ¾ of an inch thick and three inches in diameter. Lard them through with strips of fat bacon, wrap each one in a thin slice of bacon, put them into a stewpan with a blade of mace, 6 peppercorns, an onion, a piece of carrot, and a bouquet of herbs. Cover with stock, bring slowly to the boil, place the stewpan in the oven to simmer very slowly for two hours, than place the stewpan in the larder until cold. After which, drain the cutlets free from moisture, trim them, egg, bread crumb, and fry them in hot salad oil. Arrange the cutlets in a circle on a border of forcemeat. Meanwhile, cut an equal number of scollops of cucumber in thick slices, slantways (this will make them longer), pare, and remove seeds with a round cutter. Blanch the cucumber in salted boiling water for ten minutes, drain the scollops on a cloth, and place them on a buttered santèpan. Fill the centre, from which the seeds were taken, with forcemeat that is made with the trimmings of veal, sprinkle with chopped truffle, cover with a greased paper, moisten with a little boiling stock, and cook them in a gentle oven until the forcemeat is set. Arrange the scollops between the veal cutlets, pour tomato round, and garnish the centre with small scollops of boiled cucumber and points of asparagus.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

DIAMONDS OR OLD SILVER
For PRESENTS.
SPINK & SON

SPOONS AND FORKS 2/11 oz. BELOW STORE PRICES.
17 & 18, Piccadilly, W.
AND AT
1 AND 2, GRACECHURCH STREET, CORNHILL, E.C. Est. 1772.

"SANITAS EMBROCATION."
For Aches, Pains, Sprains, Strains, Bruises, Stiffness, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, and for Veterinary purposes.

"I have little doubt that 'Sanitas Embrocation' will come into prominent favour as a table requisite and for various other purposes, human and veterinary." (Prof.) WOODROFFE HILL, F.R.C.V.S.

In Bottles, 8d., 1s., and 2s. 6d. Of all Chemists, Stores, and
THE SANITAS CO., LIMITED, BETHNAL GREEN, E.

THE MANUFACTURING
GOLDSMITHS' & SILVERSMITHS' COMPANY,
Show Rooms: 112 REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.,
invite inspection of their magnificent Stock of
DIAMOND & GEM ORNAMENTS,
containing special and exclusive Designs which cannot be obtained elsewhere. Each Article is mounted by the Company from their carefully selected Stock of Loose Stones, and is guaranteed to be absolutely perfect. All Goods are marked in Plain Figures and sold DIRECT to the Public at MERCHANTS' NET CASH PRICES, thus saving Purchasers all intermediate profits.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.
SELECTIONS FORWARDED ON APPROVAL.
DIAMONDS. DIAMONDS. DIAMONDS.
DIAMONDS. DIAMONDS. DIAMONDS.
Goldsmiths' Company, 112 Regent Street, W.

CHUBB'S SAFES
WEST END BRANCH:
68, St. James's Street, S.W.
HEAD OFFICE:
128, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.
PRICE LISTS POST FREE.

A Feature of the Metropolis. SPIERS & POND's
CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly Circus, London, W.
EAST ROOM. Finest Cuisine, unsurpassed by the most renowned Parisian Restaurants. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, à la carte and prix fixe. Viennese Band.
GRAND HALL. Musical Dinner 3/6 per head. Accompanied by the Imperial Austrian Band.
WEST ROOM. Academy Luncheon 2/6 Diner Parisien 5/-, during both of which the renowned Mandolin Quartette performs.
BUFFET & GRILL ROOM. Quick service à la carte and moderate prices. Joints in each room fresh from the Spit every half-hour.
AMERICAN BAR. Service of special American Dishes, Grills, &c.
Splendid Suites of Rooms for Military and other Dinners.

TRELOAR'S ORIENTAL CARPETS

TURKEY, PERSIAN, & INDIAN CARPETS, DAGHESTAN RUGS, &c., ANTIQUE CARPETS AND RUGS.

Illustrations of Turkey Carpets sent free on Application.

TURKEY CARPETS have lately been supplied by

TRELOAR & SONS

to the following Institutions, &c.:—

The CONSERVATIVE CLUB, St. James's Street.
The UNITED SERVICE CLUB, Pall Mall.
The ROYAL MARINES, Chatham.
The FRENCH HOSPITAL, Victoria Park.
The LAW SOCIETY CLUB, Chancery Lane.
The ROYAL MARINES, Devonport.
The 2nd ROYAL WILTS REGIMENT, Portsmouth.
The 4th BATTALION KING'S ROYAL RIFLES, Aldershot.
The ROYAL MARINE ARTILLERY, Eastney.
The ROYAL MARINES, Gosport.

If favoured with inquiries we will quote price and forward on approbation any Carpets or Rugs upon receipt of reference or remittance.

TRELOAR & SONS,

68, 69, & 70, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

USERS OF THE

ELECTRIC LIGHT

SHOULD SEE THAT THEIR

ELECTRIC LAMPS

BEAR THE WORLD-RENOWNED TRADE MARK

EDISWAN

EFFICIENCY ECONOMY

The Best and Cheapest in the End.
Sold by the Principal Contractors, Stores, &c.
Head Office: Ediswan-buildings, Queen-street, E.C.

DURING SUMMER

You should never be without a bottle of

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR,

Which cools and refreshes the face and hands, removes Freckles, Tan, Sunburn, Redness and Roughness; heals and cures Irritation, Eruptions; it imparts a radiant beauty to the Complexion, and arrays the face, neck, and arms in matchless whiteness, unobtainable by any other means. Bottles, 2s. 3d. and 4s. 6d.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO

is of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and giving a pleasant fragrance to the breath; it eradicates tartar from the teeth, prevents and arrests decay, and polishes and preserves the enamel, to which it imparts a pearl-like whiteness. 2/9.

Ask Stores and Chemists for ROWLAND'S Articles.

HAMPTON & SONS LD

A Special Exhibition of TWO VERY REMARKABLE COLLECTIONS of Old Furniture & Old Embroideries

Is NOW BEING HELD in HAMPTON & SONS' New Galleries for Antiques. The first is a collection of rare Examples of very FINE OLD SATINWOOD FURNITURE.

The Second Collection consists of a most extensive assortment of beautiful and valuable

Old Embroideries, Brocades, Velvets & Laces

disposed of privately at a great sacrifice direct to Hampton & Sons by a LADY COLLECTOR AT SEVILLE.

On View Daily 9 till 6.30. All articles marked in plain figures at lowest commercial prices.

PALL MALL EAST, TRAFALGAR SQUARE, S.W.

FOOT'S PATENT TRUNKS

THE TRAVELLERS' DELIGHT.

EVERYTHING AT HAND WHEN WANTED.

A perfected system of sliding drawers, which renders every part of Trunk equally accessible, and enables any article to be instantly removed without disturbing remainder of contents. Avoids confusion, saves time, prevents articles being crushed. Drawers divided and made any depth to suit requirements.

Made various sizes in Compressed Cane, Wood Fibre, &c.

Prices from 40s.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.

T. J. FOOT & SON, 171, New Bond St., London, W.

THE PATENT "RIGID-CURVE" STROP.

FOR THE HOLLOW GROUND RAZOR.

An indispensable addition to the dressing-bag of military men, clergymen, barristers, actors, men of business, and all whose professions render close, rapid, and repeated shaving a necessity. This Strop is quite different to all others, men to whom easy shaving is a boon are astonished at the solid comfort to be got out of shaving with a razor sharpened on the "Rigid-Curve," a Strop which invariably produces a keener edge than has hitherto been possible by any known means.

Price 3s. 6d., carriage paid. Money returned any time within a month if not approved.

A. HOWARTH, 53, Penn-road, Wolverhampton.

NEW BOOKS.

Square Crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, price 6s.

A MIDDY'S RECOLLECTIONS,

1853 to 1860. By Rear-Admiral the Hon. VICTOR A. MONTAGU.

"The book is full of good things from beginning to end."—The Army and Navy Gazette.

"Delightfully frank and breezy, and is one which will be eagerly read."—Whitehall Review.

"Such a varied experience has fallen to the lot of but few of our naval commanders."—Glasgow Daily Mail.

"It says a good deal for Admiral Montagu's memory that he has been able to reproduce his impressions of nearly forty years ago so clearly and pleasantly."—Daily Chronicle.

"They are written in a fine, racy, unconventional style, and the author in places, especially when he writes of the fights he has gone through, shows considerable descriptive power."—Aberdeen Free Press.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

ARISTOCRACY AND EVOLUTION.

By W. H. MALLOCK.

"With the main idea of this work, which is quite the most important that Mr. Mallock has yet produced, we do not think there can be any dispute, though most of the active sociologists in England either ignore that idea or are openly hostile to it."—Spectator.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

HIS GRACE O' THE GUNNE.

By I. HOOPER.

"Well told and full of excitement."—Academy.

"Really a clever, entertaining volume. . . . . No common piece of work. —The Athenæum.

In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

THE STORY OF GLADSTONE'S

LIFE. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Containing 45 Illustrations, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods.

"This is a charmingly written sketch of Mr. Gladstone's public career, with some interesting glimpses at the same time into his private life." — The Observer.

In crown 8vo, 864 pages, price 3s. 6d. net.

WHO'S WHO, 1898.

"This is undoubtedly the handiest biographical dictionary and compendium of information, referring to prominent persons and their doings, in existence."—Nature.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho-square, London.

"Mr. Hornung, in his fine story, 'Young Blood,' deserves no little praise. Indeed, his portrait of Gordon Lowndes is nothing less than masterly. . . . The book is quite as interesting as its characters, and I can warmly recommend it to you as one of the cleverest novels of the season."—Truth.

YOUNG BLOOD

BY

E. W. HORNUNG,

Author of "My Lord Duke," &c.,

Is Now Ready, Price 6s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Ltd., London, and all Booksellers.

SPECTRE GOLD

BY

HEADON HILL,

Author of "By a Hairsbreadth,"

Is Now Ready, Price 6s.

"A very pretty plot. . . . Every page has its own adventure, its own hair-breadth escape, and the man who reads this tale in his own arm-chair is enabled to enjoy the excitement of a journey to Klondike."—Speaker.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Ltd., London, and all Booksellers.

WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS' NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THIS DAY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE ADVENTURES OF THE COMTE DE LA MUETTE DURING THE REIGN OF TERROR. | Author of "The Mill of Silence," "The Lake of Wine," &c. Crown 8vo, 6/- | BY BERNARD CAPES.

MR. STEEVENS' NEW BOOK.

EGYPT IN 1898.

By G. W. STEEVENS, Author of "The Land of the Dollar," "With the Conquering Turk," &c. With illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND LIBRARIES.

A WIDOW'S TALE, AND OTHER STORIES. | With Introductory Note by J. M. BARRIE, Crown 8vo., 6/- | BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND LIBRARIES.

CASTLEBRAES.
CASTLEBRAES.
CASTLEBRAES.

Drawn from "THE TINLIE MSS." by JAMES PATON, B.A., Editor of "John G. Paton: An Autobiography," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 992.——JUNE, 1898.——2s. 6d.

AMONG THE YOUNG LIONS.
JOHN SPLENDID: The Tale of a Poor Gentleman, and the Little Wars of Lorn. By Neil Munro. Chaps. XXV.-XXVIII.
A SOLDIER OF THE FRONTIER: COKE OF COKE'S RIFLES.
A NEW SCHOOL.
AN EXPERIMENT IN COLONISATION. By Robert C. Witt.
THE CASE OF MR. DOUGHTY. By David Hannay.
ADVENTURES OF THE COMTE DE LA MUETTE.—Conclusion. By Bernard Capes.
THE LEE-METFORD RIFLE. By Major W. Broadfoot.
SIR WILLIAM FRASER, K.C.B.
ANDRÉ CHÉNIER. By J. C. Bailey.
THE LOOKER-ON.—Mr. Gladstone—Looking West — Mr. Chamberlain's Proclamation—The Imperative Policy of Armament—The Sacrifice to the Tobacco Trade described—The Bishops and their two priestly Priests—The Stage and its Critics—Mr. Shaw's Unpleasant Plays.
THE YELLOW PERIL.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh, and London.

MISS BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL.

Just Published, 1 vol., 6s.

ROUGH JUSTICE.

The World says: "Miss Braddon needed some courage to portray such a man, not driven into so dark a crime by a sudden impulse, but carefully nursing his purpose to commit it, and accomplishing that purpose with equal cunning and coolness, and yet to dispense him from visible punishment without shocking the moral sense of her readers. She possessed that courage, and has justified its manifestation."

SIMPKIN & CO., LTD., and all Booksellers.

New Series. Price One Shilling.

THE ARGOSY

for JUNE contains:—

Colonel Fane's Secret. By Sydney Hodges. Chaps. XIX.-XXII.—The Marquis of Worcester and his "Century of Inventions." By E. Beresford Chancellor.—The Glove. By M. A. M. Marks.—Brother Boldero's Carriage. By G. B. Stuart.—In the Night-Watches. By Charles W. Wood, F.R.G.S.—Stratford's Love Story. By Sydney C. Grier.—The Bordering Land. By P. W. Roose.—Miss Latimer's Lover. By Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler.—How I Reared the Aylesburys. By Mary Grace Wightwick.—Some Old Clothes in Nature. By G. Clarke Nuttall, B.Sc.—Margaret. By R. Bourne, &c., &c., &c., Profusely and Beautifully Illustrated.

London: R. BENTLEY & SON, 8, New Burlington-street, W.

JUST ISSUED.

THE TEMPLE (London), containing Twelve Artist's Proof Etchings by PERCY THOMAS, R.P.E., and Introductory Notes, &c., by the Master of the Temple (Rev. CANON AINGER).—FROST & REED, 47, Queen's-road, and 8, Clare-street, Bristol; or all Booksellers and Fine Art Dealers.

ON THE STŒCHIOLOGICAL CURE OF

CONSUMPTION,

ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, INFLUENZA, AND ALL THROAT AND LUNG COMPLAINTS.

By JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.

One Shilling, Post Free.

T. BURLEIGH, LATE DAVID STOTT, 370, OXFORD STREET.

Post free, 1s. 1d.

EXHAUSTION AND PREMATURE DECLINE IN MAN. A treatise on the restorative effects of Electrolysis.

HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand, London.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. An Illustrated Treatise based on the special practice and observation of the last 15 years. Price 3s. 6d.; post free, 3s. 3d.

London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

TO THOSE ABOUT TO GO,
TO THOSE WHO INTEND TO GO,
TO THOSE WHO NEVER WISH TO GO,
READ

To Klondyke and Back.

A Journey Down the Yukon from Its Source to Its Mouth.
BY
J. H. E. SECRETAN, C.E.,
OF OTTAWA.
WITH HINTS TO INTENDING PROSPECTORS.
NOW READY, in 1 vol., large crown 8vo, with Twenty-four Illustrations, price 6s.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 13, Great Marlborough Street.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY
No. 256.—JUNE, 1898.

'Splendid Isolation,' or What? By HENRY M. STANLEY, M.P.
Our Urgent Need of a Reserve of Wheat. By R. B. MARSTON. (With a Plan).
Lord Salisbury's Score in China. By HOLT S. HALLETT.
The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. By R. T. THOMSON.
The Difficulties and the Limits of Co-operation. By the Right Hon. LORD BRASSEY.
On Style in English Prose. By FREDERIC HARRISON.
Breach of Church Law: its Danger and its Remedy. By the Right Rev. BISHOP BARRY.
The Catholicism of the British Army. By Captain PHILIP TREVOR.
'Why Vegetarian?'—A Reply to Critics. By SIR HENRY THOMPSON, F.R.C.S.
Wanted—an Opera. By J. A. FULLER MAITLAND.
Death and Torture under Chloroform. By MRS. R. M. KING.
The Microbe in Agriculture. By C. M. AIKMAN, D.Sc.
The First Woman's Hospital in Morocco. By the COUNTESS OF MEATH.
Fighting the Bubonic Plague in India. By MISS MARION HUNTER (Late Plague Medical Officer, Poona).
Among the Elephants. By J. D. REES, C.I.E.
The Fine-Art of Living. By SIR MARTIN CONWAY.
Mr. Gladstone as a Contributor to the 'Nineteenth Century.' By the EDITOR.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., Ltd.

SCHENK'S THEORY.
THE DETERMINATION OF SEX
The Authorised English Translation—under the supervision of a London Physician—of PROFESSOR SCHENK'S TREATISE, which Expounds and Illustrates the theory of his famous discovery.

At all Booksellers, price 5s., or post free, 5s. 4d. (postal order), from THE WERNER COMPANY, 13a, Cockspur-street, London, S.W

SMITH, ELDER, & CO.'S LIST.

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD'S
NEW NOVEL.
ON JUNE 10TH WILL BE PUBLISHED, CROWN 8VO, 6s.
HELBECK OF BANNISDALE.
By MRS. HUMPHRY WARD.
Author of "Robert Elsmere," "Marcella," "Sir George Tressady," &c.

On JUNE 8th. With Frontispiece. Demy 8vo, 16s.
COLLECTIONS & RECOLLECTIONS.
By "ONE WHO HAS KEPT A DIARY."

A VOLUME OF VERSE BY CONAN DOYLE.
On JUNE 8th. Small crown 8vo, 5s.
SONGS OF ACTION.
By CONAN DOYLE.

FOURTH EDITION OF "DEBORAH OF TOD'S."
Now Ready. 4th Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.
DEBORAH OF TOD'S.
By MRS. HENRY DE LA PASTURE, Author of "A Toy Tragedy," "The Little Squire," &c.
From the TIMES:—"The character drawing of the whole dramatis personæ is indeed excellent. But Deborah stands out from them all, a noble woman. . . There have been few novels lately that surpass 'Deborah of Tod's."

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place.

1/— (BY POST, 1/2½.) 1/—
QUEER STORIES
—FROM—
"TRUTH."
"TRUTH" PUBLISHING OFFICE,
10, BOLT COURT, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.
For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, & SPANISH BOOKS.
TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.
SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS NOW OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.
A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 PAGES) SENT GRATIS AND POST FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.
The List contains Popular Works in Travel, Sport, History, Biography, Science, and Fiction. Also New and Surplus Copies of French, German, Italian, and Spanish Books.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED,
30—34, NEW OXFORD ST.; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C.
LONDON; AND AT BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

12 GUINEA NORWAY CRUISES from NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE—FORTNIGHTLY.

"MIDNIGHT SUN," 3,178 Tons, 3,500 H.P.

Finest YACHTING STEAMER afloat. NO UPPER BERTHS.
Sailings:—May 28; June 11, 25; July 9, 23; and August 6, 20.
Special Cruises, September 3rd and 17th.
Fares from 12 Guineas, including first-class table.

For itinerary, &c., apply to the PASSENGER AGENT, ALBION S.S. Co., Ltd., Mercantile Chambers, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

DENMARK. NORWAY. SWEDEN.

VIA

HARWICH and ESBJERG.

By the Steamers of the U.S.S. Co. of Copenhagen, thrice weekly.

Apply to TEGNER, PRICE, & CO., 107, Fenchurch-street, London; or the Continental Manager, Liverpool-st. Station, E.C.

ROYAL MAIL ROUTE

TO

HOLLAND,

Via HARWICH and the HOOK, DAILY (SUNDAYS INCLUDED).

Quickest Route to HOLLAND. Cheapest to GERMANY.
Improved Service to NORWAY, DENMARK, and SWEDEN.

Send post-card to the Continental Manager, Great Eastern Railway, Liverpool Street Station, E.C., for descriptive illustrated Time Book (free).

LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

COLLECTION, CONVEYANCE, AND DELIVERY
OF
PASSENGERS' LUGGAGE IN ADVANCE.

The Personal Luggage of Passengers will, on application, be COLLECTED, FORWARDED IN ADVANCE, AND DELIVERED at residence or hotel in North Wales, the English Lake District, Blackpool, Morecambe, and other Tourist Resorts at the NOMINAL CHARGE OF 6d. PER PACKAGE,
which must be paid when the luggage is collected. No package must exceed 112 lbs. in weight.

Tickets dated beforehand to suit the convenience of passengers can be obtained at any of the Company's Stations and at the Receiving Offices, where also orders can be given for Collection of Luggage.

By availing themselves of this arrangement, passengers will be relieved of the trouble and inconvenience of looking after their luggage when travelling. In cases where apartments at destination have not been secured beforehand, the luggage can be addressed, "To be called for," at the Cloak Room of the arrival station.

FRED. HARRISON, General Manager.

NORWAY AND BALTIC CRUISES.

The S.Y. VICTORIA sails JULY 2nd, for 25 days, to NORTH CAPE and NORWEGIAN FIORDS.
To be followed by other cruises on July 30th, and August 18th.
The only modern pleasure cruiser with large airy cabins.

For particulars, apply Manager, 4, Regent-street; GRINDLAY & CO., 55, Parliament-street; or any of THOS. COOK & SONS' Offices.

GAZE'S UNIVERSAL TOURS.

DIRECT TRAVEL and Circular Tours. Tickets issued in advance throughout Great Britain, the Continent, and America.
HOTEL COUPONS for 1,000 Hotels.
CONDUCTED TOURS, Paris, Belgium, The Rhine, Switzerland, &c.
PLEASURE CRUISES: Scotland, Norway, &c.
BAGGAGE, Forwarding and Insurance.

GAZE'S TOURIST GAZETTE, Monthly, gives Summary of all Arrangements and facilities.

HENRY GAZE & SONS, Ltd.,
142, STRAND; 18, WESTBOURNE GROVE; and PICCADILLY CIRCUS,
London.

JAPAN, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, HONOLULU, FIJI, NEW ZEALAND, and ROUND THE WORLD.
CANADIAN PACIFIC ROUTE,

For berths or descriptive pamphlets, apply CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, or 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square, S.W.

SIX GUINEAS.—GENEVA TOUR, nine days, extensions to Chamounix (Mont Blanc), Zermatt (Matterhorn), St. Gothard, Oberland, &c. Lecturers, Sir Robert Ball, Mr. Edward Whymper, Dr. Lunn. Departures weekly from May 10.—Details from Secretary, 5, Endsleigh-gardens, Euston, N.W.; 32, Piccadilly, W.; 47, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.; 3, Charing-cross, S.W.

HOLIDAYS ABROAD.

DIEPPE.

AN IDEAL SEASIDE RESORT FOR ENGLISH VISITORS.
ONLY FIVE HOURS FROM LONDON.

Two English Churches. Superb cycling roads. Excellent Golf Links (Sunday play). Best Casino in Europe (June to October). Dancing, &c.
Information free from L. BRAU, 140, Grand Rue, Dieppe, France.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

TATTERSALL'S THURSDAYS' SALES at ALBERT GATE.

Messrs. TATTERSALL beg to give notice that their THURSDAYS' SALES have commenced, and will be continued during the season.
SALES ON MONDAYS AND THURSDAYS.

A COMMANDING BUILDING, suitable for Club, Hotel, Restaurant, Theatre, Music Hall, Stores, Flats, Religious or Philanthropic Institution, or for Commercial Firms requiring large space. — OXFORD MANSION, Oxford Circus, London, W.—To be SOLD by TENDER, on 30th JUNE next, this well-known BUILDING, of striking elevation and fireproof construction, standing on nearly ¼ acre, with four frontages of 100 feet, each within a few yards of the new Oxford Circus Station of the Central London Railway. Six stories; floor space about 54,700 sup. feet; 153 rooms and large central hall and basement; artesian well. Portland lease 58 years.—For particulars and forms of Tender, apply to LEGGATT, RUBINSTEIN, & CO., Solicitors, 5, Raymond-buildings, Gray's Inn, London, W.C.

GREAT CUMBERLAND-PLACE, W., View of Parks, handsomely furnished, TO BE LET for season, nine bedrooms, four reception-rooms, stabling, five stalls, double coach-house. Rent, 30 guineas per week.—The BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY, 83, Ebury-street.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS sent gratis, with full particulars, Schools also recommended.—Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 (Gerrard).

ORIENT COMPANY'S PLEASURE CRUISE

by their

Steamship "LUSITANIA," 3,912 tons register.

From London 15th June, Leith 17th June.
To the finest FIORDS in NORWAY
and the NORTH CAPE (for Midnight Sun),
arriving back in London 11th July.
Other Cruises to follow.

High-class Cuisine, String Band, Electric Light, &c.

Managers { F. GREEN & CO. / ANDERSON, ANDERSON, & CO. } Head Offices: Fenchurch-avenue.

For passage apply to the latter firm at 5, Fenchurch-avenue, London, E.C.; or to the West End Branch Office, 16, Cockspur-street, S.W.

HOSPITALS & APPEALS.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL, Holloway. VERY POOR and DEPENDENT ENTIRELY UPON VOLUNTARY SUPPORT.

PATIENTS ADMITTED FREE, sickness and poverty the only qualifications for relief.

£10,000 needed annually to support the work of relieving 1,500 in-patients and 25,000 out-patients.

LEWIS H. GLENTON KERR, Secretary.

METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL SUNDAY FUND.—Patron, Her Majesty the QUEEN. Vice-Patron, H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES HOSPITAL SUNDAY, 12th June, 1898. Clergymen and Ministers of Religion who have not received the Official Posting Bills, &c., by Friday, the 3rd June, are requested to make their wants immediately known to the Secretary, Mr. HENRY N. CUSTANCE, at the Mansion House, E.C.

A REMARKABLE PIPE! Why? Because

The "MASTA" Pipe

Absolutely carries out what is claimed for it—viz., Simplicity of Construction, Perfect Freedom from Nicotine, No Choking, Cool, Dry, Sweet, Clean, & Healthful Smoking.

Prices from 1/6, 2/6, 3/6. Your Tobacconist will supply it. If any delay, write The "Masta" Patent Pipe Co., 153, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Rev. WALTER D. D. MACLAGAN, The Vicarage, Grosmont, Yorks, April 1st, 1898:—"As far as my experience goes your pipe is absolutely the driest and simplest one on the market. I am telling all my friends about the "Masta."

AMUSEMENTS.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

THE QUEEN'S DIAMOND JUBILEE PRESENTS,
On view from 1 p.m. to 11 p.m.
CONCERTS DAILY.
AFTERNOON CONCERTS, 4 p.m. to 6 p.m.
EVENING CONCERTS, 8.45 p.m. to 10.45 p.m.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—The CONCERT ORCHESTRA FROM THE THEATRE LA SCALA, MILAN, CONSISTING OF SIXTY-EIGHT PERFORMERS. DIRECTOR, SIGNOR LEANDRO CAMPANARI.
IN INCLEMENT WEATHER THE CONCERT ORCHESTRA WILL PLAY IN THE GREAT HALL.

Communication by Train and Omnibus to South Kensington throughout the day. Covered way communication with the South Kensington Subway.

Admission 1s., from 1 p.m. to 11 p.m., except Wednesdays (Fellows' Day), when admission is by ticket only, to be obtained from Fellows.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—COLLECTIONS of PRODUCTS from ALL PARTS of the EMPIRE. Open free to the public from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.
Dinners (at 5s. and 7s. 6d., or à la Carte) from 6.30 p.m. Luncheons, &c. Orders addressed to Superintendent, Catering Syndicate, Imperial Institute. Telephone No. 623 Kensington.

ROYAL SCHOOL OF ART NEEDLEWORK, Exhibition-road, South Kensington. Patron, THE QUEEN.
The 27th ANNUAL SUMMER SALE will be held on JUNE 7th, 8th, and 9th.
H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN will Open the Sale and Preside.
Admission—First day, 2s. 6d.; second and third days, 1s. The Sale will open at 3 and close at 7 p.m.

OPERA and THEATRE TICKETS.—Boxes, Stalls, Dress Circle, and Upper Circle in good positions for "The Opera," and every Theatre in London, also Seats for the Military Tournament, can be had at any office of the DISTRICT MESSENGER AND THEATRE TICKET COMPANY. Branches City and West-end. Letters and telegrams to 193, Piccadilly, next to Prince's Hall.

AMUSEMENTS.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Sole Lessee, Mr. Frederick Harrison.
Managers, Mr. Frederick Harrison and Mr. Cyril Maude.
EVERY EVENING (except on Saturdays), at 8.30,
THE LITTLE MINISTER, by J. M. Barrie.
Miss WINIFRED EMERY and Mr. CYRIL MAUDE.
MATINEES EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.30.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.
RICHTER CONCERTS. June 4th, at 3.
(Under the Direction of Mr. N. Vert).
Conductor—Dr. HANS RICHTER.
SECOND CONCERT, SATURDAY AFTERNOON next, at 3.
Overture to Grillparzer's Drama, "Des Meeres und der Liebe Wellen." ..... Robert Fuchs.
(First time at these Concerts.)
Wanderer Fantasie / Rhapsodie Espagnol } For Pianoforte and Orchestra. } Schubert-Liszt. / Liszt.
Solo Pianoforte—M. Busoni.
Suite, "Casse Noisette" ("Nut-cracker") ..... Tschalkowsky.
(First time at these Concerts).
Vospiel, "Parsifal," ..... Wagner.
Symphony, E minor, "From the New World," ..... Dvorak.
Tickets, 15s., 10s. 6d., 5s., and 2s. 6d.; of usual Agents; Newman, Queen's Hall; Tree, St. James's Hall, and 304, Regent-street.—N. Vert, 6, Cork-street, W.

QUEEN'S HALL.
MR. WILHELM GANZ'S
JUBILEE CONCERT
(Under the direction of Mr. N. Vert),
TUESDAY NEXT, June 7, at 2.30.
The following Artistes have kindly promised to assist:
Madame ADELINA PATTI.

Mdlle. Marie Engle.	Mr. Edward Lloyd.
Madame Blanche Marchesi.	Mr Ben Davies.
Miss Clara Butt.	Mr. Santley.
Madame Alice Gomez.	Signor Ancona.
Madame Belle Cole.	Mr. Kennerley Rumford.
Miss Ada Crossley.	Mr. Charles Ganz.
Miss Georgina Ganz.	Mr. Johannes Wolff.
Mdlle. Giulia Ravogli.	M. Hollman.
Mdlle. Sofia Ravogli.

Miss Mary Moore and Mr. Charles Wyndham.
Mr. George Grossmith.
Miss Winifred Emery and Mr. Cyril Maude.
Conductors—MM. Randegger, Kuhe, Sewell, Bendall, and Ganz.
Tickets, £1 1s., 10s. 6d. (only a few left), of Mr. Ganz, 126, Harley-street; usual Agents; Newman, Queen's Hall; Tree's Offices; and N. Vert, 6, Cork-street, W.

QUEEN'S HALL.
SUNDAY AFTERNOON CONCERTS.
EVERY SUNDAY, at 3.30.
Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood.
The Queen's Hall Grand Orchestra.
Admission free. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 1s., and 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE. — The FIREWORK SEASON has COMMENCED. Magnificent display every THURSDAY, at 9, by Messrs. C. T. Brock & Co.

International Universal Exhibition.

EARL'S COURT, S.W., 1898.
IMRE KIRALFY, Director-General.
Season Tickets, 10s. 6d.,
Can be obtained at the Exhibition and Libraries.
Admission Daily, 1s.
Open 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.
BAND of the 1st GRENADIER GUARDS.
BAND of the HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.
The LONDON EXHIBITIONS ORCHESTRAL BAND.
THE EMPRESS THEATRE.
GRAND PATRIOTIC NAVAL SPECTACLE.
Peace and War. Naval Manœuvres. The Fleet at Night.
Attack on the Enemy's Forts.
TWICE DAILY, at 3.30 and 9 p.m.
Thousands of Reserved Seats at 6d., 1s., 2s., and 3s.
THE FLORAL LOUNGE.
The Most Delightful Entertainment Hall in the World.
The Chamounix Minstrels and other Novel Attractions Daily, Free.
The Hungarian Minstrels. American Liliputian Troupe.
Grand Hungarian Feszty Panorama. Royal Javanese Troupe.
Hagenbeck's Zoological Kindergarten. Moorish Camp.
Bella Napoli Troupe. Electric Theatre. Captive Balloon.
THE GREAT WHEEL, 300 ft. HIGH.
South Sea Islanders, "Astarte." Belvedere Tower. Electrophone.
Switchback.

NIAGARA
(ST. JAMES'S PARK STATION)
NOW OPEN.
THE "ELECTRORAMA"
The latest and greatest invention of the age by means of which the grandest Sights, Scenes, and Places of the World are visited, without trouble or fatigue, by means of an ever-changing series of magnificent Electric Cycloramas, including
THE FUNERAL OF MR. GLADSTONE.
THE DERBY OF 1898.
Open Daily, 10 to 10. Admission 1s.

ROYAL HORSE SHOW, RICHMOND, SURREY.
ROYAL HORSE SHOW, RICHMOND, SURREY.
ROYAL HORSE SHOW, RICHMOND, SURREY.
FRIDAY & SATURDAY, JUNE 10th & 11th.
ADMISSION ONE SHILLING.

AMUSEMENTS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE ROYAL.—THE WHITE HEATHER, EVERY EVENING, at 7.45, for a short season. Mrs. JOHN WOOD, Miss KATE RORKE, and powerful Company. Matinée Wednesday, June 8, at 1.30. For full particulars see Daily Papers.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.
Lessees, THE GRAND OPERA SYNDICATE, LTD.
GRAND OPERA EVERY EVENING.
For full particulars see daily papers. Box-office now open.

LYCEUM.—THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.
MATINEE To-day (Wednesday) and Next Saturday, at 2, and Nights of June 9 and 11.
HENRY IRVING. | Miss ELLEN TERRY.
WATERLOO and THE BELLS. To-night (Wednesday), at 8, also Matinée June 11, and Night June 18.—HENRY IRVING.
THE LYONS MAIL. Nights of June 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 10. Matinée, June 8.
THE MEDICINE MAN. Nights of June 8 and 16.
LOUIS XI. Nights of June 13, 14, and 17. Matinée, June 18.
Box-office (Mr. J. Hurst) open 10 to 5, and 7.30 to 10. Seats also booked by letter or telegram. LYCEUM.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, Mr. HERBERT BEERBOHM TREE.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8 (doors open 7.30), LAST WEEKS,
JULIUS CÆSAR.
MATINEES EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.
Box-office open 10 to 10. Seats booked from 2s. HER MAJESTY'S.

ADELPHI. A. & S. GATTI,
Sole Proprietors and Managers.
Business Manager, Mr. FRED. G. LATHAM.
EVERY EVENING at 8 o'clock.
A Drama in Four Acts, by David Belasco, entitled:
THE HEART OF MARYLAND,
Interpreted by Mr. Charles Frohman's entire New York Company.
Box Office open from 10 till 10.

SAVOY THEATRE.—Every Evening at 7.50, and Every Saturday Afternoon at 2.0, will be produced the New Romantic Musical Drama, THE BEAUTY STONE, by A. W. Pinero, J. Comyns Carr, and Arthur Sullivan. Box-office 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.—R. D'OYLY CARTE, Manager.

COURT THEATRE, Sloane Square.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.—EVERY EVENING, at 8.30, TRELAWNY OF THE "WELLS," by A. W. Pinero. Doors 8. Commence 8.30. Box-office now open, 10 to 10. Telephone No. 3,031. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY.—On SATURDAY NEXT, June 4, Mr. George Edwardes will produce a New Musical Comedy, A GREEK SLAVE. The book by Owen Hall. Music by Sidney Jones. Box-office now open, 10 till 6.

CRITERION THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.—EVERY EVENING at 8.15, THE LIARS, by Henry Arthur Jones. Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.

COMEDY THEATRE, Panton-street, Haymarket.
Sole Manager, Mr. CHARLES HAWTREY.
TO-NIGHT, and EVERY EVENING, at 8.30,
LORD AND LADY ALGY,
an Original Light Comedy, in Three Acts, by R. C. Carton.
Mr. CHARLES HAWTREY and Company.
At 8, a Duologue, entitled CONSTANCY, by Cyril Hallward.
MATINEES WEDNESDAYS, June 8, 22, and 29, and SATURDAY, June 18 at 3. Box-office open 10 to 10.

VAUDEVILLE.
Sole Lessees and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
EVERY EVENING, at 8.20.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.30,
THE FRENCH MAID,
With New Songs, Dances, and Dresses.
The very successful Musical Comedy by Basil Hood and Walter Slaughter.
Box-office open 10 to 10.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Directors, WILLIAMSON and MUSGROVE, Limited.
EVERY EVENING, at 8, Casino Theatre Company, of New York, in
THE BELLE OF NEW YORK.
"The subject of all the town talk."
Box-office now open at the Theatre from 10 till 10.
MATINEE WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.

EMPIRE THEATRE. — EVERY EVENING, New Ballet, THE PRESS, and Sporting Sketch, THE RACE. Grand VARIETIES. Doors open at 7.45.

LONDON PAVILION.—Dan Leno, Vesta Tilley, Eugene Stratton, Bertoldi, Chirgwin, Brothers Griffiths, Geo. Robey, Rachael Walker, T. E. Dunville, Pat Rafferty, and many others. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s. Manager, Mr. FRANK GLENISTER.

PALACE, Shaftesbury-avenue. — The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Full Licence. Prices from 6d. Doors open 8.—Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—The Greatest Combination of Talent in London.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINEE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station.—Gordon's Last Stand at Khartoum. New Portrait Model of the late Mr. W. E. Gladstone.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

ABERYSTWITH.—The QUEEN'S HOTEL faces the sea, and is lighted by electricity. The late Sir Jas. Clarke, M.D., says: "A fortnight at Aberystwith is equal to a month at most watering-places." For tariffs, &c., apply to W. H. PALMER, Proprietor. Soft Atlantic breezes. Pure water from Plinlimmon, and excellent drainage.

BATH.—LANSDOWN GROVE HOTEL.—Desirable residence, in beautifully wooded grounds, 400 feet above sea level, facing south, and protected from north and east. Air dry and bracing. Assembly and Pump Rooms within easy distance. Omnibus free to and from Hot Mineral Baths. Billiards, Tennis Lawn.

BONCHURCH HOTEL, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, one mile from Ventnor Station.
A comfortable, quiet, and most beautifully-situated Hotel. Pretty garden. Good sea view.
H. RIBBANDS, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—South aspect, 150 rooms, electric light throughout, passenger lift, first-class cuisine, winter garden and lounge, covered tennis court. Turkish, sea-water, and medicated Baths. The Hotel is within two minutes' walk of the Golf Links.—For tariff, address W. KNEESE, Manager.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HIGHCLIFFE HOTEL. Unrivalled position, West Cliff, full south. Splendid sea view. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Supplies from Alderney Dairy Farm. Telephone 27.—J. KILNER, Proprietor.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.—Centre of sea front. Electric Light throughout. Lift to all floors. Bicycle room. Inclusive terms if desired from 10s. 6d. to 15s. per day.—For particulars apply to A. D. HOOK, Manager.

CARBIS BAY HOTEL, Cornwall. The very spot to obtain rest and quietude. Overlooking the finest bay in England. Mild yet bracing climate. Within easy distance of London by G. W. R. Splendid Golf Links. "A more beautiful spot for residence could hardly be imagined." —Truth.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Leas. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor
Sanitation Certified.

FOLKESTONE.—The LEAS HOTEL.—Situated in private grounds. Adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Refurnished throughout. Passenger lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff. Good golf links and tennis court.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

JERSEY.—GRAND HOTEL.—The only first-class modern Hotel facing the sea, and full south, the largest, the best appointed, and the up-to-date Hotel in the Channel Islands. Liberal Management.
D. DE LEIDI, Manager.

MALVERN—The IMPERIAL HOTEL occupies the best position, and receives visitors en pension. The golf-links (18 holes) are one of the best in England. Capital stabling for hunters. Droitwich Brine, Turkish and large Swimming Bath in separate buildings.—For tariff, apply to the Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

SANDGATE.—ROYAL KENT HOTEL, a favourite resort of Ruskin. An ideal summer and winter residence, delightfully situated in its own grounds, facing the sea. Redecorated and refurnished. New Coffee-room, Smoking-room, and Conservatory have recently been added. Fifteen minutes from Folkestone. Omnibus meets all trains Sandgate Station.—J. E. TANARE, Prop.

SOUTHSEA.—ROYAL BEACH MANSIONS HOTEL.—Largest in Southsea, splendidly situated on the beach; 300 yards nearer the sea than any other public hotel on the line of marine terraces. Passenger lift. Inclusive terms from £3. 13s. 6d. per week. Entirely under new management.—M. ECCLES, Manageress.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
F. FISCHER, Manager.

BUXTON

DERBYSHIRE.

Highest Town in England.
On the Mountain Limestone.
1,000 feet above sea level.

Centre of the picturesque Peak District. Pure Air. Charming Scenery.

HOT MINERAL-WATER BATHS FOR GOUT, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, &c.

NATURAL TEMPERATURE 82° FAHRENHEIT.

Finest Public Gardens at any Health Resort in Europe, with Pavilion, Theatre, Concert-Hall, Tennis, Bowls, etc. Golf Links (18 holes).

For ILLUSTRATED GUIDE, with Tariffs of the leading Hotels, Hydropathics, Boarding and Lodging Houses, send postage-stamp to THE CLERK, COUNCIL OFFICES, TOWN HALL, BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.

AVONDALE HOTEL & RESTAURANT

(Corner of Dover-street and Piccadilly).
MAGNIFICENT SUITES of ROOMS, including Ladies' Reception-room.
POLIAKIN'S renowned STRING BAND (three years at the Savoy) plays nightly during Dinner and Supper.
LUNCHEON, 4s.; DINNER, 10s. 6d.; SUPPER, 4s.
A SPECIAL ROYAL ACADEMY LUNCHEON at 2s. 6d. served daily.
The Wines have been most carefully selected by connoisseurs.
Manager: Mons. GARIN. } late of the Savoy Hotel.
Chef de Cuisine: Mons. DUTRU. }

AND

HATCHETT'S RESTAURANT.

UNDER AVONDALE HOTEL.

Under entirely new management. First-class Cuisine and Unrivalled Cellar of Wines. Moderate Prices. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, Table d'Hôte, Grill-room, and à la Carte. Arrangements are being made for a String Band to play nightly during Dinner and Supper.
Manager: Mons. EUGENE.

ILFRACOMBE.

ILFRACOMBE HOTEL.

Famous for its high-class Cuisine and general comfort.
The PRINCIPAL and ONLY HOTEL on the SEASHORE.
An ideal position. 250 rooms. Grounds five acres. Tennis, Croquet. Splendid Swimming Bath. Elegant Lounge Hall. Moderate tariff. Terms "en pension."
H. R. GROVER, Manager.

RAMSGATE.

THE GRANVILLE.

A FINE HOTEL] DOVER [IN DOVER BAY

Accommodates 400 guests. Is superbly appointed, with all the comforts of a well-arranged mansion, at moderate cost. Perfect cuisine. The Dover Golf Links for use of Hotel Burlington visitors. The finest coast hotel in England. Brochure and Tariff free.

Facing the Pleasure Pier and in centre of Dover Bay.

HOTEL BURLINGTON

HASTINGS. Due South, Facing Sea.

QUEEN'S HOTEL,

LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED.
Sunny, and most sheltered position in Hastings and St. Leonards.
ELECTRIC LIGHT. PASSENGER ELEVATOR.
Moderate Tariff. Hotel Flys attend the trains.
WILLIAM GLADE, Manager.

FOLKESTONE.

WEST CLIFF HOTEL.

(180 Apartments)

Now opened for the reception of Visitors.
Important Structural Alterations and Additions have been made since October last.
The Hotel is under the personal superintendence of the Proprietor, to whom all communications should be addressed.
Electric Light and Passenger Lift.

CLARENDON HOTEL, Princes-street, Edinburgh.—First-class Family Hotel. Opposite Castle, and overlooking the gardens. Kitchen lately fitted up on top of Hotel. Recommended to American visitors. Under the personal management of the new Proprietor.

HOTELS, &c.

SAVOY HOTEL

OVERLOOKING RIVER AND EMBANKMENT GARDENS.

By day the most beautiful garden and river view in Europe. By night a fairy scene. All charges for rooms include baths, lights, and attendance.

Savoy Restaurant.

Of Gastronomic Fame. Dinners à la Carte. Private Rooms for Parties.

The Savoy Dejeuner à prix fixe, 5s., served on the Balcony overlooking the Gardens and River from 12 to 3.

"The Opera Supper," 5s. The Orchestra plays during Dinner and Supper.

The Restaurant is under the direction of the famous Maître d'Hôtel, "Joseph," of the Restaurant Marivaux, Paris. Chef, Maître THOURAUD.

Prix Fixe Dinner (7s. 6d.) is served in the new Salle à Manger, on the Restaurant Floor, at Separate Tables, from 6 to 8.30.

The GRAND HOTEL, ROME, is under the same direction.

FURNESS ABBEY HOTEL

SPACIOUS COFFEE, DRAWING, AND SMOKE ROOMS. WELL-APPOINTED BILLIARD ROOM.

IN THE CENTRE OF LAKELAND.

SPIERS & POND, Ltd.

LOWESTOFT GRAND HOTEL.

Rooms may now be engaged for Whitsuntide. Special Terms for May, June, and July (Whitsuntide excepted).

SUFFOLK AGRICULTURAL SHOW, June 2nd and 3rd.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.

THE PALACE HOTEL.

200 rooms. Finest position. Own grounds. American elevator. Tariff, with plan of rooms and sketch map of Buxton, on application. A. CROSS, Manager.

MARGATE.—WHITE HART HOTEL.

Sixty Bedrooms, many commanding magnificent sea views. Famous for its perfect English cooking and choice cellar. Most invigorating sea air in England. Under supervision of Proprietor—G. MARSHALL.

THE INTERNATIONAL PALACE HOTELS.

OSTEND ..... Hotel de la Plage.
ARDENNES..... Chateau d'Ardennes.
(Palace of Leopold II.)
LISBON ..... The Avenida Palace.
THERAPIA ..... Bosphorus Summer Palace.

London Office, 14, Cockspur-street, S.W.

MALOJA, Upper Engadine, Switzerland.

GROUNDS and VILLAS TO BE LET and SOLD.

The largest and most beautiful glaciers in the World. Nature's wonders. Season, beginning of June to end of September. The splendid Palace Hotel, Maloja, offers to its patrons all home comforts, combined with the charm of a climatic Alpine station, first-class highland tours, as well as easy walks. 1,811 meters above sea. 350 beds, spacious reception rooms, concert and theatre halls. Milanese Scala Orchestral Concerts daily. Lift. Open-air pastimes, golf, cricket, lawn-tennis, riding and driving opportunities. Large cycle tracks. Sea sport. Oil motor boat on the delightful Maloja lake as well as rowing and sailing-boats. Photographic studio. Baths and excellent sanitary arrangements. English and Roman Catholic services in their respective churches. Post and Telegraph Offices. Resident Physician. Highly recommended as a quiet resort early in the season, especially for families. Average temperature, 16 degrees C.

Prices for board and lodging from Frs. 14 to 20, inclusive of attendance and light, as well as fire on cold days. Further particulars may be obtained from every Bookseller, "Europäisches Wanderbild Maloja," and from the Director, J. F. WALTHER-DENZ, Maloja Palace, Engadine, Switzerland.

21/- The Osoezi Saddle 21/-
Post Free Post Free

Is at once hygienic, anatomically correct, and pressure upon the perineum is avoided. No Saddle-Soreness, even after the hardest and most continuous riding.

Suitable for Ladies or Gentlemen. Easily adaptable to any Machine.

A. W. GAMAGE, LTD.,
126 to 129, Holborn, E.C.

Buy the 4711 Eau de Cologne

IT IS THE BEST, GENUINE, STRONGEST, MOST LASTING, MOST REFRESHING AND INVIGORATING.

Insist upon the "4711" Brand.

REFUSE ALL SUBSTITUTES.

Of most Dealers in First-class Perfumes. Case of 6 Bottles, carriage paid, for 12/6; or Sample Bottle, 2/3 post free.

THE 4711 DEPOT, 62, NEW BOND ST., LONDON, W.

MAPLE & CO

LONDON and PARIS

GARDEN AND LAWN FURNITURE

TENTS UMBRELLAS
CANOPIED SEATS
"UMBRA" CHAIRS 6s 10d
LAWN CHAIRS 3s 6d
MADEIRA CHAIRS 6s 9d
HAMMOCK CHAIRS 3s 3d
DUNSTER TABLES 7s 6d
UMBRELLA TENTS with Iron Tables 34s 6d
PLAIN and FANCY HAMMOCKS 2s 6d to 50s

LAWN MOWERS ROLLERS
ENGINES HOSE AND REELS
CYCLES BABY CARRIAGES

CUSHIONS for LAWN or RIVER 2s 6d each

"GF" Illustrations of Useful Articles for Outdoor Use Post free "GF"

LONDON and PARIS

MAPLE & CO

The VICTORIA DATE CO., Ltd., Food and Condiment Specialists, beg to draw attention to the following preparations, for the purity and general excellence of which they have obtained numerous awards—Gold Medals, &c.

Victoria Date Vinegar. The New Vinegar. This condiment is prepared exclusively from dates. It is absolutely pure. Culinary experts pronounce it far superior for Cooking and Pickling purposes to Malt or White Wine Vinegars, as, though of a similar flavour to these, it is non-injurious, and can therefore be used with impunity by the most dyspeptic. It is far and away the best for table use. The leading Pickle and Sauce Manufacturers use it exclusively, among others, POTTER'S PERFECT PICKLES are prepared in Victoria Date Vinegar.

Derby Sauce. This new Sauce has rapidly taken the first place in popular favour. A trial is sufficient to give it a permanent place in the cruet. Prepared from a Persian recipe of wide reputation in the East, it is a delightful appetiser. It is intended for use with Cold Meats, Chops, Steaks, &c.

Worcester Sauce. This resembles other sauces of the same name in flavour, but possesses the unique quality of absolute purity.

The VICTORIA DATE CO., Ltd., will have much pleasure in forwarding tasting samples, post free, to applicants who will write to them, mentioning this paper, to Victoria Works, 112, Belvedere Road, Lambeth, London, S.E.

"MACGREGOR'S"

Famous

WHISKY.

"The Spirit of the Age."

PALATABLE.
PURE.
PERFECT.

	Per doz
FAMOUS OLD SCOTCH	39/-
SPECIAL LIQUEUR -	48/-

NET CASH, CARRIAGE PAID.
ESTABLISHED 1859.

MACGREGOR & TURNER,
35 & 36, GREAT CLYDE STREET, GLASGOW.

Solid Silver, £4 4s.

Substantially made afternoon tea set on approval. If you decide within two weeks that you do not want it, the money will be returned. Every piece is the highest strength consistent with neatness, and will last a life-time. English Hall Marked.

Delivered safe and secure on receipt of

£4 4s.

WATCHMAKERS' ALLIANCE LTD.,
227, Regent-st., & 184, Oxford-st., London.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from falling off.
Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.
Being delicately perfumed it leaves no unpleasant odour.
IS NOT a dye, and therefore does not stain the skin or even white linen.
Should be in every house where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.
Ask your Chemist or Hairdresser for

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per large Bottle.

Prepared only by the
ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Ltd.,
33, FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

IS THE BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE IN THE WORLD.

Prevents the Decay of Teeth.
Renders the Teeth Pearly White.
Is perfectly Harmless and Delicious to the Taste.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World
2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER.
Put up in Glass Jars, price 1s.

The Purest and the Nicest.

Hovis Bread

Perfectly Self Digestive.

Hovis Bread is baked and delivered daily by all good class Bakers in the British Isles; Hovis Biscuits are sold by most Grocers and Bakers; or 6d. and 1s. Samples of Bread and Biscuits will be sent on receipt of stamps by THE HOVIS-BREAD FLOUR CO., LTD., Millers, Macclesfield.

VINOLIA TOILET REQUISITES.

4d PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP
(For Family Use).

For Delicate, Sensitive, Irritable Skins.

The CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST reports:
"An ideal soap, delightfully perfumed."

1/- per box of 3 Tablets.

6d FLORAL VINOLIA SOAP
(For Private Use).

Keeps the Skin as soft as Velvet.

The MEDICAL NEWS reports:
"Beautifully emollient and softening to the skin."

1/6 per box of 3 Tablets.

10d TOILET VINOLIA SOAP
(OTTO)

Scented with Choice Otto of Rose Perfume.

Beautifies the Complexion.

The GENTLEWOMAN reports:
"Strongly recommended to keep the skin smooth and free from roughness."

2/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

6d BLONDEAU PERFUMES

Concentrated, Delicate, Pure.

*Vinolia Bouquet, *Marequil, *Jequilla, *Losaria, Wood Violet, White Heliotrope, Ess. Bouquet, Frangipanni, Jockey Club, Maréchal Niel, Millefleur, White Rose, Jasmin, Musk Rose, Honeysuckle, New Mown Hay, Lily of the Valley, Violet, | *Rhine Violets, | Peau d'Espagne, Rondeletia, Hyacinth, Ylang Ylang, Stephanotis, Opoponax, Patchouli, Musk, Ambergris, Amaryllis, White Lilac, Narcissus, Chypre, Violette de Parme, Mignonette, Clematis, Wallflower.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/-, and 5/- per bottle.
*These perfumes are not supplied in the 6d. quality.

1/- VINOLIA HAIR WASH

DRY. Freshens and cleanses the Hair, and preserves it free from any oily moist appearance.

MOIST. Imparts a natural gloss to the Hair

1/- per Bottle.

Each in 3 odours: Portugal, Rose, and Violet.

1/1½ VINOLIA CREAM

For Itching, Face Spots, Sunburn, &c.

The LANCET reports:
"An emollient cream for the skin in eczema, rash, eruptions, &c."

1/1½, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

1/- VINOLIA POWDER

For Redness, Roughness, Toilet Nursery, &c.

The LADY'S PICTORIAL reports:
"Superseding the old-fashioned toilet powders which are apt to cause acne spots on the face by blocking up the pores of the skin."

In White, Pink, and Cream Tints.
1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.
6d

(STICKS AND FLAT CAKES.)
Causes no Blotches.
STICKS: Premier 6d., Toilet 1/-, 1/6, 2/6, Vestal 2/-.
FLAT CAKES: Premier 1/-, Toilet 2/-, Vestal 2/6.

6d LYPSYL.

A Coralline Emollient for Dry, Rough, Cracked, or Pallid Lips.

In Rose-Red and White Tints, 6d. and 1/- a Tube

6d VINOLIA LAVENDER WATER.

Natural and Very Lasting.

Contains the finest Essential Oils, Concentrated, therefore the Most Economical.

6d., 1/-, 2/-. and 3/6.

2/- VINOLIA TOILET WATER.

This is prepared with delicate, refreshing perfumes, and is a most exquisite and delightful preparation to use either clear or in water for the Toilet or in the bath.

2s. per Bottle.

6d PREMIER VINOLIA DENTIFRICE

Aromatic, Tonic, Refreshing, Preservative.
Keeps the Teeth Ivory White.
Premier in Round Box and Glass Bottle, 6d.
English—2/6.
American—1/6.

6d VINOLIA TOOTH SOAP.

An exquisite preparation for the Teeth. Delightfully perfumed and free from any injurious ingredients.

In Round Metal Box, 6d.

6d VINOLIA TOOTH PASTE.

Delicately Perfumed.

Whitens and Cleanses the Teeth, without in any way injuriously affecting the dental structures.

In Collapsable Tube, 6d.

6d BLONDEAU Inexhaustible Lavender SMELLING SALTS.

These Smelling Salts are of exceptional Strength and most Refreshing. They are agreeably scented, the pleasant odour of Lavender being very pronounced.

6d. and 9d. per Bottle.

6d VINOLIA EAU DE COLOGNE.

Fragrant. Refreshing.
As fine as can possibly be made.

The "Court Circular" reports:
"Vinolia Eau de Cologne we consider is absolutely unequalled for strength, purity, and delicacy of aroma."

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/3, and 5/6.

3d per 2-oz. Packet. VINOLIA VIOLET POWDER.

Sanitary. Antiseptic. Soothing.

Specially prepared for Toilet and Nursery use.

In 2-oz. and ¼-lb. Packets, 3d. & 6d.
In ¼-lb. Tins, 6d.
In ½-lb. Tins, 9d.

VINOLIA COMPANY, Ltd., MALDEN CRESCENT, LONDON, N.W.

MELLIN'S FOOD

is known

Throughout the World

as a perfect diet for children, but

MELLIN'S COD LIVER OIL EMULSION

is unknown to

Hundreds of Thousands

who are troubled with Coughs, Colds, Loss of Flesh, and General Malnutrition, and who would benefit by using it.

MELLIN'S FOOD WORKS, PECKHAM, S.E.

For Longhand, Shorthand, Pen-and-Ink Drawing, Music-Writing, indeed, whenever a Pen is necessary, use only a "SWAN."

Adds immeasurably to Celerity and Comfort in writing. Of all Pens most famous.

Made in 3 sizes at
10s. 6d.
16s. 6d.
25s.
UP TO £18 18s.
POST FREE.

MABIE, TODD & BARD,
DEPT. C. I.
93, Cheapside, London, E.C.
94a, REGENT ST., W., and 3, EXCHANGE ST., MANCHESTER.

"The Old Favourite."

MAX GREGER'S CARLOWITZ

SAFEST, SOUNDEST
Dinner Wine.
PURE HUNGARIAN BURGUNDY.
From 15/- per doz.
Of all Wine Merchants and Grocers.

See that every cork bears the brand 'Max Greger.' Without it the wine is not genuine.

WATER ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM DISEASE GERMS, BY USING THE

BERKEFELD FILTER.

Full Illustrated Price List and Testimonials free on application.

FILTER H. AS SKETCH, 42s.
SMALLER SIZE, 30s.

Extract from the Special Report to the British Medical Journal on "The Relative Efficiency of Water Filters," by Drs. Sims Woodhead and Cartwright Wood, Jan. 22nd, 1898. "Experiments were carried out with the Filter H., an exceedingly good model which seems to subserve the functions of a Filter better than any we have yet seen described. . . . The output is so large that there is no reason why such Filters should not supply sufficient water for all household requirements. These Berkefeld Filters afford complete protection against the communication of waterborne disease."—Offices and Showrooms:—
THE BERKEFELD FILTER CO., Ltd., 121, Oxford-street, London, W.
City Depot: W. SCHACHT & CO., 26, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.

HAVE YOU TRIED
CEPHALIA
For HAY FEVER, NEURALGIC PAINS, & COLDS in the HEAD, &c.?
If not, send 13½d. for a Box to
REECE & CO., Medical Hall, Piccadilly, London.
EFFECT SIMPLY MIRACULOUS.

CARTER 6A NEW CAVENDISH ST. PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON.
ONLY ADDRESS OF ORIGINAL CARTER
LITERARY MACHINE.

For holding book, lamp, meals, &c., in any position over an easy chair, bed, or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. Prices from 17/6

INVALID FURNITURE.
ADJUSTABLE COUCHES and BEDS from £1. 10/-

Bed Lift £3. 10/-
Reclining Boards, 25/-
Walking Machines
Portable W.C.'s.
Electric Bells,
Urinals, &c.
Air & Water Beds.

Bed Rests 7/6
Leg Rests 10/-
Crutches 10/6
Bed Baths 12/6
Commodes, £1. 5/-

Carrying Chairs from £1.
Breakfast in Bed Tables from 30/-

Self-Propelling Chairs from £2

BATH CHAIRS FROM £1. 5/-

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES POST FREE.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, NEW CAVENDISH ST. Portland-pl. London, W.

No Camera is a "KODAK" unless made by the Eastman Company.

KODAK.

New West-End Branch:—

171-173 REGENT ST., W.

KODAKS for Ladies, Cyclists, Tourists, Holiday Makers.

Simple to Use. LOADED IN DAYLIGHT.

NO DARK ROOM NEEDED.

Prices £1 1s. to £5 5s.

EASTMAN Photographic Materials Company, Ltd.,

Head Office: 43 Clerkenwell Road, LONDON, E.C.

Retail Branches: 115-117 Oxford Street, W., and 60 Cheapside, E.C.

LEWIS & ALLENBY, LTD.

REGENT STREET and CONDUIT STREET, W.

Court Dressmakers,

ARE MAKING A SPECIAL DISPLAY OF VERY SMART . . . . . .

FÊTE DRESSES.

ALSO Novelties for Ascot.

GOWNS, RACE CLOAKS, MILLINERY, SUNSHADES, &c.

193 to 197, REGENT STREET, and 60 to 65, CONDUIT STREET, W.

A RECORD IN SAUCE.

OVER 8,000,000 BOTTLES SOLD IN ONE YEAR.

YORKSHIRE RELISH

THE MOST DELICIOUS SAUCE IN THE WORLD.

Makes the Plainest Viands Palatable, and the Daintiest Dishes more Delicious.

Enriches Soups, Stews, Chops, Steaks, Fish, etc.

Sold in Bottles, 6d., 1s., and 2s. each.

Sole Proprietors: GOODALL, BACKHOUSE, & CO., LEEDS.

"Captol"

SOMETHING NEW FOR THE HAIR BY A LEADING PHYSICIAN.

"CAPTOL" is the latest discovery by the well-known authority on skin diseases, Dr. J. Eichhoff. The fact that such a prominent physician allows his name to be associated with it is a guarantee that "CAPTOL" will not cause disappointment to those who give it a trial. "CAPTOL" removes the densest growth of scurf and dandruff with greater speed than any other preparation. It is, therefore, the safest preventive of falling hair yet discovered.

"CAPTOL" is made from vegetable ingredients; it is quite free from lead, mercury, and other poisons. Whilst imparting to the hair a glossy and pleasing appearance, it does not in the slightest degree affect the ORIGINAL SHADE, AS IT IS NOT A DYE, and, unlike other Hair Washes, it does not make the hair the least greasy or sticky.

Many preparations before the public are most dangerous. "CAPTOL" is NON-EXPLOSIVE, and can be used with perfect safety.

3/9 per bottle, of most chemists and stores.

If you cannot obtain "CAPTOL" from your usual chemist, do not be put off with other kinds, which are recommended as "JUST AS GOOD," "CHEAPER," &c., &c., but write to Mulhens' 4711 Depot, 62, New Bond Street, London, who will either give you the name of the nearest dealer keeping it, or will send you a bottle post-free for 4/-

China 14/-

THE "Hawthorn"
TEA OR BREAKFAST SERVICE.

Rose-Pink with Gold Edge.

BREAKFAST SET for 6 persons (29 pieces) ...	14 0
BREAKFAST SET for 12 persons (52 pieces) ...	1 10 0
TEA SET (40 pieces) to match	15 0

(If for the country, 6d. extra for package.)

ALFRED B. PEARCE.
39, Ludgate-hill, London.
(Established 1760)

Bulmer's Cider

Guaranteed Pure Juice of the Apple.

Price Lists and Testimonials from
H. P. BULMER & CO., Hereford
or of Wine Merchants Everywhere.

ALFRED CARTER, LIMITED
47, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.
New and Extensive SHOWROOMS 31 and 32. SHOE LANE, E.C.
(Midway between Holborn-circus and Ludgate-circus). (ONLY ADDRESSES)
INVALIDS' MECHANICAL FURNITURE, BATH CHAIRS, &c.
Maker and Inventor of VIADUCT AMBULANCE LITTER, used all over the World.

BRIGHTON BATH CHAIR

SPINAL AND BATH CHAIR COMBINED.

WICKER BATH CHAIR.

BATH CHAIR.

SELF-PROPELLING AND CARRYING CHAIR COMBINED

PERAMBULATORS. (New Designs for 1897.)

ALFRED CARTER, Ltd., 47, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON.
Illustrated Catalogue Post Free. No connection with any other Firm.

CORN 0 EXTERMINATOR

CORN EXTERMINATOR. NEVER FAILS.
Ingenious instrument. Anyone can use. Highest surgical testimonials. Post free, 13 stamps. Bunion and Chilblain Ointment absolutely cures Tender Feet, Soft Corns, Enlarged Joints, &c., 15 stamps.
Mr. GARDNER, Chiropodist, Specialité Nails. 85, Regent Street, W.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.
All Pain, Swelling, and Inflammation disappear after two to three doses of Dr. LIND'S (M.D.) Specific
"LINDINE."
GUARANTEED HARMLESS. NEVER FAILS. Price 5s. per Bottle, with full directions and Advice, from the Sole Proprietor: O. E. HORN, D.Sc., Bournemouth.

FOR COMPLAINTS of the STOMACH, LIVER, etc., DRINK
VICHY CELESTINS Spring
Caution: See that each bottle has a neck label with VICHY-ÉTAT & the name of the Sole Importers: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd, 26, Upper Thames Street, LONDON, E.C.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.
THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up, £300,000. Total funds, over £1,500,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE
63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.
THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD
SUN FIRE OFFICE FOUNDED 1710
SUM INSURED IN 1897 EXCEEDS £425,000,000.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.
Invested Funds, £30,000,000.
The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

BIRKBECK BANK (Estab. 1851), Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, London. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, on the minimum monthly balances when not below £100.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK with particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.
NOTICE.
No Member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.
Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.
A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to
EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

H. HALFORD and COMPANY,
70 and 71, Palmerston Buildings, Old Broad Street, London.
ESTABLISHED 1869.

Business in Stocks and Shares at close prices.
Dealings reported by wire if required.
Prompt Settlements.
Thousands of Testimonials from Clients.
Americans and Canadians a Speciality. Also Westralians and Kaffirs.
Lists of Closing Prices gratis.
Telegrams: "Monitor, London."
NO CONNECTION WITH ANY OTHER FIRM.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN, and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.
Established over a Quarter of a Century.
Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, LYNCH & CO., J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale Houses.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."
CLARKE'S
WORLD-FAMED
BLOOD MIXTURE
Warranted to cleanse the blood from all impurities from whatever cause arising. For Scrofula, Scurvy, Eczema, Bad Legs, Skin and Blood Diseases, Pimples and Sores of all kinds, its effects are marvellous. It is the only real specific for Gout and Rheumatic Pains, for it removes the cause from the blood and bones. Thousands of Wonderful Cures have been effected by it. In bottles, 2s. 9d. and 11s. each, of Chemists everywhere.
BEWARE OF WORTHLESS IMITATIONS.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT

PURELY VEGETABLE, Perfectly Harmless. Will reduce from two to five pounds per week: acts on the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into Fat. Sold by Chemists. Send stamp for pamphlet.
Botanic Medicine Co., 3, New Oxford-street, London, W.C.

Cadbury's cocoa

"The Standard of Highest Purity."—The Lancet.

"The favourite Cocoa of the day. For Nourishment there is nothing superior to be found."—MEDICAL MAGAZINE.

A MASTER KEY

of this SIZE

Can be made to open any number of Locks. Many Ladies and Gentlemen have the whole of their locks so arranged that a MASTER KEY, so small as to be worn in a finger-ring or locket, will open every lock they possess—from their Dressing Bags, Trunks, Jewel Cases, Despatch Boxes, &c., to the Front Door, Wine Cellar, Park Gates, &c. Just think of the Convenience! The locks are made in suites, each suite with its own key, so that the ladies' maid or valet can open the luggage, the butler the wine cellar, and so on, but the suite keys are of no use for any but their own series.

BRAMAH JEWEL SAFES,

BURGLAR AND FIRE RESISTING, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR BED AND DRESSING ROOMS.

Specialities in fitted Suite Cases and Dressing Bags, Jewel Cases, Despatch and Deed Boxes, Bramah Street Door Latches, with small keys, Bramah Padlocks for Bicycles, with Leather-covered Chains, &c. &c.

New Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

For Prices and Particulars apply to

NEEDS & CO. Late

Bramah & Co.

Sole Manufacturers of the real Bramah Locks,

100, NEW BOND STREET,

LONDON, W.

A Master Key Signet Ring (Open).

PURE—WHOLESOME—DELICIOUS.

BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER

Is the unfailing resource of every Lady of the House and successful Housekeeper, affording a constant variation in the daily menu.

NO EGGS! NO RISK! NO TROUBLE!

SINGER

MODÈLE DE LUXE

(Registered Trade Mark)

CYCLES

IMPORTANT NOVELTIES FOR 1898.

1898 Lists Free.

SINGER CYCLE CO. LTD. COVENTRY

LONDON: 17, HOLBORN VIADUCT.

'SCOTLAND'S BEST.'

Pattisons' WHISKY

THE PINK OF PERFECTION.

A Wholesome and Agreeable Stimulant of Unrivalled Quality and Flavour.

The King of Scotch Whiskies.

Sold Everywhere.

SOLE PROPRIETORS:

PATTISONS, LIMITED,

HIGHLAND DISTILLERS,

LEITH, BALLINDALLOCH, AND LONDON.

HEAD OFFICE:

Constitution Street, Leith.

OUR PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,005.—HUMOROUS DEFINITION OF A GENTLEMAN.

ALPHA	(real name and address will be printed in due course)	£1 1 0
LEAF RULE	(" " " ")	1 1 0

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,010.

The usual Prize of Two Guineas is offered this week to the competitor who succeeds best in composing

AN ALPHABETICAL ACROSTIC SENTENCE OF TWENTY-SIX WORDS—THAT IS TO SAY, A SENTENCE IN WHICH THE WORDS SHALL HAVE AS THEIR INITIALS THE TWENTY-SIX LETTERS OF THE ALPHABET IN THEIR PROPER ORDER.

The sentences may be on any subject, and the object of the competitor should be, as far as possible, to so construct them as to make them read like an ordinary combination of words. The first word of the sentence must commence with "A," the second with "B," the third with "C," and so on. All answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, June 13, at the latest.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,006.

The result of this Competition will be announced in the next number of TRUTH.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

HYDE.—It is not too late to rectify the mistake which you have pointed out.

QUIDFILIUS.—Your suggestion of "Billet doux," or "Billy-do" as an answer to Puzzle No. 1,006, arrived too late for publication with the other suggested names.

GLENROSA.—Your answer to Puzzle No. 1,006 also arrived too late for publication.

NEMO NOMEN.—The letter in which you suggested the word "class-jumping" as an answer to Puzzle No. 1,006 did not reach TRUTH Office until after the first post on Monday, the 16th inst.

WAYNFLETE.—Your points are very ingeniously urged, but I still think that my decision was a perfectly fair one.

LUDWIG B.—Many thanks for your suggestions.

IMPISI.—As a matter of fact, "heart" is a perfect rhyme to "art."

LEAF RULE.—It will be better, I think, to let the competition go on.

PYRAMID.—I am much obliged to you for your letter.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 1,007.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

ACROSTICS ON LORD SALISBURY, EULOGISTIC AND CRITICAL.

CHEMIST AND LITTERATEUR.

S was the Scientist ruined by fate,
A was the Author who might have been great;
L was his Logic, on politics wasted,
I his deep joy as Inventor, searee tasted;
S is our Sorrow for Science restrained,
B all the Brilliant research unattained;
U was the Usefulness lost to mankind,
R the Routine that has clogged Cecil's mind;
Y oung men of genius be warned by me,
Shun Party politics—strive to be free!

STATESMAN AND BUFFOON.

S for the Sweets that a Statesman await,
A the Allurement of endless debate;
L for the Laughter when sad wit is strained,
I the Illusion that some good is gained;
S for the Speeches, reported verbatim,
B for poor Big-wig,* Lord! how he must hate 'em; †
U for the Unionists, product amazing,
R the Rad-Leaders—they won't set Thames blazing
Y 's are the Tories (hem!) Cecil can lead 'em,
Stick to 'em, Bully boy, banter 'em, bleed 'em!

* Lord Chancellor or Speaker, whichever you like—or both. † i.e., the speeches. Pyramid.

S is a Statesman unequalled in power,
A his Assurance in danger's dark hour;
L was the Largeness and breadth of his view,
I was the Intellect governing his crew,
S was the Sense of his country's just aims,
B was his Brilliance in urging her claims,
U was the United opinion all round,
R of the Rest to be under him found;
Y is the Yoke which all of us dread,
Can it ever be ours with this Chief at our head
S was the Sign that our triumphs were done,
A our Alliances lost one by one;
L the Last legs upon which England stands,
I in Importance among other lands;
S the Seant courtesy foreigners show,
B is their B R A V A D O;
U the Uncertainty where it may end,
R our Requirement to find a firm friend;
Y is the Yoke that we fear may be ours,
If England is bested by all foreign powers.

Flexible.

S is the Statesman, courageous and sane;
A the Alarmist, with "keys" on the brain;
L the Large map that a Jingo requires,
I the Imperial growth he desires;
S is for Speeches, sarcastic or witty,
B for a Banquet enjoyed in the City;
U for the Unionists, loyal and true,
R for the Rads—a discredited crew;
Y for their Yell, when a Salisbury bold,
Cares for the realm, like the Cecils of old.

S is the Strong man, whose zenith is past,
A "the Assassin," who laughs to the last;
L is the L.C.C.'s threatened impasse,
I is the Irish Bill, bribing a class;
S is the Sphinx lady leaguers adore,
B is "the Black man" and blunders galore;
U is Untold diplomatic defeats,
R is for Russia's unholy deceits;
Y is the Year when we backed the wrong horse,
Cause of the Cyprus Convention—and worse.

Orlando.

S is the Sense, which you've shown that you lack;
A 's your Activity—would you hold back?
L is the Landlord, who grumbles through you,
I is for India, whose wars you will rue;
S is your Speeches, so very diffuse,
B is your Battles, sans honour or use;
U is the Unionists—thorn in your side,
R is your Rule—you're a very poor guide;
Y is the Yearning we have for your fall,
Throw up the sponge and be thanked by us all.

S is the Sense you have always displayed,
A 's your Activity naught has delayed;
L is the Landlord whose rights you upheld,
I is for India with war-clouds dispelled;
S is your Speeches, so terse and so neat,
B is your Battles, with ne'er a defeat;
U is the Unionists—foes turned to friends,
R is your Rule, which, we hope, never ends;
Y is the Yearning we have for the Tories,
Go on, old boy, nor heed Radical stories.

Almaviva.

S is the Statesmen whose Stratagems fail,
A is the Arts which his blundering veil;
L is the Lies they "diplomacy" call,
I, Idiot jingoes, who swallow them all;
S is the Stupid, who follow like Sheep,
B, Britain's Birthright, he sells very cheap;
U is his Useless Unpractical game,
R the Reproach it will bring on our name;
Y is the Yell of derision which hails,
S alisbury, when all see his policy fails.

S is the Statesman, Sagacious and Strong,
A his Abhorrence of falsehood and wrong;
L is his Loyalty, Lasting through Life,
I his Instinctive avoidance of strife;
S is his Stedfast Support of our cause,
B is his Bills for improving our laws;
U is the Union he helped us to keep,
R is the Righteous Reward he will Reap;
Y is the Yielding of well-earned renown,
To Salisbury, mainstay of empire and crown.

Ludwig B.

S is the Statesman, whose equals are few;
A is his Arguments, weighty and true;
L is his Life-work, a record of fame;
I our own Islands, proud of his name;
S is the Sovereign, he loyally serves;
B is Beaulieu, which for rest he reserves;
U the Urbanity shown to his foes;
R the Respect for him each of them knows:
Y is the Youth, in his footsteps who treads.
To Salisbury and Balfour let all bare their heads.

S is the Statesman, believed in by few;
A is his Arguments, mostly untrue;
L is the Laugh, Russia gives at his name;
I our lov'd Islands, by him robbed of fame;
S is the Sample we've had how he falls;
B is the Bounce, at which no one quails;
U is the Utterance, from which he now swerves;
R the Royal frown, that the richly deserves;
Y the Young man, to his uncle who sticks.
Salisbury and Balfour, we see through your tricks.

James.

S is a Statesman, one quite "up to date,"
A, his Ambition to safeguard the State;
L is his Level head, calm, clear, and cool,
I, an Intuitive aptness for rule;
S is Sharp practice, abhorrent to us,
B is our Boss, with his eye on the Russ;
U is for Union, the true Briton's creed,
R is the Radical's pestilent breed;
Y is the Yankee, who'll join us with joy,
So stick to your colours, Solly, my boy!

S is our Specially-gifted First Minister,
A is his Aspect some people think sinister;
L is his Liberal-Unionist show,
I is his Ill-concealed distrust of Joe;
S is a Shallow pretence of statecraft,
B is his Blunders all round, fore and aft;
U 's "Unfit for the place," writ in large letters,
R, "Right about face, make way for your betters;"
Y is the Jingo Yoke cast off with joy,
Up sticks and off with you, Solly, my boy!

Baritone.

S is the Science he ever displays,
A the Acumen that marks all his ways;
L denotes Leader's and Lawgiver's art,
I shows Imperial Interests at heart;
S is his Skill in diplomacy's fight,
B stands for Boldness in guarding the right;
U his Uprightness at all times and hours,
R the revering respect of the Powers;
Y is his Youthfulness, 'spite of his years,
Sum up the total, "Salisbury" appears.

S is Salisbury, easily caught,
A the Abundance of harm he has wrought;
L points to liberal Licking of boots,
I means Inaction whenever it suits;
S Shilly-shally—"We won't!" "No, we will!"
B the Belief some folks have in him still!
U is the Unction that cloaks inability,
R the Reverse after boasted stability;
Y suggests Yielding to any demand:
Here you have "Salisbury" ready to hand.

King Hal.

1894.

S for the Strong Man, the prop of the realm;
A the Acumen displayed at the helm;
L for the Landlords, who wildly hoorayed;
I for the Impetus given to trade;
S for the Safety his ægis afforded;
B the Blank Cheque that the country awarded;
U the Unique coalition on view;
R for the Rout of the Radical crew;
Y for the Yildiz Kiosk and the Yamen,
Anxious to add to his dicta their Amen.

1898.

S for the Seathing remarks in the Press;
A the Alarm o'er the Far-Eastern mess;
L for the Legend* that went down so well;
I for the Inches that made up the ell;
S for South Norfolk, that glory of glories;
B the Blaspheming it caused to the Tories;
U for that "Usufruct": What's in a name?
R for the Russians, who collared the same;
Y for the Yarns that got rid of our ships.
Pity the woes of the Government whips!

* Talienwan. Scissors.

S is a Statesman, whose wisdom some doubt,
A his Address, which made a great rout ;
L is the League where he spoke out his mind,
I Indignation coming swiftly behind ;
S is for Spain, who he says is nigh sped,
B is for Balfour, who acts in his stead ;
U Uncle Sam, who he'd like for a friend,
R is for Russia, he fears to offend ;
Y is the Yell of popular glee,
On seeing the last of Lord Salisbur ee.

S for the Statesman at the head of the realm,
A his Adroitness in guiding the helm ;
L his friends' Love his policy gains,
I his foes' Ire he rightly disdains ;
S for his Speeches, with wisdom they're fraught,
B for the Benefits to England he's brought ;
U for the Unionists, staunchest of friends,
R for the Rads, whom he often offends ;
Y for the Yankees, with whom we shall be
Soon firmly allied through Lord Salisbur-ee.
Sheila.

S is the Savant, reserved, but not grim,
A the Affairs that seem foreign to him ;
L is the Loss of our prestige and fame,
I Indecision, the cause of the same ;
S is the Speech, with assurance replete,
B is the Bluster preceding retreat ;
U is the Useless, paraded as gain,
R our just Rights that he fails to maintain ;
Y is his Yelp, which the Russians pooh-pooh :
Act with some dignity, Salisbury, do !

S is the Stroke, the best Government oar,
A is his Action which keeps us from war ;
L is his Loathing for public caress,
I his "Insouciance" baffling the Press ;
S his sweet Speech where he praised the dead foe,
B is a "Brum," his worst rival, you know ;
U is his Use in a dangerous race,
R for the Russophobes urging the pace ;
Y is for You, Cecil : "steady your crew ;"
Set a slow stroke, boy, and pull it well through !
Oom Paul.

S is the Statesman, far-seeing and wise,
A 's the Admiring gaze of all eyes ;
L is the Loyalty, true and unswerving,
I is the Intellect : never time-serving ;
S is the Strength, both of will and of deed,
B is the Broadness of purpose and creed ;
U 's the Unanimous respect that he gains,
R is the Ruler who holds tight the reins ;
Y is the Yellow League dames he addressed :
Salisbury, we greet thee with honour and zest !

S is the Slave to Conservative greed,
A Is the Ally to red-tape and its breed ;
L 's the Longshoreman of foreign relations,
I is the Imbecile trifler with nations ;
S is the slowness in seizing a chance,
B is the Braggart who ne'er broke a lance ;
U the Ubiquitous squire of dames,
R is the Ranter who our respect (?) claims ;
Y is the Yellow Press he pats on the back :
Salisbury, in politics you're nought but a quack !
Flamingo.

S is the Statesman—the first to my mind,
A is the Answer he always can find ;
L is the Logic and Law that he teaches,
I the Irony that flavours his speeches ;
S is the Sense that keeps war from our shores,
B is the "Bunkum" he calmly ignores ;
U is the Union dear to his heart,
R, Radical foes, without captain or chart ;
Y is his Yea to reforms that are right :
Long live Salisbury and old England's might !

S is a Statesman—not quite a success,
A his Arguments that fail to impress ;
L is the Liberals, whose bills he annexes,
I the poor Irish whose soul he so vexes ;
S is the Sultan, who set him at naught,
B, By-elections he's lost (as he ought) ;
U is the Union he upholds by much "gab,"
R is the Russian that beat him at "grab" ;
Y is the Yarns that the Tories must tell :
Down with Lord Salisbury and Tories as well !
Mem-sahib.

S is the Steersman—the pilot of State,
A the Admirers his actions create ;
L is his Language—his verbal facility,
I his complete Indefatigability ;
S is his Strength, where he needs to be strong,
B is the Britain he guards against wrong ;
U is the Union he fought to maintain,
R is his Record—one worthy the reign ;
Y is his Yearning for what's right and true.
Well done, my lord ! England needs men like you.

S is the Sneersman—the Pilate of State,
A is the Anger his actions create ;
L is his Language—oft marred by scurrility,
I is his obvious Incapability ;
S is his Shuffling where he should be strong,
B is the Britain he puts in the wrong ;
U is his Usefulness, not yet begun,
R is his Record—a second-rate one ;
Y is his Yielding all over the world
Wherever the foreigner's flag is unfurled.
Vox.

"Laudatur ab his ; culpatur ab illis."—Horace

EULOGISTIC.

S is the Safety he gives to the State,
A the Alliance with Yankees first-rate ;*
L is the Lords, the support of the Crown,†
I Idiots who try to pull them both down ;
S Strictures of those who don't know his game,
B Babel of tongues in praise and in blame ;
U Usury laws receiving reform,
R is Religion still braving the storm ;‡
Y Yellow-Press sneers—he still holds the helm :
While Salisbury steers, no seas will o'erwhelm.

CRITICAL.

"But the children of Belial said, How shall this man save us ?"—1 Samuel x., 27.

S is the Slav'ry he's brought on the State,
A the Alliance which comes rather late ;
L Ladies and League, landlords and land-laws,
I Ignorant persons shouting applause ;
S the Surrender of claim after claim,
B for the Bullies who laugh at our shame ;
U is the Ukase we're forc d to obey,
R Russia ord'ring our warships away ;
Y is the Yell of the coming Jack Cade :
Rise, Britons degraded, deceived, and betrayed !
J. McGrigor Allan.

* But for Lord Salisbury, we might be at war with Germany and Russia.

† "Thank God we have still a House of Lords."—Palmerston.

‡ "Religion, blushing, veils her sacred fires,
And unawares Morality expires."
"The Dunciad."

Answers have been received from : Flexible, Sissie, Bel Demonio, Opinion, Oom Paul, Baritone, Agile, Scissors, Flamingo, Mrs. Toogood, Hope, Sheila, Yorick, Dumnorix, Vox, Beta, Cadwallader, Creran, Highwayman, Singcon, Esperanza, Salisbury, Crock, Echo, Almaviva, Lyswys, Dido, Mrs. Arthur, Gadfly, Arabella, Alastor, Orlando, Omar Khayyam, Fir Tree, Mona, Laureston, R. F., J. McGrigor Allan, Lydia, Scorpio, Natal, Max, Leverite, King Hal, E. W. S. B., Coalheaver, Troy, James Dungarvan, Eleda, Commoner, V. C., Ludwig B., Edgcome, R. Martin, Béranger, Avonside, Pyramid.

Madame Marie Mathieu,

Who has been privately patronised by the highest ladies in England and abroad, begs to state that BY THEIR DESIRE she has now taken additional rooms at

23, CONDUIT STREET, W.

She wishes it to be known that she is the SOLE OWNER and IMPORTER of the OIL which she uses in her treatment for the removal of wrinkles and in all her preparations for the skin.

Prices : Derma Paste, 10/6; Crême Roma, 5/- ; Avoinine Powder, 3/6.

All these preparations are harmless, healthy, and most beneficial to the skin.

Hours: 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Toilet "Lanoline" For Delicate and Sensitive Skins. 6d. AND 1s.

"LANOLINE" Toilet Preparations "LANOLINE" from all Chemists.

Dartring Brand.

Wholesale Depôt:—67 HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON.

"Lanoline" Toilet Soap For Health and Beauty of the Skin. 6D. PER TABLET. 8 IN A BOX 1s. 6D.

USE ONLY

BLAISDELL PENCILS

SELF-POINTING.

ALL COLOURS. ALL GRADES.

NO WASTE. BEST LEADS.

Black Lead 1d. & 2d. Coloured Crayons 2d. & 3d.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Sample Box of 5 Pencils 1s., Free by Post in the U.K.

BLAISDELL PENCILS, Ltd., 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

NOTICE. THE NEW

"CRICKLITE" LAMPS

FOR DINNER TABLES AND DRAWING ROOMS.

Can be SEEN and purchased ONLY at

75, REGENT STREET, next door to St. James's Hall, and 156, REGENT STREET, AND NOWHERE ELSE.

A Special Set of CRICKLITE LAMPS expressly made for HIS IMPERIAL MAJESTY the SULTAN of TURKEY is now on view.

N.B.—Please write for the new Book of Designs, Now Ready.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide (259 pgs.), 3d., "How to open respectably £20 to £2,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., Euston-rd., Ldn. Hairdressers fitted.—H. MYERS.

"COOPER" CYCLES.

From £5 10. Competition Defied.

Latest design Frame, large Weldless Steel Tubes, Ball Bearings, Tangent Wheels, Brake, and Mud-guards, Cushion Tyres, £5 10 ; Pneumatic, £7 10 ; Ladies', with Dress and Gear Guards, from £6. Twelve months' warranty. Lists free. AGENTS WANTED

Wm. Cooper, 753, Old Kent Rd., London, S.E.

FRANZ JOSEF

APERIENT WATER

Highly appreciated all over the World for Twenty Years past.

Is the Only Palatable Natural Aperient Water. SOLD EVERYWHERE. HEAD OFFICE: BUDAPEST.

Genuine Old Welch Dressers

(Inlaid and Carved Oak), from £6. 10s.

ILLUSTRATED PRICED CATALOGUES POST FREE.
ALL GOODS CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY STATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

ESTATE DEPARTMENT.
Auctions and Private Sales, Valuations, Lettings, Surveys, Repairs, and Decorations.

HEWETSONS,
OTTENHAM COURT ROAD, London, W.

ATKINSON'S
EAU DE
COLOGNE

Is absolutely the finest made.
More fragrant, more lasting, and very much more refreshing than all others.
USE ONLY ATKINSON'S:
ONCE USED, ALWAYS USED.
Single Bottle 2/3 post free,
Case of 6 Bottles 11s. Carriage Paid.
OF ALL DEALERS.
J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London,
INVENTORS OF THE CELEBRATED
"WHITE ROSE" PERFUME.
"A Charming Scent."—H.R.H. The Duchess of York.

JUNO CYCLES ARE THE VERY BEST
Any JUNO Twelve Monthly Payments.
JUNO Lady's or Gent's Safety, £12 12s., 21/- monthly; £14 14s., 24/6 monthly. JUNOS from £10, 16/8 monthly. Write for New Season's List of JUNO Cycles & Accessories, sent post free. Junos shipped to all parts of the world. Large discount.
METROPOLITAN MACHINISTS CO., LTD.
75, 76, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.; & at Piccadilly Circus, London W.

LIQUEURS OF THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE.
These delicious Liqueurs, which have come so much into public favour on account of their wonderful properties of aiding Digestion and preventing Dyspepsia, can now be had of all the principal Wine and Spirit Merchants, and all good Hotels and Restaurants throughout the Kingdom.
Sole Consignee: W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

Enormous Demand.

There can be no surer sign of popularity than the enormous demand all over the country for

LIPTONS' DELICIOUS TEAS

They are appreciated everywhere for their delicate flavour and exquisite aroma, and undoubtedly have attained the pinnacle of fame.

LIPTONS' DELICIOUS TEAS. Millions drink them daily.

Millions of people are daily drinking and enjoying these delicious Teas, fresh from the sweet-scented island of Ceylon. Liptons own e of the most famous estates in Ceylon, which cover thousands of acres of the best tea-growing land, including such well-known gardens Dambattenne, Laymastotte, Monerakande, Mahadambatenne, Mousakelle, Pooprassie, Hanagalla, Gigranella, Karandagalla, Daminatenne, field, and Nahakettia, in connection with which several thousand natives are constantly employed.

LIPTONS CONTROL THE TEA MARKET.

IPTONS' TEAS
HAVE THE ARGEST SALE
IN THE WORLD

ROYAL APPOINTMENT
LIPTON,
Tea Merchant by Special Appointment To Her Majesty The Queen.

BUY FROM THE GROWERS.
The Finest Tea the World can produce.
PER 1/7 LB.
NO HIGHER PRICE.
RICH, PURE, AND FRAGRANT.
PER 1/- AND 1/4 LB.

IPTON LTD.,
TEA, COFFEE, AND COCOA PLANTERS, CEYLON,
THE LARGEST TEA, COFFEE, AND PROVISION DEALERS IN THE WORLD.

Chief Offices: CITY ROAD, LONDON. Branches and Agencies throughout the World.
Offices and Tea and Coffee Shipping Warehouses: PRINCE STREET, and MADDEMA MILLS, CINNAMON GARDENS, COLOMBO. Indian Offices and Shipping Warehouses: HARE STREET. CALCUTTA.

See the
ILLUSTRATED ESTIMATES
in Hampton & Sons' Catalogue for the best values for furnishing throughout for £250, £500, £750, £1,000, £1,500, and £2,000 respectively.

HAMPTON & SONS. LTD

NEW CATALOGUES SENT FREE.

ORIGINAL SCHEMES FOR THE DECORATING AND FURNISHING OF ENTIRE HOUSES OR SINGLE ROOMS IN ANY OF THE TRADITIONAL STYLES OR IN THE BEST MODERN MANNER, DESIGNED BY ARTISTS AND EXECUTED BY MASTER CRAFTSMEN AT COMPETITIVE ESTIMATE PRICES

SUGGESTIVE SCHEMES AND ESTIMATES FREE.

Decorations. Furniture.

For the best means of Furnishing throughout in most tasteful manner at any degree of cost, see Hampton & Sons' extensive & unrivalled Stocks of Decorations, Furniture, Carpets, Fabrics, &c.

Suggestive Schemes and competitive estimates free.

Illustrated Catalogue sent free.

Carpets. Fabrics.

Fine Arts.

CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY RAILWAY STATION IN THE UNITED KINGDOM ON PURCHASES OVER 20/-

PALL MALL EAST. S.W.

WORKS BELVEDERE ROAD. S.E.

Hampton & Sons' Postal Department is equip with ample facilities for supplying by ret post PRICED PATTERNS of their NEW P DUCTIONS for the 1898 Spring Season Furnishing. Fabrics of every description, promptly executing with utmost care all or received by post. Patterns F

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & WYMAN, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-We in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.

TRUTH

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1119. Vol. XLIII. Thursday, June 9, 1898. Price Sixpence.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Building," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen has two big functions in prospect during the summer residence of the Court at Windsor Castle, which will be from the 22nd until about July 15. There is to be a great review at Aldershot on Laffan's Plain early in July, which will be attended by the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and other members of the Royal family. There will also be a visit to London, as her Majesty has decided that she will herself lay the foundation stone of the new buildings of the South Kensington Museum. This will be a semi-State ceremonial, and, according to present arrangements, the Queen is to come up from Windsor in the afternoon, drive from Paddington to South Kensington, and then return to Windsor directly afterwards. I hear that in future the South Kensington Museum is to be named the Victoria and Albert Museum, a designation which the Queen will formally announce when she lays the foundation stone of the new buildings.

Her Majesty will hold an Investiture for the Birthday Honours at Windsor Castle about a week after the return of the Court from Scotland, which is fixed for Tuesday, the 21st.

The Prince and Princess of Wales are to be the guests of Lord and Lady Wantage at Lockinge Park, Berkshire, from next Saturday evening until Monday morning. The Prince is to visit Reading, when on his way to Lockinge, on Saturday, accompanied by Prince Christian, where he is to formally open the University Extension College, and Lord Wantage will afterwards give a luncheon in the Queen's Hall to nearly 600 guests. The Prince of Wales is to propose the toast of "Reading College," and Lord Spencer will give "The University of Oxford and the House of Christ Church." The Prince of Wales goes on from Reading to Wantage at 4.45 by special train, and the Princess will travel there direct from Paddington in the afternoon.

The Prince of Wales is to visit the show of the Royal Agricultural Society in Four Oaks Park, near Birmingham, on Wednesday, the 22nd, and he will be present at the annual meeting of the members also. Lord Coventry is to replace Lord Spencer in the Presidency. The Prince is to be the guest of Lord and Lady Warwick at Warwick Castle, where he is to arrive on the evening of Tuesday, the 21st, and he will return to town on Thursday, the 23rd.

H.R.H. and the Princess could have been lodged at Windsor Castle during Ascot race week, but they did not care to stay there. The Queen was quite willing to place apartments at their disposal for the week.

The usual Royal picnic at Virginia Water on the Saturday in Ascot week will not take place this year, according to present arrangements. The Princess of Wales will be in town, and the Prince is going on that day to Wellington College, to be present at the speeches.

Princess Beatrice, who is taking the waters at Kissingen, is to leave that place on Saturday, the 18th, when H.R.H. goes to Schloss Rosenau, near Coburg, on a brief visit to the Duke and Duchess of Coburg; and afterwards to the Château of Heiligenberg, on the Bergstrasse, near Darmstadt, where she will spend a week with Princess Louis of Battenberg.

The Empress Frederick will come to England next month for a week or two on a visit to the Queen, accompanied by her eldest daughter, the Hereditary Princess of Saxe-Meiningen, and her granddaughter, Princess Feodore, whose marriage with Prince Henry XXX. of Reuss is to take place at Breslau on September 24, and the Prince of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Coburg, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Prince and Princess Christian will be present, as well as the German Emperor and Empress, and a host of Hohenzollerns. The wedding is not to take place at Meiningen, because there would be all kinds of botherations about etiquette and precedence, in consequence of the Grand Duke of Saxe-Meiningen (grandfather of the bride) having a morganatic wife, the Baroness Heldburg.

The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Hesse, who are staying at Laxenburg, near Vienna, with the Archduchess

Stephanie, are to pay a visit to the Queen at Osborne at the end of July or early in August.

A large sum of money—£2,000 at the lowest estimate—is about to be spent on altering the barracks at Hampton Court Palace, so that they may face to the south instead of to the north. It is generally understood that the only reason for this alteration is that the lady residents at Hampton Court may be relieved of the sight of the straw from the stables drying in front of the present barracks. If no better reason than this can be given, and no other is apparent, the proposed expenditure is about as monstrous and unjustifiable a waste of public money as any Government has committed. To begin with, it will be impossible to dry the stable straw on the other side of the barracks during at least six months of the year, as it must be laid out in the sun, so that the supposed annoyance at present caused by it will still be experienced, though in a mitigated form. On the other hand, there are good reasons, well understood by those on the spot familiar with the circumstances, against secluding the back of the barracks from all observation. If any lady at Hampton Court is dissatisfied with the apartments at present given to her rent free, she is always at liberty to remove elsewhere, and it would even be to the interest of the taxpayer to provide her with a few shillings a week for the purpose, instead of spending some thousands of pounds on the alterations now proposed.

The standard floats neither over Dublin Castle nor the Viceregal Lodge. The Lord-Lieutenant is away on the long vacation, or rather Lord Cadogan, for at a particular point in the Irish Channel the Viceroy goes through one of those quick changes peculiar to the office, and becomes shorn of Viceregal attributes. His glories pale, as the fabled Cinderella's did at midnight. A Lord-Lieutenant may receive a Viceregal salute at Kingstown but never at Holyhead; his dignities disappear on the passage. The position of a Lord-Lieutenant, in its varieties and intricacies, compares only with the Irish Question itself. In Lord Cadogan's playing of the Viceroy's varied rôles, the English nobleman holds a very prominent—even predominant—part. The Viceroy for almost the first time on record left Dublin on the day preceding the one on which the Birthday Review was held in the Phœnix Park. On the next day Lord Cadogan attended the Derby.

Lord and Lady Cadogan will as usual return to the Viceregal Lodge in August, after the London season and the Goodwood week. During that month, at the end of it, the annual Horse Show will be held in the grounds and buildings of the Royal Dublin Society at Ball's Bridge. There will be a Horse Show party at the Viceregal Lodge, for the week, which always draws crowds of visitors from the country and other countries to the Irish capital. The common platform of the horse brings all parties together in Ireland, both those who "fear to speak of '98" and those who do not.

The Kingstown Regatta will be held this year during July, under the auspices of the St. George's Yacht Club, of which the Duke of York is Commodore. A Queen's Cup has been given to the club for the occasion. The weather has kept back the yachting season at Kingstown, a wintry temperature, with high winds and rain, not even yielding to the approach of June.

The Duchess of St. Albans arrived last week in Ireland to stay at Newtown Anner, her residence near Clonmel, in the county of Tipperary. The Duchess is very popular amongst the people, who have known her since her earliest days. The friendship of Irish tenants is not hard to gain when the landlord conforms to the principle of live and let live, of give and take. Unfortunately it was all "take" on the part of the majority of the Irish landlords, a fact to which the innumerable Land Acts of comparatively late years bear witness. The Duke and Duchess of Devonshire spent Whitsuntide at Lismore Castle, their picturesque residence on the banks of the Blackwater. The rumour of a Royal visit to Lismore in the autumn is current in Ireland. The country would have no need to complain of Royal neglect, however, did all the rumoured visits of Royalty take place.

Lord Elgin leaves India in October, and he hopes to arrive at Broomhall, his place in Fifeshire, about the middle of November. Lord Cromer is said to have declined the Viceroyalty, and Lord Balfour of Burleigh will probably succeed Lord Elgin at Calcutta.

The Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly was requested this year to "receive" Parish Councillors at Holyrood Palace in their official capacity. Lord Leven and Melville was willing to "receive" as many Parish Councillors at his Levee as liked to attend, but the number of persons who must be asked to dine at the Palace is so overwhelming that only four could be invited to dinner. An appeal was actually made to Lord Balfour of Burleigh for better terms, but it was not an affair in which the Secretary of State could interfere, and the four tickets were sulkily accepted. The Parish Councillors expected that these tickets would be balloted for, but the four conveners who had conducted the negotiations thought that the best course would be for them to take the tickets for their own use.

Lord Playfair was a clever man and remarkably versatile. He was distinguished as a chemist, as a writer, and as a politician, but he will be remembered more as a highly successful man than for any special eminence in life. When quite young Lord Playfair held the Chair of Chemistry in the Manchester Royal Institution, and he was then lucky enough to marry a rich wife. His second piece of good fortune occurred a few years later, when he was made a Special Commissioner of the 1851 Exhibition, and he there attracted the attention of Prince Albert, with whom he became a great favourite, the result being that he received an important post at South Kensington,

For the Truth Hotel List, see page 1468 in the present issue.
For Hospitals and Appeals, see page 1466.
For Amusements, see pages 1466-7.
For Our Puzzles, see page 1477.

and in 1856 Lord Palmerston (anxious to please the Court) created the office of Inspector-General of Government Museums for the benefit of Mr. Playfair. This lucrative sinecure was abolished when it no longer suited Mr. Playfair to hold it. He was for some years Professor of Chemistry at Edinburgh, and his lectures were most popular. Mr. Playfair entered Parliament in 1868, and sat in the House of Commons until Mr. Gladstone made him a peer in 1892. His best public work was achieved as Chairman of the Civil Service Commission. In the House of Lords he rarely spoke, except on educational questions, in which he always took a keen interest. He was a hearty and unswerving supporter of Mr. Gladstone throughout his public life.

Colonel Pinney, who died last week at the age of ninety-one, was the active leader of the Liberal Party in Somersetshire for many years, and his energy and popularity much contributed to our former successes in that county. Colonel Pinney sat in Parliament for many years, and to the end of his life he was as zealous a Liberal as when he first entered the House of Commons in 1831. He owned large estates in the West of England, and he was a most popular landlord. He passed most of his life at his house in Berkeley-square, where he died, but he paid frequent visits to Somerton, his place in Somersetshire. Colonel Pinney at one time took a prominent part in County business, and he was widely known as an enthusiastic and very learned archæologist.

The death of the veteran swimmer, Beckwith, which took place recently whilst professionally engaged at Uppingham School, induces the reflection that, notwithstanding the exertions of the Amateur Swimming Association and the Life Saving Society, this healthy and necessary art is not yet cultivated to the extent it should be. In spite of the uncongenial weather experienced this year up to now, the deaths already recorded from drowning have been sadly numerous, and although it is too much to expect that we shall ever see the day when the youth of both sexes are compulsorily required to attain a certain standard of proficiency in swimming, it may be accepted as a certainty that either bathing or boating lose the greater portion of their risk to those who have acquired a tolerable knowledge of the art. Headmasters of schools—both public and private—might do much to forward the matter, but the Lords of the Admiralty might do more if swimming were made a necessity throughout the Service.

Sir Thomas Acland, who was a life-long friend of Mr. Gladstone, with whom he was at Christ Church, commenced his career as a Tory, as was almost inevitable with his father's son; but he soon became a Free Trader and Liberal, and ultimately he was a zealous Radical and Home Ruler, and for many years the life and soul of the Liberal Party in Devonshire and West Somersetshire. Sir Thomas was a fine scholar and a clever, energetic, and industrious man. His absorbing object in public life was to advance the cause of education, and he was an ardent promoter of the University Extension movement. Sir Thomas was regarded as being very much of a doctrinaire, and he was always tremendously serious in his views of life, both in great affairs and in merely trifling matters.

Sir Thomas was a very precise man, but his charities of all kinds were munificent, and there never lived a more generous and considerate landlord. A deserving tenant having fallen into difficulties, was sure to obtain both cordial sympathy and substantial assistance from Sir Thomas, and very few people were aware of his many acts of generosity in connection with his tenantry. He owned large family estates in Cornwall, Devonshire, and Somersetshire, and the property was admirably managed under his own supervision. He never was so happy as at Killerton, his beautiful place near Exeter, where he had lived entirely of late years.

The Aclands, like the Wynns, have over and over again refused peerages. "Old Sir Thomas" more than once declined a coronet when he was one of the most popular and influential of the county members. "Young Sir Thomas" is said to have been offered a peerage by Mr. Gladstone in July, 1886, in August, 1892, and again in March, 1894.

There is a story that, some years ago, when Mr. Gladstone was staying in Scotland, he attended service in the Presbyterian church of the parish, and was infinitely disgusted at the references to his presence which were made by the officiating minister. In the course of the "eloquent and impressive" extempore prayer with which that ecclesiastic led the worship of his congregation, he thus delivered himself: "We pray Thee, Lord, of Thy goodness, to bless the Prime Minister of this great nation, who is now worshipping under this roof in the third pew from the pulpit. Lord, we feel ourselves to be the richer for the privilege of his company."

The extempore prayers of Presbyterian divines are apt to be eccentric to the verge of extravagance. A certain minister of high repute was opening an outdoor function with prayer on an occasion when a great personage had failed to keep an engagement to be present; and he thus commenced his supplications: "In consequence of the rain, O Lord! and by reason of the regretted absence of the Princess of Lochnagar, caused, doubtless, by the stormy weather, I do not purpose to address Thee at any length!"

In some of the laudatory obituaries of Mr. Gladstone, I have seen it said that he had a keen sense of humour. I venture to question this. I have heard him make playful speeches, but they were the play of a cat with a mouse. He was too terribly in earnest to see the humour of any situation. There are men who—earnest as they may be to attain their ends—yet never lose sight of the humorous side even of their own earnestness. Mr. Gladstone, I should imagine, was not one of these. Had he been led out to execution, it would never have occurred to him, as it did to Sir Thomas More, to console himself by a humorous view of the impending axe.

SCOTT ADIE, 115, Regent-street, London, for Shooting Gowns, Cawdor Capes, Travelling Ulsters, Jackets, Racing Coats, Carriage Rugs from 10/0, Shawls, and Scotch Tweeds. Catalogue post free.

A BEAUTIFUL HOTEL AT BOURNEMOUTH.—The "ROYAL BATH." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Only Hotel on East Cliff. Moderate fixed tariff.

I remember two scenes between Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli in the House of Commons which illustrate what I mean. When the Reform Bill of the latter was in Committee in 1866, a discussion raged for days about compound householders. Mr. Gladstone and the Liberals denounced the refusal to give a vote to the compounders as a thing almost too wicked for words, and it was thought that the Ministry must be defeated on it. One evening, Member after Member rose from the Ministerial benches to declare that the Government, collectively and individually, would prefer death rather than that compound householders should have votes. The House, as usual, emptied with the approach of the dinner hour. At about nine o'clock Mr. Disraeli got up, when there were not above twenty or thirty members present. There seemed, he said, to be a difference of opinion about compound householders having votes. He himself had no strong views on the subject. The Opposition appeared to have strong views. The question was of very little importance, and, in order to expedite the Bill, he would be quite ready for them to have votes. A messenger was at once despatched to Mr. Gladstone, who had gone home to dinner. A little after ten the House filled up, and Mr. Gladstone reappeared. Almost every one was tickled at the joke of Mr. Disraeli having in a few brief words thrown over his colleagues, and at their having to eat their own words. Not so Mr. Gladstone. He thundered against Mr. Disraeli, at his ignorance of his own Bill, at his levity, and so on.

The other occasion was this. Mr. Gladstone was in the midst of a scathing denunciation of Mr. Disraeli. The latter sat like a sphinx, immovable and imperturbable. Then he put up his eyeglass and looked at the clock, slowly rose, shrugged his shoulders, as he usually did on getting up in order to get his coat into the right position, and slowly walked out of the House. It never seemed to occur to Mr. Gladstone that all this was done in order to irritate him. He stopped short in his speech, he clutched at the table, and only after a minute or two resumed his speech.

I regard a sense of humour as one of the most precious gifts that can be vouchsafed to a human being. He is not necessarily a better man for having it, but he is a happier one. It renders him indifferent to good or bad fortune. It enables him to enjoy his own discomfiture. Blessed with this sense, he is never unduly elated or cast down. No one can ruffle his temper. No abuse disturbs his equanimity. Bores do not bore him. Humbugs do not humbug him. Solemn airs do not impose on him. Sentimental gush does not influence him. The follies of the moment have no hold on him. Titles and decorations are but childish baubles in his eyes. Prejudice does not warp his judgment. He is never in conceit or out of conceit with himself. He abhors all dogmatism. The world is a stage on which actors strut and fret for his edification and amusement, and he pursues the even current of his way, invulnerable, doing what is right and proper according to his lights, but utterly indifferent whether what he does finds approval or disapproval from others. If Hamlet had had any sense of humour, he would not have been a nuisance to himself and to all surrounding him.

There is, of course, to be a memorial to Mr. Gladstone at Oxford, where his features will be rendered familiar to future generations through the admirable portrait by Millais, which hangs in the hall of Christ Church. My own opinion is that the best compliment which the University could pay to Mr. Gladstone, and the one which he himself would have preferred, would be to forthwith restore Bishop Butler's "Analogy" to its old place among the books to be taken up. Butler's immortal work was injudiciously removed from the list thirty or forty years ago, and, although Mark Pattison supported this change at the time, yet, in his "Memoirs," he expresses the opinion that, for solid logic and powerful argument, the "Analogy" surpasses any other book in the English language. Mr. Gladstone said, more than once in his life, "I do not know where I should have been without Butler."

An extraordinary incident has lately occurred at Durham in connection with the Chapter Library. More than fifty years ago a splendid and very valuable copy of the Sarum Missal of 1514, which had been printed in Paris, was mysteriously stolen from a locked case in Bishop Cosin's library. Great efforts were made by the Dean and Chapter to trace the volume, but they proved fruitless. The other day a parcel arrived by post at the Chapter Library, which, on being opened, was found to contain the long-lost treasure, including the bookplate. The volume was returned in perfect condition, but by whom, or whence it was sent back remains a mystery, which is not at all likely to be solved. Is it a case of awakened conscience on the part of the heir of an unscrupulous "collector"?

Among the many art collections of one kind and another on view in London at the present moment, not the least interesting is the collection of Royal and historical china and glass belonging to Mr. C. Wentworth Wass, now being exhibited by Messrs. Thomas Goode & Co., at their galleries in South Audley-street. There is much in the collection which will appeal to connoisseurs; but the finest portion of it is, not the fragments of Royal and historical services, but the Worcester enamels by the late Thomas Bolt. Several of these are works of art of the very highest quality; and the beautiful chalice in the centre of the collection, or the two large vases with designs after Flaxman, would alone repay a visit to South Audley-street.

Trains de Luxe.—Luchon Express, every Tuesday and Thursday, direct to Luchon. Engadine Express, to Coire and Lucerne. Carlsbad Express, daily to Bayreuth, Carlsbad, &c. Tickets and all particulars from International Sleeping Car Co., 14, Cockspur-street, London, S.W.

After looking through the Wass Collection, I wondered why Royal and noble personages should choose to have their arms on their dinner plates. Beautiful as are many of the designs in other respects, and cleverly though the subject has been treated in many cases, it passes the ability of the cleverest artist to make the Royal arms—or, for the matter of that, any other heraldic device—a thing of beauty for decorative purposes. However, I suppose the truth is that monarchs, like humbler mortals, think more about their plates when full than when empty. After all, the chef is the artist who plays the most important part for most people in designing decorations for dinner services.

From the letter of an aggrieved correspondent (dated Sunday evening last), I gather that certain daily papers continue to publish Sunday editions, thus persisting in their determination—arrived at when the war between America and Spain broke out — "to alleviate public anxiety" at all costs. "In the absence of war news of any kind," adds my correspondent, "it must sometimes prove rather difficult for your highly considerate contemporaries to do what they promised, and my experience during to-day has suggested to me that the following verses may not improbably represent what took place at more than one newspaper office this (Sunday) morning":—

"THE ALLEVIATION OF BACKERS."

The Publisher sat in his office chair,
And he said to the Sub, said he,
"Of important news from the Seat of War
Not a par. there seems to be.
For the Sunday Edition that we bring out
Not a head-line good we've got;
Is there anything known to you, my friend?"
And the Sub replied, "There's not!"

"No telegram, eh! that will serve our turn?
No rumour that we can 'fake'?
No new sensation?" The puzzled Sub
Gave his head a gloomy shake.
"No Spanish vessel that we can sink,
As we've sometimes done before?"
Said the Sub, "There isn't a Spanish ship
That we've not sunk—twice or more!"

"Come, think again!" cried the Publisher,
"And just look your 'flimsy' through;
There must be something on which to hang
A bogus battle or two;
Something to fill a column up
Which the newspaper boys can shout."
"I don't see how," said the Sub, "we can bring Our Sunday edition out."

"What's that?" the Publisher almost screamed,
"What's that which you dare to say?
Don't you know how the whole of London waits
In a state of suppressed dismay?
Don't you know that the heart of London thrills
With anxiety sorely great?
An anxiety we have guaranteed,
Recollect, to alleviate.

"They're sitting in thousands—think of that—
From Brompton away to Bow;
On Hornsey's heights and in Clapham's vales
They are yearning the news to know.
With bated breath they await the sound
Of our paper-boys' raucous cry,
And yet you suggest we should not come out—
Oh, fie on you, Sub, oh, fie!

"Come out we must, and come out we will,
For, look you, our word we've pledged;
Yes, though there's never 'a fact' to hand,
Nor even a fight 'alleged.'
Come out we must, and come out we will,
Ere we eat our Sunday dinners!"
"Then there's only one thing," said the Sub, "to do,
To fall back on 'All the Winners!'"

And so they did; and throughout the streets
Of this city of ours so vast,
A howling, yelling, offensive crowd
Of leather-lunged newsboys pass'd.
And thus was the Publisher justified;
For this horde of persistent clackers,
Without a doubt, did serve to allay
The anxiety of—backers!

* * * * *

But, perhaps—if the truth were fully known—
This zeal for the public sake
Would another, and much more selfish, form,
On investigation, take.
This grave concern for the public's nerve—
Lest continued suspense hould shock it—
May be but anxiety, after all,
For the newspaper owner's pocket.

There seems to be a good deal of force in a complaint I have had respecting one of the regulations of the Oxford Local Examinations, which provides that "no fee can be returned under any circumstances, nor carried to the credit of a candidate at a subsequent examination." The latter portion of the rule is surely unnecessary and unreasonable. A candidate has to be entered and the fee of 25s. to be paid more than two months before the date of the examination. If he is prevented by accident or illness from appearing on that date, why should not the fee be carried forward to the next examination? I understand that this privilege is granted to candidates at the Cambridge Local Examinations, and it is difficult to understand on what grounds the Oxford Delegates object to it.

Yet another illustration of the arbitrary and unjust treatment of teachers in Church schools has occurred at Aston, near Stone. The master of the school there, Mr. J. Plant, has held that position for the long period of forty-two years, and no complaint whatever has been made against him on the score of efficiency. The school earns the highest possible grant, and was last year excused the annual examination on account of its high efficiency. There seems, however, to have long been some friction between the Vicar and the schoolmaster, owing, in the first place, to differences respecting the musical services at the church, where Mr. Plant was choirmaster. A month or so ago the Vicar and his fellow-managers, without assigning any reason for their action, intimated that they intended to dispense with Mr. Plant's services, and to apply to the Education Department for a pension for him.

The schoolmaster thereupon wrote to the managers, respectfully appealing to them, in view of his forty-two years' service, to allow him to retain his post a few months longer, as the Superannuation Bill, which is likely to be passed this year, will enable him to obtain a pension of Merryweathers' High-class Garden Hose is the Hose of the day. Write for samples and Lists. "Hoses bought ten years ago still in use."—Merryweathers, 63, Long-acre, London, W.C.

£45 instead of the £25 to which he is at present entitled. The reply of the managers to this reasonable request was a three months' notice of dismissal. Friendly influences are at work to secure, if possible, a withdrawal of this notice, and it is to be hoped that such a settlement may be arrived at. If the managers should persist in the dismissal, the case will assuredly furnish another strong argument in favour of legislation to give Voluntary school-teachers some security of tenure.

I have received the following letter from Archdeacon Sinclair in reference to some comments in last week's TRUTH upon the appointment of the Rev. Eric Farrar to the living of St. John's, Hoxton :—

The Chapter House,
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.

SIR,—The Rev. Eric Farrar was ordained nine years ago by the Bishop of London (Dr. Temple) to the curacy of St. George's-in-the-East, where he worked with conspicuous earnestness under the new Bishop of Islington, Prebendary Turner (then Rector), till 1891. He then worked for three years amongst the poor of St. Margaret's, Westminster. I regarded his acceptance of a Vicarage at Coventry as a mistake at the time, and have always been wishing to have him back in London. St. John's, Hoxton, is one of the most difficult parishes in the Diocese. There are upwards of 18,000 inhabitants, all poor; and some of the streets are marked in the blackest colours in Mr. Charles Booth the statician's "Life and Labour in London." The income, £500 a year (not £600), is gross, not net, and the outgoings are very heavy. The Vicar who has just resigned will, moreover, take with him a third of the income as pension, so that there will be very little for the new Vicar to live upon. Under these circumstances it is eminently necessary that he should be a man of energy and hopefulness. There are many such to be found; but it is unreasonable to consider that four years' absence from London debars me from recalling one whom I examined both as Deacon and Priest, whose work in the East End as well as in the West I valued highly, and who, in my opinion, owed his ripest energies and best years to the Diocese in which he was originally commissioned. In notifying the appointment to the newspapers, I mentioned some of these facts; but they omitted them. Interchange with country work, far from being unfortunate, is often very desirable for London clergymen whose duties lie amongst the poor. Those who know me are well aware of the intense interest I have in the promotion of the London curates; and Mr. Farrar's successful and devoted life as one of them should not be forgotten, because he has been working no less zealously in a poor parish in Coventry.

WILLIAM SINCLAIR,
Archdeacon of London.

The facts in question certainly put a different complexion upon the appointment, and it is to be regretted that the newspapers which originally dealt with the matter omitted to mention them. I trust, however, that the Archdeacon's letter will be the means of removing some of the misconceptions to which this omission has given rise. For my own part, at any rate, I feel bound to say that in view of his statements the preferment of Mr. Farrar to St. John's no longer appears open to the somewhat strong criticism which has been applied to it.

Over a month ago the Vicarage of Chidham, near Chichester, became vacant, and it has been announced that the vacancy has been filled up. In the interim relays of clerics have officiated; but on the last Sunday in May, although the bell was tolled and the congregation duly assembled, no parson made his appearance. The afternoon and evening services also had to be abandoned. This suggests either negligence or very bad management somewhere, and one would like to know what the Bishop has to say to it.

The unexpected deaths of Archdeacons Palmes and Scott will be widely lamented. They were both most admirable clergymen, and had worked hard all their lives, the one in Yorkshire and the other in the diocese of Lichfield. They were popular among both clergy and laity, and were most highly esteemed by all classes and parties. They were both High Churchmen, Archdeacon Palmes being of the school of Dean Hook, under whom he was curate at Leeds for seven years after his ordination.

Some good patronage falls in by the deaths of Archdeacon Scott and Archdeacon Palmes. The Bishop of Lichfield has the disposal of both the Archdeaconry of Stafford (£200 a year), and the Canonry of Lichfield Cathedral (£500 a year, with an excellent residence), and both preferments will probably be given to the same ecclesiastic. The Archbishop of York will appoint the new Archdeacon of the East Riding, whose stipend is £200 a year, and the rectory of Burton Agnes (which was long held by Archdeacon Wilberforce, brother of the Bishop) is worth about £700 a year, and is in the gift of the Dean's family.

The latest report on the state of St. George's Parish Church, Southwark, is decidedly interesting. Owing to the condition of the crypt, in which there are some 2,000 corpses, the church is filled with an effluvium which the Medical Officer to St. George's Vestry has pronounced dangerous to health as well as offensive. The Vestry, being disinclined to deal with the nuisance, have now obtained an analysis of a sample of the air in the church; and it is to the comforting effect that the atmosphere of St. George's "is of normal quality as compared with other metropolitan churches." This suggests that an injustice has sometimes been done to the preachers in attempts to account for the beggarly array of empty benches in so many of these places of worship. The smallness of the congregations may be due as much to a wholesome dread of the prevalent microbes as to an irreverent horror of the sermons.

I have received the following amounts towards Lady Jeune's Fund :—Ed. F. Chance, £5; B. A., £1 (also £2 towards the deficit of the Toy Fund); A. C., £2; Anon., £25; S. W., £5; A Friend, Windermere, 10s.; O. G., £1; Mount Park Crescent, £1 1s.

May I particularly call the attention of my readers to the contribution, acknowledged above, towards the deficit in the TRUTH Toy Fund? I do so in the hope that others may be induced to follow the generous and thoughtful example of "B. A." For the sake of the thousands of children in the London hospitals and workhouses, I am most anxious that this deficit should be wiped out before I have to make any appeal in connection with the next distribution of toys. It is always so much more satisfactory and encouraging to start the preparations for a fresh Toy Show with a clean sheet.

In response to the recent appeal published in TRUTH on behalf of the family of Karditz, I have received £2 2s. from Mr. Henry Ablitt and a postal order for £1 from an anonymous donor.

As Sir Evelyn Wood has justly observed, it is not "in accordance with the traditions of the Army" that a hero who has gained the Victoria Cross should get his living by appearing for so much a night on the stage of a variety theatre. It is far more in accordance with those traditions, as Mr. Bernard Shaw has also justly observed, that the hero should make his appearance in the workhouse, at the expense of the ratepayers. At the same time, if the public are so anxious to behold their heroes in the flesh that a board of directors will pay a hero £25 a night to do a five minutes' "turn," I do not precisely see how the traditions of the Army give anybody a right to object to that hero accepting such an engagement—at any rate without offering a cash equivalent as compensation. Something purporting to be an equivalent was offered to Piper Findlater, and he has declined it, holding, I suppose, that it was not good enough. The moral seems to be that, in future, the Victoria Cross should carry with it a sufficient gratuity in cash to relieve the recipient from the necessity of violating "the traditions of the Army" by exhibiting himself at a public entertainment. In thus demonstrating the value of the decoration as a realisable asset, Findlater has rendered a service only second to his performance at Dargai—and quite as Scotch.

I cannot help thinking that there are others besides those who have been mentioned in despatches and have won Victoria Crosses who might profit by Findlater's example. Look at all the unemployed military men about the West-End and elsewhere. Many of them, I know, are anxious to find light employment, provided it is sufficiently light; and in these days of stage realism there must surely be plentiful openings for real officers in real uniforms, and possibly real medals, either as supers at the theatres or in dumb-show at the music-halls. If the War Office interfered on the ground that it is contrary to the traditions of the Army for real half-pay officers to display themselves on the stage, then the Findlater precedent would come in at once. The half-pay brigade could reply:—"Find us snug berths in the Royal Household, or give us the equivalent in cash for our present salaries, and we will retire from the stage at once." I would suggest that a meeting be called at once at one of the military clubs to consider this proposal.

After all, what is the difference between the Piper earning his bawbees by means of his bagpipes and some General on half-pay earning his guineas by acting as the Director of some rotten Company? So far as I can see, the difference is all in favour of the Piper. So is his refusal of the Queen's offer—kind as it was—of a place among her domestics. To many the position of a Royal flunkey is the most glorious to which mortal can aspire. To others it is not.

A military correspondent points out that the promotion of Major-General Hutchinson, referred to in last week's TRUTH, is by no means a unique instance of recent War Office procedure, but rather an example of what is always going on. For instance, last autumn Colonel Marshall was appointed to the command of the Royal Artillery at Aldershot, and made a temporary Major-General for the purpose, he being at that time about twentieth on the list of Colonels R.A., and devoid of any service distinction, while above him were many unemployed Major-Generals and Colonels, who had been mentioned in despatches, or promoted specially for service in the field. By every appointment of a Colonel to the temporary rank of Major-General, while there are officers of the latter rank unemployed, the taxpayer is virtually saddled with a needless charge of £500; and where the men whose claims are thus set aside have been judged fit for promotion, and the man preferred to them has no special claims of any kind, the taxpayer is being robbed, and the interests of the Service and of other officers sacrificed, merely to enrich the friend of some exalted functionary at headquarters.

I hear that the Indian Government has objected to the return of Major Boileau to England to take up the Secretaryship of the Royal Artillery Institution, under the circumstances already noted in TRUTH. It might have been supposed that this rebuff would have put an end to the proposed job; but the jobbers who now rule the Army are cast in no ordinary mould. Being unable to get Major Boileau back at once, instead of abandoning their nefarious intentions, they have fallen back on the expedient of keeping open the appointment until the Major has completed the minimum term of one year which he virtually contracted to serve in India; and in the meantime the duties are to be carried on by the present Secretary, who has already held the post two years longer than he was lawfully entitled to! So the last state of the job is worse than the first.

A professional journal calls attention to the fact that the post of President of the Army Sanitary Committee has been vacant for at least four months past, and goes on to suggest that the vacancy should be filled, either by the Director-General of the Army Medical Staff, or a Surgeon-Major-General on full pay. The idea is to give the Medical Department the casting vote on any question of military sanitation; and there can be no question that there is much in the suggestion. I do not know that one can look upon every Army medical officer as an expert in sanitation, but at least he may be presumed to have more practical knowledge of the subject than a combatant officer, or even a representative of any other Departmental corps.

The Birmingham papers have published an account of certain performances of the officers of the Warwickshire Yeomanry during their recent training at Warwick, which rival the historic performance of the gallant 4th Hussars in the case of Mr. Hodge. The story is to the effect that an officer just joined, who had retired to his lodgings while other members of the mess were carousing in the County Hall, was, about midnight, hunted out of his bedroom, overpowered, after knocking down one or two of his assailants, and carried back through the streets in his night clothes to the mess-room, where undescribed —possibly indescribable—indignities were perpetrated upon him. Incidentally, he was so injured by the rough usage he received, that he was laid up for some days afterwards. I give these statements as they appear in the Birmingham papers. Whether true or not, they call for investigation, if only for the sake of the credit of the regiment. And if they are true, they call for rigorous punishment—though whether that result will follow is a matter on which those who remember the history of the 4th Hussars scandals will not be too sanguine.

Challis's Royal Hotel, Rupert-street, Piccadilly-circus.—The new Louis XV. Dining-room now open for Luncheons and Dinners. Table d'Hôte Luncheon, 2/-, from 12.30 to 3 p.m.; Table d'Hôte Dinner, 3/6, from 6.30 to 9 p.m., served at separate tables. Open to non-residents.

I fear that the officer commanding the troops at Spike Island is not only deficient in a sense of humour, but also very slow at taking a hint. Some weeks back reference was made in TRUTH to a strange order issued by this officer appointing a certain lady as official midwife to the garrison, declaring her, in the C.O.'s opinion, perfectly qualified for the purpose of her delicate duties, and fixing the scale of remuneration. I pointed out then that for an officer — more especially when he happens, as in this case, to be a single man — to interfere in matters of this kind is a somewhat risky proceeding; and that the wives and mothers of the garrison, as well as their husbands, could not be expected to accept without question his judgment upon the qualifications of the lady. The O.C. does not seem to have accepted this view, and the official Mrs. Gamp still monopolises the practice at Fort Westmoreland. A great deal of needless dissatisfaction and ill-feeling are thereby caused, and I think the time has now come when some higher authority should look into this extraordinary state of things.

A reason has at last been forthcoming for the objection which some of the Army and Navy pensioners entertain to the proposed payment of pensions at shorter intervals than at present. It is this: a pension being paid quarterly in advance, if a pensioner dies early in the quarter his widow or representatives have the benefit of the unexpended portion of it; and it is feared that this benefit, would be lost if the payment were made weekly or monthly. There is reason in this, for the pension is earned and granted on the condition that it shall be paid on the present system, so that every man has a vested interest in his pension for one quarter in advance. But this could be easily met by laying down that, on the death of a pensioner, his pension, up to the end of the quarter, should be paid to his widow or representatives.

On the Queen's Birthday parade at Hamilton Depot, after the usual salutes and cheers had been gone through, a sergeant of the Permanent Staff of the 4th Highland Light Infantry was summoned to the front, and formally presented with an Army Temperance Association medal, the ceremony concluding with an address by the officer in command on the virtues of temperance. No doubt this function was designed with the best objects, but I hear that the result of it has been to expose the sergeant to unlimited chaff, and generally to make the cause of temperance ridiculous in the eyes of the Depot, which seems natural enough. The incident shows how easy it is to defeat your own purpose by doing the right thing in the wrong way.

I have been having some correspondence on a point of military law arising out of the recent case of Private, late Corporal, Simpson, of the 2nd Grenadier Guards. Simpson, it will be remembered, was court-martialled on a charge of drunkenness, and, in spite of a direct conflict of evidence, was sentenced to imprisonment, reduction to the ranks, and a fine of 10s. The Regulations and the Army Act seem to lay down clearly that a man cannot be fined for drunkenness at all until his third offence, and not for the third or any subsequent offence unless it is within nine months of the last previous entry; otherwise he may be fined from 2s. 6d. to 7s. 6d., according to the time he has been clear of an entry. He can only be fined an additional half-crown where he has been previously convicted four times within twelve months. Now, at the time of his last conviction, Simpson had no previous entry against him since April, 1896, very nearly two years. The fine of 10s. would, therefore, appear to have been utterly illegal. It seems an extraordinary thing that this point should have been overlooked by the court which tried the man, and still more extraordinary that it should not have been brought to the notice of the General, or the Judge Advocate-General, before the sentence was confirmed. Unless my view of the law is wrong, I would respectfully suggest to the Colonel of the Regiment that the commonest justice requires that this should be put right, and the amount of the fine be refunded.

A well-informed correspondent tells me, with reference to the refusal to serve soldiers in hotels in India, that it is actually a condition of every licence, enforced by the Excise authorities and printed on the licence, that soldiers in uniform are not to be served. So far from the exclusion of soldiers being peculiar to the better class hotels, it is said to be in these that a soldier has the best chance of being served, owing to their having less fear of imperilling their licences. All this only adds force to what I said, last week, namely, that the military powers should take the matter up. My present correspondent asserts that there is no prejudice against soldiers among Europeans in India. There ought not to be, for civilians in India must feel their dependence on the military much more than in England, seeing that if the military were withdrawn there would probably not be a European left in India in twelve months' time. But this only makes it more discreditable that the Indian Excise authorities should take up an attitude towards soldiers in uniform which only a few short-sighted and ill-conditioned publicans think it necessary to adopt in England.

The late Frontier Campaign has already brought forth a good deal of literature, and I have been occupied during the last few weeks in looking through several bulky volumes on the subject. Among these I find the most readable and intelligible to be Captain Shadwell's "Lockhart's Advance through Tirah," published by Messrs. Thacker & Co., of London and Calcutta. Captain Shadwell represented the Daily News and the Pioneer with the invading army, and he enjoyed exceptional opportunities of studying the whole of the operations, of which he seems to have made very good use. Military works by soldiers are not infrequently so encumbered with technicalities as to be unintelligible to the general reader, but Captain Shadwell gives not only a vivid description of the fighting, but succeeds in making the plan of campaign and the details of the operations clear to even the most unmilitary civilian.

Having referred to Captain Shadwell's book, I ought perhaps to make special mention also of Mr. Lionel James's volume, "The Indian Frontier War," published by Mr. Heinemann. This is a larger book, reproducing Mr. James's correspondence as Reuter's representative, both in the Mohmund and the Tirah Expeditions, and it has the merits as well as the defects of all such work. It gives a vivid and exciting narrative of events, but in his unstinted laudation of the skill, sagacity, and valour of all concerned in the operations, from the highest to the lowest, Mr. James hardly shows himself a judicious critic.

I am bound to confess, however, that in reading detailed accounts of the march through Tirah, especially when accompanied with photographic views of the country, it seems impossible to over-estimate the difficulty of the operations, or the enormous credit which is due to our troops for having surmounted them as they did. The policy which underlay the whole campaign, the blunders which marked the earlier operations before Tirah was invaded, and the administrative shortcomings that came to light during the course of the war, offer undoubtedly legitimate matter for criticism. But when all is said and done, I feel, as one of the critics, bound to confess that the march through Tirah—a country absolutely unknown up till that moment, never before penetrated by a hostile army, and inhabited by some of the most warlike races on the face of the globe, all thoroughly well armed and thoroughly expert in utilising their natural defensive resources—is one of the most creditable achievements that the British Army has ever performed.

The death of Lieutenant Bellairs, late commanding H.M.S. Jackdaw on the Niger, is a fresh proof of the perils of that region to Europeans compelled to serve in that pestilential quarter of the globe. Naval officers have little cause to bless the policy of aggression and expansion which now compels us to have two gunboats permanently stationed up the Niger. The hardships of Naval service in such climates are greatly aggravated by the harsh and unjust Admiralty rules on the subject of invalids. An officer invalided home from a foreign station is placed on half-pay after he has been six weeks in hospital, so that in those ranks where promotion depends on full-pay service, the unfortunate man who has lost his health in the service of his country suffers doubly in consequence—indeed, he suffers trebly, for he loses in pension as well as in present pay and prospective promotion. Not only ought the rule as to placing invalids on half-pay to be modified, but there ought to be a higher scale of pay for service in notoriously dangerous climates. It is time that some attempt was made to equalise the distribution of kicks and halfpence in the Navy.

The officers of the Channel Squadron who went to Lisbon for the national fêtes in honour of Vasco da Gama were ordered by the Admiralty to illuminate their ships just as was done at Spithead during the Jubilee Review last year. The authorities at Whitehall had apparently forgotten that the whole of the electrical gear, which was specially made for the Jubilee Review, was returned by all the ships directly after that function. Of course, the Admiralty order could not be carried out, as no ship carries a sufficient supply of electrical gear to completely decorate the hull, masts, funnels, and so forth, with incandescent lamps.

With reference to an article in TRUTH a month or two back concerning the relations between the Executive Government and the magistrates and District Judges in Ceylon, I have been favoured with an interesting letter from a high authority in the colony. The writer denies that the magistrates are in any way under the surveillance and control of the Inspector-General of Police, and he also contradicts the statement that the Governor apologised to the military authorities for the language used by a District Judge in a case in which they were concerned. I am assured, moreover, that the Supreme Court would be prompt to take notice of any improper interference by the Executive with the minor judiciary. Were I at liberty to mention the name of my correspondent, the value of this assurance would at once be recognised. I can, however, confidently recommend that in future any supposed cases of interference with the discretion of the magistracy should be forthwith brought before the Supreme Court. Quite independently of the two points mentioned above, there undoubtedly is an impression in Ceylon that the minor judiciary is too much under the thumb of the Executive Government, and the Supreme Court will render a valuable public service if it will do something to dissipate this idea.

It appears from a communication subsequent to that published in TRUTH a fortnight ago as to the action of the London County Council in the matter of street noises, that the reason for the delay in bringing forward the by-laws prepared under the last County Council is that the Council has been waiting for the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench on the validity of the by-laws made by the Kent County Council. This was doubtless a sufficient reason for the delay, but the decision of the Court having been given, there is no longer any reason why the by-laws should not be passed, and I trust that we shall hear before long that this has been done.

GILLOW & COMPANY.—The largest Stock of Furniture, of exclusively the best quality, although widely varying in cost. Designs and estimates free of cost.—406, Oxford-street, London, W.

FAIR AND GOLDEN TRESSES.—To nourish and beautify your hair use ROWLAND'S GOLDEN MACASSAR OIL, which has the same stimulating properties as the red, and does not stain or darken the hair or linen, 3/6, 7/-, 10/6. Sold by Stores and Chemists.

In the meantime, I continue to receive a great many letters which show how strong is the feeling in favour of some regulation of street cries. For instance, a doctor writes:—

As one of the medical profession practising in the West-end of London, I am delighted at your protests against the needless street noises in what ought to be the quietest districts of the town. Not only do such noises rack the brain when engaged in the daily business of life, but they are specially trying at the close of a busy day's work, when brain exhaustion and nervous irritability are too often experienced, and when rest and quiet are essential to health.

As one who suffers personally from these pests of London life, the newspaper screamers, I would gladly contribute substantially towards their suppression, and I am sure you will have the thanks of every medical man for your antagonism to the nuisance.

I quote this letter because the testimony is specially valuable coming from such a quarter. Whatever is bad for health is presumably to the interest of the doctors. If, therefore, a doctor is willing to pay towards the suppression of a nuisance, the nuisance must certainly be a very serious one.

Although defeated on the great suet-pudding question, the Local Government Board has nailed its colours to the mast, so far as the remainder of its dietary table for workhouses is concerned. It follows, therefore, that, although Board after Board of Guardians has pointed out the direful waste, and unnecessary expense to the ratepayer, incurred by adhering to the issue of bread on the scale laid down in the aforesaid table, Mr. Chaplin declines to allow them a free hand in the matter, and sternly insists on adherence to the scale. If the pauper were unable to take care of himself, there might be some reason for this obstinacy; but as, in the present day, any attempt to starve the inmates of a workhouse would result in an immediate uproar, it seems ridiculous that the head-quarters theory should override the various Guardians' practical knowledge, at the expense of the long-suffering ratepayer.

Somebody or other seems to have shown a monstrous lack of common sense, not to say common humanity, in dealing with an injured man at Burnley the other day. The man was taken to the Victoria Hospital suffering from a compound fracture of the kneecap. As there had been a case of scarlet fever in the hospital, the authorities advised that the man should be removed to the workhouse infirmary, and an order of admission to that institution was procured. The patient, however, never got to the workhouse infirmary. The two establishments are only a stone's throw apart, but apparently the workhouse authorities would not fetch the man from the hospital and the hospital authorities would not take him to the workhouse. In these circumstances the sufferer was kept for a day and a half at the hospital, and then he was sent back to his own home with a necessary operation still unperformed. Finally, he had to be removed to Manchester Royal Infirmary, where he died a week later. It is to be hoped that the inquiry which is to be held will be followed by the summary dismissal of the pig-headed officials, whether at the hospital or the workhouse, who are responsible for this scandalous affair.

For Truth, and all other Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals, send your Subscriptions to Wm. Dawson & Sons, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's-bldngs., London. (Estab. 1809.) Catalogue gratis.

Here is a synopsis of a little tragi-comedy which has lately caused some excitement in the village of Queensbury, near Bradford. Act i.: Mr. Stephen Holroyd is an old, valued, and faithful servant of the firm of John Foster & Son, Limited, of the Black Dike Mills. He started work with them as a boy of ten, he has remained with them for forty-nine years, and for the last twenty-two years he has occupied the position of head of the weaving department, apparently to the complete satisfaction of his employers. Act ii.: Mr. Holroyd is elected a member of the Queensbury District Council. Act iii.: Mr. Herbert Foster, managing director of John Foster & Son, Limited, is also elected a member of the same Council. Act iv.: A meeting of the District Council for the election of chairman. Mr. H. Foster is one of the two candidates proposed. Mr. Holroyd votes with his party against Mr. H. Foster, and the other candidate is elected by a majority of one. Act v.: A conference, two days later, in the directors' room at the mills. Mr. Holroyd is called in, and, in the presence of other members of the firm, Mr. H. Foster informs him that they have determined to dispense with his services. Mr. Holroyd's two sons, one of whom has been with the firm twenty-five years and the other fourteen years, are also dismissed on the same day. All three are asked to leave at once, and paid wages in lieu of notice, that being the usual practice of the firm.

The foregoing is the substance of a narrative given in the Bradford Observer. Although my contemporary is careful not to itself allege any relation of cause and effect between the defeat of Mr. Foster at the Council and the dismissal of Mr. Holroyd at the mills, it does not disguise the fact that some idea of this kind has taken root in the minds of the local public. No doubt the local public are mistaken, for it seems incredible that there can have been any real connection between the two events. Still, the sequence was so unfortunate that it might be as well for the firm themselves to offer some explanation. It is scarcely necessary to add that if they care to supply their version of the affair I shall be glad to give publicity to it.

Thus does a local paper describe the horses and the waggonettes of Hull:—

It is astonishing that this old town, which reared such a high pillar to commemorate the magnificent anti-slavery work of its great son, Wilberforce, should so disgrace itself as to permit its streets to be filled with the poorest specimens of horseflesh to be found anywhere in this country. This is an unenviable peculiarity of Hull. . . . . Penny rides in badly-appointed brakes and waggonettes appear to be the most popular means of moving about the town. There is no time-table arrangement, and you are dragged along, anywhere and anyhow, to the music of a jangling notice-board overhead and the clatter of half-a-dozen loose boards which form the bottom of the ricketty vehicle. Weak and aged animals, many of them thin and tottering ponies, are met with everywhere, qualifying for shipment to the Continent, viâ Goole. Their presence in the town is a disgrace, and constitutes a very bad case of legalised cruelty.

The description, I am told, is by no means an exaggerated one. The tram service broke down owing to bad management, and these waggonettes have taken their place. Why does not the municipality start electric trams? I have seen protests against such trams worked by overhead wires, on the ground that the supporting posts are ugly. This depends upon the posts. This means of traction is largely used in Continental towns. In some of them—

Rome, for instance—the posts are quite ornamental to the streets in which they are placed. The overhead system has the merit of being far cheaper than any other.

The Board of Trade will need to watch very carefully the attempts now being made in various suburban districts to construct street tramways under the Light Railways Act. One of the most conspicuous of these projects is the Hammersmith and Hampton Court Electric Railway. A Richmond correspondent points out that this line will pass through the higher part of Richmond and the most picturesque portions of both Richmond and Petersham hills. To this scheme many objections have been raised. The æsthetic are, of course, aghast at the threatened vulgarisation of a famous "beauty spot." Those, again —quorum pars ego—who regard the usefulness of a thing as its chief beauty, and might not object to a tramway merely as a tramway, are suspicious of an undertaking of this kind exempt from proper local control.

The Tramways Act was designed to cover the construc-ion of all street tramways; and it gives the local autho-ities concerned reasonable control over the owners of the ines, and the opportunity of eventually acquiring and vorking them for the public. The Light Railways Act vas passed primarily for the benefit of agricultural lisdistricts far from existing railroads; and it was never ntended by this measure to provide the promoters of uburban tramways with a means of evading their respon-ibilities under the older statute. Your suburban district f to-day will be urban by to-morrow, and while London nd many other towns are finding it to their advantage to un their trams municipally, what can be thought of thus ranting to private companies inalienable rights over public oads? A still more ambitious scheme than the Richmond nd Hampton Court one is, I believe, projected for North ondon, and the Board of Trade ought to see that no such ttempt to get round the Tramways Act is accomplished ithout the express consent of Parliament.

Dealing a few months back with the shortcomings of ritish railway management, I referred incidentally to ndry private and personal grievances of my own against e Brighton Company. I know the danger of post hoc, go propter hoc, but whether it is a case of propter or post, stice compels me to acknowledge publicly that since that te the Brighton Company has amended its ways in veral particulars. Day after day the morning train hich brings me to my labours has arrived at Victoria the minute, and on several occasions it has disconcerted ose familiar with its former habits by getting in a minute two before it was due—a conclusive proof that I was ght in saying that what is done at London Bridge could done at Victoria, if the Company chose to try. ightonians are now officially promised the long-desired on of an express down every night at 10.50; and so xious are the Company to oblige, that a new theatre in is to be put on on Thursdays—at 11.50 p.m. from ctoria. It only remains for us to hope that this liberality ll have its reward.

At the late Co-operative Congress at Peterborough, some reference was made to the recent Co-operative action against TRUTH. The available reports of what passed are extremely brief, but I gather that the Co-operative Union has been debited with a sum of £150 towards the costs of the action. If this meets with the approval of the Union at large, they must be a very mild and soft-hearted—not to say soft-headed—body of men. In response to a question on the subject, Mr. Brown, the Chairman of the United Board, which furnished the plaintiffs in the action, is reported to have delivered himself thus:—

> If they had not taken action, the conclusion to which any sensible man would have arrived was that they were a set of scoundrels, who had perpetrated a gross "job." As custodians of their own honour, and of the honour of the whole Co-operative movement, they felt bound to take action.

On this I would make two remarks:—1. If Mr. Brown is right, the jury who tried the case were not "sensible men," for they certainly did not read the alleged libel in any such sense as Mr. Brown attributes to it. Had they considered that my remarks suggested that the Board were "scoundrels," who had perpetrated a "gross job," they would certainly not have dismissed the plaintiffs with only a pound each as compensation for such an atrocious and unwarrantable imputation. Their verdict would rather seem to suggest that in their opinion, had the plaintiffs been sensible men, they would never have rushed into court on such trumpery grounds. 2. If the plaintiffs commenced this action "as the custodians of their own honour," on what principle is the Co-operative Union at large asked to pay £150 towards the costs? Under ordinary circumstances a man who, to vindicate his own honour, brings an action for libel, and only gets 20s. damages, has to pay for his pugnacity whatever he expends over and above the taxed costs awarded against the defendant; and there is no reason why a director of a co-operative society should escape this liability—unless co-operative principles have been so far developed at Manchester that whenever one co-operator embarks on a private quarrel, his brother co-operators are under an obligation to furnish him with the sinews of war.

True, Mr. Brown adds that the thirteen plaintiffs also went into this litigation as custodians "of the honour of the whole movement," and that, of course, is the ground on which "the whole movement" is asked to contribute to the costs. But Mr. Brown and his friends must excuse my remarking that this argument is all fudge. If the directors of a railway company were accused of perpetrating a job in the exercise of their patronage, and went to law to vindicate themselves, it would be a preposterous thing for them to pretend that they were impelled by the necessity of vindicating the honour of the company at large; and there would be some pretty vigorous protests at the next shareholders' meeting, if the company at large were charged with any of the costs of the action. In this case the jury estimated the damage done to the Co-operative Union collectively at the sum of 40s., which is a pretty fair indication of the extent to which "the honour of the whole movement" was involved in the issue. For the satisfaction of obtaining this solatium to its honour, "the whole movement" is now asked to pay the trifle of £150.

If you want to entirely Furnish your House or select any article of Furniture or Carpet, &c., send for HEWETSONS' Illustrated Priced Catalogue.—HEWETSONS, Tottenham Court-road, London.

Seeing that costs were awarded against me, some of the individual members of "the movement" may possibly wonder how this large sum comes to be payable at all. The answer is that the directors—in their zeal for the honour of the movement—thought it necessary to bring down to Manchester an ex-Law Officer of the Crown at a special fee of 300 guineas over and above the 100 guineas or so which would be paid to him in any case. To my mind, the fact of their incurring this monstrous expenditure, if there was any intention of charging it against the funds of the Union, reflects far more unfavourably upon the plaintiffs than anything in the very mild remarks which gave them such umbrage. Even if the members at large feel that the Union ought to pay something towards the cost of obtaining the magnificent sum of 40s. as a vindication of "the honour of the whole movement," they have still the best of rights to object to their share of the costs of the campaign being assessed at the outrageous sum of £150, over and above the taxed costs which I expect to have the pleasure of paying for them. That is why I say that their acquiescence in Mr. Brown's view of the matter implies some softness of head.

It is nothing new for Lord Halsbury's additions to the borough magistracy to evoke unfavourable comments; but one of three recent appointments to the Maidstone Bench is being criticised with somewhat unusual severity. I do not know the precise nature of the objections to the gentleman in question, but it is asserted that, though he is a Conservative, the Conservatives as a party repudiate all responsibility for his selection, and the Liberals, of course, had nothing to do with it. Some of the remarks on the subject in the South Eastern Gazette a fortnight ago were of a very curious character—so curious that the individual at whom they were aimed called at the office and, according to the editor, "promised to have a statement prepared and attested, vindicating himself." In last week's issue of the paper, however, it was announced that this promised "vindication" had not been received up to the time of going to press. Unless it is forthcoming without further delay, I think the Lord Chancellor would do well to make a few local inquiries in reference to the matter.

The estimation in which the Ceylon Government holds the office of magistrate has been exemplified in a recent appointment at Nuwara Eliya. A president of a village tribunal—a council for settling minor disputes among the villagers—has been made an additional police magistrate for Nuwara Eliya on the conditions that he is not to try important cases, nor cases in which Europeans are parties. For what the Government regards as inferior work he is to be paid the inferior salary of Rs. 1,000, the lowest salary of an ordinary police magistrate being Rs. 3,500. This appears to be an entirely new departure, and it is one which is likely to make a very unfortunate impression upon the native mind. It may be presumptuous on the part of the natives, but they cannot see why they should be put off with a cheaper and less competent administration of justice than Europeans.

Judging from the letters I have received, a recent summons against Mr. Jeffreys Allen-Jeffreys, J.P., at Ilminster, has attracted a good deal of attention. The defendant was charged with ill-treating a pony, and witnesses for the prosecution alleged that he thrashed the animal with cruel and excessive severity. On the other hand, witnesses for the defence stated that this evidence exaggerated the facts, and that Mr. Jeffreys only inflicted on the pony such punishment as was reasonably necessary in view of the viciousness it showed. In the face of this conflict of evidence, the Bench dismissed the summons, and I am not prepared myself to quarrel with their decision. At the same time, I very much doubt whether—putting aside other considerations—Mr. Jeffrey's method of correcting a vicious animal has even the merit of being effective. My horsey friends, at any rate, always tell me that in such a case gentle coaxing is in the long run more successful than violent coercion.

One communication in reference to this case comes to me from Mr. Jeffreys himself. The gist of it is a complaint respecting the presence on the Bench of Colonel Hoskyns, a gentleman who is closely associated with the local branch of the R.S.P.C.A., at whose instance the prosecution was instituted. Mr. Jeffreys states that Colonel Hoskyns is not in the habit of sitting with the Ilminster Bench, generally attending at another Court, but that he put in an appearance on the day first fixed for the hearing of this case, and that he was present again on the day to which it was adjourned. Nobody sympathises more strongly than I do with the work of the R.S.P.C.A., but if what Mr. Jeffreys says is correct, I certainly think the attendance of this particular magistrate to hear this particular case was ill-advised, and calculated to do the R.S.P.C.A. more harm than good.

Another case in which a magistrate was accused of cruelty to a horse has also been brought to my notice. On this occasion Mr. J. P. King, J.P., of North Stoke, was summoned before his colleagues at Caversham Petty Sessions for causing a horse to be worked whilst in an unfit state, and a lad in his employ was summoned for actually working the animal. There was no question that it was cruel to work the horse, which was in an emaciated condition and suffering from sores on the hip and shoulders; and a fine of £1 was inflicted on the lad but the summons against Mr. King was dismissed. The magistrates added that "they thought he placed too much responsibility on so young an employee," and this is a hint which Mr. King, J.P., would do well to bear in mind.

The luxury of a bath is incomplete without the addition of SCRUBB'S CLOUDY FLUID AMMONIA, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, but avoid injurious imitations.

Mr. King stated that the horse was at a farm three miles distant from his house, and I presume the Bench were not satisfied that he was aware of the sores from which the animal was suffering. But, as he is in the habit of visiting the farm, he could scarcely be ignorant of the fact that the horse was in an emaciated condition—a condition which does not arise all at once—and it was mentioned, moreover, that a second animal of his which was being worked was also old and weak, and suffering from a wound on the shoulder. It is, therefore, clearly desirable that Mr. King should give closer personal care to his farm horses.

Familiar as I am with the peculiar ways of the Royal Court of Guernsey, I have heard of nothing equal to the following extraordinary case. Some eight months ago, it is alleged, the Court deprived a resident in the island of his liberty, the use of his cash at the bank, and the delivery of letters by the post-office. There are circumstances in which all these things may be and are done, but the singular feature of this story is that, though the victim is not now, at any rate, confined in any institution, he is nevertheless still denied the use of his cash at the bank and the receipt of letters through the post. For the latter reason it is impossible for me to communicate with him, but I should much like to know from some of my readers in Guernsey under what circumstances and by what authority the Royal Court issues such an order to the post-office.

The warning I published recently against the Tradesmen's Trust, Limited, of Leeds, is abundantly justified by some revelations that were made in an action at Carlisle County Court last week. This concern, which is run by a certain J. Leslie Armstrong, comes forward with benevolent offers to save tradesmen who are in financial difficulties from the Bankruptcy Court. In the case at Carlisle, Armstrong induced a local saddler and his creditors to agree to a deed of assignment, under which he was the trustee, the instructive result being that out of £98 which was received by Armstrong, about £50 has been swallowed up in costs, and only £20 paid to the creditors. Some of the latter sued Armstrong for further amounts to make up a composition of 10s. in the £, and the Judge, in giving judgment in their favour, made some pretty plain-spoken comments upon the conduct of the defendant. Curiously enough, the circular sent out by the Tradesmen's Trust warns trades people against parties making "glowing offers," who "mostly extort fees," and are "best left alone." This applies admirably to the Tradesmen's Trust.

It must have been a pleasant change for the Lord Chief Justice to be able to congratulate the Wiltshire Magistrates on having made a liberal use of their discretionary power to admit prisoners to bail. As a rule the Judges on Circuit are compelled, with monotonous iteration, to lecture the Great Unpaid on the harshness and injustice of unnecessarily condemning accused persons to long periods of imprisonment before they are brought to trial. In Wiltshire these admonitions seem at last to have had the desired effect, and I trust the good example set in that county will be speedily followed elsewhere.

The result of the Bryant & May prosecution must be to make the law ridiculous in the eyes of all intelligent persons. Here we have a wealthy firm, who, by their own cool admission, have been for a long time past systematically defying an Act of Parliament—an Act passed for the protection of human life. Practically pleading guilty to a number of specific offences, they are fined for each, with the result that the total penalty only amounts to twenty-five pounds. The penalty is the maximum allowed by law, and it is simply childish. It will no more affect the shareholders of Bryant & May, or any one connected with the business, than would the loss of twenty-five match-boxes.

True, the business may possibly suffer through the discredit brought on it by this exposure. Many people will, no doubt, avoid as far as possible buying the goods of a firm which carries on its business under such conditions. But this is not enough. A sharp sentence of imprisonment would not have been too much for the officials of the company who were concerned in the violation of the Act—many men and women go to gaol every day for far less serious offences. And a fine of £100 for each offence would barely have been sufficient to teach the shareholders to exercise a little more circumspection in regard to the manner in which their workpeople are treated and their dividends earned. Gladly would I see the law altered, so that the punishments might be increased to this extent.

I do not quite understand the position of the company's doctor in relation to these offences. Has he no duty to report the occurrence of "phossy jaw," and no responsibility when it passes unreported? If not, when the law is tightened up, as I trust it will be, a duty in this respect should be fixed upon all medical men attending cases of phosphorus poisoning. As they would injure themselves professionally by becoming parties to a violation of the law, the prompt reporting of all such cases would thus be ensured.

The public who have been shocked to learn of the ravages of "phossy jaw" among the matchmakers, would be still more horrified if they could only see the appalling effects of lead poisoning among the potters. On the latter industrial scandal some valuable information is given by Dr. Dowling Prendergast, in a little book published under the title of "The Potter and Lead Poisoning," by Messrs. Marshall, Russell, & Company. The doctor writes from an experience of fifteen years' professional work in the Potteries, and the statistics he quotes show that the "special rules" formulated by the Home Office a few years ago have entirely failed to reduce the number of cases of lead poisoning; indeed, of late there has actually been an increase. In the interests of humanity and civilisation, the evil clearly calls for more drastic and thorough going treatment at the hands of the Home Secretary than has yet been attempted.

In my Legal Pillory this week, the case from Motherwell presents, on the whole, the most amazing and lamentable exhibition of magisterial incompetence. The accused had subjected four little children to exceptionally barbarous and inhuman treatment, and if the woodenheads of the Motherwell Bailies had contained the faintest glimmer of reason and justice substantial sentences of imprisonment without the option of a fine would have been passed. To allow such callous brutes to escape with mere pecuniary penalties was an absolute mockery of justice, and I am not surprised to read that it caused great astonishment and indignation in the town. With regard to the other cases in the following list, it will be observed that the wife beater still has many indulgent friends on the Bench. In all parts of the country a fine of from 10s. to a £1 seems to be regarded as a sufficient punishment for thrashing a woman. Any trivial offence against the Game Laws is considerably more expensive, while for acts of vagrancy or petty larceny a dose of hard labour is almost invariably prescribed:—

Colchester Police-court. Before Mr. W. Buck, Colonel Howard, and Captain Ind. Parker Appleby, convicted of assaulting his wife. He went home drunk, took hold of her by the hair of her head, threw her on the floor three times, and banged her head against the wall. Fined 10s. and 11s. costs.

Lisburn Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. T. D. Gibson, R.M., J. Rogers, M. B. Mackenzie, and W. Savage. Hugh Cairns, convicted of cruelty to a pony by savagely beating it with the butt end of a whip. It was a very bad case, and the Chairman was in favour of sending the accused to prison, but the other magistrates objected. Fined 5s. and costs.

Derby Police-court. Before Messrs. C. C. Bowring, R. Russell, E. Horne, W. J. Piper, W. Legge, and A. Butterworth. William Waite, convicted of an assault upon his wife. He struck her in the eye, knocking her down, and then kicked her. Fined 20s. and costs.

Derby Police-court. John Gallagher, charged with assaulting Sarah Ann M'Nally, with whom he had been living. Being dissatisfied with his dinner, he struck the woman on the head with a knife and steel which were wrapped in paper. She became unconscious, and the wound on her head had to be treated at the infirmary. Fined £1 and costs.

Axbridge Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. B. E. Somers and S. Hill and Major-General Harrison. Joseph Groves and Harry Spencer charged with cruelty to a bull by beating and overdriving it. The animal became exhausted, and the defendants beat it unmercifully with sticks, which were found to be covered with blood and hair. Fined 10s. each and costs.

Fakenham Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. C. A. Hamond and B. Le Neve Foster, and Captain F. R. Thackeray. Robert Frost, labourer, pleaded guilty to having in his possession five partridge's eggs. Fined £1 17s. 6d.; in default, one month.

Pontesbury Petty Sessions. Before the Rev. L. J. Lee, Messrs H. Jones, R. B. Phillips, and J. Whitaker. Henry Coles, charged with trespassing in pursuit of conies. Fined £2.

Ringwood Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. J. T. Turner, F. Veal, and other magistrates. John White, charged with sleeping out. Ten days.

Wellingborough Divisional Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. C. J. K. Woolston, W. Brown, J. Claridge, E. P. Sharman, Dr. J. Crew, and Rev. T. Richards. Edward Cox pleaded guilty to stealing cabbage sprouts, value 2s. 6d. One month.

Reading Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. C. Smith, J. W. Hounslow, W. Ferguson, and D. Rose. Ernest Streams and Wm. Wiltshire, lads, charged with stealing 8 oz. of horse hair. Streams, one month; Wiltshire, fourteen days.

Hove Petty Sessions. Before Alderman Eager and Lieut.-Col. Lloyd. John Wm. Steer and Richard Deadman, charged with stealing a canvas tent, valued at 5s. The tent, which was old and rotten, was lying on a piece of open land, and prisoners said they thought it had been thrown away. Deadman, seven days; Steer, twenty-one days.

Motherwell Police-court. Before Bailie Purdie and other Magistrates. James Philips and Elizabeth Russell, his housekeeper, charged with ill-treating the male prisoner's four children by beating them with a leather belt. One child, aged 11, had both her eyes blackened and the lower part of her body was "black and blue." A baby, aged 17 months, had a leg broken at the thigh, both temples were bruised, and the chest, back, arms, and legs were also a mass of bruises. Fined £5 each.

Blackburn Police-court. Before Dr. Morley, Messrs. J. W. Scones and W. Tattersall. John Kitchen, charged with assaulting his wife. He struck her in the face, giving her a black eye, and kicked her about the body with his clogs. Fined 20s. and costs.

Hamilton Police-court. Before Bailie M'Naughton. Charles Gallocher pleaded guilty to stealing a pair of trousers from a shop. Thirty days.

Linlithgow Police-court. Wm. Wright, charged with stealing a pair of trousers. Thirty days.

Weobley Police-court. Before Mr. G. Bray. James Bedford, charged with damaging a public-house door. He kicked in a panel after being ejected. Fourteen days.

Harwich Police-court. Before Mr. W. J. Nalborough. James Monk, charged with vagrancy by sleeping in a railway carriage and having no visible means of subsistence. Fourteen days.

In order that the prisoners might not be kept waiting their trial longer than was necessary, Lord Russell, at the Wilts Assizes, dealt with a number of cases which had been committed to the Quarter Sessions. May I suggest to his lordship that he should hold a similar general gaol delivery at the Somerset Assizes this week? He will then have before him a prisoner named Graham Bennett, who on Thursday last was committed for trial at Bath Quarter Sessions. The Bath Shallows were aware that the Quarter Sessions will not take place till next month, and they were urged to send the accused for trial to the Assizes; but they preferred apparently that he should be detained in gaol for as long a period as possible—a display of wooden-headedness upon which the Lord Chief Justice will probably have something sharp to say to them.

A Swindon correspondent draws my attention to a strange story which the North Wilts Herald has published under the suggestive heading "Up Magisterial Backstairs." The substance of it is that a Swindon magistrate, after signing a summons for drunkenness, was induced by friends of the accused to "withdraw" his name from the document, with the result that the prosecution was dropped, and the case never came into court. This, if true, was a very improper interference with the course of justice, but it is of little use to denounce such a proceeding without exposing the parties concerned in it, and the local paper, unfortunately, omits to give any names. As the editor says he knows the names, and is sure of the facts, the best thing he can do is to repair this omission.

The metamorphoses of Leigh Sampson are so rapid that it is almost impossible to follow them. Only a fortnight ago I exhibited him in the character of "Charles Van Buren," a benevolent Brussels physician, who, having attended the "young English painter," Leigh Sampson upon his death-bed, was endeavouring to dispose of some of the deceased artist's pictures, in order to enable the widow and orphan to return to their native land

Subscriptions greatly needed by The Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—2,876 convictions this year; 7,545 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to Secretary, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

H. L. Savory & Co.'s Cigarettes.—By Special Warrants of Appointments to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, H.S.H. the Duke of Teck, and the Houses of Lords and Commons. To be obtained of all the leading Houses in the trade.—Sole address, 59, Piccadilly, London, W. Specimen case of samples, containing all sizes, 2s. 6d., with price list.

Scarcely has this account of him gone to press, when "Charles van Buren" appears on the scene in a new character. He is now no longer a doctor, but has become "a young American artist" desirous of returning to New York. In that character he appeals thus to an Englishman residing in Berlin :—

35, Rue de la Tourelle, 35
Etterbeek, Bruxelles,
La Belgique,
3 May, 1898.

DEAR SIR,—I must in the first place tender you a very humble apology for addressing you, but when in Berlin last I heard of your name as a most benevolent English gentleman and that you were interested in art.

I am a young American artist of good family, and I have been here some time practising at my profession.

I have been not so successful as I should desire, and consequently have not for several months sold a single picture.

In consequence I find myself in very straitened and unhappy circumstances, and it is to make a very humble appeal to you, Sir, to patronise my brush that I venture to respectfully address this letter to you.

For the fact is that, despairing of any great success in Europe, I have determined to return to New York, and I most respectfully ask you, Sir, to consider if you could honour me by purchasing the accompanying aquarelle and by so doing enable me to pay my passage to the States.

The picture is a view at early morning of Peel Harbour in the Isle of Man off the English Coast, and the price is only Marks One Hundred and Fifty, or (in English currency) £7 10s.

I should be most truly grateful and obliged to you, Sir, if in the circumstances you could honour me by retaining the aquarelle.

I specially invite the valuation by an expert before purchasing, I know the price is a reasonable one.

It is as a last resource I venture to address you, and I tender a most humble apology for the intrusion. I beg to submit the aquarelle herewith and to remain, Dear Sir, with great respect,

Your very obedient Servant,
CHARLES VAN BUREN.

Not getting an immediate reply to this, he, as usual, follows it up with a further application. In this he again strikes new ground :—

The long depression in the art trade for American painters, caused by the prohibitive McKinley tariff upon European purchased products, has exhausted my savings and prevented me from selling my pictures.

This is a truly Sampsonian touch. He has appealed to Scotchmen as a young Scotch artist, to Irishmen as a young Irish artist, to Welshmen as a young Welsh artist, and to Englishmen as a young native of any county to which his correspondent happened to belong. This time, not knowing, probably, the exact portion of the British Isles from which the gentleman he is addressing has sprung, he comes out as a young American artist ruined by the McKinley tariff! I took the liberty of suggesting last week to the Brussels police that they should turn their attention to Mr. "Charles Van Buren," and when they see this further proof of the indiscriminate swindling in which this individual is engaged, I feel sure they will no longer delay their visit to 35, Rue de la Tourelle.

An enterprising gentleman who has been investigating the snares of matrimonial advertisements, sent me recently an instructive account of his experiences. He saw, and answered, the following advertisement in the People :—

SPINSTER, 26, possessing independent income, desires matrimony with a gentleman of middle-class parentage.—D., Box 11,040, "People," Arundel-street, Strand.

In return he received a type-written communication from "Campbell's Agency," 1, Tennyson-avenue, East Ham. A City address was also given (18a, London-street, E.C.), but all communications were to be addressed to the East Ham office :—

DEAR SIR,—After inserting her advt. Miss D. decided to place her affairs in my hands to shield herself from entering into correspondence with a gentleman whose object was merely amusement.

Miss D. informs me that your letter has met with her approval, she considers you are quite suitable to her and would like me to arrange an introduction between you, but in doing so I am to take the full responsibility of your intentions being honourable.

I am prepared to arrange an introduction between you and Miss D., providing you enrol as a member, my charge is £5 5s., and to ascertain enroling bons-fide members only I request payment of £1 5s. in advance, the remaining £4 being payable on marriage. (This sum to be sent conditional that your statements are true and correct, and to enable me to privately investigate the same should I deem this necessary. N.B.—No objection is made to nom-de-plume being used).

Should this meet your favour, upon receiving the above sum I will at once arrange the introduction, sending you Miss D.'s address that all communications may take place direct.

As each member is entitled to as many introductions as may prove necessary to effect a marriage, should this introduction not end successfully, I will introduce you to other lady members. —Trusting to be favoured with your patronage, I remain yours faithfully.

GEO. CAMPBELL.

The gentleman to whom this was addressed, having only a platonic interest in Miss D., and having suspicions as to whether the lady had any real existence, did not forward the preliminary fee of £1 5s. ; but waited a few days, and then inserted the following advertisement on his own account in the same paper :—

Will the gentleman who wrote Spinster D., 11,040, last week, and received agent's letter, kindly write again to M. D., Box 11,252, "People," Arundel-street, Strand.

This brought communications from no less than twenty-six Benedicks, each of whom had answered "Spinster's" original advertisement and had been favoured with replies from "Campbell's Agency" to the same effect as that above given. In one case—the aspirant to an alliance with Miss D. residing at some distance from London—it would seem that Campbell had suggested that Miss D. would come down to see her unknown suitor if, that individual would forward the railway fare in addition to the agency fee of 25s.

The fact of Campbell informing each of these six-and-twenty gentlemen, and possibly many besides, that Miss D. was prepared to be introduced to him on payment of the agency fees, is sufficient to show the swindle of the whole thing. But to carry the proof a step further, in addition to the letters from the twenty-six, the second People advertisement also brought the following letter from Campbell himself :—

Campbell's Agency,
18a, London-street, London, E.C.,
May 1, 1898.

MADAME,—I am surprised to note your advertisement in to-day's People, as, although I received your letter on Saturday requesting me not to proceed further on your behalf, I should have been pleased to have forwarded you the addresses of the few gentlemen I negotiated at your request.

If you have mislaid the originals I am prepared to forward you the addresses you sent me.

I sincerely regret not being able to have successfully negotiated with any of the gentlemen, and trust that as you have undertaken same on your own responsibility you will be satisfied, but it is my opinion that not one of the said gentlemen have honourable intentions towards you, as out of the number you requested me to write to I only received two replies, and these two objected to correspond with you owing to you having employed my services. These gentlemen being "Mr. ——" and the gentleman I have previously informed you of.—Yours faithfully,

GEO. CAMPBELL.

If such a person as Miss D. really existed, and if Camp-

MORTLOCK'S (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "MORTLOCK'S" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

AMERICAN SHOES of every description. Large consignment of newest designs and make of Summer goods just to hand. A visit solicited.—AMERICAN SHOE CO., 169, Regent-street, W.

bell had been acting on her instructions, as he said, it is pretty certain that on seeing her advertisement (or what purported to be her advertisement), he would have written to her at her own abode, instead of writing to her, as he does, under initials at a newspaper correspondence address. The truth seems to be that Campbell, seeing the second advertisement, and knowing that it did not emanate from him, guessed that an attempt was being made to obtain the evidence of the other parties he had corresponded with, and wrote this letter to cover himself. It is an extremely clever move, but just a trifle too clever. I should uncommonly like to know more of Mr. Campbell, of Tennyson-avenue, East Ham. It may be that his agency did not make a large profit on the "Spinster" advertisement—at any rate, twenty-six parties who had nibbled at the bait declined to swallow the hook—but it seems probable that so dodgy an angler must have been more successful in landing his fish upon other occasions.

One of my readers sends an account of some recent dealings with the South Kensington Fine Art Association apropos of the recent reference to that concern in TRUTH. It seems that 17s. 6d. was paid for what were represented as "engravings direct from plate." Instead of being engravings the pictures turned out to be only litho copies of engravings, with an imitation plate mark. My correspondent goes on to suggest that the Public Prosecutor ought to put a stop to such tricks. The Public Prosecutor, however, has no jurisdiction to enforce remedies for breach of contract. Every purchaser who finds that goods sold to him do not answer to the description under which they were offered has a civil remedy, and if he is too idle or indifferent to assert his own rights, he cannot expect other people to look after them for him.

The manager of the Halifax Comet writes :—

Referring to your remarks on Hawkins & Co., of Brighton, I may say that we have on several occasions received orders accompanied by cheques from this firm. The first we received we returned with an intimation that such "ads." were not accepted by us. Since then we have always torn up their cheques and orders immediately after arrival. If we are troubled again I propose to cash the cheque and make Hawkins pay for revenue stamp for a new cheque, as well as the postage, if he desires the return of the money.

I give this letter as an example to other provincial journals, many of which I see continue to publish this scoundrel's advertisements.

There is something delightfully ingenuous about the fierce tirade against the holiday visitors to Epping Forest, which a "Lover of Nature" addressed to a daily contemporary last week. It is, of course, very regrettable that the deer and the rabbits should be chased and pelted with stones by "organised bands of young ruffians from the East End"—"hordes of yelling fiends"—"young savages, uncouth in look and rough in language." But when a "Lover of Nature" proceeds to talk of "the desire to go forth and kill something" as if it were a peculiar characteristic of "the holiday-making East-ender," he becomes rather absurd.

After all, there are holiday-making West-enders who are animated by precisely the same primitive instinct as these Nimrods from the East End, and if it is barbaric in one case, it is equally so in the other. The only difference is that the former sportsmen hunt the deer on horses and with hounds, and shoot the rabbits with deadlier weapons than catapults. It is not a difference that the animals concerned are likely to appreciate.

Only the other day I was remarking on the facilities for travel afforded to every class of the public in the present day. All previous enterprises of this kind seem to have been eclipsed by Messrs. Thomas Cook & Son, who have just put forth a scheme for enabling working men and others of limited means to visit the next Paris Exhibition. For fifty weekly payments of one shilling a subscriber will be taken to Paris and back (3rd class), boarded and lodged there for three days, admitted to the Exhibition, and taken for a trip to Versailles; while for seventy shilling subscriptions he will get the same programme extended to five days. What next?

It appears that there is nothing in the nature of a novelty in the use of "paper insulation" for the new telephone and telegraph trunk cable between London and Birmingham, to which reference was made last week. The British Insulated Wire Company, Limited, who are making the cable, inform me that, so far from being in an experimental stage, this method of insulation has already been practically applied to thousands of miles of cable, both here and in America.

I have often wondered at the long list of Tories of high rank and station whose names appear as patrons of the Junior Conservative Club, which has been rendered so notorious by its wholesale touting for members. Possibly the following incident may explain the appearance of some of these distinguished names upon the list. A well-known Conservative M.P., finding himself enrolled among the Vice-Presidents of the Club, knowing that he had never subscribed, and having no recollection of authorising the use of his name, and not having even entered the premises, except on one occasion by invitation to preside at a smoking concert, wrote to the Secretary to ask for an explanation. This was the reply :—

43 and 44, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, W.,
23. 5. 1898.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 20th, and I lose no time in bringing to your recollection your presiding at a concert given at this club in February, 1897, and at the same time accepting the invitation of the committee to become one of its Vice-Presidents.

Your letter has been laid before the committee, and I am instructed to inform you that, as your speech on the occasion referred to gave great offence to the members present, many of whom made very unpleasant remarks and complaints at the time, the committee have no hesitation in complying with your request to remove your name from the list, and you may be assured it will not appear in any of the documents of the club which may, after this date, be ordered to be printed.—Yours faithfully, J. O. Hamley, Comm.-General, Secretary.

The M.P. in question tells me that the date of the smoking concert was February, 1896, not February, 1897. No objection was taken to his speech at the time, and he is alleged to have accepted the Vice-Presidency on the occasion when he delivered this speech. It has, therefore, taken the committee two years and three months to discover that they had any complaint against their Vice-President, and in the meantime they have been advertising his name broadcast all over the country. This must be the strangest club ever floated.

As the Press itself sits in judgment on the Press, it need hardly be said that its verdict is a favourable one. But the Press has its demerits as well as its merits. For the latter, those who read newspapers are more responsible than those who own them or write in them. Pressmen regard themselves as a priesthood, with a divine mission to guide and instruct their fellow-citizens in the way that they should go. This illusion would do no harm, were it not that they have managed to convince so many of their fellow-citizens that their estimate of themselves is a true one; though why any one should allow his opinions on men or things to be dictated to him by some anonymous scribe is difficult to understand, except on the ground that it is easier to spend a penny or two in buying an opinion than to form one.

One of the evils of our Press is, that it is forced by the law of its being to be ever on the look out for some sensational news, whilst the competition between newspapers for fresh intelligence renders them far too prone to accept the vaguest rumour as indisputable fact. It consequently often happens that not only are myths published, but articles are indited commenting on them. No sooner is one myth exploded than it is succeeded by a fresh one. Thus the entire country gets so accustomed to live on a diet of mendacity, that it acquires a craving for this sort of food. When, as is often the case, newspapers deal with the relations of one State to another, this mythical provender is often a positive danger, for it creates ill-feeling and irritation between nations. It used to be said that Statesmen cause wars, and that the peoples whose destinies they take under their wings suffer from them. We have altered all this. As a rule, Statesmen endeavour to maintain peace, and newspapers do their best to promote wars. If ever we ourselves drift into a great war, we shall have to thank our Press for this "crowning mercy."

When a country is involved in war—if we are to judge by what is taking place in America—its Press does its best to render victory difficult. Its aim seems to be to convey as much information to the enemy as possible. Events never go fast enough for Press requirements. It insists upon immediate action, and scoffs at waiting tactics, however desirable or necessary they may be. If there had been an influential Press at Rome in the days of Hannibal, the Senate would have been forced to cashier Fabius Cunctator within a week of his appointment to the command of an army. During a war no war news of any sort or kind should be permitted to be published, beyond the official statements of what has occurred. It is folly, when the fate of a nation is in the balance, to risk affording information to the enemy, in order that a newspaper may get off an edition or two, or that its readers' curiosity may be gratified.

"To lie like a war bulletin" is the expression in French that denotes the most absolute deviation from truth. We shall soon have to adopt in the same sense, "to lie like a newspaper." A week or two ago Mr. John Morley visited Mr. Gladstone. It was then stated in the newspapers, that he "invoked the divine blessing on the dying statesman." This was absolutely untrue. On Saturday last a second falsehood saw the light. Mr. Morley had been received into the Roman Catholic Church at the Brompton Oratory, and, as evidence of the fact, the first lie was repeated.

Lord Palmerston once sneeringly observed to Mr. Bright in the course of a discussion in the House of Commons, that, if a French Army were encamped round Manchester, he was so lost to all patriotism, that he would at once enter into negotiations with the invader to surrender the town. As Manchester is not a fortress, I remember thinking at the time that, had Mr. Bright adopted the course that Lord Palmerston thought probable, he would have acted with good sense. So it is with Spain, or, rather, there is more reason for Spain giving up Cuba than there would have been for Mr. Bright surrendering Manchester. The island is not only valueless to her, but is a drain on her. It is situated so far from the mother country, and so near to the United States, that it is indefensible unless Spain has the command of the sea, which she has not. The Cubans, in the main, object to any further connection with her. Even those who would prefer that the connection should be maintained, are not so anxious for it that they are ready to be shot or starved to death to prove their faith. The Spaniards fought at Manila with distinguished courage, and they seem disposed to do the same in Cuba. But they are fighting, as they must be aware, a losing game. Their navy seems to be in a wretched condition. The Americans, on the other hand, cannot, unless they are lunatics, wish to spend blood and money, provided that they can secure the real object of the war by means of an amicable arrangement with their opponents.

The aim of neutrals when a war takes place between two Powers is to keep out of it. Were any one of the Great Powers to interfere with a suggestion of terms of peace, this might be ill received by one or both of the belligerents, for each Great Power is always supposed to be desirous to further its own particular interests at the expense of its neighbours. But why should not Switzerland, or Sweden, or some such Power that is not open to such suspicions, offer to act as a friendly bottle-holder? An armistice might be agreed to on the general basis that Spain would give up Cuba, all minor differences as to mode and details of transfer being left to the decision of the bottle-holder, if the two parties concerned should not be able to agree in regard to any of them.

I really ask myself each succeeding day whether the intelligence of the human race has degenerated to a point, when any person may advertise himself successfully by the most flagrant clap-trap. Of course, we are desirous to live in cordial friendship with the United States. The Radicals have always urged this, and they have always deprecated the tone of Tory Statesmen and Tory newspapers towards that Republic. Mr. Chamberlain makes a silly speech, in which he suggests an alliance of the Anglo-Saxon race against the rest of the world, to be cemented by Great Britain and America discovering some pretext to fight a joint battle and win a joint victory. Whom they are to fight, and what they are to fight for, he does not explain. But at once our newspapers discuss this foolish utterance as though it were the very perfection of human wisdom, and the Americans regard it as a proof that Mr. Chamberlain is the wisest and best of English Statesmen.

Such a "wild cat" alliance is entirely outside the area of practical politics. Why, then, propose it? For two reasons; the first was that Mr. Chamberlain had learnt that the United States were prepared to agree to the appointment of a Commission to settle any outstanding differences in regard to various minor matters between Washington and the Dominion, and he wished to convey the impression that his suggestion of an alliance had smoothed the way for the appointment of the Commission. We know the habit of our esteemed fellow-citizen. The second was that he was anxious to drag a red herring across the recent transactions in the Far East, which have hardly increased the confidence felt in the Government of which he is a member. The sum total of his speech was, in fact, this: matters went wrong in the Far East because they were entrusted to Lord Salisbury, and not to the Colonial Secretary. Matters are going smoothly in the West, and although this is really due to Lord Salisbury, yet it is desirable to create the impression that it is due to the Colonial Secretary. Mr. Chamberlain is not exactly the man with whom I should care to hunt a tiger. If I shot the animal, he would claim that he had killed it. If the tiger got away, he would ascribe the entire fault to me.

THE SINKING OF THE MERRIMAC.

A WORD IN SEASON.

Come, something has been done at last that's dashing,
brave, and cool;
Something more worthy of renown than killing that poor mule.
In corners dark, Bellona for the time has ceased to sulk—
The Spaniards, or Americans, or both, have sunk a hulk!

How 'twas the Merrimac got swamped 'tis parlous hard to tell;
But it is easy this to see—her crew behaved right well;
About their courage there'll be heard no faint or doubtful voice:
The world unites to loudly praise this latest "Hobson's choice."

Even the Spaniards, as we've seen, to compliments were moved,
And hailed with stately courtesy the gallantry thus proved;
And surely foes have gone some way t'wards turning into friends,
When chivalrous approval thus on bravery attends.

Then why fight on, when either side thus nobly has behaved?
When pluck has been exhibited and honour has been saved?
This timely sinking of the hulk, why should it not portend
The sinking of those diff'rences which now two nations
rend?

SCRUTATOR.

AFTER GLADSTONE.

ALL concur in recognising that Mr. Gladstone was the greatest Englishman of the century. His patriotism, his services to his country, and his devotion to its interests, are the theme on every tongue. Resolutions honouring his memory are passed at home and abroad. He has had a national funeral, and a national memorial to him is proposed. But is all this mere lip-service? Are the principles for which he fought and battled during his long public life still to animate us, or are they to be buried in his grave—illusions which, however well intended, have been productive of harm rather than of good?

Mr. Gladstone was a strict economist. His aim was, not only to place our fiscal system on a sound basis, but to reduce the burden of taxation by the practice of a rigid economy. Whenever there was a surplus, he met it by taking off a tax. At present we glory in a vast public revenue, as though it were something to be proud of. If taxation yields more than was anticipated, means are at once found for spending the surplus. Not even satisfied with this, we add what has up to now been a sinking fund for the reduction of the National Debt to our spending revenue.

Mr. Gladstone always deprecated a policy of expansion and of foreign adventure. We recognise as the law of our being, perpetual extension of empire. We are to avenge Gordon, "basely sacrificed," by slaying the Soudanese—men, as Mr. Gladstone said, "rightly struggling to be free." We are seeking to trick the Boers out of that independence which he secured to them, in order to wipe out the "disgrace of Majuba Hill," for which he was responsible.

Mr. Gladstone believed that we ought only to act in concert with Europe when that concert was likely to promote the cause of liberty. In his eyes the rule of the Sultan over Christian subject races was the negation of all right. We have joined that concert in order to rivet the Turkish fetters on these suffering races.

Mr. Gladstone opposed entangling alliances with any Continental Power. We implore some great military Power to enter into an alliance with us, and to place her armies at our disposal, in consideration, presumably, of our guaranteeing to her all her possessions.

Mr. Gladstone, although no supporter of an autocratic form of Government, always laboured to establish friendly relations between us and Russia in Asia. We insult Russia, and declare that, so base and so mendacious are its statesmen, that it is impossible for us to enter into any such friendly relations with that country.

Mr. Gladstone was of the school of Sir Robert Peel in regard to armaments. With that eminent man, he held that a war expenditure in times of peace, far from being a security against war, is likely to conduce to it. Persistently he opposed the resources of the country being expended in deference to the alarmists, the amateur strategists, and the military Army and Navy experts, who deem that the chief aim of a nation should be to afford them opportunities to distinguish themselves in their trade of bloodshed. We are spending above sixty millions per annum in armaments, and we contemplate a still higher expenditure.

Mr. Gladstone desired to give Home Rule to Ireland. He believed that this would end the centuries of wrong that we have done to that island, and would establish on a firm basis the unity of the United Kingdom. We refuse to Ireland what Mr. Gladstone said was Ireland's right.

Mr. Gladstone, when still Leader of the Liberal Party, declared that Liberal progress was impossible so long as the Tory Party was able, when beaten at the poll, to fall back upon its majority in the House of Lords, and thus set the declared will of the nation at defiance. In his last speech in the House of Commons, he urged us to put an end—once and for all—to the veto of the Lords. Are we in earnest in our determination to fight out this issue to the bitter end?

A paragraph went the round of the newspapers last week, announcing that a nobleman had withdrawn from the Leadership of the Liberal Party because he did not agree with Mr. Gladstone, but that, now that Mr. Gladstone is no longer with us, it is intended to recall this nobleman to the Leadership. The paragraph owed its origin probably to some obscure wirepuller. But what a comment it would be upon the fidelity of the Liberal Party to the man whose memory the Party professes to honour, were it to act on this suggestion!

A still stranger mode of showing our abiding faith in Mr. Gladstone's principles is suggested by a Scotch M.P. in a speech to his constituents. Between a principle and its application this northern casuist draws a distinction. In order to discover what Mr. Gladstone's principles were we must not look to his application of them. The first—properly explained—may have been sound, the latter was faulty. What Mr. Gladstone did, therefore, can be no guide to what we ought to do. Thus he sought to give Home Rule to Ireland. At first sight it may be supposed that this was due to his belief in the principle of Home Rule. This, however, is an error. To grant Home Rule to Ireland was a misapplication of the principle of Home Rule. Therefore we ought to prove our agreement with Mr. Gladstone's principles in regard to the proper Government of Ireland by throwing over Irish Home Rule. Having thus established a distinction between Mr. Gladstone's principles and his practice, the Scotch metaphysician descends from the lofty heights of philosophy to business. "We ought," he says, "to regain our majority, and we can only do this by making converts of those who have not been with him for some time." The mode of bringing back these erring sheep seems to be to allow them to convert us. It would have been more to the point had this teacher said in plain language that, as the measures and policy of Mr. Gladstone have landed us in a minority, and as the aim of a Party should be to obtain place and power, it becomes our duty, as practical men, to ignore his example and precepts.

In life, Mr. Gladstone was strong and powerful. He was able to give effect to his policy because he had the people behind him. They replied to his trust in them by trusting him. Again and again those who were but Liberals in name endeavoured to wrest from him the sceptre that the people's confidence had placed in his hands. But their intrigues were vain. Neither the Court, nor the aristocracy, nor the plutocracy loved him when alive. Now that he is dead, they are loud in their praises of him, but would reverse all for which he struggled and strove. But we who do believe that he was in the right, must stand by his principles, and make them our guide.

A LONDON SESSIONS TRAGEDY.

At Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, on Whitsun Monday, there was held an inquest concerning the death of a prisoner, aged twenty-four, who had committed suicide in his cell on the previous Thursday. The story of the death of this young man is of a most extraordinary nature. The brief reports of the inquest that have appeared in the Press convey but an imperfect impression of the gravity of the case, and I shall offer no apology for telling the story in detail from the beginning.

Daniel Collins was the son of a tailor living in Gunn-street, Spitalfields. He had been employed in one or two situations as a barman, and seems to have been in all respects a respectable and well-conducted young man. At the time when he got into trouble under the circumstances now to be described, he was able to adduce perfectly satisfactory evidence as to his previous character. From a medical point of view, however, his antecedents were less satisfactory. His mother is in a lunatic asylum, as are also two of her brothers. His doctor has testified that about two years ago he treated him for mental aberration. The lad himself had left his last situation, owing, as he stated, to pains in his head and inability to sleep. He was, I believe, out of work at the time when the story opens, and he was engaged to be married. His father states that he had been a little worried over his matrimonial prospects, but beyond this nothing amiss with him had been noticed recently.

Now, Mr. Collins the elder had had in his possession for many years a number of old share certificates or bonds of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. They seem to have been left with him originally as security for a debt, and he himself had always believed them to be worthless. There is no question that they were his property. Young Collins seems to have formed the idea that the shares might be valuable; he got hold of a few of them, and determined to ascertain whether they could be realised. About the middle of April he somehow saw in the Financial Times an advertisement of a concern called The Investments Realisation Corporation, Limited—probably the following, which I find in the Financial Times of April 18:—

THE INVESTMENTS REALISATION CORPORATION, LIMITED.

19, Moorgate-street, London, E.C.

Deals in Stocks and Shares of Every Description.

Prompt delivery guaranteed.
Advances made on marketable securities.
Advice given to holders and intending investors.
Correspondence invited. All communications to be addressed to— The Secretary.

Given Away.—A high-grade New Hudson Gent's Cycle, fitted with "Ixion Tyres," for the best two or four lines of verse on the "Ixion Tyre." Lady's Cycle also given for lady competitors only. Five consolation prizes given in each competition. Further details of competition and "All about Ixion Tyres" sent, on application, free. Competition verses must be sent in before 31st July, with this advertisement attached, and must be marked "Competition" corner of envelope.—The New Ixion Tyre & Cycle Co., Ltd., 144, Holborn, London.

The character of the business which the Corporation undertakes is further indicated on its stationery in such terms as these :—

Stocks, shares, debentures, bonds, and other securities bought and sold.
Money advanced to any amount upon negotiable securities.
Inquiries made as to the position of any Company for an inclusive fee of five shillings.
Investors advised on all matters pertaining to finance.
Purchasers found for unquoted shares.

Nothing could be more natural, therefore, than that Collins should consult the Corporation as to the value of the aforesaid Grand Trunk shares. Accordingly, on April 19, Collins forwarded to the Corporation one of the certificates, with the following letter :—

26, Brushfield-street,
Bishopsgate, E.C.

Dear Sirs,—Having a number of these shares, and wishing to sell some, will you kindly inform me what price you will give for each one?—Yours truly, D. Collins.

It will be noted that this letter is not written from Collins's own address in Gunn-street. No. 26, Brushfield-street is a stationer's shop, where he had been in the habit of having letters addressed. The correspondence thus opened proceeded as follows :—

April 20, Corporation to Collins.

Re Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada,
No. 71,144.

Dear Sir,—We beg to acknowledge receipt of the one share forwarded to us, and shall be glad to hear from you how many shares you have for sale. If you can make it convenient to call any day between the hours of ten and four o'clock, one of the directors will be pleased to see you.—Yours truly,
William F. Johnston, Secretary.

April 20, Collins to Corporation.

Dear Sir,—Yours received. Enclosed nine shares, and one you have making a total of ten shares. Will you kindly sell at best price obtainable?—Yours truly,
D. Collins.

April 21, Corporation to Collins.

Re Grand Trunk Railway of Canada.

Dear Sir,—We have to acknowledge receipt of a further nine shares, £25 each, Nos. 70,248 to 70,257 inclusive. Will you kindly let us know the least price you will accept, and at the same time make an appointment to call here, so that we can settle the matter? We take it that the shares are your own property, and that they are perfectly in order.
Awaiting your reply.—Yours truly,
William F. Johnston, Secretary.

April 22, Collins to Corporation.

Dear Sir,—Yours of the 21st to hand. The lowest price I am willing to accept will be £1 12s. each share. Being an invalid, I cannot get to your office. The shares are absolutely my property, and any further information you may require I shall be most happy to acquaint you of.—Yours truly, Daniel Collins.

April 25, Corporation to Collins.

Dear Sir,—We have communicated with several of our clients, and the highest price offered has been £1 6s. 6d. per share, and at that price we could dispose of between seventy and eighty. If you conclude to accept the above offer let us know if you can possibly call here, and at what time you will call, or if you are too ill to come out kindly make appointment for one of the directors to call upon you.
From above price we shall deduct fivepence per share commission.—Awaiting your reply, &c.

April 27, Collins to Corporation.

Dear Sir,—I am most anxious you should act for me in reference to Grank Trunk shares. Cannot you do business by post, as a relative of mine is always in attendance upon me, and I do not want her to know on any account of my owning the shares? Will forward some more shares if you can manage to do business by post. Sorry to give you so much trouble, and willing to accept the price mentioned.—Yours, &c.

The Corporation seem to have replied to this last letter that they would like to see Collins, and Collins then took what was undoubtedly a very foolish step. He got a friend named Galvin to go down to the office of the Corporation in Moorgate-street, representing himself to be Collins. Galvin saw a Mr. Julius Jacobs, a Director of the Corporation, who was the principal witness for the prosecution in the proceedings which followed. It is not wholly immaterial to mention that Mr. Jacobs had only recently come out of gaol, after serving a term of twelve months' imprisonment on conviction upon a charge of blackmailing. According to Jacobs' evidence, Galvin told him that his name was Daniel Collins, that he lived on the first floor of 26, Brushfield-street, and produced thirty more bonds, stating that they had come into his possession on the death of his mother, and that interest had been paid on them. Jacobs then said that he should like to see him at his own house to transfer the shares, and made an appointment to meet him there at 4 p.m. It seems from Mr. Jacobs' evidence that on April 24—i.e., before offering £1 6s. 6d. per share for the securities—he had been to Brushfield-street, had ascertained that Collins did not live there, and had communicated with the police. He states that when he offered to buy the bonds he knew them to be worthless, and that he had no intention of buying them at that time. He took two detectives with him when he went to keep his appointment on April 29. Collins himself then appeared, gave some excuse for having sent the friend to represent him, and executed the transfers under Jacobs' direction. Jacobs also presented to him an account purporting to show that the shares had been sold for £53, and that after deducting commission £52 3s. 4d., was due to Collins. Immediately afterwards the detectives came in and arrested Collins. He and Galvin were then prosecuted for obtaining a cheque, value one penny, and endeavouring to obtain £52 odd from Julius Jacobs by false pretences. They were in due course committed for trial, and the trial came on on May 20, at the London Sessions before Mr. Loveland-Loveland.

At the trial evidence of the above facts was given for the prosecution by Mr. Jacobs; and the London Registrar of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada was called to prove that the shares in question had never been issued to the public, and were the property of the company—though, so far as I can see, the evidence to the effect was, from a legal point of view, far from complete or conclusive. For the defence, evidence was given as to the taint of insanity in Collins' family. His counsel, however, told the jury expressly that he did not rely on the defence of insanity, but took his stand firmly on the ground that there was no evidence of criminal intent. He explained to the jury that an acquittal on the ground of insanity would expose Collins to detention in a criminal asylum, with every probability that he would become in consequence permanently insane, and that, in view of the evidence that the prisoner had been acting throughout in good faith, he could not take that responsibility, but should ask for an absolute acquittal. The only use, in fact, made of the evidence as to the prisoner's mental infirmity was to explain the otherwise inexplicable course which he took in writing from an accommodation address, and sending his friend to personate him in the transaction. The Judge, however, notwithstanding the state of the evidence, summed up strongly against the prisoners, and both Collins and Galvin were found guilty. Collins' counsel then urged upon the Judge the evidence given as to his client's mental condition, with a view to mitigating the sentence. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Loveland-Loveland sentenced Collins to twelve months', and Galvin to nine months' imprisonment with hard labour, remarking that Collins would be well looked after where he was going to, or words to that effect.

Hotel Albemarle, Piccadilly, London. Private Suite, Bath, Electric Light, Lift. Vermersch, Proprietor. Paris: Imperial Hotel, Champs Elysées. Boulogne S/M: Imperial Pavilion Hotel.

Now mark the sequel. Collins was taken to Wormwood Scrubbs on May 20. According to the evidence of the Governor of the gaol, he was well conducted, and was placed on "second-class labour," which exempted him from the crank. On the 26th, six days after his admission, he seems to have been employed in hammock-making, or some similar work. At 5.40 he was given his supper, and part of the work was taken away, but some string and other materials were left in his cell. At 6.15 he was observed by the warder to be walking up and down in his cell. At 7.15 the warder went to take the remainder of the work, and found Collins dead, he having hanged or strangled himself by putting a noose of yarn round his neck and attaching it to his towel peg, which was only about 3½ ft. from the floor. The doctor stated that he had been dead half an hour when found. It was stated at the inquest by the Governor and by the prison doctor that no intimation of any kind had been conveyed to them that there was anything wrong with the mental condition of the deceased, and he was not placed in any way under special observation. The deceased's private doctor was called at the inquest, and repeated the evidence which he had given at the trial, and further deposed that he had heard the Judge say, in sentencing the prisoner, that, having regard to his antecedents, he would be well taken care of in prison. The jury returned a verdict of suicide during temporary insanity, and so ends the case of Daniel Collins.

Is it possible to imagine a more shocking story than this? To my mind, the conviction of this young fellow was a miscarriage of justice, the sentence passed upon him was a judicial atrocity, and the failure to notify to the prison authorities the evidence that had been given respecting his mental condition was a piece of negligence which makes those guilty of it virtually responsible for the prisoner's death. Look first at the conviction. Collins was convicted of obtaining and attempting to obtain money, or money's worth, by false pretences. What is the false pretence? I do not overlook the fact that he misrepresented his property in the goods, and sent a friend to personate him, who may have made other fictitious statements; but the only fraud upon Jacobs with which he could be charged was that of offering to that individual worthless securities, knowing them to be worthless, and falsely pretending that they were valuable. Whatever there may have been suspicious or clandestine in his conduct, this is the only false pretence which would amount to a fraud on Jacobs. Of such a false pretence what evidence is there? Only one solitary particle, namely, the alleged representation by Galvin that he had received the interest on the shares; and this rests solely on the unsupported testimony of Jacobs. What is Jacobs' position? He admits that after writing his second letter he was engaged in collusion with the police in an attempt to entrap Collins into committing a criminal offence. He admits more than this. In cross-examination before the magistrate, he stated that his company was a new one, and that "he was very anxious to catch these people: it would have been a good advertisement for his company." Seeing that Jacobs himself had at this time only been out of prison a few months (his original sentence would have expired on February 8), his company may well have been a new one. I ask any one whether he would hang a dog on the unsupported testimony of a man like this, admittedly engaged in a plot to convict these lads of a criminal offence for the purpose of advertising his precious company? For the rest, apart from Jacobs' statement as to what Galvin told him about the payment of interest on the shares, the whole evidence is utterly inconsistent with the charge that Collins offered these shares to the Corporation knowing them to be worthless, and falsely pretending that they were valuable. The lad was totally ignorant whether the shares were valuable or not, and, by way of ascertaining their value, he sends one to the Investments Realisation Corporation, in response to these people's own advertisement, asking them what they would give for such shares. The way in which the first ten certificates were sent was on the face of it as perfectly innocent a proceeding as would be my sending to my brokers any old share certificate in my possession which has ceased to be valuable—I am sorry to say that I have a good many such lying by—and asking whether they can get anything for it. The mere fact of the shares being sent in this way to a professed expert, with an inquiry as to their market value, should have been sufficient in itself to acquit this unfortunate youth of anything in the shape of a fraudulent intention. It is not for me to dogmatise upon legal technicalities, but I believe ninety-nine lawyers out of a hundred will agree with me that there was no evidence in this case on which a judge ought to have allowed a jury to convict, and that had an appeal been possible, the conviction must inevitably have been quashed.

If that is a just view of the conviction, what is to be thought of the sentence? Here we have a lad of hitherto unimpeachable character who, even if he has attempted a dishonest act, has been led into it by an agent provocateur acting in collusion with the police, for the purpose of advertising his own business. Parliament has wisely passed an Act for the Probation of First Offences, which should apply to such a case if it ever applied to any. Over and above that, there is definite and unimpeachable evidence of intellectual infirmity, which ought in the first place to have been accepted as a sufficient explanation of whatever was suspicious in the prisoner's conduct, and which, even if he were found guilty of a criminal intention, should have gone far to extenuate the offence. Neither the one consideration nor the other, however, weighs with Mr. Loveland-Loveland, and this youthful first offender, convicted on the flimsiest evidence, and shown to be of very doubtful moral and intellectual responsibility, is mercilessly consigned to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour. The sentence is infamous, and, taken in conjunction with the other circumstances of the case, it makes one tremble to think that the lives and liberty of English men and women are almost every day at the mercy of a judge so utterly incapable of weighing the value of evidence, the culpability of offenders, or the probable consequences of his own decrees.

For the Decorating and Furnishing in best modern manner, or in any of the traditional styles, of a single room or an entire house, Hampton & Sons, Ltd., prepare, free of charge, suggestive schemes and competitive estimates.—Pall Mall East, S.W.

There remains the question, who is responsible for the failure to convey to the prison authorities any intimation of the prisoner's mental condition? It must be assumed that the Judge, having sent this wretched youth to twelve months' hard labour after hearing his personal and family antecedents, and having promised, when passing sentence, that he should be properly looked after, gave some kind of order that the prison authorities should be made acquainted with the medical evidence given at the trial. But if any such order was given, it was most certainly disobeyed, and the least Mr. Loveland-Loveland can now do is to inquire into the reason for this disobedience. Had proper notice of all the evidence been given, there is every probability that Daniel Collins would be alive to-day. For want of such notice he was a dead man within six days of his consignment to gaol. Looking at that tragic result, I can only say that I do not envy the feelings either of those who so unwarrantably and so mercilessly compassed this poor lad's conviction and imprisonment or of those, whoever they may have been, who, with such scandalous negligence, handed him over to the gaolers without a hint of the need for keeping him under close observation and treating him with special care.

Collins being dead and buried, it may, perhaps, be said that there is no good in agitating over his case. There I differ. If, for no other reason, I would call attention to the story as a fresh and unanswerable proof of the urgent necessity for a court of appeal in criminal cases. But, apart from that, I contend that there should be some inquiry into the practice with regard to communicating to prison authorities any evidence as to mental or other infirmity in the prisoner given at his trial; and that if there be any duty on the part of the officers of a criminal court to communicate such information, the reason why it was not communicated in Collins' case should be investigated, and the party responsible for the omission punished. Finally, there is one very practical consideration. Though poor Collins is dead, his fellow-conspirator, or fellow-victim, Galvin, is still alive, and serving the sentence of nine months' imprisonment imposed upon him at the same time. Except as to the defence of insanity, everything that can be urged against the conviction of Collins applies equally to him, and if it be held that there was no false pretence or fraudulent intent on Collins' part, a fortiori there was none on Galvin's. The Home Secretary should be moved with a view to obtaining his release, and I hope that no time will be lost in taking steps for that purpose.

Kinahan's LL Whisky.—"The Cream of Old Irish Whiskies." Kinahan's LL Whisky. Gold Medal Paris Exhibition, 1878. Kinahan's Glenisle Whisky. The Finest Scotch Whisky sold.

RÖHSS—MONEY-LENDER AND INCOME-TAX ASSESSOR.

In a letter to a Southampton paper Mr. Herbert B. Röhss attributes to the Board of Inland Revenue a decision which, if he correctly reports it, will be received with unbounded astonishment and general disapproval. Mr. Röhss is a gentleman of varied avocations—an auctioneer and a valuer, an estate agent and a commission agent, a mortgage broker and an advertising money-lender. In the last-named capacity, following the example of other members of the fraternity, he trades both in his own name and under the more impressive style of the Southampton Loan and Advance Company. With these private pursuits Mr. Röhss combines the public functions of an Assessor of Income-tax. The same office, 1, Anglesea-terrace, Bevois-hill, Southampton, is used alike for the purposes of usury and for the purposes of the income-tax. A month or so back I drew attention to this singular conjunction of callings, and pointed out that it was undesirable to have a professional money-lender acting as assessor of income-tax. The matter was then brought up in the House of Commons in the form of a question to the Secretary to the Treasury. Mr. Hanbury, in his reply, expressed his personal disapprobation of such an arrangement; implied that the Board of Inland Revenue were also opposed to it, and suggested that the local Commissioners of Income-tax at Southampton were alone to blame. He stated that the Board would communicate with the Commissioners, and, from the tone of his remarks, it was assumed that the result would be the abolition of an appointment open to grave and obvious objections.

Since this statement in Parliament, Mr. Röhss has figured as defendant in an action in the Bournemouth County Court for damages for wrongful and malicious prosecution. The plaintiff was a man to whom the defendant had lent £10 at 50 per cent. interest, and against whom he had preferred a charge of false pretences, with the result that the jury stopped the case after hearing the prosecutor cross-examined. For this prosecution Judge Philbrick, in the County Court, mulcted Röhss in eighty guineas damages; and it is in answer to a paragraph I published in reference to the action that the usurer has now written to the local Press. He remarks that, as he is appealing against the judgment, "he is is not at liberty to comment thereon beyond saying that the Bournemouth County Court Judge never for a moment stigmatised his conduct as odious and monstrous, as alleged in Truth." As the case is again sub judice, I am also precluded from further comment upon it at present. In the face, however, of Mr. Röhss's contradiction, I feel at liberty to reproduce the following from the report of Judge Philbrick's judgment. I may preface it by explaining that the charge of false pretences had been founded upon the borrower's answers to a list of questions submitted to him by Röhss —questions which the Judge described as admitting of "every possible form of construction, not to say evasion," and as "likely to mislead a lawyer, not to say a layman":—

His Honour said it was an odious thing to set in force the criminal law for the recovery of a civil debt. The object of the criminal law was not to collect debts, and it was a prostitution of the law to apply it to such a purpose. . . . Passing on to the grounds on which the criminal action in the present case was based, his Honour said, if it were doubtful whether the furniture at Pine-avenue or the goods at the business premises were meant in answer to the questions on the paper which the plaintiff filled up, it was a monstrous thing to make a matter of doubt the subject of a criminal prosecution. . . He viewed with amazement that anybody in a doubtful thing of this kind should make it the foundation for a charge of false and fraudulent pretences. He had no doubt in this case that the goods having been held to be the plaintiff's wife's, was the real reason for the criminal proceedings, and the defendant himself had admitted that, if he had got his money, he would not have taken the criminal proceedings. After full consideration he had come to the conclusion that the defendant had established the prosecution wrongfully, maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause.

I quote this simply to enable people to gauge the value of Mr. Röhss's denial that his conduct was stigmatised as odious and monstrous. Whether the judgment given in the County Court will be upheld on appeal remains to be seen; but, meanwhile, a more important question is whether Mr. Röhss is to retain his position as an Assessor of Income-tax? It is on this question that his letter makes such a surprising statement concerning the Board of Inland Revenue. He says:—

Regarding my appointment as Assessor of Income-tax, the Board of Inland Revenue, as foreshadowed in the House of Commons by the Secretary to the Treasury, instituted inquiries with the gratifying result to me that they were perfectly satisfied with my appointment, and my integrity and competence in the fulfilment of the office—an office, I need not tell you, I never sought, and which I would gladly renounce were it possible.

It would appear from this that a most extraordinary and incomprehensible change has been wrought in the opinions of the authorities at Somerset House since Mr. Hanbury acted as their mouthpiece in Parliament. Not only are they now "perfectly satisfied" with Mr. Röhss, but, according to his own story, the appointment was thrust upon him, and he is actually pressed to keep it. Röhss the money-lender (otherwise the Southampton Loan and Advance Company) is naturally gratified to think that the Board of Inland Revenue look upon his services as indispensable. The public, on the other hand, will be intensely disgusted at this official connection with Shylockism. Beyond the case mentioned above I know very little of the man's transactions, but there is the fact that he is an advertising usurer, and that in itself should be sufficient to disqualify him for the berth of Assessor of Income-tax. Merely as a matter of taste and propriety, it is intolerable that one of a tribe who do such incalculable mischief, and who are held in such universal odium and disrepute, should be officially concerned in the levying of the Queen's taxes. There is, however, a more substantial objection to the appointment. An Assessor of Income-tax is an inquisitor, at whose demand everybody in his district is compelled to disclose his pecuniary position. Is it right that information of this kind, obtained in this way, should be at the disposal of a person who makes a business of lending money at usurious interest? It is difficult to understand how the Board of Inland Revenue can have come to regard it as anything but wrong, and it will be interesting to learn what has induced them to alter the attitude they first took up towards Mr. Rohss. I hope, therefore, that an early opportunity will be taken to again interrogate Mr. Hanbury on the subject.

MR. RAYNER SUB JUDICE.

I have great pleasure in publishing the following communication with which I was favoured last week. The article referred to was, it may be remembered, the last of a series which appeared in Truth between February and May, dealing with the various "Inventions Competitions" that have been run during the last twelve months in provincial newspapers by Messrs. Rayner & Son, of Chancery-lane, in their character of "Patent Editors" of those journals:—

The Chartered Institute of Patent Agents,
19, Southampton-buildings, London, W.C.
June 1, 1898.

H. Howgrave Graham, Secretary and Registrar.

Dear Sir,—Adverting to your issue of May 19, relating to the Prize Competition for Inventions, I am directed to say for your information that the matter has for some time engaged the attention of this Institute, and that an application to the Board of Trade has been made by my Council to appoint a Committee under the Register of Patent Agents Rules, 1889-1891.—Yours faithfully, H. Howgrave Graham.

The Editor of Truth.

The application to the Board of Trade here referred to is, I presume, one such as was suggested in my last article for an inquiry into the conduct of Mr. Rayner or his firm, with a view to his removal, if found guilty of disgraceful professional conduct, from the official register of patent agents. That being so, an issue gravely affecting Mr. Rayner has been definitely raised, and is now sub judice; and until it is disposed of, any further comment upon the merits of the case would be improper. There are only two remarks, therefore, which I shall make at this stage. One is that all the evidence in my possession, which is of a very voluminous character, and throws much light upon the nature and effect of these competitions, is entirely at the service of the Institute of Patent Agents, or the Board of Trade Committee of Inquiry, if they care to avail themselves of it; and it will be a labour of love to me to do anything in my power to further the ends of justice in this case.

The second remark which I desire to make is that it behoves all those journals which have been allowing Messrs. Rayner & Son to operate through their columns in the character of "patent editors" to suspend their advertisements for that purpose pending the conclusion of the Board of Trade inquiry. I do not know whether any of Mr. Rayner's "Inventions Competitions" are being advertised in the provincial Press at the present moment. But in addition to the twenty or thirty papers which have co-operated in these competitions, there are many others, which have in each issue a standing announcement recommending readers of an inventive turn to communicate with the "patent editor" of the journal, or with some patent agent whom the editor recommends. Among the papers which have in this way "covered" Mr. Rayner's business at one time or another are such publications as Answers, Pearson's Weekly, St. Paul's, Madame, the Weekly Sun, the People, the Weekly Telegraph (Sheffield), and several others. As all of them have virtually been guaranteeing Mr. Rayner's bona fides and trustworthiness as a patent agent, it is clearly impossible for them to continue to do so while Mr. Rayner's professional conduct is impeached by the Institute of Patent Agents, and is under investigation by the Board of Trade. Indeed, I hold a very strong opinion that no paper ever has any business to give a guarantee of this sort to its readers, and that a most dangerous responsibility is assumed when any patent agent is allowed to carry on his business in the disguise of a "Patent Department" of a newspaper office. This is a point, however, which can be more conveniently discussed hereafter, when the merits of Mr. Rayner's conduct have been adjudicated upon by the proper tribunal.

A BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO ST. JAMES'S.

Sir William Beauvedere, diplomatist and prig, has persuaded Alice Gainsborough to become engaged to him. This young lady is an orphan, under the care of Sir William's step-mother, Lady Beauvedere. We first make her acquaintance in the drawing-room of her ladyship's house in Paris, in the act of confessing to her sister, the nun, that she does not care for Sir William, and prefers to break off the match rather than make three people miserable. The third of these is Lady Gwendoline Marleaze, who really loves Sir William and is very jealous of Alice. Lady Gwendoline soon appears, and after her Lady Beauvedere, followed by a host of friends, who call to congratulate the latter upon the engagement, and have all brought their best dresses and epigrams. Among these is Lord St. Orbyn, British Ambassador at Rome. He is a suave diplomatist, rather young for what is so often something of a posthumous position. Besides this advantage his Excellency is the possessor of a perfect arsenal of epigram, which stands him in good stead upon this occasion. From what has been mentioned before his appearance, it is clear that at least two of the ladies would like to become his wife. The first of these is Lady Beauvedere. In a short skirmish he shows himself determined on remaining a bachelor, and transfixes his friend with epigrams, returned, it must be admitted, with considerable vigour by her ladyship. The second is a certain Princess Vendramini, a Roman lady of Ouidaesque extraction; that is, she has good looks, great wealth, and the control of European politics. But Lord St. Orbyn will none of them. They exchange epigrams. Suddenly Alice Gainsborough returns to the drawing-room, and in the space of one—epigram—the celibacy of a lifetime is ruined. Lord St. Orbyn is in love.

This fact is made still more clear to us four days afterwards, when we again meet Alice and the Ambassador in Lady Beauvedere's conservatory during a dance. He asks her to be his wife. But Alice has not time to do more than crumple her sash when they are interrupted by the advent of Sir William Beauvedere from Berlin. Alice leaves the two men together, and Sir William asks for his friend, St. Orbyn's, advice. The air positively bristles in this place with the points of the epigrams let fall by these distinguished diplomatists. After running through a short list of the ladies who adore him, Sir William makes it clear that he now prefers Lady Gwendoline Marleaze to Miss Gainsborough. Lord St. Orbyn naturally advises him to break off the match (Sir William has not yet received Alice's letter to that effect) and the two friends are epigramatising most happily together when in their turn they are interrupted by Vivian, Sir William's younger brother. Vivian draws Sir William aside and tells him how he has forged the endorsement to his mother's cheque for £500 and given it to a certain Major Lascelles in settlement of a gambling debt. This Major Lascelles is a friend of Lord St. Orbyn, but the terror of Lady Beauvedere, who has not asked him to her dance. He lives, however, just over the way, and has organised a small party of his own, perhaps as a set-off to his neighbour's. Young Vivian implores his wealthy brother to come to the rescue, and Sir William is so indignant at the proposal that he refuses in plain English without a single epigram. But Alice has overheard the conversation, and for the sake of her friend, Lady Beauvedere, promises Vivian, who tries to shoot himself, that she will do her best to recover the cheque from Major Lascelles that very evening—for the gallant Major is well known to be fond of fair ladies and an admirer of Miss Alice. Just as she leaves the house to cross the garden, Lady Beauvedere and Lady Gwendoline Marleaze catch sight of her dress among the trees. The next act finds us in Major Lascelles' rooms; his party consists of two very vulgar little Americans and their mother; they have nothing to do with the story, but one of them dances and the other throws down a plate, which is no doubt characteristic.

But let us return to our epigrams. Lord St. Orbyn comes in, and, when the young ladies have withdrawn, tells his friend the story of his rapid decline and fall. He is engaged in this pleasing task, when suddenly appears no less a person than Miss Alice, his captor, in quest of the cheque. After profound bows on both sides, St. Orbyn leaves them. Lascelles is soon informed of the reason of her visit, and while uncorking a few of those witticisms which I positively dare not mention again, produces the draft, and promises secrecy. Lady Beauvedere next enters, and Alice pluckily refuses to give the reason of her visit, though her position unexplained appears most compromising. Finally, however, the good sense of Lady Beauvedere triumphs, and she departs with Alice. And here is placed perhaps the happiest stroke of a clever play. St. Orbyn returns and asks Lascelles for an explanation of Alice's visit. Faithful to his promise, the Major says there is no explanation.

"That's all right," calls out St. Orbyn (I merely paraphrase the text); "if there had been anything to conceal, there would have been plenty of lies forthcoming," and, kissing the pink rosette fallen from Alice's shoe as she left the room, he hastens in search of his beloved.

The last act finds us in the garden at Lady Beauvedere's. Her dance is still going on, and Sir William, not without many epigrams, proposes to Lady Gwendoline, and is accepted. Soon afterwards the other pair of lovers appear, and Lady Beauvedere joins their hands with abnegation and an epigram, and the curtain falls upon three hours' felicity of phrase.

When we had finished applauding the actors and Mrs.

THE HOTEL CECIL RESTAURANT.—Orchestra daily. M. François, Chef de Restaurant, from the Grand Hotel, Monte Carlo. The new Grill Room is now open.

Craigie, my neighbour remarked, "It's really too clever; it has given me a headache." And although this may appear, indeed, a crumpled rose-leaf of a criticism, I think there is some truth in it, for there is too much head and too little heart in the play—too much cerebration, and not enough observation.

Unless, as in Congreve and Sheridan, and one or two other authors one might name, the epigram and paradox are cut in brilliants, one is apt to grow a little weary of the showman's wit and inclined to wish the puppets were stuffed with sense instead of fireworks which do not always go off. And what is more appalling than a Catherine wheel with a cold? But a great number of Mrs. Craigie's fireworks do go off, and I liked the display, though certainly with somewhat of a feeling of dread when, as frequently occurred, one of the characters remarked: "There are four ways of—doing something or other." I should have preferred to know he had chosen one of those ways and see him do that. And even the good example of Macaulay, who maintained that no writers had injured the Comedy of England so much as Congreve and Sheridan, "whose works bear the same relation to the legitimate drama which a transparency does to a painting," cannot convince me that I am wrong upon this point—with the difference above stated. The following scrap is culled from the waste-paper basket of the future:—

SCENE.—Hall of the Duke of Middlesex's house in Grosvenor-square.

HOUSEMAID (about to dust): There are three ways of sweeping the stairs.

FOOTMAN: You surprise me.

HOUSEMAID: With your skirts, like her Grace; on your knees, like me; or not at all. The latter is the most democratic, and therefore the best.

Enter his Grace.—HIS GRACE (to footman): Give me my coat, please.

FOOTMAN: Will your Grace wear the blue or the grey one?

HIS GRACE: Is it raining to-day?

FOOTMAN: Yes, your Grace.

HIS GRACE: Then I will wear the blue one, to encourage the sun. (Cetera desunt.)

The acting of this play attained a very high average and that is indeed rare praise for this side of the Channel. As Lord St. Orbyn, Mr. Alexander was dignified and impressive; if anything, he perhaps delivered some of his witticisms too much as if he meant them; but in the graver moments of the play, as, for instance, in the scene with young Vivian in the third act, his method was seen to the best advantage. Mr. H. V. Esmond's Vivian Beauvedere was an excellent piece of work. Here authoress and actor were at their best—Vivian is thinking too much about the cheque to have time for any verbal dalliance—and he touches every one's heart with his naive confession, delivered with a perfection of intonation I have very rarely heard equalled. Miss Violet Vanbrugh had a most difficult task in the rendering of the character of Lady Beauvedere, and her triumph was well deserved. The changing expressions of her face in the scenes with Alice Gainsborough and St. Orbyn are alone a study for an evening.

And Alice Gainsborough? Winsome Miss Fay Davis was the rosebud in this bouquet of art, with all the girlishness of eighteen, and the strength of character behind which enables her to throw over Sir William, recover the cheque, and reclaim her Ambassador from the paths of independence. Miss Granville was convincing as the Princess Vendramini, Miss Hilda Rivers excellent as Lady Gwendoline Marleaze, Miss Henrietta Leverett as the Housekeeper, and Miss Leila Repton as Lady Vauringham. I liked Mr. Fred Terry in his marvellous make-up as Major Lascelles, and Mrs. G. Kemmis is indeed a duchess. She has placed the type of that cynical lady beside those fixed stars of the theatrical firmament—the benevolent earl and the wicked baronet. Henceforward all duchesses must be fat: they must be cynical, and they must use a little slang. But must they say "bounder" when they have all the world of "beast" and "pig" to revel in? Please not, Mrs. Craigie.

There are one or two details which, I think, might be corrected. For instance, Sir William Beauvedere's rank and title a little perplexed me. His name stands in the programme without "Bart." after it, so presumably he is a Knight. But knighthood is not hereditary, and why should an attaché have been knighted, especially so foolish a one as Sir William? He must be a baronet. Then again as to his mysterious rank of "second attaché." This is the lowest position in the diplomatic service; the first is last and the last first among attachés, all being equally paid nothing till they become secretaries. But Mrs. Craigie is far too well informed to have been ignorant of this, and I imagine that from the point of view of dramatic optics she is right. For the great majority of people seem to think the attaché the only important member of the Embassy, the secretaries being presumably engaged to do any work the attachés may have for them. I once even knew a lady who carried this theory to the extreme of believing that the chargé d'affaires was a sort of diplomatic drudge, engaged to do the spring-cleaning in the absence of the Ambassador! But such simple faith is rare.

Then a word as to the orthography of St. Orbyn. Would it not be possible to choose a name which did not exist elsewhere, instead of mis-spelling one that does? And why Major Lascēlles? Surely the accent should come on the first syllable in English; at least, I never heard of a Lāscelles who was Lascēlles, or would have liked to be. Lascēlles is as unpleasant as Beaumōnt or Gerrārd. They all savour more of Brixton than of Belgravia.

"The Ambassador" was well received by a crowded house, and is certainly a creditable second attempt, the first being a one-act play produced in collaboration with Mr. George Moore, and entitled "Journeys end in Lovers' Meeting," suggested, I believe, by a French original, Le Bougeoir, in the repertory of the Théâtre Français.

"The Ambassador" was beautifully dressed. I do not refer to Lord St. Orbyn's red ribbon, but to the view from Lady Beauvedere's garden up the Champs Elysées to the Arc de Triomphe and to the lamplit conservatory—a joy to the eye. And the costumes? They haunt my dreams but fly my pen. In fact, "The Ambassador" and his epigrams are likely to remain a long while at their present post, and Sir Philip Currie, the new British Ambassador at Rome, will, perhaps, be retired before Lord St. Orbyn.

WHITEHALL COURT, S.W.—To Let, Bachelor and other Suites. Electric Light, Service, Bath-rooms. Meals in public or tenants' own rooms.—Apply, Manager.

"SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER," AT THE STRAND.

There was no necessity, Miss Kate Vaughan, that you should stoop, for most of us were conquered long ago. That, perhaps, made it all the more agreeable to see you bend so gracefully on Monday evening, behind the bouquets that reminded us of the Gaiety, and before Mr. Meyer Lutz who was the Gaiety, as he charmed back the years in his revue mélodique of your songs and dances, danced and sung, alas! And Miss Nellie Farren was smiling from a box to complete the illusion.

Mr. Nettlefold has, at any rate, been bold in opening his season with Goldsmith's comedy. Hardcastle and you his daughter, Tony Lumpkin, and the rest—we know them well and like them the better for being old friends. But with the exception of yourself they were not much alive. Hardcastle was underplayed, young Marlow and Hastings insignificant, and Tony too much Lumpkin. Your own passings from mistress to maid, from maid to mistress again, showed that you understood and sympathised with the humour of him who "wrote like an angel and talked like poor Poll." I was amused to hear some one remark, as we were going out, "I like the play; the dialogue is good." Yes, the dialogue is pretty good.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

A NEW HOTEL.

RITZ'S new hotel is on the site of the Crédit Immobilière, in the Place Vendôme. All but the shell of the house looking on the Place was pulled down and rebuilt as it now stands. The frontage gives no idea of the size of the hotel, which stretches far back into the garden, and contains 150 bedrooms each with its own bathroom. Were I afraid of catching tuberculosis—the most contagious of diseases—I should go to the Hôtel Ritz. Every bedroom faces south, and has wide high windows that solicit light. There are no bed curtains. The window curtains are of white muslin, so as to be often washed. The white walls would show the least speck of dust, so would the highly-polished furniture. I cannot think where a microbe could take refuge, unless in the carpets; and even there the oxygen from the great continuity of gardens and the southern sunlight must soon make short work of them.

The bath-rooms are roomy. One can walk about in any of them to bring on a reaction after a cold douche. The douche may be warm if one chooses. The bath is marble and the walls are faced with Dutch tiles. The whole room might be "scalded" with steam if a tuberculous patient had used it. Electric lights are everywhere. In the bedroom they are in sconces in the Regency style. The whole house is a mixture of the Louis XIV. style in regard to structure and that of the Regency in regard to decoration. A ground-floor corridor, or arched colonnade, promises to win wide-world fame. It is lofty, wide, has a noble air, and yet is extremely gay. Mirrors multiply the views on the garden, which is in full bloom. Outside the colonnade is a terrace under an awning, where small tables are set out. This is the restaurant. In winter the small tables will be in the colonnade, and the terrace will be arranged as a winter garden. Le Tout-Paris of the first theatrical representations went to Ritz's on the opening day. One might fancy one's-self at a garden party in one of the Royal châteaux. The buffets were perhaps too heavily garlanded with choice flowers. Mr. Chamberlain would have revelled in the orchids. It was remarked to me that ladies of a certain age still setting up to beauty would object to all the light and the universal snowiness of the walls. Perhaps. But what is to prevent the awning and window shades being lined with some tender colour, such as pink or light-blue? Light-green would be too trying to any but the young and blooming. There is a strong directorate, and M. Ritz will be assisted in the management of the hotel by M. Echenard late of the Savoy, and M. Escoffier, also late of the Savoy, will superintend the culinary arrangements.

As Ritz's opened, Cubat in the Champs Elysées shut up. A wandering Baronet wrote to me from Ouchy inviting me to dine there on Saturday. I went, to find doors and windows closed. After much knocking and ringing, a caretaker appeared. She said the premises would not re-open as a restaurant, and that perhaps they would be bought by the State to lodge Imperial and Royal visitors to the 1900 Exhibition.

Cubat's restaurant, as we have learned to call it, was built by Mathilde Hertz, when Comtesse de Paiva. The Comte de Paiva was never seen in this temple to his wife's beauty. I recollect hearing that it cost 9,000,000 francs. Seeing what the price of ground is in the Champs Elysées, this would be greatly within the truth were Mathilde Hertz (amie and cousin of Hertz the composer) anybody else. It was said literally to have cost les yeux de la tête of the famous artists employed to decorate it. Baudry painted different ceilings and door panels. Clesinger's chisel showed forth the potency of love on the marble chimney-pieces. The figures are life-size. Carpeaux furnished marble hymns to Venus, Flora, the Muses, and to Hebe the ever-young. These poets of the brush and chisel were to have been paid in coin; but poor Baudry, and, I believe, Carpeaux, did not press for their pecuniary rights. Clesinger, not being a sentimentalist, threatened to go before the Civil Tribunal and to send a masked nudity to the Salon. This answered.

You are not to look for any play of fancy or the spirit of revelry at the bower of Mme. de Paiva. The whole thing bears the stamp of mercantile feeling. All is cold, stiff, over-laden with ornament, and proclaims wealth—such wealth. Still, wealth is wealth, and Mme. de Paiva was proud of hers. These suggestions are made by the interior. The want of envergure speaks of a close heart. The marble stairs are not deficient in space, but they look cramped, and are in a penumbra. They are stairs which persons apprehensive of being recognised might hurry up and down with a sort of pleasure. The carriage-way is so close to the last step that one could jump from it into the vehicle in making a bolt. Most of the rooms are small. Were they not so overlaid with decorations in the style of the grand galleries at Versailles, one might call them poky. Their exiguous size suggests that Madame had so many visitors. When they made calls, she liked them to remain apart, if she could not receive them all directly. There is an air about the place which suggests that architect and decorators knew they were working for a harpy. This chilled them. Constraint oozes out everywhere. Finally, inordinate vanity is, I shall not say betrayed, but displayed. Each room was meant to advertise Madame's wealth and taste. Its business was not to please, but to épater, and to show what rich offerings the goddess of the temple expected of her votaries. Her expectations were realised far beyond her dreams. The richest nobleman of central Germany laid his silver mines, factories, woodlands, and pasturages at her feet. His coronet was superadded. To humour one of her costly whims, he built for her an exact copy of the Tuileries on a mountain side in Silesia, where it was as much out of place as she was.

Walking, Cycling, Shooting, Yachting Dresses, &c.—John Busvine & Co., Tailors and Riding Habit Makers to H.R.H. the Princess of Wales, the Princess Victoria of Wales, the Duchess of Fife, the Princess Charles of Denmark, the Marchioness of Lorne, the Princess Henry of Battenberg, the Duchess of Connaught, the Duchess of Albany, the Empress of Austria, the Empress of Russia, the Empress of Germany, the Princess Henry of Prussia, the Princess Victoria of Prussia, the Infanta Eulalia of Spain, the Countess de Paris, the Duchess d'Aosta.—4, Brook-street, London, W.

This woman was cold and imperious. Her guests at her dinner parties were fearfully on their good behaviour. When they left her Agapes, they felt like boys just released from school. I recollect at a party given by a Protestant lady—Vicomtesse de P——seeing a band of eminent men enter together. Prevost-Paradol, who had become an Imperialist, and About were of it. They had all been dining with Mme. de Paiva. As they left her house, one of them heaved a sigh, and asked his companions whether they knew of any proper woman where, without intruding, they might go to thaw. Prevost-Paradol remembered that Vicomtesse de P——'s soirée was going forward. She was brought up in strict Protestant principles. "All the better," said About. "We can talk freely before her without seeming to throw stones."

The spirit of Mme. de Paiva seemed to linger in Cubat's restaurant. The only dinner I ever enjoyed there was one given by Mr. Edward Cooper, the novelist. He is a charming host. On the occasion I speak of he had good reason to be pleased with the reception of one of his turf novels by the British public. This cause of satisfaction, hospitable feeling, and a well-chosen company helping, gave entrain to his dinner party. Mr. Cooper has spent the winter and spring in the doctor's hands, an operation on his knee being found necessary. He is now in the convalescent stage, and enjoying Atlantic breezes at St. Marguerite on the Breton coast.

In this rastaquouère time one is glad to notice the good taste prevailing at the Vanderbilt-Dresser wedding. Bride and bridegroom are of Dutch descent. This in itself would explain the avoidance of display. The church where they were married remained a church, and not a flower show. Mr. George Vanderbilt has, to English eyes, a foreign look, but is quite unassuming. Perhaps he is taller than the Czar, the Duke of York, or M. Deschanel, the new President of the Chamber of Deputies. His bride would be the same height as the Czarina or the Duchess of York. She is slightly Marie-Stuartish in stature, features, and bearing, is decidedly handsome, and bore herself with composure and serenity.

The Duke and Duchess of Marlborough excited some curiosity. Had Disraeli been painting a Young Duke for one of those novels of his so dear to ladies' maids, he would not have chosen his Grace of Marlborough. That Duke has not the staginess required to please the vulgar. The Duchess is very peculiar, but pleasingly so. What can be stranger than the combination of a very tall figure, a swan-like neck, and the head of a Japanese belle? I think there is no prettier being than a Japanese beauty. But she is so tiny: her race never produced a tall woman. The Duchess wore a pale beige silk dress and pelerine. The hat showed the face well. It was black, had a broad leaf turned up in front, and was trimmed with black feathers and a large clasp of diamonds—or, perhaps, milliners' paste.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

GREAT movements, dear Lady Betty, and great moments make great men. The late Mr. Gladstone has been described in many newspapers as our last great man, which is only correct in so far as he is the last great man of a certain class. The race which has already produced so many eminent men and women that their remains, and the monuments erected to perpetuate their memory, fill Westminster Abbey, will certainly bring forth others; and the problem of the moment is to discover how the nation may best prepare a last home for its dead heroes. It is proposed to add to Westminster Abbey! It would be as wise to attempt to add to the plays of Shakespeare, to the "Paradise Lost" of Milton, or to Addison's "Spectator." Moreover, it must be borne in mind that the ashes of the three greatest members of the race—to wit, those of Shakespeare, of Wellington, and of Nelson—are buried elsewhere. This being so, the Abbey cannot be regarded as the official resting-place of our great dead.

But there have been times when burial in Westminster Abbey has been accorded much more freely than it has recently. Many are buried there who have little claim to be considered famous; and there are monuments erected to perpetuate the memory of comparatively insignificant personages. These might be reverently removed, so as to make room for those great men and women whom the race has still to produce.

Moreover, there is plenty of space around the Abbey to bury our illustrious dead, and, indeed, it would be pleasing to see this magnificent building, which has played so important a part in the history of the nation, surrounded by the graves of those who have earned renown in its service.

It is only in exceptional circumstances that burial in Westminster Abbey should be accorded. Had the remains of Mr. Gladstone been laid to rest in the church at Hawarden, thousands of men and women from the neighbouring towns would have, for generations to come, visited that village, and many of them would have been influenced by the example of the illustrious statesman. At Westminster Abbey there are the remains of so many great men buried, that the attention is not wholly directed to one well-spent life, to one successful career, or to one magnificent combination of qualities. Consequently, the ordinary mind does not become so impressed as it might be. It is, therefore, for the good of the community that the majority of our great dead should be buried in the districts which are most closely associated with their names. To add a modern building to Westminster Abbey, to erect a national temple of fame in the immediate neighbourhood of that splendid building, would be an act of vandalism which cannot be too strongly opposed; the more so that, by judicious treatment, ample room can be secured in and around the Abbey to bury the most illustrious of our dead, and to erect monuments that shall testify to the gratitude of the community for the services which they have rendered to our race.

SAVOY HOTEL, Savoy Restaurant, London. Large reception-rooms for fashionable réunions. Orchestra plays daily during dinner and opera supper.

* * * * *

No public announcement has yet been made that the Queen has offered to confer the title of Countess on Mrs. Gladstone, though it is probable that her Majesty has done so, and that the offer has been refused. In that case, the dignity of an Earldom would be conferred upon the grandson of Mr. Gladstone, who is heir to the Hawarden estates. The Queen on more than one occasion offered to elevate the late Mr. Gladstone to an Earldom, but it has been said that he would not accept any but the extinct Earldom of Liverpool, and that the family which is associated with this title opposed his wishes in this respect.

* * * * *

In a leading article which appeared in the Times, on Tuesday last, on the subject of the funeral of Mr. Gladstone, the following sentence occurred:—"Not an offence has been recorded amongst the hundreds of thousands who assembled in the heart of the greatest capital of the world." Almost the same words were used on the occasion of the Jubilee procession of 1887, and with regard to that of 1897. This shows the progress which the nation has made towards civilised behaviour since Mr. Gladstone first took it by the hand, and, full of confidence in the people, enlarged the franchise, provided increased facilities for education, and threw the balance of power into the hands of the multitude. If the experiment has succeeded so splendidly up to the point which it has reached, why distrust its further legitimate and less drastic developments?

* * * * *

All the London daily newspapers, with the exception of one, published the following telegram on Monday last:—

"New York, June 4.

"The Washington correspondent of the Herald telegraphs that the American Government has sent a despatch to the Paraguayan Executive demanding that the Spanish torpedo-boat destroyer Temerario, which has been lying at Buenos Ayres for some time, should either be dismantled or be requested to leave Paraguayan waters."

It may be pointed out that Buenos Ayres is the capital of the Argentine Republic, and has nothing whatever to do with Paraguay. Newspaper correspondents and editors all the world over appear to have lost their heads over this serio-comic conflict between a nation which has an army that cannot fight and a nation with a navy that is in the same plight.

* * * * *

Polo cycling, which was first adopted by the Sheen House Club, has bounded into popularity, and is now being practised at the other leading suburban clubs. The committee of the Sheen House may, however, be congratulated on being the first to perceive the possibilities of the new game, and for having founded a Polo Cycling Association which is the representative institution of polo upon wheels. The Duke and Duchess of Fife are amongst the latest who have joined the Sheen House Club, and since cycling in the streets has decreased in the West End, the number of those who use the club and that portion of Richmond Park—the most secluded—has largely increased. It may be, too, that as the season is unusually quiet, more are able to spend the days and evenings out of town than in other years.—Believe me to be very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

Of late years the Ascot meeting has often been remarkable principally for the wretchedly small fields which have come out to run for rich stakes. Every one knows that the Ascot course is usually in very bad order, and that after a long period of dry weather its condition is simply atrocious. The hard ground is the excuse invariably put forth for the failure of race after race, and it is an undeniable fact that every year some horses are for ever "settled," so far as the turf is concerned, after running at this meeting. This season no such excuse can be advanced if Ascot fails to show the large fields which ought to be a matter of course with such an attractive programme, for the ground is quite soft, and if there is any more rain the going will be very heavy, in which case the meeting will probably be quite as disastrous to backers as was Epsom, which, indeed, turned out a veritable Moscow campaign. Owners cannot be afraid to run even the most "groggy" of their horses at Ascot next week.

There are 100 entries for the Coventry Stakes, which race will be worth £2,000. The best two-year-olds of the public lot are Mr. D. Baird's Musa, Mr. Brassey's Boniface, Mr. Merry's Sir Hercules, Lord Dunraven's Desmond, Marquis di Serramezzana's Musetta, and Captain Machell's Blackwing. There are no penalties in this race for previous winners. Among the dark two-year-olds in the entry which have been talked about are the Prince of Wales' Sandringham, own brother to Persimmon; Captain Greer's Birkenhead, by Orme out of Tragedy, dam of Wildfowler; Duke of Portland's Manners, own brother to Amiable; Lord Rosebery's Corposant, by Sheen out of Illuminata, dam of Ladas and Chelandry, and his Flambard, by Oriflamb out of Armorica; and the Duke of Westminster's Frontier, by Orme out of Quetta, and his Splendid, by Sheen out of Ornament, who is own sister to Labrador. Flambard will represent Lord Rosebery in this race, and he is expected to run well; but I shall predict the victory of either Blackwing or Boniface. Captain Machell's colt is thought to be now better than he was when he made his successful début at Gatwick, while Mr. Brassey's colt will also be more forward in condition, and he has been doing very well since he ran at Epsom. The more severe course at Ascot will be in favour of Boniface, who is believed to be a stayer. Mr. Brassey is to be strongly represented at Ascot, and he has been staying at Sefton Lodge during the holidays in order to see his horses gallop.

There are seventy-five entries for the Two-year-old Biennial on Tuesday, and the race will be worth £1,250. Among the public lot are Chloris II. (who beat Sister Angela at Epsom), Sir Hercules, Monopoly filly by St. Simon out of Hampton Rose (5 lb. extra), and Dark David; but I expect the winner will spring from the dark contingent, and shall predict the success of Mr. Rose's Messene, by Donovan out of Arcadia, dam of Cyllene, who is believed to be a smart filly.

There are forty-five entries for the Triennial on Wednesday, and the 5 lb. penalty of Fascination ought not to stop her, as the running of Mr. James's filly at Epsom showed that she is just now in good form.

The New Stakes, which is the richest two-year-old race of the week, will be worth £2,140. Several of the Coventry Stakes lot are in this race also, but not Blackwing. However, the Bedford Cottage stable will probably be dangerous with Mr. Leigh's dark filly, Clay Pigeon, by Common out of Flyaway, dam of The Wyvern, who is very racing-like, and she is said to be smart. Boniface will most likely turn out to be the best of the public lot if he starts for this race. The Duke of Westminster, whose colours are usually dangerous at Ascot in the two-year-old events, is represented by Flying Fox, by Orme out of Vampire, and by Frontier.

There are ninety-one entries for the Windsor Castle Stakes on Friday, including Eventail, Musetta, Blackwing, Flambard, and Amurath. This will be the most exciting two-year-old race of the week if Blackwing and Amurath both run, and I shall rely upon the winner of the Brocklesby Stakes, but it will take Mr. Raphael's colt all his time to beat Blackwing.

With regard to the three-year-old events, they are likely to be startling in their results, and any backers who are such infatuated idiots as to pay the slightest attention to the records of "the book" will probably be brought to dire disaster. There are sixty-six entries for the Prince of Wales' Stakes, which will be worth about £2,900, and the field may include Jeddah (9 lb. extra), Succoth, Locarno, Disraeli (9 lb. extra), Hawfinch (5 lb. extra), Wantage (7 lb. allowed), Tom Cringle, Ninus, Schonberg, and Batt (3 lb. extra). I shall expect Wantage to win this race for the Duke of Portland, for he ran well in the Derby, and he will now be in something like proper racing condition. Dieudonné is engaged both in this race and in the Ascot Derby, but he is not likely to run for either race, the distances being too far for the Duke of Devonshire's colt. As to the Derby on Wednesday, Jeddah (10 lb. extra), Brio (7 lb. allowed), Disraeli (10 lb. extra), Wantage, Tom Cringle, Dunlop, Schonberg, Pheon (7 lb. allowed), and Batt are the best of the fifty-one entries for this race, which will be worth about £1,900, and I shall expect the finish to lie between Batt and Pheon. Sixty-two fillies are engaged in the Coronation Stakes, which will be worth £4,100 if ten start, and it is, indeed, the most valuable race of the week. The entry includes Nun Nicer (7 lb. extra), Royal Footstep, Simylla, Airs and Graces (7 lb. extra), La Veine, Needlecase, Airosa, Ebba, La Fortune, Lowood, and Orpah. I shall plump for the Duke of Westminster's candidate, which will probably be Lowood. There are seventy-nine entries for the Three-Year-Old Biennial of £1,290, which is run over the Old Mile. Cap Martin, Dieudonné, Pheon, Alt Mark, Jeddah, Elfin, Royal Footstep, Powderham, and Ninus, are all possible starters. Dieudonné is not likely to start, having the extreme penalty of 12 lb., as also has Jeddah. Pheon will win if he goes for this race, instead of running for the Ascot Derby. On Thursday there are fifty-four entries for the St. James's Palace Stakes of about £2,800, including Ninus, Schonberg, Batt, Wantage, Jeddah, Angus, Pheon, Cap Martin, and Dieudonné, and I shall give a plumper for the Duke of Devonshire's colt, as this race ought to be a good thing for him. I believe that before the Derby a trial over a mile showed Dieudonné to be "a good 7 lb." better than Jeddah. There are forty-nine entries for the three-year-old heat of the Triennial, which is run on Friday, and the race should be a certainty for Cyllene if he comes all right to the post.

The entry for the Fernhill Stakes includes Blackwing and Amurath, but I do not expect that either colt will start for this race, and, in any case, I should be disposed to predict the victory of Orzil, who was tried for speed at Newmarket on Thursday over the Rous Course with a most satisfactory result.

There are only nine entries for the Vase, and I expect this race will be won by either The Rush or History. These horses have several engagements at Ascot, but either the one or the other is tolerably sure to start for the Vase. It will be remembered that two years ago The Rush started a great favourite for this event, odds of 6 to 4 being freely betted on him, but Pride won, his price being 7 to 1 in a field of five. It was then thought that the racing career of The Rush had terminated, as he pulled up lame, but, unluckily for backers, Mr. Dobell's horse so quickly got right again that he was prepared for the Doncaster Cup, and started a hot favourite, but was easily beaten by Laodamia, who, thereupon, became a great public fancy for the Cesarewitch, in which race she was defeated tragically.

The field for the Gold Cup may include Cyllene, Limasol or Bay Ronald, Newhaven II., The Rush, Comfrey, Merman, St. Cloud II., St. Bris, History, Winkfield's Pride, Dinna Forget, and Labrador, besides three French horses, M. E. Blanc's Masque II. and Montegut, and M. de Bremond's Elf II. The Cup is a very open race, as the stamina of nearly all the English horses has to be taken upon trust. It is a pity that Mr. Larnach has not entered Jeddah, as this race would have afforded more information as to his racing merits than we at present possess. Cyllene has been doing very well at Newmarket, and I expect he will prove the best of the English lot; but my own opinion is that the French will win the Cup this year, and M. E. Blanc's trusted representative may be beaten by Elf II., who is a really good stayer, and with fair speed besides.

With regard to the other weight-for-age events, I should fancy that Goletta or Cortegar will win the four-year-old heat of the Triennial. There are sixty entries for the Rous Memorial Stakes of £1,000, and the field may include All Moonshine, Eager, St. Ia, Carhaix, Sandia, Argosy, Melfitana, Schonberg or The Reeve, and Calveley or Ameer. I fancy either Eager or Sandia, the former horse having won the same race last year. The Biennial (Old Mile) has forty-one entries, and I fancy Elfin or Melfitana. The Biennial (T.Y.C.) has thirty-five entries, and The Convict may be able to win if he can beat Mr. D. Baird's candidate, which will probably be Brio. The All Aged Stakes may be won by Musetta or by Bridegroom. The Hardwicke Stakes on Friday, which will be worth £2,650, looks well for Cortegar, or the best of the Duke of Westminster's. Bay Ronald, who won this race last year, will have run for the Gold Cup, and I do not suppose that Jeddah will start. The Alexandra Plate may be left to Masqué or Elf II. The Queen's Stand Plate of £800 should fall to Kilcock if his owner is wise enough to reserve him for this race. It will be observed that the same horses are engaged over and over again in most of the weight-for-age events at Ascot.

I am told that Sir R. Waldie Griffith's filly, Sweet Majorie, by Kendal out of St. Marguerite, who cost 3,000 gs. at Doncaster last September, will probably run at Ascot for the New Stakes. She is also engaged in the Coventry Stakes. Sweet Majorie is a splendid filly, and a beautiful mover, and if she has won her trial (probably she will be galloped with Desmond), as to the issue of which the market will afford some indication, she will be worth backing in any race at Ascot for which she starts. Sir Richard has a very nice, racing-like two-year-old in the colt by Kendal out of Adornment, for which he paid 510 gs. at Doncaster. He is engaged at Ascot in the same races as Sweet Majorie.

There are twenty-four acceptances for the Ascot Stakes, the list being headed by The Rush, who is decidedly over weighted with 9 st. 6 lb., but Waugh's stable will find a better candidate in Piety, who has 8 st. 4 lb. to carry, and this horse is sure to stay the course. Rapallo is thrown in with 6 st. 4 lb., but he will be an awkward horse for a boy to ride in such a long race as this. Limasol (7 st. 10 lb.) won a trial at Newmarket last week, which shows that she is in form, but the distance was only a mile and a quarter, so that the stamina of Mr. Brassey's mare must be taken upon trust. Marius II. is well in, but he may not be reserved for this race. The distance will be too far for Nunsuch. Jaquemart seems overweighted, and he must now be getting stale after all the work he has done since the opening of the season. Villiers has been going well at Newmarket, and he has a ridiculously light weight. This horse might canter away with the race if he took it into his head to do his best, but he cannot be trusted. St. Bris and Butter are the Kingsclere candidates, and both are fairly well handicapped. I shall give a plumper for Piety.

There will be plenty of betting on the Royal Hunt Cup during the next week, but all prudent people will leave this race alone until the day of running arrives, as the early speculation on such a handicap is mere fiddle-faddle, representing only the harum-scarum fancies of too impetuous backers. Kilcock cannot stay the course, and his owner will act wisely if he keeps this horse within his best distance during the remainder of his turf career. Kilcock has been very much mismanaged, for what is the use of repeatedly knocking a six-furlong horse about in mile races? Minstrel is very warmly recommended in some quarters, but I do not believe he will be the best of the Egerton Lodge lot of seven. Hermiston is well in, but I fancy Mr. Low's horse will not be seen at his best until later on in the season. Chelandry has been doing no work, and Eager has too much weight. Goletta ought to carry the Rothschild colours prominently. Sandia will be the best from the Lorillard-Beresford stable. I am told that M. Menier's Valparaiso will win if he comes all right to the post. Of the home-trained lot, I have the most fancy for St. Cloud II. (who is in capital form just now, and looking remarkably fit and well) or Neish.

Desmond won the race at Manchester for which I predicted his success, but the great tip at the finish was Musetta, who came from Newmarket with a high reputation, as she had been well galloped. Desmond won cleverly, but Musetta ran very green, and she will do better next time. The Irish horses are always dangerous at Manchester when fancied, and both the other two-year-old stakes fell to Mr. Plunkett's Baldoyle, who was backed as if the race was over, in spite of a strong tip for Therese II., who was much fancied by all the Newmarket people.

I gave a plumper for Nunsuch a fortnight ago for the Manchester Cup, and the Prince of Wales' mare was very heavily backed at the finish, although St. Bris was greatly fancied by the Kingsclere stable; but they were both easily beaten by King Crow, who carried 5 lb. extra for his victory at York. Mr. Vyner's horse was believed to have come on considerably during the last fortnight. Northallerton was not likely to show to advantage over the course, and he had quite enough weight to carry.

Some of the sporting papers announced on May 28 that Love Wisely "is to go for the Vase at Ascot." Love Wisely has not been entered, and he is so backward in condition that there never has been any idea of running him at Ascot. He is not likely to be seen out until the Newmarket October Meetings, but it is exceedingly probable that he will fail to get through a thorough preparation. Even if Love Wisely had been fit and in his best form, I do not see how he could have any chance for the Vase, when giving 14 lb. to The Rush. If he could be trained for the Doncaster Cup, he would have to carry a penalty of 10 lb. in that race. It seems to me utterly foolish and absurd to inflict penalties in the Ascot Vase and Doncaster Cup merely for winners of weight-for-age stakes. In the Goodwood Cup the extra weight is carried by all winners of races of a mile or upwards, and this is a fair and sensible arrangement.

